Q. What did you do the next season?

A. And intermittently I have worked in the harvest. I have [5055] worked in the harvest since then.

Q. That would bring us up to the harvest season of 1919 or 1920, possibly? A. Yes.

Q. Where did you go then?

A. I went to Idaho, if I remember correctly, and went to work in the mines.

Q. How long did you stay there?

A. Oh, I am trying to think. It is hard to remember. A period of months.

Q. When you left the mining fields, where did you then go?

A. Oh, I think I moved into the coastal area. I started working in logging camps and work such as that, in the timber industry.

Q. About what year was that?

A. This is 1919 or 1920 would be my recollection.

Q. You were 15? A. Very young.

Q. 14 or 15 years of age?

A. 14 or 15 years of age. I have been very big for my age for a long time, Mr. Special Prosecutor. I passed for 21 years old ever since I was knee high to a duck.

Q. After you left the coastal area, where did you go?

A. Oh, I think I worked in the woods and in and around mills in the Northwest for a considerable period of time and then—let me think now. I think it was about this time I went to sea [5056] with the U. S. Shipping Administration. I think, if I recall correctly, they had a training program at that time. You go in and you go through a training program. They put you on a ship and you take a cruise on the ship. You come back, and if you pass, pass all of the examinations and so forth, then they turn you—they turn you loose and then you are ready to take jobs at sea in private industry.

Q. Do you know where it was you went to sea?

A. I don't exactly recall. I know after going through this preliminary period that I am speaking of now, I was in New York. I don't know the date clearly. I do know it was on the day that they had the Wall Street bomb explosion. I remember that, because several of us were up in the office of the shipping company being paid off at that time, and I recall quite distinctly that there was a big flurry, a big hullabaloo, a lot of people were in the streets and we found out what it was all about at that time. I was being discharged from that vessel and I was drawing transportation back to the West Coast. I returned to the West Coast at that time. Now, these are approximate dates. I can't give you exactly what the date is. [5057]

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Were you christened James R. Robertson?

A. I was christened Christopher Columbus Robertson, and having had many experiences as a child growing up, going to school and in my early youth, I stopped using the name Christopher Columbus and people began to call be Bob, and I have been known as Bob down through the years.

Q. Did you ever enlist in the United States Navy under the name Chris Robertson?

A. I enlisted in the U. S. Navy in 1921, I believe, and I was in the Army for a few months and I came out of the Army, and I think it was in 1923 I enlisted in the Navy. And I was in the Navy for a few months and I got out of the Navy.

Q. Isn't it a fact, Mr. Robertson, that you enlisted in the Navy on the 4th of August, 1924, and deserted the United States Navy on the 10th of November, 1924?

A. I don't remember the dates, special prosecutor. I know that I was in the Navy following my experiences going to sea—following my experiences in the Army, I was in the Navy for a few months. I went through what they called at that time "boot training," and I told the officer—that was a CPO, I believe, in the gymnasium, conveyed to him the fact that I was dissatisfied and didn't like it, and he said, "Well, if you don't like the Navy you can take steps to get out." And I took those steps. He said, I remember—I forget, rather, what he said it would cost; I think it was—I think it was a [5058] hundred dollars, $125; I forget the amount. But anyway, I know that he was given this amount, and I stayed around San Diego for, oh, a period of time waiting for things to clear, and finally everything, they said, was clear, and I left San Diego, and I have heard nothing of that since, Mr. Special Prosecutor.

Q. Mr. Robertson, don't you know as a matter of fact that in the records of the United States Navy as of today that your status is in desertion from the United States Navy?

A. I do not.

Q. Would you say that it was not?

A. I don't know that. I am telling you of my experiences in getting out of the Navy, just as I got out of the Army. I was in the Army a few months, and I was told by one of the non-coms how I could get out, and I followed that procedure. And when I was in the Navy I followed the same procedure, and as far as I know, everything is square and clear.

Q. Mr. Robertson, isn't it a fact that when you enlisted in the United States Navy on the 4th of August, 1924, you gave as your date of birth the 15th of July, 1903?

A. I don't recall, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Do you recall where you said you were born in the application that you filed for the United States Navy? A. No, I don't recall.

Mr. Donohue: May we take the adjournment at this time, if your Honor please?

The Court: We will take the adjournment, ladies and gentlemen, until Monday next, February 6, at 10:30, gentlemen—10:30 rather than 10 o'clock.

Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, February 6 at 10:30 in the morning. In the interim may I again admonish you not to discuss the case under any conditions nor to form or express an opinion until the matter is submitted to you.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken until Monday, February 6, 1950, at 10:30 a.m.) [5060]

February 6, 1950, 10:30 A.M.

The Clerk: United States of America vs. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial. The witness on the stand is J. R. Robertson, heretofore sworn.

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Cross-Examination
(Resumed)

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Mr. Robertson, are you a married man?

A. Yes.

Q. Where and when were you married?

A. I was married in 1944 in Reno, Nevada.

Q. Do you recall where it was that you enlisted in the army?

A. It was a city in the Northwest.

Q. Was it Vancouver?

A. Frankly, I don't recall what city it was. I don't recall.

Q. Do you recall when it was?

A. Vaguely.

Q. What is your best recollection?

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

A. It would be late 1920 or '21.

Q. And——

A. Somewhere in there. I don't know the exact date. I am not clear on it.

Q. Do you recall where you were discharged from the army?

A. I was discharged—I was let out in Fort Sam Houston, I think [5061] they call it.

Q. Do you recall where you stated your place of birth and your enlistment in the army?

A. I do not. I had no recollection of those things.

Q. And do you recall where you stated your date of birth in the navy?

A. I do not. I have no recollection.

Q. Now, on Friday, with reference to your release from the navy, you stated as follows:

> "I went through what they called at that time 'boot training' and I told the officer—that was a CPO, I believe, in the gymnasium, I conveyed to him the fact that I was dissatisfied and didn't like it, and he said, 'Well, if you don't like the navy, you can take steps to get out.' And I took those steps. He said, I remember, I forget, rather, what he said it would cost. I think it was, I think it was $125. I forget the amount. But anyway, I know that he was given this amount and I stayed around San Diego for, oh, a period of time, waiting for things to clear, and finally everything, they said, was clear and I left San Diego."

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

Did you get any kind of a discharge when you left the navy? A. No, I didn't.

Q. And did you get any kind of a receipt for the money you said you paid to a chief petty [5062] officer?

A. No, I don't recall. I don't recall. That has been so long ago I can't remember. The details, as I gave them, as vague as they are, are the details. I don't know the—I just don't know anything about it. I have forgotten.

Q. What were you waiting to clear or to have cleared?

A. Well, I gave this person the money and he said—it is so vague—he said, "Go ahead." I got shore leave and he said, "Don't come back." And that is all I can remember. "Everything will be taken care of and everything will be fixed up." And I stayed around San Diego for some period of time, some—I don't know just how long—a few weeks, and then I left San Diego and I never heard anything about this.

Q. Now, from your experience in the army—and how long were you in the army, by the way?

A. I don't recall. I was only in the army a few months. I don't remember when I went in the army and I don't know exactly when I got out.

Q. Would you say——

A. I can't recall those dates or those years.

Q. Would you say that you enlisted on June 20, 1921? I am sorry, January 20, 1921.

A. I don't know. I don't know.

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

Q. And do you know whether or not you were discharged in July of the same year?

A. I don't know. I have no knowledge of dates during that [5063] period.

Q. Well, would you say you were in the army for a period as long as six months?

A. I don't recall the period I was in the army. I know it was a few months.

Q. And how long were you in the navy?

A. I don't recall the exact period I was in the navy.

Q. Some months?

A. Some few weeks, some few months.

Q. Now, from your experience in both the army and the navy, did you believe that you could give a warrant officer $125 and procure a release from the navy without getting a discharge?

A. I didn't know what a warrant officer was. I was——

Q. Well, a chief petty officer.

A. Well, I was in such a short period of time, and I am sorry, I can't remember the person I talked to; and he told me it was easy to get out. I gave him this money. He says, "When you take shore leave, everything will be O.K.; beat it." And I did that.

Q. Well, you beat it after waiting around some time?

A. I stayed in San Diego, yes; I stayed around San Diego for a few weeks. [5064]

Q. Now, you told us on Friday that while you were christened Christopher Columbus Robertson, that from your experiences as a child growing up and going to school, "and in my early youth I stopped using the name Christopher Columbus and people began to call me Bob and I have been known as Bob down through the years." Correct?

A. That is the statement.

Q. In 1924 when you enlisted in the Navy you enlisted under the name of Chris Robertson, did you not?

A. I don't know, Mr. Donohue. I have seen nothing that would verify that.

Q. When you enlisted in the Army don't you know that you enlisted under the name of Chris C. Robertson?

A. I don't know, Mr. Donohue. I have seen nothing to verify that.

Q. Isn't it a fact that the last time that you used the name Chris Robertson was the time you enlisted in the Navy?

A. I have used the initials C. C. Robertson up until the '30s, I believe, Mr. Donohue; I dropped the name Christopher Columbus in my early youth. I retained the initials and I never referred to myself as Christopher Columbus.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, I have asked the Selective Service to produce under a subpoena duces tecum the Selective Service registration of the witness J. R. Robertson. I understand the record is in court. Would your Honor [5065] ask the Clerk to call for the record?

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

The Clerk: Is the party here who has the records from the Selective Service? Step forward.

(A woman sitting in the body of the courtroom approached with a folder of documents.)

Mr. Donohue: Would you mark this United States for identification next in order, and I would ask permission when I am finished with it to substitute a photostat so that the original may be returned to the file.

(Selective Service record marked U. S. Exhibit 24 for identification.)

(The exhibit was handed to Mr. MacInnis.)

Mr. Donohue: Would you ask the witness if he can identify his signature on page 7.

The Witness: I looked at this document and I have studied it very carefully, because at the time I was registered I was in the Michael Reece Hospital recovering from a serious injury, and I wanted to study it carefully to see if it was correct, and I note there that they say I completed grade school and four years of high school. That doesn't sound right to me, because I never completed grade school. This is my signature, J. R. Robertson. And I do not remember in detail being asked those questions. I remember a lady came in one day and said they were registering, and she went through all the motions asking those questions, and those [5066] are the—seemingly those are the answers I gave. I have no recollection of that.

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

Q. Do you recall that you did testify on Friday that you had not had any high school training and that you did not finish grade school?

A. I didn't finish grade school and I have had no high school training.

Q. You state now that in answer to the questions on your statement of registration, on your Selective Service questionnaire, that you did not say that you had eight years of elementary school and four years of high school?

A. I have no recollection of having said that, Mr. Donohue. I have no recollection whatsoever.

Q. You say that you did not make that statement?

A. I have no recollection of what I said, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Your recollection has been refreshed, has it not, as to the fact that this document was signed by you on the 26th day of April, 1941?

A. I have no recollection of signing that document on the 26th of April, 1941. I remember being registered for the draft in 1940 when I was in the hospital, and I have no recollection of when that was signed, if it was not when I was in the hospital.

Q. Well, if the registrant's affidavit signed by you and sworn to before an officer of the draft board states that it was [5067] subscribed and sworn to before him on the 26th day of April, 1941, would you say that that was the date on which you signed it?

A. I have no recollection of that date, Mr. Donohue, but I don't question it. I am just telling you I don't remember.

Q. Now, on this date or at the time when you did sign this application, if you do not recall the date, you knew that you had had military experience in both the Army and the Navy, did you not, sir?

A. I did not consider my short time in the Army and Navy military experience, Mr. Donohue. I was in such a short period of time, and it was so long ago, I didn't even consider that military experience and of no consequence.

Q. Did you observe that under the military service, wherein you are asked to indicate whether you have served in the Army, Navy or National Guard, the date of entry, whether or not still in service, the date of discharge, and the type of discharge, as to whether honorable, dishonorable, bad conduct, not honorable, undesirable, or other, and that you answered "None"?

A. I have no recollection of having answered those questions.

Q. Do you have any recollection of having told the party before whom you registered that you had had service in both the Army and the Navy?

A. I have no recollection of anything that was said, Mr. Donohue. I just have no recollection.

Q. Well, you knew as a matter of fact that in the registration for military service that prior service in the Army and the Navy was an important factor for the draft board to know, did you not?

A. I have no knowledge of that. I made no thorough study of that, and my time in the Army and in the Navy was so short and so long ago that it meant nothing to me, and I considered I had never been in the service. I was only in a few months.

Q. Now, you said you signed this at the time you were in a hospital?

A. I was registered for the draft at the time I was in the hospital. A lady came in and asked me a series of questions, and I don't remember those questions.

Q. You said on Friday in response to a question from Mr. MacInnis whether or not you had any permanent injury, you said that you did; you had a fractured spine; correct?

A. I don't know, Mr. Donohue, whether or not you would call that a permanent injury. I do not know whether you would.

Q. As a matter of fact——

A. May I finish?

Q. Yes. A. May I finish?

Q. Why, of course.

A. We call that heckling in our union, and I would like to finish my statement, if you don't mind. [5069]

Q. I have no objection.

A. Thank you, sir. You might consider a spinal injury of no consequence, but I do; I do. And I can live through those weeks and weeks and weeks in the hospital when they had me strapped on a board about two feet wide and I couldn't move. I couldn't move. You can't forget those things. You just can't wipe them out of your mind, and to me that seems like a permanent injury.

Q. Isn't it a fact, Mr. Robertson, that you were classified first 1-A in the draft?

A. I don't know what I was classified as.

Q. And isn't it a fact that on the 30th of June, 1941, that after a physical examination you were still carried in Class 1B?

A. I didn't ask for deferment, Mr. Donohue, if that is what you are getting at.

Q. And isn't it a fact that on the 29th of August in 1942, or July of 1942, you were reclassified to 1-A? A. That is right.

Q. And that is men fit for physical duty, isn't that right? A. That is right.

Q. You said you did not ask for deferment. You were deferred?

A. I was deferred because it was the policy of our union, Mr. Donohue. We made a policy. We recognized what this war was about and we recognized the need of men in the service, and we had to weigh very carefully whether our officers would go in the service or stay on the job, and the union made the [3070] decision, not me, as to whether I would be—whether they would ask for deferment for me.

Q. There were men in the union who were not deferred, were there not?

A. Thousands of them. Thousands of them.

Q. Were you in some different category or classification?

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

A. I was no better or no worse than anyone else, Mr. Donohue, and I know our union, working with the Government, they gave consideration as to where a man would fit into this war struggle, and it is on this basis our union, discussing this problem seriously with the Government forces, agencies—I don't remember who they were—but it was pointed out that there had to be some people stay home and carry on the war so far as the union was concerned. That was an important role. It was not only the union's conviction but it was the Government's conviction as well. And they said some of us would have to stay back, and it was the union that asked that I be deferred.

Q. And you were deferred?

A. I was deferred.

Q. Mr. Robertson, do you recall the testimony of the witness George Wilson?

A. I recall he testified, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Do you recall that Mr. Wilson testified concerning a meeting that was held in the Governor Hotel here in San Francisco, at [5071] which meeting was a discussion with respect to a difference of opinion between Mr. Louis Goldblatt and Mr. Mervyn Rathborne? A. I have a recollection——

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me. That testimony does not concern Mr. Robertson.

Mr. Donohue: I am not so sure.

Mr. MacInnis: The testimony naming Mr. Robertson is on another page and discusses another incident. The testimony about this alleged Governor Hotel meeting mentioned other persons. How can he be asked to testify to a meeting of what another man spoke about a group of other persons?

The Court: The objection to the question in its present form is a valid one.

Mr. Donohue: I have simply asked him thus far if he recalls the testimony of Mr. Wilson.

The Court: Yes. You were in court at the time?

A. I was in court at the time, your Honor, and I remember George Wilson testified to it, and if counsel will read from the transcript what he is referring to, that will refresh my memory. [5072]

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): First, let me ask you if you recall—and I shall come to that in a moment—that Mr. Wilson was asked this question:

> "Do you, Mr. Wilson, know to what unit of the Communist Party Mr. J. R. Robertson was assigned?"

To which, on page 4009 of the record, Mr. Wilson answered:

> "Well, it was my understanding he was attached to the same unit as I was."

Do you recall that testimony?

A. If you are quoting from the transcript, there?

Q. Yes.

A. I recall testimony to that general line, and if you are quoting from the transcript, I will agree that is what Wilson said.

Q. Did you belong to the same unit in the Communist Party as Mr. Wilson?

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

A. Mr. Donohue, I do not now and I have never belonged to the Communist Party.

Q. Do you recall ~~later~~ that Mr. Wilson was asked on page 4010 of the record:

> "Would you say, Mr. Wilson, that you attended one or more than one meeting of the Communist Party at which the defendant J. R. Robertson was present?"

And the answer:

> "More than one." [5073]

And I take it that you deny now that you ever attended any meeting of the Communist Party at any time with Mr. Wilson or with any other person?

A. Will you ask me a direct question, Mr. Donohue?

Q. Surely. Did you attend a meeting of the Communist Party or more than one meeting of the Communist Party with Mr. George Wilson?

A. I have never attended a Comunmist Party with anyone, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Do you recall that I then asked these questions of Mr. Wilson and he made the following answers:

> "Q. Do you know a man by the name of Mervyn Rathborne? A. I do.
> "Q. Do you know a man by the name of William C. Schneidermann? A. I do.

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

"Q. Do you know a man who is referred to as Slim Connolly? A. Yes.

"Q. Do you know a man by the name of Lou Goldblatt? A. Yes.

"Q. And do you know Harry Bridges?

"A. I do.

"Q. Did you attend a meeting with the persons named? A. I did.

"Q. If so, will you state the time and place? [5074]

"A. The place was in the Governor Hotel, the time I don't know.

"Q. What is your best recollection of the time, Mr. Wilson?

"A. Somewhere between 1942 and 1944.

"Q. And are you able to tell us in whose room in the Governor Hotel it took place?

"A. I think Rathborne made the reservation.

"Q. And can you tell us first what was the subject matter under discussion at the meeting?

"A. Some difference of opinion between Rathborne and Goldblatt, as I recall it.

Do you recall that testimony, Mr. Robertson?

A. I recall the testimony.

Q. Were you at that meeting?

A. Mr. Donohue, I came back to San Francisco in the summer; I think it was July or August of 1944. Get that clear. And I had been away from the Coast, as I stated earlier, in my organizational work, and I doubt if I was even in San Francisco during that period. I came back intermittently to attend our conventions, to attend our international board meetings and to attend various conferences that would be called. And I am not clear on the specific dates on which I was in San Francisco, but I doubt very much if I was even in San Francisco during that period. [5075]

Q. Then the reading of the testimony does not refresh your recollection that you were present at the meeting described in the Governor Hotel?

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me now. The special prosecutor now reads some testimony by the man named Wilson, in which he names a group of other persons as being present at an alleged meeting and he says to this man, "Now that doesn't refresh your memory, then, as to whether you were there?" Well, unless he is trying to impeach his own witness, he can hardly proffer us that suggestion. Now how could negative testimony refresh this witness' recollection or his present memory?

Mr. Donohue: It is possible that a narrative of the incident which occurred might refresh the recollection of the witness to the fact that he too was there.

The Court: Well, he stated he hasn't any recollection.

Mr. Donohue: Correct, your Honor.

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me, your Honor.

The Court: We will take the——

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

Mr. MacInnis: He hasn't said that; he says he wasn't there. He didn't state he doesn't have any recollection.

The Court: All right; that is a correct statement of the record.

You were not there?

The Witness: I was not there, Your Honor.

The Court: All right, we will take the morning recess, [5076] ladies and gentlemen of the jury. Same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions, nor to form or express an opinion until it is submitted to you.

(Recess.)

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, Your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): When was it that you went to New Orleans, Mr. Robertson?

A. In 1938.

Q. Do you recall by whom you were notified that you were to go there?

A. Well, we had just concluded our convention, and—decision of our national convention was to extend our organizational work into the southern area and I was one of those who was chosen to go.

Q. Now, do you mean the national ILWU or the national CIO?

A. National ILWU, in conjunction with the national CIO. We were working—it was a joint endeavor, but we were concerned with our particular jurisdiction. The national CIO was heading the national—was heading it nationally, and we were carrying out our work as a national union.

Q. Were the funds for this project provided by the national CIO or by the national ILWU?

A. Both; primarily from the ILWU, but the national CIO was contributing funds as well as the ILWU. But a major portion of [5077] the funds, as far as I know, came from the ILWU.

Q. Do you have any idea how much money was spent on that project?

A. I can get you the records, Mr. Donohue, and account for the penny, right down to the penny.

Q. I asked the question because I understood you to say that the people down there on the Coast invited and urged you folks to come down there and do some organizational work. Is that not a fact? A. Oh, they sure did.

Q. Is there any reason why they shouldn't have paid for it, rather than the national ILWU or the CIO?

A. Or the national CIO? Mr. Donohue. Evidently you don't know much about——

Q. That is perhaps why I asked the question, Mr. Robertson.

A. ——evidently you don't know much about the labor movement. How could a group of workers, how could a group of workers in the South, such as I encountered and had occasion to work with, whose earnings were so low that they could barely exist, how could they contribute financially to an organizing drive?

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

Q. Then your answer is, I take it, that they were financially unable to pay ~~the~~ cost?

A. Financially unable.

Q. And the cost was borne, in the major part, by the ILWU and in part by the national CIO?

A. That's right. [5078]

Q. Now, do you know who was in charge of the Maritime Committee of the national CIO for the purpose of organizing the East and the Gulf Coasts into the ILWU?

A. I am trying to think who was the head of the national CIO organizing at the time. Walter Smithhurst, I believe. Now, he had the overall charge of organizing, by the national CIO, on a national basis. And if I remember correctly, I think Walter Smithhurst was the head of the national CIO's organizing, national director of organization.

Q. Did Mr. Rathborne have anything to do with it?

A. Mervyn Rathborne; I think he was one of the people assigned at the top to head a general maritime drive, as I remember it.

Q. Who went down to New Orleans with you?

A. There was Bjorne Halling. He was there when I got there. There was Bert Nelson, there was Paul Heide and myself.

Q. Was Mr. Bruce Jones with you?

A. Mr. Jones, along with Mr. Halling, had been assigned to that area earlier. Mr. Jones' assignment was in the East Gulf, in a different part of the Gulf.

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

Q. Did you know Mr. Jones at that time?

A. I didn't know Mr. Jones at that time. I just didn't know him.

Q. Did you come to know him later?

A. I have known Jones casually, but not to any great extent.

Q. Do you recall him testifying here? [5079]

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall him saying that he was a member of the Communist Party or had been a member of the Communist Party?

A. I recall that testimony.

Q. Did you know that fact? A. I did not.

Q. Did you know that Mr. John Halling was a member of the Comunnmist Party?

A. I did not.

Q. Did you know that Mr. Bert Nelson was a member of the Communist Party?

A. I did not.

Q. Did you know that Mr. Paul Heide was a member of the Communist Party?

A. I did not.

Q. I noticed on that Selective Service that you signed your names James Riley Robertson.

A. James Riley.

Q. How long have you used the middle name "Riley"?

A. Oh, I never used it. It is just James Riley, but I always use my name J. R. Robertson. Sometimes I use James. When they ask me what is my full name, such as when I got my driver's license, I usually said James Riley Robertson. When they asked me there on the Selective Service thing, I said James Riley. But I seldom use that [5080] name.

Q. You used it on your draft registration?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, getting back to the incident of Mr. Bridges' naturalization petition, you recalled that some weeks ago before the day in August that Mr. Bridges had a discussion with you concerning his application and he indicated that he was going to ask Paul Schnurr and Henry Schmidt to appear as his witnesses; do you recall?

A. I recall having talked to Harry down in the Bridges Defense Committee office. There was others there, and I can't tell you the names of those people. They were just discussing who was going to be his witness, and I know that Harry insisted on people from the labor movement representing him as witnesses, and he insisted on picking two old-timers. And he mentioned Schnurr, and he gave the reason why of it. Paul Schnurr was an old-timer in the labor movement, he was an officer of the CIO Council, and that Henry Schmidt was an old-timer in the labor movement. A member of the ILWU. And he was also an officer of the Council, and he wanted two guys from the labor movement to appear as his witnesses. [5081]

Q. You know Paul Schnurr?

A. I knew Pop, not too well. I have never known him intimately; I have known him in a casual sort of way.

Q. Did you know him to be a member of the Communist Party? A. I did not.

Q. I take it, then, that this conference was held at a time prior to the dissolution of the Bridges Defense Committee?

A. I do not clearly recall, Mr. Donohue, whether they had disbanded or not. I don't clearly recall. I know they were still there, and I didn't know whether they had officially closed the committee or not. I know that the offices were open. I just don't recall the procedural steps there.

Q. Would that help you to tell us about the time it was or when it was that you had this discussion with Mr. Bridges?

A. It can only be roughly, very roughly, approximate. It was a few weeks before the time I went down to the City Hall, and I think we have established that as——

Q. August 8?

A. August 8. It was a few weeks before that. I don't recall just when, but I do recall it was a few weeks before. Now, I can't give you exact dates on this. I just don't remember that.

Q. Did you hear Mr. Bridges make his statement in court?

A. I don't recall. I don't recall whether I heard him or not, because I was milling around the room and I walked out. I [5082] read the transcript and

I tried to refresh my memory as to my exact location in the building, and it was very hard for me to figure out in the detail in which you are asking the question whether I heard him say everything that is in that record. I just don't recall. In fact, that was of no consequence. The fact that Bridges was getting his citizenship was the important thing to me, and that was the big thing. I don't recall the details. Now, the transcript is there, and I don't question it. But I am just telling you I don't recall.

Q. You went there for the purpose of aiding Mr. Bridges in acquiring his citizenship, did you not?

A. Now, what date are you referring to, Mr. Donohue?

Q. The 17th of September, 1945.

A. The 17th of September I was required, I believe, to go there because I was substituted earlier, as you know, for one of the character witnesses and I had to be there, and I was there.

Q. And you were there for the purpose of helping Mr. Bridges get his citizenship?

A. I was there for performing those functions that a witness such as I was called upon to be would do.

Q. You were interested in Mr. Bridges getting his citizenship, were you not?

A. I thought Harry Bridges was one of the best men in the country, and he was surely entitled to it, Mr. Donohue.

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

Q. And you were interested in the fact that he would get it? [5083]

A. I thought he was entitled to it, and that he was entitled to it, Mr. Donohue, more—more than any other man in this country, more than any other man in this country, because——

Q. Mr.—— A. May I finish?

Q. Yes.

A. I wish you wouldn't heckle me. You asked me to answer.

Q. I think you are finished. I don't do it on purpose, believe me.——

A. I am not finished, Mr. Donohue, and I don't want to get in a crossfire. My way of saying things might seem gruff. They are not; it is just the way I talk. I can't help it. And don't heckle me, please. Let me tell you. You have asked me. I am sitting here, Mr. Donohue, and you are trying to send me and two of my associates to prison, and I want to tell this jury, who is going to decide whether I go to prison or not, the facts in this case, and I don't like to be heckled by you.

I think Harry Bridges was entitled to his citizenship. The union was at stake there, and he was a part of that union. He was molded into the building of that union, Mr. Donohue, and again—and I forgive you for it—but I just don't think you understand how a militant, progressive trade union works; you just don't understand it. If you could have spent the last two days, Saturday and Sunday, as I have in a democratic rank and file union discussing their problems, seeing real [5084] democracy as we understand it and knowing it working, then you would have an inkling of what I am trying to tell you here and why I believe Mr. Bridges was entitled to citizenship. It is not based on something that cropped in my mind on a moment's notice. It is something that I have lived with down through the years. It is something that I told you earlier I have read a lot about. It is something that my practical experiences in my association with the man had taught me. All of these things coupled together. And I mentioned a few specific documents that I read and you objected. I don't know why, Mr. Donohue. I read these documents. They were documents prepared by the Federal Government and they were dealing with the situation in San Francisco during the years, and they expose completely, at least to my satisfaction, how these industrialists, joining with the newspapers, were trying to destroy a man, carrying on all this vicious propaganda, Mr. Donohue, and that record is very, very interesting for anyone to read, whether you are in the labor movement or out. If you are honest and if you believe things should be brought out, and we should know what the facts are, these papers working with industrialists carried on a vicious campaign against this man in the early years, trying their best, trying their level best, to wreck our union, using him as a spearhead.

And finally, Mr. Donohue, when I read that Supreme Court decision I was in Chicago. I hadn't come to the Coast yet. No, [5085] no, I am wrong there. I came to the Coast in 1944. I read that decision. I came to the Coast in 1944. I read that Supreme Court decision, Mr. Donohue, and that helped—and that was a major influence in my thinking, because the U. S. Supreme Court, when they rule on a matter like this, when they rule after all the evidence has been presented and they say that a man has never been associated with nor a member of the Communist Party, that helped me finally make up my mind. That helped me finally make up my mind if there were any doubts in the first place, and I couldn't doubt ever since that had happened, plus the fact that I was personally acquainted with this guy, literally lived with him—not from day to day, but in the nature of our union work; I knew what made him tick. And it was for these reasons that I thought Harry Bridges should become an American citizen. I think he helps the labor movement. This is what I believe, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Are you finished now?

A. I am finished.

Q. Now will you answer my question? Were you interested in Mr. Bridges acquiring his citizenship on the 17th day of September, 1945?

A. Mr. Donohue, I will let the statement I have just made be the answer to that.

Q. Then in the light of that interest didn't you remain to hear him sworn in as a citizen of the United States? [5086]

A. Yes, but I can't tell you what spot I stood in. I can't tell you—I can't describe the room to you.

Q. Do you have any reason for trying to put yourself out of Judge Foley's courtroom at the time when Harry Bridges was sworn as a citizen of the United States?

A. Not at all, Mr. Donohue, not at all.

Q. Then do you remember the testimony of Mr. Henry Schmidt, reading from page 4744 of Volume 44 of the record, when he was asked this question or these questions:

> "Now, do you recall Mr. Robertson being in the courtroom?
> "A. I can visualize him sitting on the witness chair.
> "Q. And to your best recollection did he, too, remain with you until the ceremony had been completed?
> "A. Oh, I am sure he did."

A. I don't question that. I don't question that at all.

Q. Then do you now——

A. I don't question that at all, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Will you now tell me whether or not, as a matter of fact, you remained in the courtroom while Mr. Bridges was questioned by Mr. Garner and remained in the courtroom until after Mr. Bridges had been sworn as a citizen of the United States?

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

A. I was in the courtroom. Now, as to all of the details, I can't remember them.

Q. Mr. Robertson, do you recall that some time during the war that there was threatened a strike by the CIO oil workers? [5087]

A. Will you give me more information? You say the oil workers threatened a strike during the war?

Q. Do you recall being here in San Francisco when such an incident may have in fact occurred?

A. Mr. Donohue, will you give me dates?

Q. I can't give you the dates. I am asking you if you recall it.

A. I don't recall. If you don't associate some incident, some date or something, I can't recall whether I was or was not. I can only tell you when I was in San Francisco, and I would have to do that by checking our union records.

Q. Well, could you tell us whether or not you recall attending a meeting at 604 Montgomery Street at some time during the war when the subject matter under discussion was a threat by the CIO Oil Workers in California of a strike?

A. I don't clearly recall, Mr. Donohue. You haven't made it clear enough. I would have to have dates again to even know if I was in the city.

Q. If I were to say to you that among others present at that meeting were Mervyn Rathborne, James Doherty, Mr. William Schneidermann, yourself and certain others, would that refresh your recollection? A. Not at all.

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

Q. Mr. Robertson, do you recall the CIO national convention at Atlantic City in 1946? [5088]

A. No, I do not, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Were you a delegate to that?

A. I was a delegate to that convention.

Q. Do you recall whether at that convention any action was taken by the national CIO on the question of Communism?

A. I don't recall, Mr. Donohue. You can look at the proceedings of that convention. Now, don't get yourself trapped, Mr. Donohue, because I was a delegate to that convention.

Q. I understand you were.

A. And I did not attend that convention.

Q. That is why I asked you that question.

A. Don't get yourself boxed in. I happened to be elected a delegate to that convention, but I didn't go. I didn't go because we had union work at that time that was more important.

Q. Thank you for putting me on my guard, Mr. Robertson.

A. You are welcome, Mr. Donohue. You are welcome.

Q. When was the national CIO convention in Atlantic City in the year 1946?

A. Well, let me answer you this way: National CIO conventions are always held at the tail end of the year, and I think they are always held in November, and there was one year we didn't hold a national CIO convention, and it isn't just clear to me which year it was, because of transportation difficulties. Unless I could study the record, I don't know if the convention was held that year. I think it was 1945 that they did not [5089] hold the convention. I am not sure of this. I know that one year they did not hold a convention. I know that every convention, national CIO convention, with the exception of 1939, I have been a delegate to that convention by virtue of the fact that our membership as a national organization elects its delegates to go to the convention. Now, on two occasions I did not attend conventions because I was too busy carrying on the work of our union, and I think 1946 is one of those years. So I don't think I was there. I could be wrong. I am just not sure of dates there, and when you ask me these questions as to what went on, I would have to have more than this to refresh my memory. [5090]

Q. Now, as a national officer of a union affiliated with the national CIO, have you been aware of the efforts on the part of the national CIO to divorce itself from any Communist infiltration?

A. Mr. Donohue, we in the family of labor have our difficulties and I don't like to go into that subject matter with you because we'll iron these differences out within the house of labor, and I don't like to go into them unless His Honor says that I must go into them. We have hair-pullings all the time in the labor movement, but as a result, we have a bigger and better labor movement, Mr. Donohue, and the fact that this trial is going on today is doing just the opposite of what some people thought it would do—split our union. It is pulling it together. There is more unity in our ranks than we have ever had before, because they see how this trial is being used as another instrument to wreck and destroy our union if they can create dissension and they raise this bugaboo that you are trying to raise now, and it has been raised by experts, Mr. Donohue, believe me it has. And I would not like to go into all the problems that might arise in the CIO unless I am instructed to by the judge.

Q. I ask you again, Mr. Robertson: Have you been aware and are you aware of the measures which were taken by the national CIO beginning with the convention in 1946 to eradicate the Communist Party influence from the national CIO?

A. Mr. Donohue, if you will get the records of the CIO convention, [5091] get their proceedings, get them on the table there, spread them out and read to me specifically what you are referring to, Mr. Donohue, on the actions our national CIO has taken, official actions, get it on the table, read it out to me, let me know clearly what you are talking about, then I will give you my views on it. When you ask me these vague questions, I am going to answer you just as I have.

Q. Do you mean that you would have to have your recollection refreshed on that subject before answering?

A. Mr. Donohue, why raise that question? Just get the convention proceedings. That is all that I am saying.

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

Q. I am interested in knowing what you know about it, Mr. Robertson, and I ask you again, do you know whether or not at the national CIO convention in Atlantic City in the year 1946, any measure was adopted at that convention which had to do with the question of the Communist infiltration into the CIO?

A. I would have to see the convention proceedings, Mr. Donohue, before I could answer that question.

Q. And would that be your answer with respect to any action the national CIO may have taken subsequent to 1946 and on the same subject?

A. And what do you mean by "subsequent," Mr. Donohue?

Q. Following.

A. Following; but be specific.

Q. 1948, 1950. [5092] A. 1948?

Q. Yes. 1949.

A. 1949—the Cleveland convention. I think everyone is aware of the action taken by the national CIO in regard to the subject matter you are raising. I think that is a matter of common knowledge.

Q. Then you have the same information, at least, as the rest of us have on that subject?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, do you recall, following the national convention in 1946 of the CIO, that a meeting was called in the city of San Francisco by a man named Archie Brown to discuss the resolutions adopted by the national CIO at its Atlantic City convention?

A. No recollection whatever.

Q. Do you know Archie Brown?

A. I know Archie Brown. He is a member of the Local 10 of our local longshoremen here.

Q. Was he at one time the California state trade union director for the Communist Party?

A. I have no knowledge of that. I do not know.

Q. Let me ask you if you recall attending a meeting called by Archie Brown, the meeting being held in the Gold Room of the Bellevue Hotel.

A. Where is the Bellevue Hotel, Mr. Donohue? What city?

Q. I am afraid I do not—San Francisco. [5093]

A. I have no knowledge of such meeting, no knowledge whatever.

Q. Then let me ask you, then, if you recall a meeting at which the three following groups were represented: No. 1, the State Executive Board of the Communist Party for California; No. 2, the Communist Party CIO Subcommittee; and No. 3, the members of the Executive Committee of the CIO who were Communist Party members, and leading union officers of the CIO, who were also Communist Party members.

A. Have no knowledge of such meeting.

Q. And let me ask you if you recall the meeting at which the first group, the State Executive Board of Communist Party of California were represented by the following persons: Tex Hobbs, Hugh Bryson, Morgan Hull and Archie Brown, Al Richmond,

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

Dorothy Healy, Loretta Starvis, David Jenkins and Rena Battagliana. Remember attending a meeting at which those persons were present?

A. Some of those names I don't even know, and have never heard of. I have no knowledge of such a meeting.

Q. Then let me ask you if the Communist Party CIO Subcommittee was there represented by the following persons——

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me just a minute now. Your Honor, the witness says that he has no recollection of a meeting alleged to be in existence by the special prosecutor. He says he has never heard of some of the persons, but undaunted by that the special prosecutor goes on and says, "Let me ask you if at [5094] that meeting the following persons were not present." Well, if he wasn't at the meeting, he can't tell whether other people were at the alleged meeting either.

Mr. Donohue: This being cross-examination, if Your Honor please, I think I have the right to refresh his recollection as to the details of this meeting, for the purpose of seeing——

The Witness: I have no knowledge of it, Your Honor.

Mr. Donohue: ——if it does not stimulate his recollection on the subject.

May we take a recess at this time?

The Court: We will take the noon recess, ladies and gentlemen of the jury. The same admonition not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to 2:00 o'clock p.m.) [5095]

February 6, 1950, 2:00 o'clock P.M.

The Clerk: Case of United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial. The witness on the stand is James R. Robertson, heretofore sworn.

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, Your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Cross-Examination
(Resumed)

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. In a further attempt to refresh your recollection, Mr. Robertson, concerning a meeting at the Bellevue Hotel on the 7th of December, 1946, would it refresh your recollection if I told you that other than the persons named, in addition, Frank Slavey, Lynn Haines, Ralph Grunon, William Ruby, Nathan Jacobson, Carl Brandt, Harold Rossman, Sanford Goldner, Paul Pinski, Mat Crawford, Goodman Bruckney, Mervyn Rathborne, were also present?

A. I have no knowledge.

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me, just a moment. Now, Your Honor, what we have represented by this type of question is this: The special prosecutor, having failed to produce evidence of these alleged events, now gives the testimony himself, states the matter as a fact to the witness, and asks him if it would refresh his memory if he, the special prosecutor, told him that a certain thing was true. Now, Your Honor, in the first place, [5096] that assumes facts not in evidence and is hence improper cross-examination. In the second place, in this case we do not accept facts because they are alleged by the special prosecutor; he must produce evidence in order to prove facts.

Mr. Donohue: I have stated nothing as a fact, if Your Honor pleases. I am trying to refresh the recollection of the witness concerning a meeting about which he has said up to this moment he has no recollection.

Mr. MacInnis: Well, he says it never took place, Your Honor, and I can not see how, where a man states something did not take place, so far as he is concerned, the special prosecutor may then intrude alleged evidence which has never come into the record, by way of making a statement himself. He should bring those people here, if that is the fact.

Mr. Donohue: The witnesses here have, Your Honor, so often refreshed their recollection by reading newspapers; it may be that some incident which occurred, if I asked him about it, at that meeting, may refresh his recollection.

The Court: Have you enumerated or narrated the persons present at the meeting or the several meetings?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, Your Honor.

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me, Your Honor; the alleged meetings.

The Court: All right; I will amend that and admit it as "alleged" meetings. We assume them to be alleged. You might ask the witness the final question, whether any of the names [5097] identified in the alleged meeting would tend to refresh his recollection.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Does the reading of the list of names I have read to you, Mr. Robertson, refresh your recollection at all as to whether or not you were present at a meeting at which these persons so named were also present?

A. I have no knowledge of such meeting. I could not have been present.

Q. Are you familiar with a publication known as the Labor Herald?

A. Yes. The Labor Herald is the—I think it is the official organ of the CIO, state or city CIO.

Q. And were you familiar with it in the year 1946?

A. As familiar as I am now. I know that it comes out. I seldom look at it or read it.

Q. Do you recall ever having been present at a meeting when the question as to whether or not it was financially advisable to continue the Labor Herald was under discussion?

A. I have no knowledge of such meeting.

Q. Did you ever serve on a committee with Paul Schliff and Sanford Goldner to take some steps with respect to the continuation of the Labor Herald?

A. I have no knowledge of having served on such a committee.

Q. Would you say that you did not serve on such a committee?

A. I have no knowledge. I just—I have no knowledge of it, Mr. [5098] Donohue. I don't know.

Q. It is just that you have no recollection of it, I take it?

A. I have no knowledge of it. I have no knowledge of a committee that you suggested. I have no knowledge of my being on it, being there or anything.

Q. Do you know Mr. Schneidermann?

A. What Mr. Schneidermann?

Q. Mr. W. Schneidermann, district organizer for District 13 of the Communist Party.

A. I have met Mr. Schneidermann.

Q. How many times have you met him, Mr. Robertson?

A. Oh, probably three or four times.

Q. Has he ever been to your home?

A. He has never been to my home.

Q. Do you know Mr. Roy Hudson?

A. Mr. Roy Hudson—I don't think I do.

Q. Would you say that you never met Roy Hudson?

A. Do you have a picture of him? When you mention a name, maybe I could identify the name by seeing a picture. That would help me.

Q. No, it has been stated here in evidence that he is the trade union director of the Communist Party, national.

A. Well, I have no knowledge of the statement you have just made, Mr. Donohue.

Q. I said it has been stated here in evidence, that he was [5099] occupying that position. But as far as you recall, you never met him?

A. As far as I recall, I have never met him and I don't know what he would do, having never met him.

Q. Now, you have told us this morning that you knew Archie Brown? A. Yes.

Q. But you did not know that he was the California trade union director for the Communist Party?

A. Mr. Donohue, I know Archie Brown is a member of Local 10, and when you ask me if I know whether this or that person is a member of the Communist Party, I do not. Let me tell you why I do not. In our union a person has a record there. You have a book and you have a union button you wear, and you can be identified by these things. When you belong to a political party—and I am a member of the Democratic Party, or I was until the last presidential election, and I switched over to the Independent Progressive Party and voted for Wallace. You can find out in the record what a person belongs to. Now, I have no knowledge of these people being Communists. I have never seen anything to indicate to me they were Communists. I have read in papers where these people are speaking for the Communist Party, and I would assume that they were Communists on that basis. But I have no personal knowledge of their being Communists. [5100]

Q. Well, now, do you have any personal knowledge of how much work as a member of your union Mr. Archie Brown has done, let's say, in the past year?

A. You can check the work records of Local 10 and find that out. I have no knowledge of how much work he has done.

Q. Well, are you able to tell us as a matter of fact whether he has done any work as a member of your union?

A. I am not. He is a member of Local 10. That is the longshore local. I am a member of Local 6. That is the warehouse local. I would be more familiar with warehouse than I would with longshore, because I am more familiar with the warehouse end of it. I don't know whether the man has worked or not.

Q. While you were in Chicago, Mr. Robertson, did you ever meet Mr. Earl Browder?

A. Never met him in my life.

Q. While you were in Chicago, did you ever attend a meeting of the 34th Ward Branch of the Communist Party? A. I did not.

Q. You never met Mr. Browder?

A. Never met Mr. Browder.

Q. While you were in Cleveland, were you a member of the Executive Committee of the Cleveland Citizens Committee to Free Earl Browder?

A. I don't recall, but if you will show me some

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

document or something that I might bring to mind, something like that, then [5101] I can answer you with more decisiveness. Now let me say why I say that, Mr. Donohue. In our union, and as one of its officers, we are called upon, oh, countless thousands of times to lend our name, our organization to many, many causes. And down through the years if in my judgment the organization I belong to has adopted a general policy or a program conforming to the issues that might be involved in any particular subject matter, and someone has asked me to lend my name to it, I probably have lent my name to it, and there are so many of them I don't recall the specific one that you mention. But I will say this: Never, since I have represented the ILWU, have I lent my name to anything that would be contrary to a policy adopted by our union, which policy is adopted through the rank and file, through the membership of our union, through the structural and procedural methods we have of doing it. Now, that is the best answer I can give you on the signing of this document or any other document. And let me say, I have lent my name when in my best judgment lending my name to a cause came within the scope or the policy of the organization I represent. [5102]

Q. And you do not remember at the present moment? A. I do not recall.

Q. While you were in Chicago, Mr. Robertson, were you an instructor at the Abraham Lincoln School during the spring session of 1944?

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

A. Oh, I think representatives of the school came to our office and asked if I would conduct a class, and I told them the nature of my work. I am in town today, I might be here a week, and then I might be out for several weeks. I just would not be here steady enough to perform any function like that. "If using my name will be of any assistance to you, that is all right." Now, under those conditions my name may have been listed as being an instructor, as you say, or talking about some particular subject matter at a group meeting, and in that sense it could have been used. I don't recall having seen it being used.

Q. Did you know that the Abraham Lincoln School in Chicago was on the United States Attorney's list of subversive organizations?

A. I did not. I have never seen that list. I have heard a lot of talk about it. I do not know that that organization is on that list. I have never read it, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Were you in 1945 a discussion leader at a forum conducted by the California Labor School?

A. Was that the discussion group that Arthur Caylor from the [5103] San Francisco News was also a participant?

Q. I wouldn't know, sir. If you were there maybe you can tell us.

A. I recall one discussion I was involved in at the California Labor School where I think it was Arthur Caylor was also one of the people that participated. Now, that is the only discussion I have ever had in something like that, and I forget what the subject matter was. I think it dealt with labor management or something like that. We had representatives of, I think, management—this newspaperman was there and myself. I can't remember who else was there.

Q. In 1943 were you a subscriber to the Daily Worker while in Chicago?

A. I don't recall, Mr. Donohue, I don't recall.

Q. Did you ever meet a man named Morris Childs while you were in Chicago?

A. Morris Childs—I don't recall having met him.

Q. Do you know where District No. 8 of the Communist Party has its headquarters?

A. I do not know what District No. 8. I don't know where District No. 8 of the Communist Party has its headquarters, Mr. Donohue.

Q. You were never a member of the District Committee of District No. 8 of the Communist Party?

A. I have never been a member of the Communist Party in my [5104] life.

Q. Mr. Robertson, as first vice president of the ILWU were you a member of a committee which sponsored a celebration of the twentieth anniversary of the Daily Worker at Orchestra Hall on Sunday, January 16, 1944?

A. This is very vague. You mention Orchestra Hall. I do not know whether Orchestra Hall is in Kokomo, Chanute or Puckyhuddle. You will have to be more definite than that, Mr. Special Prosecutor.

Q. Where were you on the 16th of January, 1944?

A. Now, Mr. Donohue, that is just like asking one of those questions, you know: All women are people, but all people aren't women. If you will be a little more definite I will try to answer you on that.

Q. Where were you living in January, 1944?

A. In January, 1944, I was stationed in Chicago.

Q. Do you know a hall in Chicago called Orchestra Hall?

A. Offhand I do not. Offhand I do not.

Q. Did you ever attend any meeting in Chicago at which a man named Robert Minor, a member of the Communist Party National Committee, was the speaker?

A. That I do not recall, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Do you recall whether Robert Minor was a speaker at a meeting in Chicago on the 16th of January, 1944, at a celebration of the twentieth anniversary of the Daily Worker? [5105]

A. I do not know.

Q. You do not know whether you were a member of a committee which sponsored that meeting?

A. I do not know.

Q. Mr. Robertson, you are the editor of a column called "On the March" in the Dispatcher, or you were, is that correct? A. That is right.

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

Q. May I ask you, sir, if under date of September 5, 1947——

Mr. MacInnis: May we see the written material, please?

(The document referred to was shown to counsel for the defendants.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Do you recall writing on September 5, 1947, the following: "During the war against"——

Mr. MacInnis: I think the witness, under the procedures adopted at your assistance here, must be shown the document first and then if any part of it is admissible, the whole document must be admitted.

Mr. Donohue: I have no objection at all. (To the Clerk): Would you ask the witness to refer to his own column.

(The document was shown to the witness.)

A. Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Do you believe that we are engaged in a class struggle and a class war, Mr. Robertson?

A. Mr. Donohue, it isn't so much what I believe. The facts are before us. I have never yet—I have never yet experienced a [5106] situation where an employer would grant gains to a group of workers without that group of workers being in a position where the employer would have to respect their strength and their right to get it. Never yet have

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

I seen that happen; I just haven't. Our experiences in the movement I have grown up in the last few years in, based on my own experience, working in a grocery warehouse, we could never get anything unless the workers themselves were organized and organized in such a way that the employer would respect them. And when the employer began to respect them, then we could resolve our differences, and I have seen that develop over the years. And I base it on my personal knowledge as a worker, which I have been all my life, and I base it on my experiences since I have become involved, and more or less grown up in the labor movement. Now, that is what I mean when I say class struggle. There is an employer's side and then there is a worker's side, and these workers are always striving to better themselves. If they are organized they can do a better job. Now, if in that sense you mean, Do I think there is a class struggle, Mr. Donohue, there is a class struggle and it can't be overlooked.

Q. I want to know, Mr. Robertson, in what sense you understood a class war on September 5, 1947, when you said, "Now we are involved in a class war with one class the bosses and leaders of reaction fighting to annihilate the working class and those who support them." [5107]

A. I have tried to explain, without taking up too much time, but if I may I will go into a little more detail. Remember the old NRA days? That is a long time ago, and I am not going to take too much time, but that is when President Roosevelt was in office, when he first went in office, and one of the first things that developed was to establish this NRA, National Recovery Act, I believe, and under this proposition for the first time in the history of our country workers were given the legal right to organize, and they began to organize, Mr. Donohue, and finally down through the years we had what we called the Wagner Act—and I think we are all familiar—maybe some of us are not. Maybe I should be a little more detailed. Maybe we are not all familiar with how there developed during those years the processes from the old National Industrial Recovery days into the adoption of the Wagner Labor Relations Act and how the workers began to respond. And you know why they began to respond, Mr. Donohue? Because there was removed from their minds certain inherent fears that a worker has, and principally that centers around insecurity. Oh, how well I know that, a worker's feeling of insecurity! That is the basic reason.

And when this law was passed, which enabled these workers to organize, the record speaks for itself, down through the years, as to the countless millions of workers that have joined labor organizations during this period. But what happened? Did the employers accept the Wagner Act? They fought it all the [5108] way down the line—all the way down the line they fought that law. They were never willing to go along with it when it was on the statute books, even going so far as to challenge its validity in the U. S. Supreme Court. And when the U. S. Supreme Court finally ruled that the Wagner Act was constitutional did the employers accept it? They did not. They started devising ways and means again to destroy the effectiveness of the Wagner Act. Now, that was in 1937 or 1938, Mr. Donohue, and it took them eight long years—nine long years up to 1947 to get that law amended to where it has effectiveness as far as protection of workers is concerned. It took them that long to enact the Taft-Hartley Law, and if you think I am the only one that thinks the Taft-Hartley Law is detrimental to labor, just ask anyone in the labor movement, Mr. Donohue, what they think about it.

Oh, some of them have said, "Well, let us not fight it as hard as we were going to at first. It is on the books. Let us try to live with it."

Our union has not taken that position. But the Taft-Hartley Law is the end result of the employers' trying to destroy the Wagner Act. It has been one of the things that has given the working people of this country the weapon through which they could make the greatest gains they have ever made in the history of this nation.

That is a little background. When you say to me, when I [5109] wrote that article in 1947, what was the purpose of writing that article, you know you can't just ask a question sometimes, Mr. Donohue, "Why did you do this? What are the reasons beyond doing it?"

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

I am trying to explain to you now what I mean. When I wrote that article—it speaks for itself—we felt that the Taft-Hartley Law was not good for the working people. I still feel that it is not good for the working people today. Now, you say, "Does this create the class struggle?" We did not create it, Mr. Donohue. We did not try to get the Wagner Act amended. It was the employers, and through their actions, Mr. Donohue, they themselves carried on the so-called rift or misunderstandings between labor and the employers down through the years. Now, it is in this sense that I answered your question, Mr. Donohue——

Q. The Taft-Hartley Law is the law of the land? A. It sure is.

Q. Is your union not one of those which refused to file the anti-Communist affidavits as required by the Taft-Hartley Law?

A. Mr. Donohue, our union, before the Taft-Hartley Law was passed, during the preliminary period when the Taft-Hartley law was being discussed, before its enactment, our union discussed this as a policy matter and we took a position on it, Mr. Donohue, and our position is clear-cut in the record, in the record of our conventions, in the record of our international [5110] board meetings, and in the record in so far as all our local unions are concerned, this question of Taft-Hartley. We did not think it was a good thing, Mr. Donohue, for the American people; especially we didn't think it was a good thing for the American working people, Mr. Donohue, and we did what we could to let the people know what we felt the effects of this law would be, and all of the labor movement, if I remember those years before it was passed—yes, and even after it was passed—I do not know of one person in the American Federation of Labor, in the Congress of Industrial Organizations, or in the independent unions or any other groups in the labor movement that were in favor of the passage of the Taft-Hartley Law as Congress passed it. It is a law; it is a law of the land.

Now, when you say to me, "Are we one of those unions that have not signed the anti-Communist affidavits," Mr. Donohue, that would have been the simplest thing in the world for us officers to do. All you have to do is sign an anti-Communist affidavit and then when some little thing happens in the union, all you have to do is sit back and say, "Well, membership, don't worry about that. We have signed the anti-Communist affidavit and we can't do anything about it."

It would have been an easy way out for the officers of our union to escape our responsibility, by hiding under the clause, having signed an anti-Communist affidavit. That was the easy way out in those days, and we didn't sign. We didn't sign [5111] because we didn't think it was good union policy to comply with the law, because there are many, many things in that law that do not meet the eye, Mr. Donohue. Once you comply by signing an anti-Communist affidavit, then your hands are tied as a union; your hands are really tied when you get in that meat grinder, and we took this position after the law was passed, at this point—and that was immediately after its passage or when our national union, through its convention and through its national board, took action on it: "We are not going to comply with the law." We were not concerned with whether or not we signed affidavits. We were concerned with all the other dangers of the law, Mr. Donohue, and we said, "We are not going to sign it; we are not going to comply. But if there ever comes a time—if there ever comes a time that it will serve the best interests of our union, then at that time we will consider, and if at that time we decide it is the best thing to do, then we will comply with the Taft-Hartley Law, and we will comply in all of its aspects, not just the signing of an anti-Communist affidavit."

Yes, we have given this question consideration over the years, Mr. Donohue, and we have taken the position that we have—"we"—I do not mean Bob Robertson or Bridges or the other two titled officers, but I mean the membership of our union. We have taken this position down through the years of non-compliance because, Mr. Donohue, we felt that it was good [5112] sound trade union policy. Now, that is a brief history of this whole question of Taft-Hartley, and that is my answer to your question. [5112A]

Q. Did you change your views just a few days ago?

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

A. Our international officers considered that problem, Mr. Donohue. We seriously considered it. We considered it in light of what was going on around us today. And we are recommending now, we are recommending to our international board and to our membership through our locals compliance with the Taft-Hartley Law, although we recognize the dangers that exist. But we had to carefully weigh every factor in this situation. We knew, Mr. Donohue, that there were forces in the labor movement that were out to raid and wreck our union, and they were using the fact that the ILWU had not complied as another red herring situation, and they were making an issue of that. We knew that if we complied with Taft-Hartley Law, it might weaken our hiring hall setup. We knew all of these things, but we weighed one thing carefully against the other. and we felt that for the best interests of our membership, the union, we would recommend compliance. The officers can only recommend. We are not like some unions, Mr. Donohue; we can't just sit up on our throne and say, "This is what the union is going to do and that is the way it is done." We can recommend to our membership on these serious policy matters, and the membership, through the established structure of our union, will determine this issue. The recommendation of the four titled officers of our union is to comply, to comply with Taft-Hartley, because of the various reasons I have given you: our weighing carefully the [5113] advantages against the disadvantages, and we think at this time it is a good union policy to follow.

Q. Did Mr. Goldblatt concur in that decision?

A. Mr. Goldblatt, Mr. Bulcke, Mr. Bridges and myself, the four titled officers of our union.

Q. Now, how long a period of time intervened between your first decision not to comply with the requirements of the Taft-Hartley Act and file a non-Communist affidavit and your more recent decision, to do so?

A. Well, you know when the law was passed, Mr. Donohue; and we have never complied with the law. We have, as a set of officers—we are recommending compliance now.

Q. I would like to——

A. And you keep stressing that word "signing an anti-Communist affidavit." Are you trying to impress someone, Mr. Donohue? I have tried to tell you that is the least part of the compliance with the Taft-Hartley law. It is the least part. It takes away your security, it takes away large segments of your membership because the law says that certain members of our union can no longer be members of our union. We are concerned with that.

Q. Why ca[illegible] they?

A. Because they say they are in managerial positions, and they can't be members of our union. And we don't subscribe to that. They have been members of our union ever since our union [5114] existed, and we think they should continue to be. Just to make one point.

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

Q. Now, I would like to read the September 19th issue of 1947.

Mr. Donohue: At this time, Your Honor, I would like permission to ask the Clerk to mark the preceding copy of the Dispatcher as United States for identification next in order.

> (Whereupon September 5, 1947, issue of Dispatcher, referred to above, was marked United States Exhibit No. 25 for identification.)

Mr. Donohue: And likewise with the September 19, 1947, issue, and I particularly direct the witness' attention to the portions which are marked.

> (Whereupon September 19, 1947, issue of Dispatcher, referred to above, was marked United States Exhibit No. 26 for identification.)

> (United States Exhibit No. 26 for identification handed to the witness by the Clerk.)

The Witness: M-hm.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Now, what did you mean in your article of September 19, 1947, Mr. Robertson, when you said, "There is no such thing as a good boss"?

A. I think, Mr. Donohue, if I may be permitted or you will read that entire article, your question will be answered.

Q. You did say that?

A. Read the entire article, Mr. Donohue, and you will find out [5115] just what I meant. The article speaks for itself.

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

Q. Is that your answer to the question as to why you said there is no such thing as a good boss?

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me. That is not only the answer, but that is the law. Now, a cross-examining counsel may not take one sentence out of a context and compel the witness to subscribe to that sentence as his whole point of law. As the witness suggests, the whole article is the article he wrote, and I suggest that it must be read if the witness chooses to make that request.

The Court: I believe, Mr. MacInnis, the cross-examiner is entitled to an answer to the segmented questions he is presenting to the witness. Then if the witness desires to advert to any of the article, he may do so as qualifying his testimony.

Mr. MacInnis: Yes, I think that is the proper suggestion.

The Court: He did not give an answer.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): May I at this time ask the witness to read the whole article, and then tell me what he meant by the expression, "There is no such thing as a good boss," either from the article or any other source.

(Document handed to the witness by the Clerk.)

A. I am not too good at reading. (Reading): "The NAM (National Association of Manufacturers) truly represents what its name implies—National Association of Manufacturers. This is a bosses' union. They have a [5116] closed shop, also checkoff of dues and other methods of control that keep their members on the beam. Strictly according to the bosses' standards. Another important point is that they have just one national organization. They are not divided, like the labor movement, where we have the A. F. of L., the CIO and the independent unions. Also, they are affiliated with all of the international bosses' organizations. They have to, and do function, just as effectively on an international basis as they do at home on a national basis.

"This same NAM made full use of the newspapers, which they control, during the period the Congress was debating the Taft-Hartley law. We must remember those ads. The NAM tried to tell the American people how fair the Taft-Hartly law was, how it would stabilize boss-worker relations. Anyway, today we have the Taft-Hartley law. If the Taft-Hartley law is as good for American workers as NAM told us the abolishing of OPA and price controls would be for people, then workers are in for a pretty rough kicking around from this time on. That is, unless we do something about it. But doing something about it means more than people, especially workers, just grumbling about high prices, lack of housing——"

This was written September, 1947, during that struggle to abolish OPA. [5117]

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

"——increase of unemployment and relief rolls and union members beefing about the new slave labor law; crying over spilt milk won't solve today's problems.

"There is a solution, though, and putting this solution into action makes the bosses and the political hacks they control shake in their very boots. Why? Because the solution calls for uniting all of the little people in this country around a common program of united action to bring about a change. Think of it in terms of the recent ILWU struggles, the pineapple workers' fight against the employers' lockout in the Hawaiian Islands last month. The bosses gave us the works: police brutality, mass arrests, and finally, use of the courts to persecute our members. You think it isn't class war? Did you ever hear of a cop being on the workers' side during a strike? Did you ever hear of a cop beating up a boss for going through or breaking workers' picket lines? And the cops are employees of the people—that is, we pay the taxes that pay their wages, but the bosses direct their activities.

"The prosecuting attorney plays his role for the bosses, too. He sees to it that the workers are tried in the courts. And the courts; whose side are they on? Not the little people, the workers. The courts are still trying to convict the pineapple workers. Yes, these things make a guy think a little. This same judicial system of [5118] ours lets the big bosses get away with legal murder. Anti-trust records show that five big boss groups on the mainland have been convicted for criminal violations for a total of 54 times. Did any of these big bosses go to jail? You know the answer. The same system of prosecuting attorneys and courts handled the pineapple workers in the Islands, and the big bosses on the mainland. The only difference is, the little people are sent to jail and the big bosses are not. Any worker who has been through a tough strike knows what I am talking about.

"The real danger lies in the fact that we workers forget these experiences too easily. That is one of the reasons I keep telling everybody who will listen, 'There is no such thing as a good boss.' As union members, our first step is through our union; starting on the job, the steward is the spearhead more than ever before. He has to know all of the answers. And an ineffective steward on the job is just like an ineffective squad leader in the army. Either one can get by when things are normal. The real test comes when we are on the battleline and under fire. The war is on, the battle has started. We are under fire. Every group, large or small, and every local must be fully mobilized and ready for battle. Every member must know the fighting rules, union program, on the job and off the job, 24 hours each day.

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

No member can enjoy the luxury of [5119] beefing about this or that. There is no answer to each and every problem, nowhere to find the answers. Work a little harder for the union and you will know your union better and it will work for you. Your union is what you make it. You are the union. This is the first step. Remember, in any organized shop or group where you find poor working conditions, members not attending union meetings, lots of individual beefs, you will find a weak union on the job. This condition will destroy the union if not corrected. Therefore, it is the responsibility of the entire membership, especially the membership in strong, well organized shops to know the general condition existing in all shops. Further, it is the responsibility of the entire membership to see that immediate steps are taken to correct all these internal union weaknesses. Once these weaknesses are known, correcting the situation is easy; through the local union structure, utilizing the entire union family if necessary.

"Doing all these things is political action because it prepares the entire membership for other forms of activity which reach beyond the eight hours of work on the job each day, such as, each member becoming more alert to what is going on in the neighborhood in which he lives and participating with the neighborhood > group that is fighting for the same common objectives as our union, everybody [5120] working and doing his share, lays the groundwork for the bigger battle ahead."

Now, that is the answer.

Mr. Donohue: May we take the recess at this time, if your Honor pleases?

The Court: We will take the afternoon recess, ladies and gentlemen, and the same admonition to you.

(Recess.) [5120A]

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, your Honor?

The Court: Very well.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Robertson, you are the author of this article that you just read?

A. Yes.

Q. You realize, of course, that while people have to work, there must always be a boss, do you not?

A. Yes.

Q. Who would you substitute as a boss if you believed that today there is no such thing as a good boss?

A. No need for substitution. Keep the same ones. Let us let them adjust themselves and recognize the changes that must take place in the relationship between the employee and the employer. Let us keep them. I have no desire to get rid of them. Let's have them have a change of heart. Let's let them recognize that on this American scene of ours there is need for adjustment so far as their thinking is concerned.

And further than that, Mr. Donohue, you have raised the question of compliance with Taft-Hartley. The one thing you have left out, the one thing you have left out, and which I think is very important for people not familiar with this law to understand, is the fact that compliance with this law is a voluntary thing; it is not compulsory. The law does not require you to comply. A union can comply if it desires the services of the Taft-Hartleyized National Labor Relations Board, [5121] and we didn't comply because we didn't want any part of it. Now, further than that, on this question of bosses, Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, has said publicly that the Taft-Hartley Law is a slave labor law. President Philip Murray of the National CIO has said the enactment of the Taft-Hartley Law is the first step toward Fascism in America.

Q. Is that the reason, Mr. Robertson, that so many of their unions voluntarily, as you say, sign the non-Communist affidavit as required by the law?

A. Mr. Donohue, if you ask me something about the ILWU, and particularly about its organizational work, I can answer. I can't answer for any other union. ILWU is all I know.

Q. The other day, Mr. Robertson, in answer to a question asked of you by Mr. MacInnis you said, on page 5004 of the record, "Oh, I have been branded a Communist, for so many years, so many years, so many years, so many years."

A. Uh-huh.

Q. Does that make up all of the years, Mr. Robertson?

A. No, if you would say each of those "so many years" meant a year, then you would have to go back to the time I became active in the labor movement, and you would have to add a few "so many years" to it if you want each of these little quotes to represent a year.

Q. Then you would say that since you have been active in the [5122] labor movement you have been branded a Communist?

A. Since I have been active as an officer of our union.

Q. And that was when, sir?

A. The thing that stands out most in my mind is in 1938, and not only was I branded a Communist, but everybody in the CIO was branded a Communist, and I tried to make that plain.

Q. Was Phil Murray ever branded a Communist?

A. Well, I know John Brophy was. I know John Brophy was. And for the record, let me correct the statement I made this morning. You were asking me who was the head of the CIO national organizing work. I said Walter Smithurst. I checked the record. He was an assistant. Mr. John Brophy was the director of organization for National CIO until 1939 I believe and then Mr

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

Alan Haywood took that post and he has held it ever since.

Q. Then your answer is that your labor activities are the reason why you have been branded a Communist so many years four times?

A. My activities in the labor movement, working with working people to better our conditions, is the reason that forces in opposition to our building our movement has branded me a Communist, in an effort to frighten the people, to scare them, to continue the fear in their minds, to use that as a device to get away from the real issue, which is security of the individual. That is why they use these things. That is why they brand militant labor leaders Communists, Mr. Donohue. [5123]

Q. No other reason?

A. That is the only reason I know, Mr. Donohue.

Q. It couldn't be the fact that you are?

A. I am not.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, save for the purpose of examining this witness further on certain documents which I expect will reach me tomorrow, I have no further questions.

Redirect Examination

By Mr. MacInnis:

Q. Mr. Robertson, the special prosecutor pointed out to you an article written by yourself in the longshore paper in which you criticized the Taft-Hartley

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

Act. Do you know what the position of our President is upon the Taft-Hartley Act?

A. Yes. It is a matter of common knowledge that President Truman himself has said that the Taft-Hartley Law is such a law that it creates struggle between workers and employers, class struggle. The President of the United States has said this.

Q. Is that one of the platform which the President promised to work for and did do his best work for after reelection?

A. That was one of the planks in the platform of the Democratic Party when President Truman was last elected, fighting to abolish the Taft-Hartley Law, fighting to repeal it.

Q. The same special prosecutor showed you another article by yourself in which you were so bold as to refer to the existence [5124] of a class struggle.

Now, if I may ask him, Mr. Donohue, is it your statement and your position that the idea of a class struggle is the inspiration of the Communist Party.

Mr. Donohue: May I say, your Honor, I have seen some strange things in this trial, but this is the first time I have been interrogated while not on the witness stand.

Mr. MacInnis: You decline to answer.

Q. Now, Mr. Robertson, when you first became a member of a labor union, the union which you joined had what name?

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

A. It was the International Longshoremen's Association, and the local name was Ware's Warehousemen and Cereal Workers Local 38-44, and we were affiliated with the parent body, the American Federation of Labor.

Q. From that experience are you familiar with the existence of a document called the constitution of the American Federation of Labor?

A. I am familiar with it. I have read it.

Q. I am going to call your attention to that part which is called Preamble, which I have now shown the prosecutor. I am going to ask Mr. Mitchell if he will hand you the constitution of the American Federation of Labor as adopted in 1933, and ask you to look at the preamble (handing Defendants' Exhibit B-3 for identification to witness). Did you read that?

A. Let me read it again, please. Let me look at it again. I [5125] am just glancing at it.

Q. You can read it aloud, if that is the document you are familiar with.

A. Oh, yes; yes, sir.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, I do not see what purpose the constitution of the American Federation of Labor of 1933 has to do with the thinking of the witness as an officer of the ILWU in 1950.

Mr. MacInnis: Your Honor, counsel showed a witness a newspaper article written by himself.

Mr. Donohue: That is right.

Mr. MacInnis: And he says, "Now, you are the person who wrote about a class struggle," as though those terrible words would indicate something terrible inspired by the Communist Party. We want to show that the notion of a class struggle is nothing new. The notion of a class struggle isn't any thought owned exclusively by the Communist Party, the Democratic Party, the Labor Party, or any other group, but that it is in the preamble of the constitution of the American Federation of Labor.

The Court: If that be so, then the witness has no need to read it.

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon?

The Court: I say the witness has no need to read it, if that be the preamble. Is there any issue on that matter? [5126]

Mr. Donohue: I do not know, if your Honor please. I do not know the matter about which I examined the witness was identified by him as his own writing. There is no proof that anything in this book is the preamble of the American Federation of Labor constitution.

Mr. MacInnis: That is the title of the book.

Mr. Donohue: That does not make it so. It should be proven.

The Witness: Your Honor, may I be heard? May I say a word? I have read this preamble and it recalls in the early days my reading of this many times, because they set out in simple language a set of principles for working people to follow, and as a youngster, as a young person coming into the movement, it impressed me very much, and I don't think it is bad. It is good. And I remember having read it. And it tells about the struggle, what American workers have to do, that there is a class struggle, that the working people have to organize, and this is the preamble of the American Federation of Labor constitution, your Honor.

The Court: Well, no one seems to deny the matter, Mr. MacInnis.

Mr. MacInnis: If no one denies it——

The Court: I can see no immediate issue on the matter unless you do.

Mr. MacInnis: I brought it up because the prosecutor, I [5127] assume out of some criticism or as a foundation later to criticize Mr. Robertson, showed him his article and asked him if he was the person who wrote about the class struggle.

The Court: With respect to a good clause or a bad clause.

Mr. MacInnis: That was the second article.

The Court: I can see no immediate issue, unless you do.

Mr. MacInnis: I think it is covered, your Honor.

Q. Mr. Robertson, you said on Friday last and again this morning when questioned by the special prosecutor that after you had been in the Navy a few months you bought your way out. What did you mean by that? Did you mean you bribed somebody, or was there some recognized transaction by which that could be done in those days?

A. I mean, Mr. MacInnis, that I bought my way out of the Navy just as I had bought my way out of the Army a couple of years before.

Q. Was that a recognized practice in those days?

A. Oh, definitely so, definitely so.

Q. With reference to the name Christopher Columbus Robertson, with which you were gifted at birth, where were your parents born? Can you tell us that? What were their names, and so forth?

A. My mother's name was Kathleen Idella Higginbothom. My father's name was Milton Davis Robertson. My mother was born in Texas in 1884. My father was born in Texas in 1872.

Q. How about your grandparents? Where were they born? [5128]

A. Well, my grandparents on the maternal side, Christopher Columbus Higginbothom was my grandfather's name on the paternal side; Isabella Harrison was my grandmother's name. Grandpa was born in 1848 in Tennessee and Grandma was born in 1858 in Texas. My grandparents on my father's side: Aunt Hattie was my grandmother's name, and Eby was my grandfather's name on my father's side. My father is of Scotch-Irish extraction. My mother is of Dutch and Cherokee Indian extraction.

Q. And for how many generations to your best knowledge have those branches of your family lived in this country?

A. Well, do you want to go into what little research I have on the Cherokee Nationas a tribe of Indians?

(Testimony of James R. Robertson.)

Q. No. Let me ask you this: Do you have any brothers or sisters?

A. Yes, I have one brother and three sisters.

Q. Did any of your brothers or sisters find it fitting to change their names?

A. The oldest in the family, my sister, was christened Nancy Charm.

Q. Did she change her name?

A. She stopped using Nancy Charm and is now known as Mary. My sister, who is the third oldest, was named Gertie. She stopped using the name and uses the name of Jane now. My mother was Kathleen Idella and I have known her all my life as Kate. [5129]

Mr. MacInnis: That is all. Call Frank Andrews.

The Court: Mr. Donohue, you reserve the right to call Mr. Robertson?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

FRANK MELVILLE ANDREWS

called for the defendants; sworn.

The Clerk: Will you state your full name to the Court and jury, please.

The Witness: Frank Melville Andrews.

Direct Examination

By Mr. MacInnis:

Q. What is your address, Mr. Andrews?

A. 1211 East Fourth Avenue, Olympia, Washington.

(Testimony of Frank Melville Andrews.)

Q. What is your business or occupation?

A. Longshoreman.

Q. Are you a member of any union?

A. Yes.

Q. What union is that?

A. The International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union.

Q. Do you belong to any local of that union?

A. No. 47.

Q. Are you an officer of that local?

A. I am chairman now of the local labor relations committee, is the only office in the local.

Q. How long have you lived in the State of Washington? [5130]

A. All my life.

Q. Do you belong to any other organization in the City of Olympia?

A. The Pogy Club, the Williams Post of the Legion——

Q. By "the Legion" do you mean the American Legion? A. The American Legion.

Q. Are you a charter member of the American Legion?

A. I joined the Legion as a charter member in Tacoma when I first returned from World War I. I think it was just before the turn of the year 1919.

Q. Were you a member of any union prior to the establishment of the ILWU? A. Oh, yes.

Q. What union was that?

A. That was the ILA, Pacific Coast District 38.

Q. When did you first become a member of that union? A. The ninth month of the year '26.

Q. 1926? A. Yes.

Q. Have you been doing longshore work continuously since the year 1926?

A. I started in 1925 on the waterfront, at the opening gun of the Port of Olympia, and I continued through until the year 1929, when I was blacklisted by the Waterfront Employers, and my earnings went as low as $50 a month, and I had to seek other [5131] occupation.

Q. What did you do then?

A. I worked as an electrical worker between what I worked on the waterfront.

Q. Do you know a man named Harry Bridges?

A. Yes.

Q. When did you first meet him, approximately?

A. 1934.

Q. Since that time have you known him constantly over the passage of the years?

A. Yes.

Q. In addition to your acquaintanceship with Harry Bridges have you heard other persons discuss his reputation for truth, honesty and integrity?

A. Yes.

Q. Basing your answer upon such statements of other persons as have come to your ears, as well as upon your own knowledge of the man, what is his reputation for truth, honest and integrity?

A. Good.

Q. Mr. Andrews, you say that you joined the ILA in about 1926, is that correct?

(Testimony of Frank Melville Andrews.)

A. That is correct.

Q. When the waterfront strike was about to be called in San Francisco in the early months of 1934, but before the strike [5152] was actually in progress, did you become a member of any committee in the Northwest?

A. I was a member prior to that time of the executive board of the Pacific Coast District ILA.

Q. What was the function of that board at that time?

A. I don't believe in 1934 I was a member of the board. Prior to that time I had been a member of the board. I was on the Northwest Strike Committee during the 1934 strike, if that is what you want to know.

Q. Who set up the Northwest Strike Committee? A. The locals by referendum vote.

Q. You mean the unions? A. Yes.

Q. A man named John Schomaker testified in this case that the strike committee was set up under the direction of a man named Sam Darcy. Did you ever know that man?

A. I never heard the name until this trial started.

Q. To your knowledge did the Communist Party set up the joint strike committee in the Northwest? A. Hell, no.

Q. So far as you know, did it have anything to do with the strike committee?

A. No, absolutely none. The Northwest strike committee was made up of the elected delegates from each of the locals of the ILA plus delegates allotted—a certain number of delegates [5133] allotted to each marine union branch in that area. In that area—I mean by that the Puget Sound area.

Q. Were you ever a member of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific?

A. That is correct; I was a delegate to their conventions.

Q. What was that organization?

A. That was an organization that grew from a resolution brought in to the Northwest strike committee in 1934.

Q. And do you remember about when the Maritime Federation of the Pacific was first established?

A. 1935, the spring of the year. [5134]

Q. Were you a member at that first occasion?

A. First convention, yes.

Q. Well, now, what was the function of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific?

A. Coordinate and embody all the marine groups, coordinate union activities dealing with meetings with the employers, working conditions.

Q. What were the marine groups?

A. The ILA at that time, the Marine Cooks and Stewards, the ARTA, the Marine Engineers, Master, Mates & Pilots, the Sailors Union of the Pacific, the Marine Firemen, their union, and I believe we had in at that time, or shortly after the founding convention we had in the Marine Shipyard Workers and some other allied marine groups, small groups—fishermen, tugboatmen, I believe, later came in.

Q. Now, the same witness whose name I have mentioned, the man called John Schomaker, testified that the Maritime Federation of the Pacific was set up under the express direction of the Communist Party. Is that a correct statement?

A. It was not.

Q. How was it set up, and if you know, tell us whether or not the Communist Party had anything to do with it.

A. In early '33 all over the Coast there had been extreme discussion of some way of getting the marine workers' unions together into some kind of a joint action for hiring halls, better [5135] hour conditions on the waterfront. Then in '34 when the strike broke, we first had set up—we didn't have the Northwest Strike Committee, we had the ILA Strike Committee which met in Tacoma, in the City Hall Annex at Tacoma. And to start that strike, there was a big hue and cry that we had to feed the starving Alaskans. So the Government made a request and we finally reached an agreement with the shipowners to work Alaska ships. In reaching that agreement, we had to sit down and have a discussion with the other marine unions, because all we did was load the ships. We didn't sail them, they had to sail them. And that caused the setting up of the Northwest Joint Strike Committee of all the marine unions. That was in the first—about 15 or 20 days of the strike, in my opinion, and about the end of that month we first—then after that was set up, we voted in that meeting that anyone that worked the ships, loaded them, sailed them or had anything to do with the ships, 50 per cent of their earnings went into the Northwest Strike Committee to support the strike on the Pacific Coast. 25 per cent went to the local and the other 25 per cent of his earnings went to the individual for his family. There was a resolution brought on the floor of that Northwest Strike Committee by a man named Ed Morton, an old-timer on the waterfront—I mean by that he started in eighteen eighty-something on the waterfront, and other union activities. He brought in a resolution, setting aside a part of the 50 per cent that was turned over [5136] to the Northwest Strike Committee to establish a maritime setup amongst the maritime unions, and all groups participate in setting aside that money.

That was the start of the Northwest Strike Committee in the Northwest—the Northwest Strike Committee of the Maritime Federation. Then each branch in the local area on Puget Sound, through the Subdistrict Council of Puget Sound Locals we acted and recommended to our international and the other groups in the district, like Columbia River, Northern and Southern California group of the ILA, and the other marine groups, acted likewise through the other branch offices and to their district office, that we have a founding convention for the Federation. And it was finally adopted, and that convention was held in the spring of, I believe, '35.

Q. Did the Communist Party have anything to do with the direction or with the operation of the Joint Strike Committee of the Northwest?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Did the Communist Party have anything to do with the direction of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific? A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Does the Communist Party have anything to do with the direction of the ILWU? A. No.

Mr. MacInnis: That is all. [5137]

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. When did you live in San Francico?

A. I have never lived in San Francisco, only to stay here at a hotel.

Q. How much time have you spent in San Francisco?

A. Well, it all depends on what year you are referring to.

Q. Oh, all the years. The sum total. How much time would you say you have spent in San Francisco?

A. I would have to look into my yearly book that tells what I do every day, because when I am called out—I don't work steady for the international. I am a working longshoreman. I only get paid when I am called in and I——

(Testimony of Frank Melville Andrews.)

Q. Well, let's say——

A. One year will be in negotiations. Maybe that year I will spend 60, 90 days. Some years it runs as high as, I would say, I have been on the payroll of the international, the working days approximately six months.

Q. Well, let's say in the last 15 years, what percentage of your time have you spent in San Francisco?

A. Oh, small percentage. I would say maybe 10 per cent of the time. That is a rough guess; I would have to check up to find out myself.

Q. I understand that. Now, the people that you have discussed or have stated that you have discussed Mr. Bridges' reputation with, where did you discuss his reputation with them? [5138]

A. Here in Frisco, in practically every port on the Pacific Coast, back in Washington, D. C., in New York, back at Boston at the international CIO convention.

Q. Well, now, of all the people you have discussed Mr. Bridges' reputation with, in various cities and places in the United States, what percentage of those persons would you say you discussed his reputation with lived in San Francisco?

A. Oh, at first when I asked his reputation, was to find out—he run for the district president. I discussed, I imagine, with maybe 30 or 35 of the top men—I mean, I thought they were top men—in the Frisco local, in the marine unions, the rest of the discussion was with shipowners, with other marine workers, in Portland, Pedro, from San Diego, Seattle, from Tacoma, Port Angeles, all the ports. Some of the discussion was open caucus of elected delegates of the local where we were trying to decide what the man, what his reputation was to run for the president, and who we would support, which we do practically at every convention. We have a caucus to discuss our nominations.

Q. And you have discussed Mr. Bridges' reputation with hundreds of people?

A. That's correct. I would say thousands.

Q. Thousands of people?

A. In the course of time I have been—since '34.

Q. You are now——?

A. From the Governor of the State of Washington down. [5139]

Q. You are now employed by the international ILWU, are you not, by the international office?

A. Now?

Q. Yes. What is your present employment?

A. I am elected international executive board member, from the state of Washington. I get paid when I am called in by the international, and only then, when I am on service. The rest of the time I worked in the hold. In fact, I was injured January 14th working on a ship in Olympia.

Q. Now, Mr. Andrews, among the thousands of people that you have discussed the reputation of Mr. Bridges with, did you ever hear anyone say he was a member of the Communist Party?

(Testimony of Frank Melville Andrews.)

A. Hearsay, that somebody had told them they thought he was.

Q. Well, anything that anyone told you good about him was hearsay, too, wasn't it?

A. That's correct. In fact, some of the witnesses at this trial has told me contrary to what they stated on the witness stand about Mr. Bridges when I asked them. Mr. John Schomaker, I asked him at the '36 convention in San Pedro as to Mr. Bridges' reputation and it is completely opposite to what he told in this courtroom.

Q. Well, you know John Schomaker wasn't called here as a character witness for Mr. Bridges, don't you Mr. Andrews? A. That's right.

Q. And are you familiar enough with the principles of the [5140] Communist Party to know that Communists do not disclose either their own membership or the membership of their comrades?

A. I never had any desire for anything the Communist Party had. I have never studied their doctrines. I believed this country was good enough for me. If I wanted what the Communist Party had, I probably would have went to Russia, under the Communist regime. I am an American citizen, my ancestry was born in this country, and I believe in changing the laws in this country under the present existing laws, or electing people to change them for us through the proper manner.

Q. You know, as a matter of fact, that we do have some native-born members of the Communist Party, do you not, sir?

A. That's correct, and I believe there is no law in the United States that I know of today says it is illegal for a man to belong to the Communist Party. It is on the ballot.

Q. And if you knew that a man was a member of the Communist Party, it would not affect your own estimation of his character or his reputation, would it?

A. If I had known, yes—no, I don't believe it would. I believe a man has a right—I know of some men I think highly of that have professed that they are members of the party, but they are honest about it.

Q. Now, during the 1934 strike, you were a member of some executive committee of the strike?

A. I was a member of the Northwest Strike Committee. I had [5141] charge of what is known as the "flying squad." That is when a ship would come in and started to work, and we wanted to stop her. I took a crew out to stop them, to the best of my ability.

Q. Surely. And where did you serve with your flying squad? A. The Puget Sound area.

Q. What part of the strike period did you spend in San Francisco? A. None in '34.

Q. And you would hardly know whether a man named Sam Darcy met nearly daily with the strike committee here in Washington, would you, sir—or here in San Francisco?

A. I don'' believe I testified as to whether he did or not.

Q. Didn't you say that you never heard the name of Sam Darcy?

(Testimony of Frank Melville Andrews.)

A. I was asked if I knew Sam Darcy and I said I never heard of him until this time——

Mr. MacInnis: Now, the purport of the testimony is being misplaced. The witness Schomaker testified that the Northwest Strike Committee was set up under the direction of Sam Darcy and that the Maritime Federation of the Pacific was set up in the same way, and that is what this witness has testified about. He didn't say anything about his knowledge of this waterfront during the strike.

Mr. Donohue: I am just trying to find out what he knows about Sam Darcy, if anything.

Q. Do you know, Mr. Andrews, as a matter of fact, whether or not Sam Darcy met daily with the local strike committee during the [5142] 1934 strike? A. Where at?

Q. Here in San Francisco.

A. I couldn't tell you. I wasn't in Frisco.

Q. Now, just what was your personal relationship to the foundation of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific?

A. I was highly in support of it, as practically every working longshoreman in the area I come from—we voted almost unanimously for the establishment of the Federation.

Q. Now, would you know, as a matter of fact, whether or not Sam Darcy played any part in the organization of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific?

A. If he did, it was an awful silent one up where it originally started from.

Q. Were there persons from San Francisco who had anything to do with the inception and organization of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific?

A. I believe the only man that—or one of the men come up from Frisco, sent up by his local, was Henry Schmidt.

Q. And would you know whether or not Henry Schmidt, when he was sent up by his local, was influenced or persuaded to go there by a man named Sam Darcy?

A. I couldn't tell you. The information we had, and I believe the credentials he carried, was under the seal of the local, 38-79, representing that [5143] local.

Mr. Donohue: I have no further questions of the witness, if Your Honor please.

I raise one question to Your Honor: As I understand the law on character testimony, the testimony of good character is confined to testimony in the community in which one lives. Now, it becomes apparent that this witness has spent, in his best judgment, ten per cent of his time in the last fifteen years in the City of San Francisco. I seriously question, if Your Honor pleases, whether his evidence of the good character of the defendant Bridges is evidence such as would establish a general reputation for good character in the community in which Mr. Bridges lives. For that reason I move to strike his testimony on the question of character.

Mr. MacInnis: Well, that objection, of course, would be one going to the weight of the evidence, rather than to its admissibility. This gentleman says he has been here a percentage of the time and that he talked to people here, and obviously, any question about the dgeree of persuasiveness from the statement of people in the Northwest, including, as he says, the Governor of the State of Washington, would be a matter of going to the weight of his testimony. I think it is quite sufficient on that point, as a matter of law.

I have one other question, if I may.

Redirect Examination

By Mr. MacInnis:

Q. Mr. Andrews, I had thought to ask [5144] you this question on direct examination. I hope I may include it now. Do you know anything about a man named Henry Schrimpf?

A. I have known him—I met him the first time in 1936, at the district convention in San Pedro.

Q. Do you know anything about Henry Schrimpf in relation to Harry Bridges?

A. Yes, I have heard some statements he made.

Q. When you say "he," to what person do you refer? A. Schrimpf.

Q. What did he say and when, as best you can remember? A. At the last——

Mr. Donohue: I object, if Your Honor pleases. There has been no foundation laid for this series of questions.

Mr. MacInnis: No foundation?

Mr. Donohue: No.

(Testimony of Frank Melville Andrews.)

Mr. MacInnis: If Henry Schrimpf made statements about Harry Bridges, they certainly would be pertinent.

Mr. Donohue: He was never asked whether or not he made any statements to this man or in this man's presence which this witness may rebut.

Mr. MacInnis: That is what he is—No, he is testifying that Henry Schrimpf made these statements to him.

Mr. Donohue: As to Henry Schrimpf, he was never asked the question, if Your Honor pleases, as to whether or not he ever made any statement in the presence of or to this gentleman on [5145] the witness stand.

Mr. MacInnis: Henry Schrimpf was asked so many questions about that point, Your Honor, that they amounted to blanket questions, and he denied that he had ever at any time to any person made statements against Harry Bridges or detrimental to his character, or statements showing any hostility. That was the testimony of Schrimpf. I think he was questioned quite extensively on that point.

The Court: He was on matters of policy. He distinguished; he said on matters of policy. I will allow the question.

A. At the last caucus of the longshore group, held in the International Building in the Santa Maria Room, I was elected a delegate to that caucus from my local. At that caucus I was elected sergeant of arms of the caucus. During the course of the caucus I was having a discussion with Mr. Moleto from Local 19 in Seattle, their president, and Mr. Hopkins from Local 19, and the other sergeant at arms. And there was a discussion on the floor, and Schrimpf got dissatisfied and he started out by the sergeant of arms at the door, stopped to talk with some of them, and he made the statement to the group, myself included, that if it took the rest of his life, he was going to dump both Harry and Henry Schmidt.

Mr. MacInnis: That is all.

Mr. Donohue: I have no further questions, Your Honor.

The Court: You mentioned the other afternoon that you had [5146] a reserved ruling or you desired to make a motion to strike with respect to another witness' testimony?

Mr. Donohue: Yes. I do not wish to press that motion, if Your Honor please.

The Court: You do not wish to press it?

Mr. Donohue: No, Your Honor.

The Court: In this instance I will deny the motion to strike. The testimony given by the witness, as indicated by Mr. MacInnis, is a matter for the jurors to determine, as to the weight of the evidence. The witness did state he spent part of his time in San Francisco. To that extent he testifies that he did talk to certain people here, and I think to that extent it is admissible. Accordingly, it is for the jury.

You are excused. Thank you.

We have reached the adjournment period now, ladies and gentlemen. Unless there be some other matters?

Mr. MacInnis: No, Your Honor.

The Court: We will adjourn until tomorrow morning at 10:00 o'clock, with the same admonition: not to discuss the case under any conditions, nor to suffer any person to converse with you on any subject of the trial. You are not to form or express an opinion until it is submitted to you.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to tomorrow, Tuesday, February 7, 1950, at 10:00 o'clock a.m.) [5147]

February 7, 1950—10:00 A.M.

The Clerk: The United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

Mr. Hallinan: Harry Bridges.

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES

one of the defendants herein, called for the defendants; sworn.

The Clerk: Your full name is?

A. Harry Renton Bridges.

Mr. Hallinan: I might say parenthetically, Your Honor, in order to facilitate matters, to give the prosecution a chance to get their rebuttal testimony together and to suit the convenience of everybody, that, except for the possibility of one or two short character witnesses who may appear here, Mr. Bridges is our last witness.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

The Court: Thank you.

Direct Examination

By Mr. Hallinan:

Q. Your name is Harry Bridges?

A. Right.

Q. And what is your occupation, Mr. Bridges?

A. Presently union officer—labor union officer.

Q. Of what union?

A. International Longshoremen & Warehousemen's Union.

Q. Where were you born? [5148]

A. Melbourne, Australia.

Q. When? A. July 28, 1901.

Q. What is your father's name?

A. Alfred Ernest Bridges.

Q. What was your mother's name?

A. Maiden?

Q. What is your mother's name?

A. Maiden name?

Q. No, her present name.

A. Julia Bridges.

Q. What was her name?

A. Julia Dorgan, D-o-r-g-a-n.

Q. Did you have any brothers and sisters?

A. Yes.

Q. How many? A. Six—no, four.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Four. Are they still alive? A. Yes.

Q. How about your father and mother?

A. Father is dead; mother is alive.

Q. When did your father die?

A. November—November, '47.

Q. During his lifetime what was his occupation?

A. He was a real estate agent, realtor. [5149]

Q. He lived in Melbourne, Australia, until his death, did he? A. Right.

Q. He died there? A. Right.

Q. In '47? A. Yes.

Q. Does your mother still live in Melbourne?

A. Still lives in Melbourne.

Q. With reference to your family, what does the other four consist of?

A. Three sisters and a brother.

Q. And where do they live?

A. Two of my sisters, I think—two of my sisters definitely do live in Melbourne, one in Sydney, and my brother is in Melbourne.

Q. At least they live in Australia now?

A. That's right.

Q. And will you tell us a little about your early schooling and education?

A. Oh, my schooling was the average or usual schooling more or less of a child in Australia. The laws of Australia require any child to begin attending school at the age of four and a half. I started in school at four and a half and I went to what might be the equivalent of grade school here in the United States, until I was 11 or thereabouts, and then I put in two [5150] years at junior college, what I would say would be roughly the equivalent of a high school.

Q. And then what was the first occupation that you undertook?

A. Shortly after leaving school I worked in an office for a short time, I forget how long—an office of a large stationery firm in Australia.

Q. In what capacity? Office boy?

A. Office boy. Junior clerk. That was in the early days of the first World War.

Q. You copied letters in a big round hand, did you? A. Yes.

Q. After that what was your next occupation?

A. I went to sea.

Q. How old were you when you went to sea?

A. I went to sea in 1916, so that would make me 15.

Q. 15 years. In what capacity? On what sort of ship?

A. Seaman. In the first place, a cadet, later on ordinary seaman, and later on an able seaman.

Q. Did you attend prior to that time any school of navigation or school for training seamen?

A. Yes, while in my latter days—latter part of my schooling and shortly after schooling, I went to a kind of Sea Scouts arrangement in Australia where they had——.

Q. Who was that run by?

A. At that time it was run by the inspector of shipping of [5151] Melbourne, Australia. That was a federal bureau, and the man's name was Captain Sufferen, S-u-f-f-e-r-n.

Q. That was a school for training boys in preliminary seamanship to fit them for a life at sea?

A. I would say it was the equivalent of the Sea Scouts. It was kind of——

Q. Was that sail or steam?

A. At that time sail.

Q. In other words, you started in as a sailor in ships propelled by sails instead of by steam?

A. No, not the first—my first trip and a half or two trips was in steamboats. After that I switched to sail and spent the rest of my time while—until with a couple of exceptions, until I came to the United States.

Q. And that school that you mentioned amongst sailing men is a rather famous school for preliminary training and sailing ships, isn't that correct?

A. It was at that time. The school was built around the idea of keeping or training a group of young people in order to have available material for sailing ships in order—the real idea behind it was the idea of a group of old-time sailormen, that is, square-rigged sailormen, sailing ship men, to train enough material to man the ships at that time that were still running from Australia to Europe with wool and wheat. That continued for some years, but that was the idea at the time. [5152]

Q. And then you say that your first cruises were on steamboats? Were those short or long cruises?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Relatively short. Those were cruises up around the Dutch East Indies to the north of Australia. There was a large shipping company in Australia that used to have a run, so we cruised up by Malaya; Sumatra, Batavia, Java; up around the Dutch East Indies, the British Straits Settlements, up around there. I made about a trip and a half or two trips up there.

Q. And then when did you start on sailing ships? How old were you?

A. Oh, that would be around the end of 1916, fall of 1916. I had just turned 15.

Q. I see.

A. I put my age ahead a few years at the time.

Q. In order to get in?

A. Well, at that period of time in Australia there was, without it being official government program, the general idea was to have people quit school early, boys quite school early. There was a great manpower shortage on account of the war, so parents were generally urged, not necessarily through government agencies, but through various organizations of a so-called patriotic nature, to add to the manpower pool.

Q. That was the first World War, was on, at that time, commencing in 1914, ending in 1918 or '19?

A. And there was a great manpower shortage in Australia, what [5133] with the army and so on.

Q. And what did you do with regard to sailing on sailing vessels? What was your career in that?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. I continued sailing until, with the two exceptions where I made a trip in steamboats—that was still during the war—but from the end of the war on, until I landed here in the United States in 1920, I was in sailing.

Q. So that, then, from 1916, the end of 1916 up until 1920, with the exception of a couple of cruises with steamboats, you were on a sailing ship in what capacity? What were you then?

A. Able seaman. First of all, ordinary seaman; later on, able seaman.

Q. And would you tell us briefly what some of your duties were as an able seaman?

A. Well, an able seaman on a sailing ship, of course, in the terms of the trade at that time—my memory is getting dim, of course—you had to be able to hand-reef and steer. In other words, you were supposed to be a helmsman, be able to steer, steer not only by compass, but by watching the sails. In other words, when you are handling your ship, what they call close-hauled, in the parlance of the trade, steer by the sails, as it were, and keep the edge of the sail "lifting," meaning shaking (indicating), so as to keep the ship close-hauled on the course; that is, separate and apart from steering by compass. You had to be able to handle the sail, reef it, stow it, [5154] break it out. In addition, you had to be able to do the various types of work: splicing, worming, as they call it, do various types of rope work, line work, and keeping the ship in order, rigging and things like that. Generally speaking, the able seaman's duties aboard a sailing ship comprise taking care of the ship, handling the ship, taking care of the gear, the sails and doing everything except, you might say, the cooking or the navigation of the vessel. And in steamboats, more or less the same thing, except there is an absence of sail and your duties more or less are keeping the ship in trim. There was more painting, scaling, work of that nature.

Q. Now, what was the average number of the crew on the ships that you used to sail on?

A. Oh, it would depend. That would always depend, first of all—do you mean sailing ships?

Q. Yes.

A. That would depend on the vessel. It might go as high—I was on one ship once, we had a crew of 135, but she was a pretty big one. She was a big Frenchman, during the first World War, and in addition to the regular ship's crew, she had two six inch guns on her, and we had a large gun crew, a big French four-master, full-rigged ship at that time. So then I was on a smaller one, smaller ones. That would all depend. That would really—I don't know, but it would depend.

Q. About how many trips did you make altogether on sailing [5155] ships?

A. Oh, I don't know. I don't know. I would have to check my records. I have got my old papers lying around somewhere. I would have to check.

Q. How far would the trips be? What were the longest you took?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. By and large, around the Australian coast, between Australia and New Zealand, Australia and Tasmania, Australia and the Southwest Pacific, a trip over to the United States, and a trip to the Chilean coast. They were my various trips in sail. When I went to Europe, I made a couple of trips to Europe; that was in the first World War. They were steamboat trips. They were on transports.

Q. The necessity of using sailing ships at that time, I suppose, is revived by the shortage of shipping, is that right, and then after the war the sail ships died out?

A. No. When I went to sea in 1916 there was quite a large fleet of sailing ships operating around Australia and around the South Pacific Islands. Quite a fleet. And then of course the big clippers on the wool run and wheat run, they were still going big—Frenchmen, British ships, Finnish ships, Norwegian ships, Scandinavian ships. Quite a large fleet used to sail every year, make the trip around the Cape, Cape Horn, and home across the Atlantic.

Q. And then in the course of your work on those ships, did you meet men of many different nationalities and races, men from many [5156] different climes? A. Of, of course, quite a few.

Q. Mingled together with them through all those years?

A. Yes, that is true. That is always the case when one goes to sea.

Q. Now, at the time that you were in Australia and during the time that you were working on these ships, did you take any interest in labor movements or union movements?

A. Very difficult to work for a living in Australia without being connected with a union.

Q. As of that time?

A. As of that time, yes. Well, as of that time.

Q. Why was that, Mr. Bridges?

A. I joined—I was more or less required or did join the Seamen's Union shortly after I went to sea. I could have—it wasn't exactly necessary for me to belong, because I went to sea as a cadet and I didn't have to belong immediately to it at that time, but anyway, I was a member of the union very shortly after I went to sea and I can still recall about my first trip and a half or two trips, we were laid up because we were on strike in support of the West Coast longshoremen here in the United States. The seamen and longshoremen. In other words, the union down there—I can't recall the details, and it didn't affect the ship I was on because we weren't trading to the United States, but it did affect some of the other vessels. [5157] But indirectly it affected myself because I was a member of the union. I had no part in it other than being just an ordinary rank and file member of the union, but I distinctly recall it because I had only been going to sea a few weeks when that occurred. That was in 1916. And then in 1917 there was a general strike of Australia, where everything was shut down by the labor unions at that time, and the president of the Australian

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Seamen's Union was a pretty famous individual. His name was Tom Walsh. Later on he was imprisoned. He was imprisoned later on for advocating or participating in strikes in violation of the arbitration laws of Australia, and he married the daughter of Mrs. Pankhurst of suffragette fame. Mrs. Sylvia Pankhurst. Tom Walsh married her daughter. That was Mrs. Adele Pankhurst, and I got to know both of them, because Sylvia—I mean, Mrs. Tom Walsh—that is, Mrs. Pankhurst's daughter, was placed in jail in Melbourne, a place called Pentridge Stockade, and my aunt was the governor of the jail. So she was a political prisoner in the jail. She hadn't committed any crime. The laws of Australia required all labor disputes be submitted to compulsory arbitration, and although technically speaking, the right to strike is preserved, there can be certain penalties assessed against people who refuse to follow the compulsory arbitration provisions. So Tom Walsh and his wife were imprisoned. She was, at that time, in 1917. And I remember visiting my aunt in the jail. She took me in to see Tom Walsh's [5158] wife, that is, the former Adele Pankhurst.

Q. And what became of Tom Walsh ultimately?

A. I don't know. I recall hearing about him around the early '30's. I don't know.

Q. Well, let me ask you this, Mr. Bridges: Were the unions in Australia at that time in a strong or a weak condition?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Strong. Well, after the 1917 strike there was a general strike all over the nation.

Q. What do you mean by a general strike? Will you explain?

A. That was a general strike, where everything was shut down. It began in the railroad yards. The railroad workers, although the railroads there are government owned, all the workers are organized, and the railroad unions were one of the strongest unions. So in 1917 some workers were discharged or locked out in the railroad yards in the state of New South Wales, and the railroad workers declared a strike. And the miners joined in sympathy and when the miners joined, that is, the coal miners, they declared all industries using coal, they declared coal, the commodity of coal, incidentally, I mean, they declared it "black" or as we might say over here in this country, "hot cargo." And therefore every industrry using coal more or less shut down in sympathy, and that went for the sea-going industry, that is, the shipping industry as well as any other. That resulted in a national strike of the entire country in 1917. Well, that was still during the war. [5159]

Q. How long did that last?

A. Oh, I forget, but I remember that the strike wasn't successful. It was, if not broken, it was considerably softened up by the federal government stepping in and taking some pretty extreme measures.

Q. But taking the federal government as of that time, by and large, was it more pro or anti labor?

A. Well, very, very pro-labor. The prime minister at that time, a very famous man in Australia, was William Morris Hughes. He was a longshoreman. He had been president of the longshore union, and he became prime minister of Australia. So the labor government during the war was very, you might say, pro, and the unions were very strong, even though the labor government eventually split on the issue of conscription. There was three referendum votes on conscription. Billie Hughes, as he was known—that was the prime minister of the country—and I remember him "soap-boxing" when I was a young person; he went over to England and he became, he came back "Sir William Morris Hughes" and that kind of washed him up with the labor movement in Australia, and in addition to that, he advocated a program of conscription in Australia. Well, that program was put to a referendum vote of the people, I think three different times, and voted down each time. Strangely enough, the weight of the vote, the vote was pretty close. Each time it was decided by the absentee votes of the soldiers overseas. So up until that point, until the labor party was split, the union were very strong and the labor party very strong. [5160]

Q. Let me ask you this: How long prior to that time had labor been in political power in Australia, approximately?

A. Oh, I really can't recall exactly when the labor government went into power, but the unions were very strong.

Q. Let me ask you this——

A. And the Labor Party—if you were a member of a labor union—if you were a member of a union in a compulsory fashion you became a member of the Labor Party, because you were required as part of your union duties, and part of your union dues went to the support of the Labor Party, and, of course, under the law of Australia, it is compulsory to vote; you must register and you must vote, otherwise you are fined.

Q. Was that the rule at that time?

A. It still is.

Q. Did you personally, even though only a child in years, take any part or any interest in these union activities at that time?

A. Only as a member. Only as a member of the union, rank and file.

Q. Did you take any interest in it? Did you study it and take any interest in the matters——

A. Not to any great degree. I took—other relatives of mine, that is, cousins, uncles and so forth, who were also involved in certain political aspects; I had uncles who were involved in running for office on the Labor Party program.

Q. Tell us who they were and what they did, briefly. [5161]

A. Well, one uncle was killed in the war. I was named after him in part. I had an uncle called Harry Renton, who was killed in the first World War, but he had gotten away, he had left Australia around 1915. He was a great pro-labor person, you might say. He was a veteran of the Boer War and you might say pretty anti-Empire. I had another uncle who later on served for many years in the upper chamber—what they call the upper legislative chamber in New South Wales, and I had some cousins who were in various jobs or industries where the labor union activities required—well, were pretty strong, active and going on all the time, so in that way I indirectly more than directly got to learn about labor matters. I didn't take any active part in the early strikes I was involved in beyond doing the things I was required to do as a member of the union—picket duty and things like that. I had no part in the program or policy of the leadership or anything like that.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. So, Mr. Bridges, these devices that have been testified to here to better the condition of labor, such as strikes—the general strike occurred in Australia before even the Russian Revolution of 1917, is that correct? A. Oh, sure.

Q. All those devices, were they devices that had long been recognized as proper tools in a labor struggle, or were they introduced with what is now called Communism?

A. Oh, no, I think that almost any student of labor history or [5162] world labor organization I think knows that at the beginning of the first World War possibly Australia was one—was the best organized country in the world. Its unions were strong and progressive, and Australia had already established, not only by the activities of the various labor unions down there, but by the activities of the labor government, they had established many, many reforms that we are only getting around to here in the United States now.

Q. What? A. What is that?

Q. What?

A. Well, in 1909, for example, in the shipping industry the eight-hour day was established, certain overtime was established, certain other things such as insurance was established by the actions of the union in collaboration with the Labor Party. And here in the United States, why, the unions—I think we got the eight-hour day here in the shipping industry, that is, for seamen, in 1919. And then there were certain other things such as old age pensions, the basic minimum wage law here; we call it the basic wage law down there; a certain type of medical and health programs, health insurance program, the baby bonus, various things like that.

Q. Would you tell us briefly now, because this is pertinent toward an inquiry as to what you were trying to help the longshoremen get in San Francisco—give us a little more detail on those things, that is, by the eight-hour day you mean the [5163] eight-hour day for men as well as women?

A. The eight-hour day was established in Australia by law very, very—pretty early in the game, in the early 1900's. I forget; there is—we celebrate —used to celebrate in the unions in Australia the eight-hour day.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Was that an eight-hour day for men?

A. For everybody.

Q. Or only for women?

A. For everybody, except there were certain industries that were exempt, something like certain industries are exempt here from the basic minimum hour and wage law. But that was established by political action in Australia.

Q. What about your basic wage rate? What was that? A. I forget—there was——

Q. I don't mean the amount, but what was the operation of it?

A. Notwithstanding what job you were working in in Australia, you had to receive a certain number of pounds a week. It was a minimum wage law. That was established, I think, around 1909 or '10 or '08.

Q. What about the old age pension?

A. Oh, that was a pretty early development in Australia. Old age pensions I think were set up around shortly after the turn of the century in Australia.

Q. And roughly what did they provide?

A. Pensions for elder citizens, not too— well, at least to [5164] my way of thinking, not enough, not too liberal, but——

Q. Something?

A. They were considered pretty radical at the time.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Then what about the baby bonuses that you mentioned?

A. That was a very simple affair, that everybody—that the government, the federal government, paid the parents five pounds at the time—it is more now—upon the birth of every baby. The idea was to give the baby a start in life by being able to buy some clothes for it, some food, and something like that.

Q. Then were labor unions protected, I mean, were they permitted to exist with the aid of the government? Were repressive measures against them forbidden?

A. Not in Australia since the 1890's. There was some pretty hectic battles fought between the labor unions and the government as well as the big industries down there in the 1890s. The unions were defeated. They were defeated by certain laws that were passed notwithstanding the fact that the unions were strong enough in an economic sense to defend themselves by strike or economic action. So, as a result of the gains of labor in Australia, that is, the gains that were made in the 1890s, being threatened by certain legislative steps that were taken by the pretty big interests in Australia, the Labor Party was established, and the labor unions set to work through political action or legislative action to preserve their gains and their [5165] organizations by laws and have succeeded in doing that in many, many ways.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. So that then for some 25 or 30 years before this Communist-directed strike on the San Francisco waterfront, Australia had the things that you have just discussed and told us about, is that right? I mean the so-called or the charged Communist-dominated strike?

A. Oh, yes, that is true.

Q. And was Australia during any part of that time what you could call a Communistic country?

A. Well, every trade union in Australia has as its general basic theme, you might say—it is stated in the preamble of the trade union—a Socialist objective. They frankly—and I think that is without any exceptions down there; I am just stating what the facts are—all the trade unions of Australia are definitely, frankly and objectively supposed to drive towards a Socialist objective, meaning the ownership, operation and control of the various enterprises of Australia by a Socialist government, a Socialist regime and administration.

Q. I see. When you left Australia to come to San Francisco had you already had some considerable experience and made some considerable study of the trade union activities, tactics and techniques?

A. I wouldn't say considerable, but a certain amount. I was unable to avoid a certain amount. The way it used to work on [5166] the vessels—and I think that it was the Australian seamen's unions that more or less established this method of administrating a union—while a ship was at sea, that ship was organized where the various members of the crew elected a ship's delegate. In other words, you had a ship's committee, and that committee would have a chairman, maybe a vice-chairman or secretary; it met every so often; handled the grievances of the crew by in effect having a spokesman for the crew take the matters up with the master of the vessel or the chief mate of the vessel. So all the time there was a certain amount of union activitiy aboard a ship, and in that sense I of course gained a little experience, not too much. I didn't act in any official capacity on any of those ships except maybe the last 18 months before I came over here, like I was the chairman of the ship's committee on the vessel that I landed in—I left here in the United States in 1920. That was a sailing ship called the Isabelle.

Q. That is when you came to San Francisco, in 1920? A. Right.

Q. Landed here?

A. I was the chairman of the ship's committee.

Q. When you landed here where did you go to live then, Mr. Bridges? A. San Francisco.

Q. And what type of work did you take up then? [5167]

A. I continued to sail a ship out—I transferred into the Sailors Union of the Pacific, and at least—no, I didn't transfer; I joined the Sailors Union of the Pacific, but I had no trouble because I was a member of the Australian seamen's union, and I started to sail out of San Francisco.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. And you tell us that as early as 1917 there was a strike in Australia to support the demand of striking longshoremen in San Francisco?

A. No, 1916.

Q. 1916?

A. Right, 1916. I think that is a matter of—I think that is pretty well known.

Q. The Sailors Union of the Pacific to which you belonged—how long did you remain in that type of work?

A. Until shortly after the 1921 strike. The Sailors Union, which was a part of the International Seamen's Union of America at that time, called a strike in May, 1921, and that strike eventually was lost, fizzled out, and I let my membership in the union lapse shortly after around the fall of that year.

Q. What did you do then? What kind of work did you take up?

A. I was still going to sea, but in the meantime I joined the—during the course of the strike I became a member of the IWW.

Q. What was the IWW?

A. Industrial Workers of the World. [5168]

Q. Who had founded that?

A. Eugene Debs.

Q. That was the——

A. Union of Debs.

Q. The great Socialist who died here a few years ago? A. Right.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. And this Industrial Workers of the World—how long did you belong to it?

A. A few months, I think. I was in there until the end of '21 or the beginning of '22, if I recall correctly.

Q. What were the circumstances of joining and leaving it?

A. Well, the International Seamen's Union at that time was composed of a series of unions. On the West Coast, as far as the deck department was concerned—that is, the seamen that sailed on the deck—it was called the Sailors Union of the Pacific; at least that was one of the component parts of the national. The firemen were organized into the Marine Firemen, of course, and the stewards' department was organized into the Cooks and Stewards Union. There was other branches for ferryboats, fishermen, and so forth.

In the East the union was known as the Eastern Gulf Association, and my membership had been transferred at that time to the Eastern Gulf Association, and I was in New Orleans during the strike—during the '21 strike I was on strike in New Orleans. So that strike was in bad shape, to my way of thinking [5169]—not only to my way of thinking but to the way of thinking of quite a few of the members of the union it was being sold out, the leaders of it were selling us out. So that had quite a bit to do with my joining the IWW, as well as that organization at that time offered a more progressive, militant program, a more democratic program. There was very little democracy in the old ISU, and I eventually during the strike joined the IWW, the Wobblies, as they were called—and eventually I went to sea as a Wobbly organizer.

Q. How long did that last?

A. Oh, just a few months, up until the beginning of 1922, I think.

Q. Then under what circumstances did you leave?

A. I just quit; I quit my ship, and then I joined the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey for a while. [5170]

Q. That was in the employ of the United States Government? A. Right.

Q. And how long did you stay in that?

A. Oh, I think until around—I have my papers; I was discharged, I left in the fall of '22, I think in October.

Q. Now, did anything occur with regard to the head or one of the heads of the IWW that caused you to look with suspicion thereafter upon such organization?

A. Yes. One of the top leaders, one of the men we looked up to and admired at that time who—he was the secretary of the Sailor's Union of the Pacific, he was the secretary of the union that I belonged to. Although I held membership in the East, I was still a member of the Sailors Union on the West Coast, and the secretary of the union, a man named Thompson at the time, and also a leader of the IWW, was later on—I didn't know it at the time, I learned it later on—he was exposed as being on the employers' payroll all the time. He was on the payroll of the shipowners all the time.

Q. And acting as a spy upon the union?

A. Well, he was one of the leading officers of the IWW. He was one of the very militant, so forth and so on, but later it developed that all the time he was working for the shipowners. Not that the membership knew it, of course, I mean.

Q. When, approximately, did you find out that that man was working for the shipowners? [5171]

A. Oh, I don't know; some time after the strike of '21.

Q. I see.

A. Some time after that strike of '21.

Q. Now, the strike of '21, then, having been lost, did you return to San Francisco?

A. Yes.

Q. And when, Mr. Bridges?

A. In the later part of the year, in 1921, I took a ship out of New Orleans and came around to the West Coast here, and I left it here and then I joined the Coast Survey.

Q. I see. And then when did you finally give up following the sea? A. 1922.

Q. And you undertook what kind of work then?

A. Longshore work.

Q. I see. So that at that time, then, you would be approximately 21 years old?

A. No, before—let me see. First of all, after leaving the Coast Survey, I worked as a lumber piler here in San Francisco, for Van Arsdale-Harris was the name, the name of the firm. I forget how long I worked there. So in reality I don't think I went to work as a longshoreman until probably—it might have been later in '22, more likely early in '23.

Q. Now, would you describe briefly to the jury the situation of the longshoremen of San Francisco from that time up until the [5172] formation of the union, around 1933? That is, the conditions under which they worked, their pay.

A. Well, it wasn't so bad. The conditions on the waterfront were not so bad when I first started, in '22; '23. Although a few years before, the bona fide union on the waterfront had been smashed along with the many, many other unions as a result of strikes that occurred in the post-war depression and the strike was smashed in 1919. And a company union was established here in San Francisco, called the "Blue Book." That was established in 1919, 1920, and conditions were fairly—weren't so bad, relatively speaking, up until around 1924. There was an attempt in 1924 to revive the old union, and I recall the case because I joined up just prior to Labor Day, 1924. And we entered in the Labor Day parade on Labor Day. Around 400 of us were members of the labor union, which was the ILA at that time. The president was George McNulty who is now the chief probation officer of San Francisco. And we paraded up Market Street in September, 1924, and the company union agents stood on the sidewalk and took all our names down, all of those that they knew or could recognize, and we were all blacklisted for a couple of years, for the next couple of years, for about '25 and '26. We couldn't work at any of the regular jobs, and quite a group of us just got by, hit and miss, where we could. By and large, those who were citizens of the United States found employment out at the army transport docks. Those that were not [5173] citizens, and that is the category I was in, we generally picked up a little work at the old docks where the Japanese ships used to come in. Strange, but happens to be true, that about the only line that didn't do business with the company union, the Blue Book, was the Japanese lines. So there was always a few hours' work to be picked up down there, even though you were not a member of the company union. And then during the spring of the year, when the fishing vessels went to Alaska, used to send up quite a fleet of big square-riggers at that time, as well as some steamboats later, we could pick up a little work there. Then a few odd jobs, car-loading and one thing and another. Anyway, we hung on for a couple of years, and then the thing fizzled out and we got by, were able to work again pretty steady along the waterfront. That is, we could work anywhere, but in the meantime, of course the speedup started; particularly during the year 1925 I would date the real speedup starting on the waterfront. And when I say speedup I mean it was pretty killing.

Q. Well, what do you mean now by speedup?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Well, the men, the various longshoremen, both as individuals and as members of a gang, they were driven at a pretty hard pace. Because by that time, the group of longshoremen on the waterfront were about evenly divided into two groups. You had one group of men that you might say worked steady, relatively speaking, and another group of men that worked casually. We [5174] used various names for them, but generally you had a situation like this: The men that were working steadily, they were in the docks working on the job, and 24 hours a day, or pretty near 24 hours a day, certainly 16, 18 hours a day, there was always a large group of men standing outside the docks, see, ready and willing to take the place of any person working inside that wasn't working fast enough. Now, in order to understand that, it should be borne in mind that the men that were standing outside willing to take a job of a so-called man working steady, merely had in mind trying to make a living. They were pretty desperate, hard up, wanted to eat, hungry. So by juggling this type of situation around, why, the various steamship companies and stevedoring contractors, they were able to step up production. That is, the manpower output and the gang hour output of the San Francsico longshoremen. They were able to step that up until it was the highest in the world. I would say, and I have found out since by research, that without a question of doubt, the output per man and per gang in San Francisco during those years or on the Pacific Coast during those years was higher than any other country in the world. And

"speedup" simply means that every opportunity that presented itself, the number of men in the gang or the number of men per operation was reduced. And therefore you had a situation where two men might be required to do the work of, say, eight men, where under normal circumstances without any pressure or in the absence [5175] of any type of bona fide trade union organization. you would actually have eight men doing a job. But in order to save costs, the men were knocked off and two men were pushed into doing the work.

I worked down on that waterfront there in the hold of a ship where there was only two of us in the hold, stowing the ship. Now, of course, generally speaking, we have eight men and that has been the case for many, many years and was the case just prior to that. That was an extreme or an unusual situation. But every man that was on the waterfront in those years, when you talked to them about "speedup," they know what it means. And it was a killing speedup. The men would drop on the job and you would pack them off and lay them to one side and leave them lay there until—if they had an attack of heart failure, well, they would maybe lay there an hour or two until the ambulance came there and picked them up. Nobody worried much about them. I was on jobs on three different occasions when men dropped dead, just—that was the end of them. They were done. There was long hours, tremendously long stretches. You were required to work—you weren't required to work, but you were afraid not to work the long stretches because if you laid off to let somebody take your place, that simply meant that the person would stay in your place and you wouldn't come back. So you might work stretches of 24, 36 hours.

Q. You mean 24 or 36 hours without a [5176] stop?

A. No, a stop for meals, with a stop for meals and that is all.

Q. And what about the rate of pay? Was there overtime beyond any particular hour?

A. Yes, on some companies, overtime; on the majority of docks there was overtime. That wasn't a point; nothing wrong with that, because overtime in the longshore industry is charged to the ship. In other words, you only work overtime when called upon by the shipping company or the ship. The best examples is, a foreign ship comes in, and they make a contract with the contractor stevedore to unload the ship. Now, the ship determines whether you want to work overtime or not, or whether the men will work overtime. In which case, it is a cost plus affair. The stevedoring contractor works the men overtime and charges the ship. So it was always a matter of actual fact that the bulk of the companies, the majority of the companies paid overtime when overtime was worked, and the rate was generally time and a half. There was some exceptions to that. Some companies paid straight on overtime all the way through. Many companies, or some companies, again, paid below even the company union standard. The company union standard was —well, at the lowest point it reached 75 cents an hour and time and a half—75 cents an hour, and 30 cents on overtime, additional 30 cents an hour for overtime. It went up and we started to organize and they gave us a voluntary raise to 85 cents an hour and $1.25 overtime. Some companies, as I say, paid not only less than the [5177] straight time rate, but as low as 50 cents an hour. But they paid straight on overtime. But that was an exception to the rule, rather than the rule.

Q. Now, what about this matter that has been described or called a shapeup?

A. Well, the shapeup existed only in the port of San Francisco because the company union existed in San Francisco. In all other ports they had an employer-controlled hiring hall, called by the men the "fink" hall. Now the reason for that was that San Francisco being the major port in the Pacific Coast, generally controlled or generally laid down the pattern of labor relations. Wages, for example, were set by and large by San Francisco. A wage would be set in San Francisco by fake collective bargaining, fake and phony collective bargaining between the company union here and the employers' association, and that would be established as the rate in San Francisco, and the shipping companies and the stevedoring contractors in other ports as they used to tell us, "out of the goodness of their hearts," wanting to do the right thing by their employees and workers would voluntarily follow the San Francisco rate, even though they were under no compulsion to do so. So the way the thing worked, the company union was maintained here in San Francisco in order to give an appearance of collective bargaining, and then the rest of the ports used to fall in line, and along with the company union, used to get the shapeup in San Francisco [5178] only. In other ports——

Q. Let's interrupt for a moment. What do you mean by a company union?

A. A company union, why, is a dummy union set up by the shipping operators, controlled by the shipping operators, the officials were hand-picked by the shipping operators and it was used to play a role on the waterfront where, instead of defending the rights of the working people on the waterfront, the members of the company union, the way the company union was used, that if you raised—if you made a complaint, even about the violation of a company union rule because there were certain rules, there were certain wage standards and working rules; the way the company union worked, if a member on the job or any member of the company union,—and you had to be a member of the union to work, union membership was compulsory. They had a complete closed shop. Any complaint against a violation of working rules, pay rates and so forth, the company union was an agency that reported you to the employer, and you were fired, and you were blacklisted. You weren't only blacklisted in San Francisco, you were blacklisted on the entire

Pacific Coast, because your name was sent out, up and down the Coast in each port, and if you showed up and tried to go to work as a longshoreman in any other port on the Coast, you might get by for a few days, but as soon as they checked their record, that was all, you were finished. So the company union acted as a blacklisting [5179] agency, and instead of doing anything to protect the rights of the workers, in the first place it served as a phony, fake collective bargaining agency, as a stool pigeon agency that used to turn in the few people that used to complain about the chiseling that went on. In addition, the agents of the company union and the officers of the company union, they used to act as checkoff men. In other words, and I have—I don't raise any particular point—there used to be quite a few places operating on the waterfront at that time, they were "blind pigs," bootleg joints. There was a practice of, when you got your brass check as a longshoreman, and each longshoreman received a brass check when he was hired in the shapeup. He was hired, picked out, and then you were given a brass check, and that brass check was a timekeeper's check. And when you went to collect your pay for the job, you turned in that check and you received your pay in return for the check. Well, a practice developed, sponsored, pushed, supported and in some cases demanded by the company union where you would cash your brass check in, or at one of the bootleg joints.

Mr. Hallinan: May we take the recess now?

The Court: Yes, I think so, Mr. Hallinan.

Ladies and gentlemen, we will take the morning recess. May I again admonish you not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Recess.) [5180]

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, you were telling us about these halls that the employers ran, what you call fink halls. Would you tell us just what you meant by that?

A. On the Pacific Coast here for a period of years—that is, between the breaking of the unions, the longshore union in 1919 and '20 and the seamen's union in '21—up until we finally eliminated the last vestige of the hiring hall, of the fink hall, in 1936, there was a structure or an organization—it truly was—known as the Fink Hall. That was the term applied by the longshoremen and the seamen. In reality it was an employers' hiring hall, and it operated in, as I say, all ports with the exception of San Francisco for the longshoremen, although we had a hall here for the seamen in San Francisco. Now, by the use of a hiring hall structure—that is, its organizational structure—the application of the basic principle that was underlying the hiring hall, the employers in the shipping industry were able to, first of all, prevent any effective or bona fide labor organization. Anybody that started to take any effective steps toward organizing a labor union, the fink hall was the instrumentality by which and through which they were blacklisted, forced out of the industry, if possible. Secondly, it was also through the fink hall that some groups or some individuals could be favored over others; that is, longshoremen; for example, a work record of their various jobs, their earnings were kept and the—by the use [5181] of these records the job opportunities could be juggled around in such a way so as to discriminate, to play favorites, and thus that was an additional reason why some men felt required to do more work than other men.

Q. Would you give us an illustration of how a man would be blackballed, as you put it, the reason for it, and the procedure they went through to arrive at that to drive him out of the industry?

A. Well, in the—in the various ports outside of San Francisco, the principle was simple. There were some exceptions, but by and large, here is all that happened: All the longshoremen of the port were hired through the fink hall—the longshore fink hall, or the longshore employer-controlled hiring hall. That was the only way you could get on the job. There were certain exceptions to that, but they were exceptions only, such as after a group of longshoremen had been sent to work through the fink hall, they might be working until night, for example, and one of them might get hurt, so there was a shortage of a man, in which case the boss might go outside the dock and pick up the first person that came along. Generally speaking, he would pick someone that was waiting outside of the dock for just that thing to happen. And that might be midnight; it might be ten in the morning; it might be any time of day or night. So outside of those exceptions, all other jobs came through the fink hall as far as longshoremen were concerned, [5182] and the same with seamen. So if you got in bad standing with the employers for any reason, such as union activities, raising complaints about chiseling on your pay envelope; if you didn't play ball in some respects, that is, with certain bosses, by cashing in at a certain bootlegger, or doing certain other things; if you didn't kick back to certain bosses, the fink hall was the instrumentality by which you just didn't go to work. You would go up—you could show up at the fink hall every day. In other words, the discrimination wasn't practiced by discharging one after being hired; the discrimination was practiced by not being hired. You were never told anything; you never knew anything; you were just hanging around there and you never got hired; more or less it just happened anyway. So there wasn't any evidence. The employers were always in a position to say, "There is no blacklist going here; you are just out of luck, that is all. You just don't get hired." See? And that is the way it used to work.

The same thing occurred in the shapeup. That is, the longshoremen in the City of San Francisco. The shapeup was the method by which they were hired. And in the picking out of the men we all used to assemble on the waterfront right down across from the Ferry Building in San Francisco in those days, and every day, holidays and all, that was the only way you had a chance of getting a day's work. And after about seven or seven-thirty in the morning—the work would generally start [5183] at eight o'clock—after the various individuals had been picked from the shapeup there across from the Ferry Building, then you would scatter and you would spend the rest of the day wandering around the waterfront hanging around in front of a dock in the odd chance that someone didn't show up, someone had gotten hurt, someone was short-handed and the boss might come out and call you in to get a day's work. Generally speaking, that is the way the thing worked. And then of course scattering through both—through the fink halls as well as through the shapeup, scattered through the ranks the employers had certain agents. They were pretty well known by the man that a certain character, Joe Blow, or whoever he might be, you had to keep an eye on him because his job was to report back, either through the company union officials or through the operators of the fink hall or to the employers themselves, the employers or company representatives or bosses themselves, they were around there; they traveled around working through the various operations. One of their prime purposes would be to keep turning reports about so-and-so was talking too much, so-and-so said this on the job, or so-and-so said that such-and-such a company is lousy, trying to chisel, or something like that. Those statements used to catch with you. Somehow or other you didn't work maybe for two or three months if you were working steady; if you were not working steady, the same situation kept on going, [5184] because you couldn't do a great deal of harm anyway. But the purpose of that was to weed out of the so-called steady groups of men, steady gangs, any individual that did not conform all the way down the line, work like the devil and keep your mouth shut and make no complaint about conditions, and if you were chiseled by the paymaster from your pay envelope you had to accept it. There was all forms of chiseling. In other words, you would work eight hours. Well you would go down to get paid; you would find that you would go to the paymaster and you were paid for seven hours in your pay envelope, see? Well, if you made a complaint, that was just too bad; you didn't work for a while. And eventually we caught up with a few of the paymasters that used to take the pay out of the pay envelopes and put it in their pockets. In some of those cases I think it is correct that those things did not happen with the direct knowledge or approval of the ship operators as such, but the whole-setup down there was such that people could do those things on their own. The petty individual racketeering chiselers thought it was all right to do these things, because that was the overall nature of the setup, although it might not have been with the direct knowledge and approval of the top level people in the shipping industry, at least it was winked at.

Q. The people whom you have just described as turning in men who might indulge in any suggestion of organization, those [5185] people were paid spies of the employers, is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. And how long——

A. That was a regular practice in those days not only in that industry but in all industry that was applied. I think that was all thoroughly exposed later on when the United States Senate Civil Liberties Committee conducted a thorough investigation and made a report, and we had them down there.

Q. Was that a recent thing, or did you observe it over a long period of years?

A. That was going on—that was going on for years. That was going on when I was—as I told you before, some people I can think of, that is, the secretary of my union, the secretary of the Sailors Union of the Pacific in 1921 turned out to be an agent of the employers on the employers' payroll, and his purpose was to turn over information to the employers not only of individuals that should be eliminated from the industry because they were considered too militant as trade unionists in the industry, but his program was to work from the inside and sabotage any active trade union or constructive trade union program, or sabotage and sell out the strikes that might occur over questions of hours, wages and working conditions. That was Thompson, who at the same time as he was secretary of the union, he was also one of the greatest respected leaders of the IWW, on the employers' payroll, paid all along. Later [5186] on—later on in 1936 and '37 the same thing was proven over and over and over again.

Q. But what I am trying to get at is this: You knew then for a number of years prior to the 1934 strike that not only in organizations like the IWW but right in the group of men with whom you were working there were men employed to spy upon anyone who would try to organize a union or try to raise any protests against the conditions, is that right?

A. Oh, sure. Every man down there knew that. I am talking now about people who were employed amongst the working ranks as well as the company union officials. Of course, every company union official, we knew that that was his job; we knew about them. But in addition to them, I am talking about people in the rank and file.

Q. So every man that you had working alongside of you, you had to regard with some suspicion as possibly being a spy? A. Not in every case.

Q. You had to regard with some suspicion, at any rate? A. Oh, definitely, yes.

Q. You stated a great many men used to wait outside the docks while other men worked 24 to 48 hours at a stretch. How was that?

A. Well, by and large—and this was true in every port on the coast—the men were divided into two groups. There were certain gangs of men and they were steady gangs, and there were [6187] other gangs of men that were so-called casual gangs. And then there was another large group of men that about equalled the number in the first group, that is, the group of men that were in the steady and casual gangs—another group of men about equal in number were just individuals hoping to get into a steady or a casual gang.

Now, the way it used to work is this: I worked in a steady gang for many, many—for quite a number of years. You maintained your job in a steady gang because of your ability to keep going over a long period of time at a high rate of speed. In other words, we produced. The various gangs used to specialize in various types of work. I worked for many years for the steel company. We worked ships of the United States Steel, the Isthmian Line, and our gang was a great steel gang. I was the rigger in the gang. So we used to be shunted around to the various jobs where we unloaded steel from the ships; that is, not only long steel, 60 or 70-foot steel, 40-foot, but ~~in addition~~ prefabricated steel. I worked ships, for example, that unloaded quite a bit of steel that went into the Golden Gate Bridge and the San Francisco Bay Bridge. We worked almost all the steel that went into the Carquinez Straits bridge. And that was—that type of work we generally needed gangs there that were pretty highly skilled in their work so they could produce any tonnage at all. It was pretty dangerous work. Now, if you got a gang of workers that didn't know what [5188] they were doing, you could poke around all day on a ship and not haul out one piece of steel. Well, this was true in all kinds of commodities, whether they handled sack commodities, such as barley, wheat, various grains that moved from the harbor, died fruit, canned goods, general cargo. Various gangs were kept doing the special types of work, and in that way attained quite a high degree of production.

Then in addition to that there was various ways and means of stepping up, as I say, the output per man, per gang hour. Now, then, as an individual in those gangs, when you weren't able, as the expression went at the time, to meet the hook, you were quickly eliminated from that gang, and one of the fellows who were hanging around day in and day out was right there to take your job. So we had the pressure of the large group of men that were waiting around, as well as the other devices in shaping up, the fink hall, the racketeering, the payoffs, one thing or another—all those pressures combined, as well as, above all, the absence of any real trade union on the waterfront. That kept the pressure on the people in the steady gangs and forced them to produce at high speed or high production. [5189]

Q. What was the pay-off?

A. Well, there was—some of the gangs, they were pretty well known, the way you stayed in those gangs and worked steady, you kicked back to the boss or you paid off.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. What were they paid, for instance?

A. Well, you would cash your checks with him and he held out 10 per cent or 5 per cent. In other words, you would cash your brass check, the boss acted as banker. As you went to work in the gang, you would turn over your brass check to the boss and when the job was finished, he would give you your pay less 10 per cent that he kept, and that went for every man in the gang. Now, I want to say this much at this time. Many of those bosses then are members of my own union now. They were operating under those conditions, that was one of the many ways that they could get away, get by. Now, the employers at that time encouraged such a thing and winked at it. They definitely encouraged it, because they knew that that type of thing played its part in the speed-up, too. When I say these things at this stage of the game, all that has been eliminated, and many, many of those men, those bosses that engaged in that practice at that time are amongst some of the best men we have in our union today, because the union freed them, too. It gave them a chance. They never had a chance before. And many of them, why, it is no secret, they know it, we don't talk about it any more. But they joined in the first chance they had, they joined, fighting [5190] for the union, because through the union they were not forced or required to engage in such practices in order to hold their job as a boss, because any boss—it is not all bosses, didn't do it. All bosses didn't do it. But quite a few of them did. But in those companies that approved of the practice, if you didn't do it, you wasn't a boss very long, either. So the pressure was on the bosses, and in turn on us.

The bosses' job was to drive us, to drive the men in the gangs to the limit of their endurance and to the limit of their ability to produce. And in order to get the bosses or to force the bosses to do these things, why, these other practices were not only allowed, but the companies connived in the practice. Here is the way they did it. After all, your brass check was your property. All the companies had rules in order to protect their payroll, that the only person that could collect the pay envelope was the person who did the work.. In other words, I was hired and I went to work. I was given a brass check. Technically, or theoretically speaking, I was the only individual that was supposed to show up at the pay window with my brass check, either myself or a member of my family—my wife, for example, or my children, see? But the boss would how up, the boss of the gang, and he would show up with maybe 50 brass checks or all the brass checks in the gang. The company union agent would show up, the company union agent would go up, the company union agent would show up at the pay window, and he would [5191] have brass checks of a couple of hundred men to cash in, to collect the money. And the company paymaster, who was an insured, bonded person, carrying the full authority of the company, would pay off, see? So, although it might be said that the company as such didn't institute the practice, everybody around there and every company knew what was going on, and each company, as I say, condoned, was a party to the practice by paying off these people, because on more than one occasion a group of us would get together and try to put a stop to the practice, see? by invoking what we thought was a legal ruling that the company paymaster had no right to pay off anybody except the person that in truth and in fact did the work and who owned the paycheck and the brass check. But we didn't get to first base. We took, upon occasion, we took complaints up to the State Department of Industrial Relations, but they had that pretty well under their thumb, too, at that stage of the game.

Q. Now, let me ask you this: Did this speed-up and so forth result or not result in injuries or death to men?

A. Quite a few. Two things happened as a result of the speed-up. Many, many people met with injuries, some cases minor injuries, some cases major injuries. I remember, when I was working there around that time, we used to have a habit of checking up on the gang to see if we could find a man in the gang that had never suffered an injury. And for years on end I never worked in a gang where anyone [illegible] the gang had not suffered, [5192] not one, but a whole series of injuries. So there was all kinds of injuries suffered by the men because of the speed-up, as well as accidentally as a result of bona fide accidents. And then there was the other part of that, if you, by just sheer bad luck, speed-up or anything else, if you suffered an injury and you had to go on compensation for a while and then you returned to work and generally you were returned to work before your injury was cured, the next time you got injured, that was also a reason to eliminate you. You was considered an unsafe insurance risk there, and the insurance companies got to work under those circumstances, and you were just eliminated. They had some pretty ridiculous excuses. I can still remember where a fellow that was working in one of the gangs I was working with, he was our hatch tender, so called; he just came back to work after being off for some three months for a broken leg. He came back to work and was working a couple of days, and a barrel of hardware fell on him and broke, fell on his foot and broke the bones in his instep. That was the last we seen of that person, in so far as our gang was concerned or any other gang on the waterfront, and he was blacklisted all along the waterfront. And the reason, the official reasons were given that he was soft-boned. The keg that fell on his foot weighed about 350 pounds, and it broke the bones in his instep and the insurance companies, the official report—we looked into it. When I say "we" there was always a group of us around there, individuals, one thing [5193] and another, that tried to make, tried to do something about these things. And when we looked into it, his name was Joe Olson, and when we looked into the official reason as to why he was eliminated from that gang and that dock and other docks, he was a bad risk, because he was soft-boned. His bones wouldn't stand up under a 350-pound keg falling on them. So you had to watch your step. If you got hurt too many times, well, there was nothing wrong with the work, nothing wrong with the speed-up, nothing wrong with the gear or anything like that. He was eliminated because——

Q. Your bones weren't right?

A. Oh, you was a careless worker or something else like that. There was all kinds of very elaborate safety programs, but they were put in for another reason. I went through a training program down there and was given a certificate as being a so-called "expert in first aid." We went through all those things, but the reason for those things, these elaborate training—these elaborate programs on safety, safety programs on paper, was because by having such programs and being able to point to them, the insurance premium per hundred dollars of payroll were reduced. There's the compensation and accident insurance premiums that the employers are required to pay by law; they were reduced. But in so far as any actual practice of safety, there was never any actual practice of safety until we got the union in. And if you tried to practice, take any real bona fide safety steps, you were fired right then and there. [5194] You were asked "Who the hell do you think you are? We are running the job around here. You do as you are told. Never mind those rules. None of your business." And things like that. You were eliminated. And another aspect of that: If a man was hurt and got —they got sued, and some of them tried it, if you dared to appear as a witness—you might have been there, you might even be subpoenaed to appear in the damage suit; because the men were able to sue the various insurance companies or the stevedoring companies for negligence on account of the gear, bad gear, faulty gear, and where the accident—and I am talking now about accidents that resulted in people being crippled for life, married men with families would suddenly get hurt, that was the end of it. They were so crippled that they could never work again, and they might institute a suit. Well, everybody on the waterfront knew that if you showed up in that court as a witness, even under subpoena, it was just too bad; you didn't work again. And on a couple of occasions, I know some people, they are still on the waterfront. They tried it; they didn't work for years. As a matter of fact, they didn't get back on the waterfront until after we established a union that could protect them and could take care of such things.

Mr. Hallinan: The next matter I had was to ask Mr. Bridges about the formation of the union. As it is a new matter, why, it might be well to take the recess at this time. [5195]

The Court: We will take the noon recess. Until two o'clock, ladies and gentlemen, and the same admonition, not to discuss the case nor to form nor express an opinion until it is submitted to you.

(Thereupon a recess was taken until 2:00 p.m. this date.) [5195-A]

Direct Examination

By Mr. Hallinan:

Q. Well, now, Harry, how long after you arrived on the waterfront did you yourself take any interest in reactivating the union activities of the men or doing something, contributing something toward ameliorating the conditions you described?

A. Very shortly after. There was a——

Q. Will you tell us now briefly, then—first, I think you told us something about the conditions of the union that had existed up to that time. Will you tell us now what were the steps that were taken that included your own activities toward the amelioration of these conditions?

A. In 1923 there was a waterfront strike in San Francisco. In 1922 there was a waterfront strike—longshore, I mean—in Portland, Oregon. Both of these strikes were conducted—were organized by the IWW, and although in those certain areas they found quite a bit of support among the longshoremen, they [5196] were not successful. The IWW at that time was in pretty ill repute, and it didn't succeed in getting any great amount of support.

And then in 1923 here in San Francisco there was an effort to get some improvements with respect to the longshoremen that went up the river to load the grain cargoes, called the barley workers or barley packers. For many, many years, and even today, grain ships used to go up the bay—up the northern part of the bay here to Port Costa, Vallejo, and around there, and load wheat a barley grown in the Bay Area. So in 1923 there was an abortive attempt to get some premium pay for the workers that were working on the barley or grain ships, because that work was hard work. And in addition to the work being very hard work up the country, it was required to travel as well as eat up there, and the arrangements for traveling and eating were unsatisfactory. That is, even though you were paid a certain amount, they were considered very unsatisfactory, and also the work being the type of work it was, being very hard work, backbreaking, there was a kind of a small strike around the barley ships in 1923. I recall that, because the word went along the waterfront, "Don't take any jobs at Port Costa or Martinez," kind of an unofficial movement to boycott those jobs. That was in 1923, very shortly after I came on the waterfront, and I remember it very well. I had no direct part at that time, because I wasn't working those ships, only once in a while. I had no direct [5197] part. I just remember the incident. However, the next year, as I say, 1924, the movement to revive the union that had been smashed in 1919 started. When I say the union that had been smashed in 1919, I mean the old riggers and stevedores union, called the ILA.

Q. Who led that strike? A. In 1919?

Q. Yes.

A. Well, that was before my time, and I only know that by reading the history and talking to other people and so forth, but one of the officers of that union is now State Assemblyman Tommy Maloney from San Francisco here. He was the——

Q. What happened to that strike?

A. The union was broken, the strike was broken, and a company union was set up, at that time.

Q. What do you mean by "broken"?

A. I mean that the union was smashed; the leaders of the union were eliminated from the waterfront, blacklisted; every member from the union was barred from employment. Some of them were jailed because of alleged incidents that occurred during the strike. It was a pretty rough strike from what I can hear now. This is second-hand, other than what I gathered in talking with Tommy Maloney as well as other men on the waterfront. And the company union was set up in its place and agreements were signed with the company union extending over a long period [5198] of time. The shipping operators and stevedoring contractors signed a coast shipping agreement with the company union that lasted for five years at a stretch, and those agreements provided that unless you was a member of the company union you weren't eligible to work for the bulk of the companies on the waterfront, with the exception of those companies that I have mentioned, the Japanese ships [5198-A] and——

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Is that Tommy Maloney the man who is now and has been for many years a state senator?

A. That's right, that is Tommy—I don't know whether he is a state senator or——

Q. He is now, has been for many years.

A. Senator?

Q. You are losing track of your stevedores. Well, go ahead.

A. No, Tommy is the speaker of the house pro tem; he was. I mean, he is in the Assembly. He might have been busy on a few other things recently. He might be senator now.

Q. Well, go ahead. What was done?

A. That is the same one. It is Tommy Maloney here, from the district here, and former president of the All-Longshore Association. That is, for the former secretary—no, the president. Well, that was in 1924. As I say, I had little to do with it myself, other than joining the union. My old partner at that time was an old Irishman, works for the city now. And we got together a union of about 400 in 1924. That again was a revival or a reactivation of the "Red Book," the old ILA. The president at that time, as I say, is now the chief probation officer, George McNulty.

Q. Was he a stevedore then or longshoreman?

A. I forget what McNulty was doing then. I really forget what he was working on, whether he was working on the—I don't think so. I think he was barred, he was blacklisted. He was, he had been [5199] a stevedore, an active stevedore, but in 1924 one of the reasons for organizing the union was to allow George McNulty and some of these people that had been blacklisted since 1919, to try and let them return to work on the waterfront. It wasn't only these people, there was others, see? Anyway, I have told you what happened to that attempt in 1924, as I say. We paraded in the Labor Day parade, and that was all for the time being. And that was the last Labor Day parade, incidentally, until we revived the Labor Day parade in 1934. There wasn't a Labor Day parade in San Francisco from '24 to '34, because following the post-war depression, that is, the first World War, the depression that followed, the plan was set into operation throughout the United States, called the "American Plan." In effect, that was a name, but the various employers, the National Association of Manufacturers and then they had state and city branches that were called industrial associations—they established throughout all industry, the various basic industries, the so-called American Plan, and that was the day of the "yellow dog" contract, that before you could get a job, you had to sign an individual contract saying that you would not join a labor union. The so-called "American Plan." It was called that to give it a patriotic tinge, and it got the support of patriotic organizations, but it was really an open shop plan that was aimed at organized opposition, against any form of true labor organization. So with the advent of the American [5200] Plan and these various industrial associations, it was very, very difficult to organize a union. Generally, they were eliminated overnight. And that was the story on the waterfront.

And then in 1928 there was another move on the waterfront, and this time it took a little different line. What happened was this: The national officers of the International Longshoremen's Association, that is, Joseph P. Ryan, together with certain other officers of the American Federation of Labor here in San Francisco, started a move toward chartering the company union, to give it the American Federation of Labor charter. When we on the waterfront heard of that—when I say "we" again I mean just generally speaking, quite a few of the fellows down there—we opposed that move. Although we wanted to get rid of the company union, we didn't want to get rid of it by having it receive an American Federation of Labor charter, because that would simply give it a mantle of respectability. It would make it look like a bona fide union, when there would have been no change at all. There would have been the same officers, the same practices, the same control, and things like that. So, in 1928 we had to get busy and start a movement along the waterfront to urge everybody we could to pay up their dues in the company union so we could vote in a referendum that was going to be held at that time as to whether the company union would get a charter from the American Federation of Labor.

So I and many, many others, we got together enough people [5201] and got them to pay a year's dues, because by paying a year's dues, it made you eligible to vote in this referendum and we voted down the idea of the American Federation of Labor issuing the Blue Book or the company union charter. However, in the course of all this, in order to spur the fight and the idea of giving the company union a charter, the company union was seated in the San Francisco Labor Council. That was in 1928. Well, we went up to the Labor Council and we protested against that. John O'Connell at that time was secretary of the Labor Council. Paul Scharrenburg was secretary of the State Federation of Labor, now the director of Industrial Relations for the State of California. He is the head of the Department of Labor for the state. They, by and large, were the people in charge at that time. So the company union was, as I say, seated in the Labor Council, but nevertheless the move failed because we were able to amass sufficient votes on the waterfront—not many, I think it was around five or six hundred we got together—that we voted down the move to charter the company union, and that was in 1928. Then after that was defeated, the company union remained seated in the Labor Council until we had them ousted in 1933.

Now, around 1932 or '31 the Marine Workers Industrial Union tried to organize on the waterfront, as well as a couple of other organizations. The IWW was busy, not so much in this port, but in the port of San Pedro and Portland. So [5202] that didn't affect us much here. But around 1932, the next move to start an organization—that is prior to NRA—was the Marine Workers Industrial Union. Now, the Marine Workers Industrial Union was an organization affiliated to what at that time was known as the "Red International of Trade Unions"; generally understood to be a Communist-affiliated or controlled organization. The Red International of Trade Unions or the TUUL or TUEL, as it was known at that time, aimed at organizing longshoremen and seamen into one union, industrially. So they had organizers and speakers on the waterfront, as near as I can remember, in the early part of 1932, around that time. But they didn't catch on at all because, although their program was pretty revolutionary, pretty idealistic, and—it didn't make much headway, even though things were very, very bad at that time. We were in the middle of the depression. It so happens in our port here, the Port of San Francisco, depression hits the waterfront first. Not only does domestic and commercial trade slack off, but foreign trade slacks off. So any time we are moving into a depression, why, things get pretty bad on the waterfront. And incidentally, things are pretty bad here right now.

So things were bad at that time, and despite the fact that the people felt pretty desperate, they didn't cotton too much to the idea of the Marine Workers Industrial Union, the form of organization, even though they used to have speakers down there [5203] on the soapboxes. They were preaching a lot of things. The men, by and large, sympathized with them. They particularly sympathized with them when the police came around. The police used generally to come around and arrest them and sometimes beat them up and the fellows sympathized with them, even though they didn't agree with their organizational or political views. And then after the passage of the NRA in 1933, organizers came in from the ILA again. That is the American Federation of Labor. That was in the spring of '33 and——

Q. What did the NRA have to do with that, Mr. Bridges?

A. That was the National Recovery Act, and that began in the early days of the New Deal following the election of Franklin D. Roosevelt, where he started in, the first part—I think it was the first Fireside Chat or his first Message to Congress, in the early part of 1933, proclaimed that there was going to be a new deal. He proclaimed that workers were going to be protected in their right to organize. After all, the workers in the United States always had the right to organize; what had to be taken care of was a little protection so that if they ever exercised their right, they didn't get thrown into jail or some of the things of that nature because that is the way it was at that time. We have always had the right to organize under the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. The trouble was that, if you dared to exercise the right, why, that was just too much of a chance to take. So with the advent of the New Deal and the [5204] NRA, the NRA first of all started, or it had one particular section that encouraged, at least to some degree, organization of workers into labor unions. And it became in part, part of the New Deal program, the federal program. So it gave a little more courage and incentive to the workers to organize, and they did by the many, many, many thousands, including the waterfront.

Q. Did it require the employers to deal with the organization of workers?

A. Yes, in a way, because the first National Recovery Act required that after a vote was taken the employers should deal, but the first National Recovery Act also did something else. It authorized and legalized the minority unions and as well as the majority unions. So the way the National Recovery Act worked on the waterfront, it legalized the company union. And in the latter part of 1933, when we were trying to get organized the committee was established to go into our complaints that the company union down there was still defying, in effect, the NRA, still opposing the federal law as we seen it, and still blacklisting people that refused to pay dues to the company union. So a three-man committee was set up to investigate, a kind of an arbitration board. I forgot who they were now. Anyway they were set up and they came along with a decision under the NRA that said that the company union was a bona fide organization, that its contracts, its collective bargaining contracts were bona fide contracts and that it was a requirement to work on the [5205] waterfront to be a member of that union. So far as we were concerned, that didn't give us much of an opinion of the NRA and the way it operated.

So, anyway, we continued on with our efforts to organize the ILA, but as a result of these legal things that happened or could happen, and as a result of a certain group of officers or people in the union who preached a policy of depending upon taking these votes under NRA, in order to get recognition, the union didn't get far. Now, here is what I mean by that. Under the NRA a group of workers were supposed to be able to get together, join a union. They were supposed to be able to take a referendum vote, something like the votes that were held and are still being held under the National Labor Relations Act and the National Labor Relations Board. And after a majority of the workers cast ballots, the various employers were supposed—they weren't required by law, but as good citizens they had agreed to sit down and recognize the unions, and bargain collectively with the unions.

Well, myself and a few others, I guess we were somewhat cynical or skeptical. Anyway, that is the way we worked out. We took the position that no shipowner alive would do business on that basis out of the goodness of his soul or heart, and that is the way it worked out. In some of the ports up and down the Coast, they voted half a dozen times for recognition. The vote was 99 per cent. But no recognition. Now the policy we followed [5206] here in San Francisco was that we get recognition the hard way. All those fellows standing outside the docks that wouldn't go to work, the shipowners could count them and they would be members of the union. And all the fellows inside working on the dock, working their ships, they wouldn't be members of the union. And we figured we would win that way, and when the thing was finally counted, we won. That is the way we got recognition.

But it caused an argument within the union between certain people who, with all honesty possible, officers of the union, saw the best way to do it by taking these votes as against the attitude represented by myself and others. That is the way to get recognition, was the way that any union would get recognition—get the men off the job, and if the employers wanted to do any counting, they could count them while they was on the sidewalk and after they had got through counting and made up their mind that the union represented a majority, we could go to work. So over that matter of policy there was a division in the union at that [5207] time.

Q. Now, have you any list or statement or is there any document that shows who were the men who were first active in forming this new movement that finally terminated in the 1934 strike?

A. Yes.

Q. Where is that? Have you it on you or have I it here? A. I think——

Q. Did we have it marked for identication?

A. I don't think so. We have got the organizing minutes of the local. I haven't got them with me, but I have got same. I don't think they are in evidence or haven't been put in, as far as I know. I am talking about minutes in early '33; I am talking about minutes going back to June and July, '33, or July, '33.

Q. Taking this June and July figure of '33, was there already by that time a movement on to reactivate this ILA union?

A. Well, in addition to the organizing of the union itself, we had an organizing drive on. I wasn't one of the official officers. The organizers were appointed by Joseph P. Ryan, who was at that time president of the ILA. I was just a rank-and-file longshoreman. So I joined the union. There was quite a few arguments. The first argument which came up again was the question, Should the longshoremen go with the MWIU, which was a union pretty left—I mean left at least in the progressive sense of the word or honest sense of the word—pretty [5208] left. However, that didn't find a great deal of favor. So we started to organize in various docks, and the dock I was working on, the American-Hawiian dock, we were one of the first docks to get pretty well organized and wear our buttons openly. The issue at that time was this: If you were caught wearing a union button, you were fired. The shipowners, at that time at least—of course they have changed now; the shipowners are an entirely different crowd today than they were at that time—if you were caught wearing a union button, that was the end, you were fired. I was working at that time on the American-Hawaiian docks, and we were on of the first docks to get organized a hundred per cent and to start even making a few improvements by some unofficial collective bargaining, and at the same time started to wear our union buttons openly and to defy the shipowners to fire us. We worked out a little program where we all got together and where we said, "The first time a man is fired, let's all walk." This got back to the powers that be on the dock at that time. None of us were fired. However, that wasn't true on other docks. So the first thing we had to do was to try and protect the men that were fired. The officers of the union at that time began to approach a different policy. They started out with the policy saying, "Well, in the organization of a union there is bound to be a few victims and casualties; there is bound to be a few people fired." We changed that. We said, "Let's get the membership, and the [5209] first time they fire anybody for joining the union, let's shut down the waterfront."

Again this caused a certain division in the union. The officers at that time, they were appointed officers, at least to our way of thinking. They weren't accounting for the monies collected during the organizing drive; they weren't calling meetings; they weren't setting up a constitution of the union. And we thought—at least I thought—I knew the background of the old Seamen's Union; of course it was pretty undemocratic. I was amongst a group down there that was determined that another union wouldn't come on the waterfront that would be undemocratic or a company union. So we started right at the start to see that the union that would be set up would be a local of that kind of a union. So in order to achieve this, after we had gone a few weeks, and see that the new officers didn't call any union meetings or didn't set up a new procedure and didn't start to adopt a constitution, I organized myself in July of 1933 a committee that we called the Committee of 500, and we organized it right on the waterfront. That was a committee that later became known as the Albion Hall group. It got its name because it met at the Albion Hall, but the first meetings of the committee and the organization of the committee in '33 in July, we met down in restaurants and then on the waterfront on the sidewalks. The purpose of the committee was to get the union started, to get the union to take official action, to [5210] defend people that joined the union, to have the union set up a constitution and to have the union elect regularly elected officers by men of the waterfront instead of by being appointed. That was the way it started up. I have still got my books where some of the original members of the union, where I noted down some of them gave 25 cents, some of them gave 50 cents, and some of them gave a dollar, the original members of the Committee of 500. Not only did the Committee of 500 participate in the elections that took place in August, '33, but we ran a full slate of officers in the election of the union after we forced the adoption of the constitution in July. And following the adoption of the constitution where many of the provisions of the constitution that we demanded were included in the constitution which guaranteed the union a good democratic rank-and-file union, then the next thing was the election of officers.

That election took place in August, '33. The Committee of 500 sponsored a full slate of candidates. We put out cards and literature on the waterfront, and the majority of our candidates were elected, and they were installed in office in early September, '33. I was elected on the executive board; Schmidt was elected on the executive board; and two of our candidates for business agents were elected out of three, business agents. We lost on the presidency and we lost on the secretaryship. We lost those officers, we lost the [5211] presidency and the secretaryship, but our candidates were elected, two out of three business agents were elected, and the majority of the executive board that we supported was elected.

Q. I am going to have the Clerk show you a list of the executive board and ask you if you recognize it.

A. That's right. That is the list of officers as of that time. That was the new officers, or these are the officers that were installed in the first election of the union,——

Mr. Hallinan: Could I have that back?

A. ——that was elected in August, '33, installed in the first part of September, '33.

Q. And do you know whether or not this is copied from the regular minutes of the International Longshoremen's Association of America as of that time? A. Right.

Q. This is a photostatic copy of the original minutes?

A. That's right. I recognize it, because at that time—later on all those records came into my possession, and I can recognize it.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Hallinan: This is Defendants' T-2 for identification and it contains the membership of the executive committee that was elected, you say, in September upon a slate presented in August in pursuance of the policies that were enacted in June and July, 1933. Is that substantially correct?

A. I wouldn't take it back as far as—I wouldn't take it [5212] back as far as June. Here is why: Because the first meeting to initiate—that is another thing we forced—the first meeting of the union to initiate candidates—candidates were being signed up, but they were not being initiated into the union. When I say "initiation," I mean that we had a union meeting and that the candidates were required to stand up and identify themselves and take an oath, an obligation to adhere to the constitution, the rules and by-laws of the union. The first meeting to initiate members of the union was not held until July, and it couldn't have been held unless we had forced the holding of that meeting. That was the first thing. The first thing was the drive to sign up new members, and then when they were signed up, the next order of business was to initiate them and only those that were members of the union participated in the union meeting adopting a constitution. Only after the constitution was adopted could we elect officers. Those were the three steps. And all of those steps were taken only after we had forced them to do it by the organization of this Committee of 500.

The rules of the Committee of 500 were very simple. No. 1, they had to agree to support our program; No. 2, they had to be working longshoremen, no outsiders allowed, because there was a few politicians from uptown trying to horn in. They seen the situation down there in political terms. We didn't want any of them. Some of them are still trying. And the third thing, they had to be regular members of the union. So [5213] that is how the committee was set up.

Mr. Hallinan: I offer at this time in evidence, if the Court please, Defendants' Exhibit T-2 for identification, being the list of membership of the Executive Committee just described by Mr. Bridges.

Mr. Donohue: Might we take another look at it, your Honor? I haven't seen it for some time. Would you pass this for just a moment?

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, Mr. Bridges, this Executive Committee having been elected, what did it proceed to do?

A. The first thing that—I can still recall the first meeting of that Executive Committee. You have got to understand that the Executive Committee was elected by reason of the adoption of a constitution that at that time was a very democratic constitution. I—again not myself; when I say "I" I don't exactly mean myself, but I mean as one of this group of the so-called Committee of 500—we never had anything like 500 people in it; we called ourselves the Committee of 500 and we done our darnedest to make everyone think we had 500——

Q. Where did the 500 come from? How was it selected? What was the method of getting it together?

A. I walked along the waterfront, I and a few others, and we would say, "Hey, Joe Blow, sign up. Give us four bits, 25 cents or a dollar. We are going to get out a leaflet. You are a member of that committee"—just that way; simple, straight [5214] organizing, to agree to support the program, and he was a member of the Committee of 500. So we got out a printed leaflet, that was all. There was no real meeting down there, except a few of us got our heads together on what to do.

Q. Have you any idea how many men were working longshore at that time in San Francisco?

A. 3,000.

Q. How many? About 3,000?

A. There would be less than that working. I doubt if there would be more than 1,500 or 2,000.

Q. I mean available for work.

A. Available, there would be more like four or five thousand available. There was really only about 1,500 jobs, but there was more like four or five thousand workers available for those jobs.

Q. Tell us the next steps then.

A. The constitution was adopted and the membership voted. We were successful in having nobody but members of the union vote on the constitution. And that was quite a struggle. It might seem a little strange, but during my stay down there there were some people that formerly had been workers many, many years ago, but were no longer working on the waterfront, and in our opinion they had no business voting, so we finally got it where only members of the union voted.

Q. What do you mean, they wanted to intrude themselves on the [5215] union?

A. Politically speaking that waterfront is a powerful place. People who have been officers of that longshore union, you look in the various political offices in the city and you will find them. They reach political office by doing that. I am not saying anything against them, but that is one of the ways to get into office, and we just didn't want it to happen. So we adopted a constitution which provided—and I wrote the provisions—that the executive board—the executive board would run the union between membership meetings. All decisions of the executive board had to be approved by membership meetings. Nobody could be a member of the executive board unless they was a working longshoreman. All officers of the local were excluded from being members of the executive board except the chairman and the secretary, who would be ex officio members of the executive board. So the idea was the executive board was a board of 35; every one of them had to be a member of the union; they couldn't hold any other office of the union; they couldn't be a paid official of the union, and every one of them had to be a working longshoreman. So that is one of the main provisions of the constitution.

And another provision that we wrote in at that time—and it is still there—you can only hold office in the union for two years, then you must go back to work as a longshoreman. That provision is still in the constitution. There were [5216] certain other things all aimed at keeping the control of the union in the hands of the working membership without any outside interference or control or anything like that. When I say "outside interference," I mean any kind of outside interference, any kind of political interference, social, religious, fraternal, or anything like that. And that is the way the union is today.

So the elections came pursuant to that type of atmosphere and the adoption of that type of constitution.

Then the first thing we done after the board was elected, the first executive board, I myself made the motion that we strike the Matson dock in order to defend our four union members that had been discharged from the Matson dock because they joined the union. The Matson dock was the center of the company union strength on the waterfront at that time, and of course the Matson dock was the leader in establishing the company union.

Q. Let me ask you this: Whence emanated or where did you get those ideas that you speak of having insisted on and promulgated into the constitution?

A. Two reasons: First of all, as I say, I was in the strike in New Orleans in '21, in the '21 seamen's strike, and those unions were darn undemocratic unions. The strike was called from the top and the strike was sold out from the top by the top leaders. Later on several of the leaders were proven to [5217] be crooks and racketeers. That was much later, 1936 and 1937. So by that time, with what little experience I had had in trade unions, I was generally opposed to undemocratic union structures where the officers run the union, paid themselves huge salaries and generally grafted on the union treasury, and so forth.

And then we had another difficulty. Because the ILA as such was in such bad repute on account of being organized on the East Coast and run by gunmen and gangsters on the East Coast, there was a lot of men on the waterfront in San Francisco who said, "What's the use of joining a lousy outfit like that? All that will happen, we will be run by a lot of darn gunmen and racketeers and crooks who won't do us any good. We might as well stay where we are in the company union." Whereas a group of us advocated, "Let's get in that outfit and let's start out and make it a good union." We had a particular issue here that made that possible, because when the West Coast district of the ILA in 1916 had rejoined the national ILA, back at that time—they had been out for some time; they pulled away over some squabble—when the West Coast of the ILA rejoined the national organization in 1916, an agreement was made with the national organization giving the West Coast autonomy. In other words, the West Coast had home rule. So we took advantage of that and got a guarantee from the national organization so that we again on the West Coast had home rule, [5218] as we called it, and under that we organized so that we could set up right from the start a democratic organization not controlled by gunmen, racketeers, and so forth. So we built the organization that way. And it came about because of the experience of some of us in the past with certain racketeers of our union and certain undemocratic practices.

Q. With regard to strikes, in the matter of strikes, the voting for calling strike and cancellation of strikes and settlement of them, did the membership vote on that?

A. At that time, yes. At that time in the general sense of an official strike, yes; but the strike I am talking about, the Matson strike which occurred in October of 1933, the early part of October, there was no vote taken on that. All we did was very simple; we went down there one morning, we lined up in the shapeup, and as the fellows started going in to work, we stopped every one of them and said, "Look, fellows, four guys have been fired for joining the union. Let us have a program where they hire these four fellows back or none of us goes to work." So everybody stayed out. That affected the docks, and the strike lasted for five days. The Matson Company and the Waterfront Employers Association at that time went up to Skid Road and they hired a bunch of men from the employment halls, and of course we spoke to those men and got most of them to quit. Anyway, the strike lasted for five days. Eventually a committee was set up, and an arbitration board was set up [5219] headed by George Creel, and the arbitration board found that the men had been discharged for joining the union, and the company was ordered by the board to reinstate them, and the company complied, not because the company wanted to, but because by that time we had worked up such a momentum that if that company had not complied with that arbitration award reinstating the four men, we had worked up enough momentum to stop work on the waterfront. So the four men were reinstated. That estatblished the union on the waterfront; that was the end of fear and intimidation. After that—there was many, many of the men that was still maintaining their membership in the company unions; they were afraid to join the new union, but after that, after we won the strike at the Matson dock and after we demonstrated, No. 1, that you could join the union and wear your button, and if the company tried to fire you we had enough power to tie up that waterfront in order to enforce the demand, from that time on the union was established, it was recognized, it was in business. That was a long, long time before Schomaker ever seen that waterfront, as I [5220] can show.

Q. And was there any ceremonial held with relation to that?

A. Yes, at the time of the Matson strike we were organized, we organized the fellows to burn their blue books. We made a bonfire of the blue books right in front of the Matson dock, during the course of that strike.

Q. And with what result?

A. The result was that more and more fellows joined, more and more people joined the union. The union picked up power and strength and began to go places. And then, of course, we started other moves then. But in the course of all this our organization, which was truly an organization in the union, within the union, more or less secret at first it is true,—that was the Committee of 500. Then our organization, we started to meet up at the Albion Hall, at the Matson strike; around that time. And it was during that strike, or around that time, that we took over the old Waterfront Worker from the MWIU, and started to operate the Waterfront Worker.

Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. Any objection to having this offered in evidence?

Mr. Donohue: Yes. If your Honor pleases, in the first place, it is a photostat of an original. It is unsigned.

The Court: May I see it, please?

(Document handed to the Court by the Clerk.)

Mr. Donohue: It is not identified, and in the second place, if your Honor pleases, it can be neither relevant nor material [5221] because while this is an interesting recitation, I must say to your Honor that there is no allegation in the indictment which charges that Mr. Bridges was indicted for any activity he may have engaged in with respect to his union.

Mr. Hallinan: What about your allegations of Mr. Schomaker that the strike was all activated and impelled and organized by the Communist Party? Aren't we supposed to be able to refute that? Or are we limited to what Mr. Schomaker says on the subject?

Mr. Donohue: Well, we have been here three hours.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, you put Mr. Schomaker on for several days to hand us that sort of garbage, and I think we ought to be entitled to overcome it.

Mr. Donohue: I think the record will show I had Mr. Schomaker on for two hours, and you had him on for about four days, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: This was the principal part of your story, how he ran errands back and forth to tell these men what Mr. Darcy was directing them to do.

The Court: Did you fix the time, Mr. Hallinan?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, your Honor. He said that was the list that was elected in September of 1933 and that was obtained from the union records.

The Court: I will allow it.

(Whereupon document containing list of names as cited [5222] below, was received in evidence and marked Defendants' Exhibit T-2.)

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Hallinan: I would like to read the names out that appear on this.

Q. Then the membership of the executive committee of the International Longshoremen's Association of America, Local 38-79, which apparently then had its offices at 130 Stewart Street, San Francisco, elected, you say, in September, 1933: "Lee Holman, Ivan F. Cox, John Johnson, Harvey McCarty, J. Hanson, John Benson, Herman Helwig, Pat Quinn, Harry Curtis, Henry Schmidt, Frank Ohlberg, Jack Shields, Frank Clark, Ed Valente, Jack Quinn, William Benson, Axel Nyberg, Michael Cassidy, Boots Powers, Jim Fogery, Harry Bridges, Willis Ferguson, C. Anderson, Bjorne Halling, Thomas McEntee, Fred Wehr, Alf Christensen"?

A. Right. The bulk of them, I would say three-quarters of those names there, were members of the Committee of 500, officially endorsed by the Committee of 500, and we put out printed sheets urging everybody to vote them into office.

Q. In other words, the entire executive committee was not taken from the ranks of your Committee of 500, but a substantial majority of them were?

A. About three-quarters of them were.

Q. And then the 500, I take it, were the more active and militant members of the union?

A. The Committee of 500 was a name; it was a name that we gave [5223] ourselves at the time.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

We had to have a name. We had to—we didn't want to be putting out these things without giving them a name. Now, generally speaking, the fellows on the waterfront knew who the Committee of 500 was, who sparkplugged the committee, but we called ourselves the Committee of 500.

Q. Now, you know this witness John Schomaker who testified here some weeks ago? A. Yes.

Q. And do you know, do you know of your own knowledge, until you heard his testimony, just when he had appeared on the waterfront?

A. He always told me he came there during '32 and I didn't know until he testified here that he came down later. He told me, and he has told, he has said in meetings time after time, union meetings, that he came down there in 1932, and until he testified here today I never knew that that man hadn't come down there until November, 1934. And if he didn't come down there until November, '34, he couldn't be a member of the Albion Hall group, the Committee of 500, so-called, for one reason that I know of, and I have got our records to prove it. To be a member of our group, you had to be a member of the union and a working longshoreman. You had to be. Now, I never checked up on the man, but over the years I have heard Schomaker speak many, many times, and he told me personally and he used to pretend, he used to stand up in union meetings and talk about himself as [5224] one of the guys that founded the union. And, well, I just thought that that was so. I was a little surprised when I heard him here say that he had only joined the union in 1934, or December in '34. And he only came down on the waterfront in November of '34.

Q. You mean '33 instead of '34?

A. '33, yes.

Q. His testimony was that—he said he came in the middle of October, but his record from the hospital showed that he left there in November, November 1st, and the record introduced here shows that he became a member of the union in December, 1933.

A. Well, as I say, he always told me that he was down there. He used to say to me, he said, "You mean to say you don't remember me around here in '32?" I would say, "Well, there—there were a lot of people around here, there was four or five thousand people, fellows on the waterfront." It was possible for him to be around with me, without me knowing it.

Q. But you never questioned the truth of what he was telling you?

A. I had no reason to.

Q. Now, will you tell us, then, this organizing having arrived at that relative degree of strength that it had, what were the events that led up to the 1934 strike, and who were the—if you will tell us a little, a brief history of the steps, the persons involved, and the determination that led to [5225] that strike.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

The Court: I suggest, Mr. Hallinan, we might take the afternoon recess. It is now five minutes to 3:00.

Mr. Hallinan: Very well.

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen, we will take the afternoon recess. The same admonition to you, not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Recess.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Will you tell us now, Mr. Bridges, what was the Waterfront Worker and what was done about your organization or the ILA taking over the publication or control of that periodical?

A. The Waterfront Worker was a paper that was being put out, I forget exactly when it started, I think it started at the beginning of 1933. And it was put out by the Marine Workers Industrial Union, or as far as I remember—and along toward the time that this Matson strike that I talked about occurred, the paper went out of business. That is the way I recall it. One of the fellows attached or connected with the paper, I recall,—some way or another—I recall getting the impression that the paper was out of business. So when the Matson strike came along and we needed some instrument, some organ in order to communicate with the unemployed and others that the Matson strike and Waterfront Employers Association were attempting to use strikebreakers we thought of using the Waterfront Worker. At least using the name and the format and so on. Up to that time our [5226] committee, as I say, the Committee of 500, as we called ourselves, we were functioning—every time we wanted to say something we would have the leaflets printed, collect a few dollars amongst ourselves, put up our money and we would have a leaflet printed. And we would distribute the leaflet. So we just seized upon the idea that if this Waterfront Worker was going out of business, we would take it over and run it, and we took it over around this time and we published it anonymously, put it out in the name of a group of rank and file longshoremen, members of the ILA. And we utilized that paper.

Q. How often was it published?

A. Oh, I think every—twice a month.

Q. And then how long did you continue to publish this paper in that fashion?

A. A number of years, I think, up to about 1936.

Q. And did you contribute to that paper or contribute articles and so forth? A. Yes.

Q. What was your position with the paper, Mr. Bridges?

A. Well, after all, we were at that time not experts in putting out even a mimeographed paper. And it was a kind of a cooperative affair. We all used to run it. I and the others. I can't recall too well at the moment, but we would have it mimeographed, we would urge people to write in articles, we would promise not to publish their names. Now, the reason for that, it wasn't so [5227] much that we were concerned with secrecy, but the union, even despite our victory on the Matson docks, which incidentally took a little while to be consolidated, it took a little while to convince the rank and file workers on the waterfront they could join the union with safety.

What we were aiming at was this: We were trying to tell the fellows, "Now, look, if Joe Blow, the boss down at such and such a dock, chisels you out of your money, the amount of money you have got coming, come along and give us a letter and we will make an issue of it through the union with the employers." In other words,——

Q. That "Joe Blow" used to get around a lot, didn't he?

A. Well, I am just using the name. That is all. We had all kinds of names—we used to use them, the name "Gloomy Gus" was a boss, "Russian Louie," various names were attached to these bosses in the language of the waterfront. So we used to use all these things in the paper and the paper was published anonymously, and when a member of the union or any worker sent in a letter, in most cases they would sign their name, but we would withhold their name and we published it in the paper, and the paper became very effective. The paper became especially effective in straightening out a lot of little disputes on the waterfront. That is, disputes over on the job conditions, because after we had been functioning a while, the bulk of the bosses on the waterfront really lived somewhat in holy [5228] terror of having their name mentioned in that paper as being a no-good so-and-so that drove his men or chiseled them, and so forth. They really got worried. And on the other hand, of course, the blue book agents, the ship agents, or the shipping companies' agents and the companies themselves——

Q. And I suppose——

A. ——began to be plenty worried about that little paper.

Q. I suppose the language was more direct and forceful than elegant, was it?

A. Well, we were concerned at that time in saying what we thought would be effective.

Q. Let me ask you this, Mr. Bridges: Whose idea was it to take over the publication of the Waterfront Worker?

A. Oh, I don't know. I would say it was a collective idea. I can't——.

Q. Were you among the persons who wanted to take over the Waterfront Worker?

A. Oh, yes, I was for it; I was part of the idea, you might say, and was certainly all for it. No question about it.

Q. I was just going to ask you that. Will you state whether or not you pressed and endeavored to have your group take over the Waterfront Worker?

A. Oh, yes, always for it.

Q. And when was it taken over?

A. Well, I happen to know that, because the question of when [5229] we took it over, the date as to when we took it over, came up in my last trial. No, let me see,—it came up in the hearing before the

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Board of Immigration Appeals after the Sears trial. But it came up in the Sears trial, too. And, well, it came up in the trial before Landis, but we didn't go into it very far. Then it came up in the Sears trial. Then it came up in other hearings, the hearing before the Board of Immigration Appeals. So I remember it pretty well, because the time, the date, as to when we took it over became a real point of issue. And that was, as can be seen by the various issues that were introduced in evidence at that time, we took it over in September of '33, I think.

Q. In September of 1933?

A. September 15th, yes, around that time.

Q. All right. So would there have been any reason why John Schomaker would have to come out to your house and induce you and attempt to persuade you to furnish him some copy to publish in the Waterfront Worker?

A. Not if he is telling the truth here. Now, understand, I always thought that Schomaker had been on the waterfront since '32 and I didn't know that he had come down later until I heard him testify here that he hadn't come on the waterfront until November of 1933. Now Schomaker, if he told the truth when he testified here, he couldn't have been a part of that paper until a couple of months after we had taken it over and had [5230] gotten it going, and after I had already been writing articles for a couple of months. There is no question about that; that can easily be established, because I remember the paper, the copies of the paper, being introduced, the first issue that we published, and the whole record of that paper is analyzed in the findings by the Board of Immigration Appeals, following the Sears hearing.

Q. Let me ask you now, Mr. Bridges: Will you tell us now, then, what steps were taken by this reactivated ILA union, which led up finally to the strike in 1934? What was done, what considerations were balanced, what arguments were made, what persons moved on it, what persons advised you and what persons instructed or supported it?

A. Our committee—now again, I am talking about the Albion Hall group, or the Committee of 500, which is the same thing. Incidentally, we got hold of a transcript of the code hearings for the shipping industry that were held in Washington, D. C., and at those code hearings a plan was being worked out then that we didn't think was going to be of much use for us here on the Pacific Coast. It was going to establish a board of compulsory arbitration on the Pacific Coast to handle disputes here. That was the proposal being put forward in our name at that time by the national officers of the union, and that was, as I say, in November, 1933, when the hearings took place. Well, we got ahold of the transcript of that code, and we [5231] brought it up here in the local membership meeting of the San Francisco local—that is, 38-79. And as a result of—I made the report and told the rank and file of the union, "Here is what is going on. We know nothing about it. These people that are saying that we approved this plan, we don't approve it. It looks like a real phony. It will take all the power out of the hands of the working rank and file. The decisions will be made for you," and so on.

"We oughtn't to go along with it." So the local elected me and another person, named Dietrich, Dutch Dietrich,—Schrimpf's deadly enemy, incidentally—to make a tour up and down the Coast to urge the calling of a coastwise convention. So we visited the various locals in Portland and Seattle and in Los Angeles, and finally we got the district leadership—that was the district leadership of the ILA——. I should explain this, that we had one coast local. There was Local 38, and it was broken down into what they called "series of locals." So that finally, when you wound up, you had 38-79, 38-34, 38-97, 38-12, 38—so forth and so on. The 38 meaning the local number, then the dash, then the number following meaning the series number. So the way the local, what was meant by local 38-79, in San Francisco, was Local 38 series 79. But the way the organization was constructed, there was one coast local that had the jurisdiction from the Canadian border to the Mexican border, and it was broken down into these locals that existed in the [5232] various ports. So we sought to have a local convention, which meant a coastwise convention. And in order to do that, we visited the locals, to have them go on record to urge the coast local officers to call this convention. And at that time the coast local officers, I think, was a man named Bjorkland, and a man named Dewey was president of the coast local. So finally we prevailed, and a convention, a coastwise convention of the ILA, was set for February, 1934. And we urged a rank and file convention; that is, that the convention be composed exclusively of delegates elected by local unions, and that those delegates in turn must again be working longshoremen. That is, men working on the job. And we were successful in having this convention come about in the month of February, 1934. And my local here, that is, the local I belonged to here in San Francisco, 38-79, we elected 20 delegates to that convention. And out of that—it was during the course of that convention that we drew up the program to unite the coast as a whole, to draw up a set of demands for the coast as a whole, and if necessary, to strike for those demands.

However, the strike program was worked out in this fashion. We would have a set of demands: No. 1, recognition, hiring hall and increased in wages, and other improvements so far as working conditions are concerned; and that these demands would be presented to the ship operators. And if the demands were rejected by the ship operators, we would take a referendum coastwise [5233] vote to see if the longshoremen on the Coast wanted to strike for those demands. So that was done during the course of the '34 convention. The demands were drawn up, the committee was elected right there at the convention to call upon the waterfront employers.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Wait a moment, Mr. Bridges. Now, we haven't the time established of that convention. When was the convention held?

A. I think it was February the—oh, around the middle of February. I forget. It is a matter of record. I don't remember.

Q. Have we that at the ILWU—are these available?

A. Yes, we have got the minutes. They were verbatim minutes. That is another thing we insisted on that comes to my mind now. There had been a coastwise conference before, a coastwise conference had been called in July of 1933.

Q. Were you a delegate to the '34 convention?

A. Yes, I was a delegate, and Schmidt was our candidate for president. [5234]

Q. At that time were you an officer of the ILA at all?

A. No, I was a local executive board member.

Q. That is all? A. That is all.

Q. And then you had been made an emissary or a delegate to go up and down the coast to urge these people to attend the convention? A. Yes.

Q. At the convention in February of 1934 you were elected a delegate to that convention, as I understand it, is that right?

A. Along with nineteen others.

Q. But at that time now, in February, 1934, at that convention you were still not an officer of any local or any portion of the ILA, is that correct?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. I was not an officer of the local until September, 1934, until after the strike.

Q. Until after September, 1934?

A. Right.

Q. So when Mr. Schomaker also says that Sam Darcy wanted him to get you as an important officer in the ILA, that could not have been so, is that right?

A. I wasn't an officer. I was only an executive board member at that time. I would like to feel I was that important at that time, inasmuch as I worked at it. I am pretty sure I wasn't [5235] as well known as that, and I wasn't important enough for that, that is, for what importance that was worth.

Q. Tell us now what happened then? Continue with your narrative. I only interrupted to get the date.

A. Well, in the 1934 convention, the coastwise convention——

Q. How many people were there approximately?

A. Oh, I guess there was about a hundred delegates approximately, and we drew up a coastwise constitution, adopted a coastwise constitution, elected a set of officers, district president—that was a coastwise president, a coastwise secretary, and a coastwise executive board, and they were put in charge. And that convention, incidentally, put the responsibility and the authority on the coastwise officers and that district executive board to call the strike, if any strike was going to occur, and that board, and that board alone, had the authority to call the strike—that is, of course, pursuant to a coastwise ballot being taken as to whether the membership wanted to strike or not.

So the 1934 convention in February set up the list of demands, elected the officers, elected the coastwise committee, which was the coastwise executive board, and that became the coastwise strike committee, and that committee was charged with the responsibility of setting the strike date or calling the strike after the coastwise membership had voted to strike if our demands and recognition were refused by the shipowners. So [5236] at the convention a committee was set up to call on the Waterfront Employers Association. The Waterfront Employers Association refused to even talk to our committee. In other words, they wouldn't recognize the union. So the committee came back, reported to the convention, and it was agreed in the convention that if by a certain date—I think it was a date in March—the Waterfront Employers refused to recognize us on a coastwise basis, a strike vote would be taken in judgment, and if the strike vote was favorable to a strike, a strike date was set, however to be postponed—a strike vote was tentatively set, but the power to put the strike into effect rested in the hands of this coastwise committee, the coastwise officers. So the strike vote was taken and——

Q. We are a little ahead of this now. So, as I understand it then, this coastwise committee would not have power to call the strike unless first a referendum was held by the members of the union authorizing them to do so, is that right? A. Right.

Q. Did the coastwise committee then submit to the shipowners' association the demands that you had agreed upon? A. That is right.

Q. When was that?

A. During the course of the convention—February.

Q. Then what followed next?

A. As I say, the Shipowners' Association at that time—— [5237]

Q. Pardon me. Of course, the Shipowners' Association recognized the justice of the demands and immediately granted them, is that right?

A. No, they did not.

Q. What happened then?

A. Well, a lot of water has gone—after all, the shipowners at that time were the same ones that appeared up here. They have undergone a little change.

Q. I have forgiven them, too.

A. I haven't forgiven them. That is not the point. They learned the hard way. Let us put it that way. They have changed. The point is when we went around with the demands I wasn't a member of the committee at the time because, as I say, it was the coastwise officers that were set up, and they approached the ship operators, the Waterfront Employers Association. So first of all they refused to recognize and deal with the committee because they said they have a bona fide contract in existence with the blue book, the company union; and second, they could not deal with the committee on a coastwise basis because they could only talk for the shipowners here in San Francisco, and the main demand of the union committee at that time was that the shipowners sit down with the committee and deal on a coastwise basis. For all the shipowners up and down the coast. And we reached an agreement, and it would be one coastwise agreement, not separate port agreements. [5238] So, as I say, the Waterfront Employers refused to recognize the union for those reasons.

Then the committee came back, reported to the convention, and the convention instructed the committee to initiate the strike vote and make the strike vote, that is, the results of the strike ballot returnable as of a certain date, and if that vote was favorable, and that was put on the ballot, then that committee had the authority to call the strike on if they made no progress in the way of recognitions and negotiations with the shipowners.

Q. Then what followed with regard to the referendum?

A. Oh, the referendum to strike if our demands were not granted carried by a big majority.

Q. Can you tell us a little of the machinery of that referendum, so that we can find out now whether it was in fact a rank and file determination or something dictated either by the officers or some outside political party or anything of that kind?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. We set up a balloting committee in the convention, and the balloting committee was instructed and authorized to draw up a ballot and to mail it out to the various locals, and the ballot would be secret, and each local union would elect its own balloting committee and would make arrangements for the balloting. The balloting then would take place, and each local union would count the returns of the ballot and certify them [5239] send them in to the office of the district officers, district secretary at that time. So that is how the ballot was conducted with the local unions being in charge of conducting the ballot in their own local union, with their own local balloting committee, a balloting committee elected from the rank and file members, and the returns had to be certified by a meeting of the local union before being sent in.

Q. Have you any memory now of approximately how many locals there were?

A. There were at that time about 25 or 30.

Q. That was from the Canadian border to the Mexican border? A. Right.

Q. Then can you tell us approximately what was the result of the ballot on the referendum?

A. It carried the strike by a wide margin, and then that ballot was in, I think, by around March 7. So another attempt was made to deal with the shipowners and again they refused.

Q. What attempt was made now? What was done?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. The coastwise committee contacted the shipowners and sought to sit down and have a meeting with them and bargain with them and try to work out an agreement.

Q. Pointed out that the referendum had been favorable to the strikers?

A. Right, and if there was no dealing, no recognition, there was liable to be a strike—in fact, there was a strike. They [5240] met and didn't get anywhere, and they notified the shipowners without telling them what date the strike would be called that they were going to put in effect the strike ballot. Of course, the various locals at that time, specifically at least the local that I was in, the San Francisco local, we were making preparations by setting up strike machinery. I am now talking of March.

Q. What do you mean by strike machinery?

A. We established a strike committee in the local.

Q. What were the purposes of that?

A. To conduct the strike on a local basis in the event it became necessary to strike. In other words, in the event that the coast officers put the strike ballot into effect by calling the strike, we had been instructed or told by the coast officers to establish our strike machinery. And that was done on a local basis. In the local I was in at that time—that was the San Francisco longshore local—we set up our strike machinery, strike committee, and divided up into several committees, and one thing and another like that. I was elected chairman. I can remember I got the job of chairman largely because no one else wanted it, not because of much of anything else.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Then what was done?

A. President Roosevelt at that time wired the coast officers to postpone the strike to give him a chance to set up a board of mediation, to see if by working through such a board a [6241] coastwise strike could be averted, and that request was granted. Strike action was postponed; a board of mediation was established. That board met—held public meetings, and they finally came out with a recommendation, that the recommendation would cover only the Port of San Francisco, and they further recommended that the local unions in the other areas like in Portland and Seattle and Puget Sound and Southern California, that they meet and go into negotiations with the local employers and urge them to accept as a pattern or basis for settlement the same pattern of settlement recommended for the Waterfront Employers of San Francisco and the union in San Francisco, which was the major port.

Q. Let me ask you, how closely did the recommendations of that board coincide with the demands that your convention had determined upon?

A. Oh, they didn't come close. I forget the details, but I remember one thing that was absolutely unacceptable as far as we were concerned. The recommendations of the board did not provide for one coastwise agreement. They recommended separate agreements in each port and separate negotiations in each port to get an agreement. We didn't want that. That was one thing. And they did not recommend the establishment of a hiring hall. I do not think they recommended any wage increases. They just recommended negotiations. So the recommendations of the board didn't get anywhere. [5242]

Q. How long did those negotiations continue or those determinations?

A. These were hearings before this Federal Board of Mediation at the time, a board of three men, and they continued for a few days, and the board came out with its recommendations in the month of April.

So after the board's recommendations were made, the union still attempted, based on the board's recommendation, to try to negotiate a contract directly with the shipowners' association, saying, "Now, look, even the Federal board set up by the President is a basis to work on. Let's see what can be worked out, and in that way a strike will be averted."

Well, I had nothing to do with this particularly. I was not a member of the committee that was doing the negotiating for the union, see? Other than getting around every chance I had and observing it, and so forth. And, of course, I attended the hearings before the special board of mediation. So negotiations finally broke down completely, and suddenly on May 9 the coast officers declared the strike, called the strike on the morning of May 9, 1934.

Q. Then what took place?

A. Well, we were on strike.

Q. Now, who? When you say "we were on strike," the ILA then went on strike, is that right?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. The longshoremen struck on a coastwise basis on May 9, 1934. [5243]

Q. Can you give us an approximation of about how many men were involved in that strike?

A. To start with, longshoremen on a coastwise basis, around twelve to fourteen thousand to start with. They struck May 9. On May 10 the Marine Workers Industrial Union struck with us. Now, the Marine Workers Industrial Union at that time had a few ships organized, and we met with them, and we worked out a program where any ships they had organized, where they had the majority of the men on the ships organized, they would pull them off. Where they had less than a majority of the men organized on the ship, they would let them stay aboard for a while so as to try to have them organize the entire ship and pull them off on strike in support of us. That was May 10.

Now, either May 10 or 11 the Boilermakers and the Machinists took action and what not. At least they took action to the extent that they refused to work on any struck ships here on the Pacific [5244] Coast.

On May 12th Coastwise Shipping Company suspended operations. We already had them shut down so they had to cease operations.

On May 15th—on May 15th the International Seamen's Union declared a sympathy strike in support of us and their own demands, and they called what members they had off the ships. And they had darned few members at that time, very few. They had less members than the MWIU. About a month later the licensed officers and the form of the Marine Engineers who were an independent, unaffiliated union at that time, and the Masters, Mates & Pilots, they likewise walked off.

Around the same time another independent organization, the ARTA, radio operators, about 25 or 30 days after the longshore strike, they got together an organization and they walked off, too.

So within 30 days after the longshoremen had struck, all the maritime unions, technically at least, were on strike, but they did not have a great amount of membership, and our strike was tightening up.

Within two weeks after May 9th the Teamsters here—the Teamsters stayed at work, at least in this port, the Teamsters stayed at work for about two weeks after that strike, and finally they went on strike not to haul to and from the waterfront even though they kept working elsewhere throughout the city. Generally speaking, that is the situation. [5245]

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Taking the men actually on strike, what is your best estimate of the total number of men that were on strike?

A. I would say the men directly affected by the strike vote 30 days after we struck would approximate around 30,000.

Q. About 30,000 men? A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell us what steps were taken by the organization of which you were a member toward winning the strike, to protect the men, to feed them, to hold them in line, and sustain their morale? Will you tell us just what was done?

A. We set up. I—in this particular phase of the activity, I was here in San Francisco, and I was chairman of the strike committee in San Francisco.

Q. How many men were on the strike committee?

A. 75.

Q. Where did they come from? Who elected them?

A. It has been testified to here. We came in with the proposition—when I say "we," again I mean myself, and that part is true—the so-called Albion Hall group, we made the proposal—I made the motion myself—that our strike committee set up would be that the longshoremen on each dock would select a couple of people that they wanted to elect. So they were elected on a dock by dock basis; and that they would compose a strike [5246] committee plus the executive board. So therefore we had 50 longshoremen elected dock by dock that composed the strike committee, plus the executive board of 35 or 25 as it was, I think, and the whole thing made up our strike committee of 75 to 85.

Q. When you talk about each separate dock electing the members of that committee, how were the men assigned to the dock?

A. The people that happened to be working on the dock; in other words, the men that worked at each dock. Ordinarily the number of steady gangs were assigned to the various docks. For example, my dock was Pier 26 and 28. I was working on a steady gang at Pier 26 and 28, the American-Hawaiian Company.

Q. What did they do toward electing the men is what I want to find out.

A. They called a meeting of the men working on the dock, they called it right outside the dock gate, held a meeting, made nominations, and said, "Everybody hold up their hands, all in favor of Joe Blow, hold up your hands." So Blow was elected, Henry Schmidt, Bridges, Schrimpf, whatever the case may be. And in that way we got together a rank and file committee of 75 with all officers excluded from the committee except as ex-officio members unless they were members of the executive board. We were determined that the control of that strike would rest in the hands of the people on strike, and any stories—I mean anyone that knows anything about that strike, anyone that was down there, knows that any stories to the contrary are so much [5247] baloney.

Q. Well, we weren't there, Mr. Bridges, and we don't understand exactly what you mean by strike story, so if you will kindly explain what those proceedings were, what this board did, what the strike committee did in winning the strike.

A. The strike committee was a committee of 75 longshoremen. They met daily; in the early days of the strike they met all day and most of the night. I was chairman of the strike committee, largely—I was chairman, because as I say, they looked around, they said, "Well, now, look, let's try to get a man who has had a little experience with strikes," and

I really got the job because really no one else wanted it more than I got elected to it for any other reason. And the fellows knew—I was generally well known along the waterfront because of the '24 activity, the fact that I had been involved in the 1921 strike, and so forth.

As a matter of fact, one of the first things we did, we printed picket cards, and the picket cards that I had saved when I was on strike in New Orleans in the '21 sailor strike were copied in order to make the picket cards for the longshoremen here in San Francisco. It was a picket card, an oblong card, with numbers around the border, 1 to 31 that represented the days of the month. And as you got your credits for picket duty, the picket captain of each picket squad would punch the number around the border, and the rules of the union required that you [5248] had to have so many days punched each month, otherwise you got into trouble, you would be penalized by the union for missing picket duty. I had saved my picket card from the strike of '21, and we used them to set up—one of the first things that strike committee did was to equip everybody with a picket card as a means of identifying him and as a means of checking up on their picket duty and so forth. That was the setup of our strike committee. The strike committee was divided into sub-committees; we had a picketing committee, we had a relief committee; we had a publicity committee; we had a defense committee; and all those committees, as I say, they functioned and they directed those various activities.

Q. Now, what, for instance, was the duty of the picketing committee?

A. The daily meeting of the strike committee was when we brought all subcommittees together and we met as a committee of the whole, and that was the committee that determined every bit of strategy in the strike. I have still got the minutes, I have got the minutes of the motions made, myself as chairman, for the whole '44 strike, who made the motions, the discussion, and so forth. I have still got the minutes of that strike committee.

So the whole committee would meet as a committee of the whole with the subcommittees and they determined the strategy, and when the subcommittees went out to do their work—the [5249] picketing committee, for example, they were in charge of all picketing, they would assign pickets, they would check up to see that everybody was doing picket duty, they would appoint picket captains whose job it was, each picket captain had a squad, and that picket captain was responsible for that squad, and he would punch the cards. We had certain special punches made, and we changed the punches every now and again so that someone couldn't get hold of a similar punch and punch his own card and never do picket duty. So the picket captain was in charge of the picketing squad and he was in charge of this duty and assigned them.

The publicity committee was in charge of getting out press releases, arranging for radio programs, arranging for mass meetings, establishing a speakers' bureau so that speakers were assigned to represent the strike committee at other unions in the city, and to public bodies to explain the issues of the strike and ask that they send—pass resolutions or send donations of money or food, and so forth. [5250]

The relief committee was in charge of the soup kitchens. They established a soup kitchen, and in addition to feeding the men on the waterfront while they were on picket duty, we also had a wagon go around and give them doughnuts and coffee, as well as a system of relief where married people with families were given boxes of groceries in order to feed the families, because the relief through the soup kitchens did not do the married people much good. So that was the duties of the relief committee.

And then the defense committee, their duty and responsibility was to arrange for bail if someone was arrested or got into trouble, and there was a lot of trouble, because it was illegal to picket in those days. We had a picketing ordinance, and that reminds me, the lawyer that we hired, if you recall, to try to get an injunction to stop the police from interfering with our picketing was a man named Hallinan, Vincent Hallinan.

Q. I was licked.

A. Yes, you were beaten. I can still recall that the strike committee didn't want to hire him because he was a bourgeois capitalist lawyer; we didn't want to have anything to do with such characters.

Q. Maybe you would be better off if you took their advice on this case.

A. Those are the various duties of the committee.

Mr. Hallinan: Do you mind if we recess? [5251]

The Court: It is four o'clock. Ladies and gentlemen, we will adjourn until tomorrow morning at ten o'clock. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions nor to form an opinion thereon until it is finally submitted to you.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken until Wednesday, February 8, 1950, at 10:00 a. m.) [5251-A]

February 8, 1950, 10:00 A.M.

The Clerk: The United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

The witness on the stand is Harry Renton Bridges, heretofore sworn.

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES

resumed.

Direct Examination

By Mr. Hallinan:

Q. Now, yesterday, Mr. Bridges, you identified a photostatic reproduction of a list of members of the executive committee. I want to show you a certain file. Have you seen that document before?

A. Yes.

Q. And what is it, please?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. These are the minutes that were kept in the early days of the union, amongst the first—these are the first official minutes that were kept by the union at that time.

Q. Now, have you been personally familiar with those minutes from the very time of their drawing up to the present?

A. I was instrumental in having them preserved.

Q. Are those minutes kept in the regular order of the business of the union as it was revitalized at that period? A. Yes.

Q. Does it show the inception of the revitalization of the union? [5252]

A. In some ways it does.

Q. And when do those minutes commence?

A. Well, the one I have got here is headed—by the nature of the minutes, on the letterhead which reads "Ferryboatmen's Union of California," which is the——

Q. Reads what?

A. "Ferryboatmen's Union of California." This is the minutes of the meeting of the organizing committee held at the time when the union didn't even have a place to meet, and it was using the office of the Ferryboatmen's Union of California at that time. We were using the office of a man named Deal—Clyde W. Deal; we were meeting in his office. These are the minutes—the first minutes here are the minutes of the organizing committee of the union. That is all we had; we had an organizing committee; we didn't have any officers, and the organizing committee was signing up the men, receiving the monies and doing things like that.

Q. And that is dated July 10, 1933?

A. That's right, July 10, 1933, Room B Ferry Building.

Q. Will you turn to the piece of yellow paper that is thrust up from the top. What is that page that that paper identifies or marks?

A. This is a paper that—this is the original of the photostat you had yesterday.

Q. In other words, it is the original of the document that was [5253] introduced here yesterday as Defendants' Exhibit T-2, a list of the membership of the executive committee of the union of the International Longshoremen's Association?

A. And this was the listing of the members that were present at the first meeting when it came to order, and the original check marks are by the secretary at that time, Ivan T. Cox. I know his handwriting; I can identify it from that alone without anything else.

Q. There isn't any date on that list, is there?

A. No.

Q. But can you tell from its position in the minutes approximately when that list was compiled and when that meeting was held which was so checked off by the secretary?

A. I recognize it as the first meeting of the board after the board was elected and installed. This was the first time it came to order, and I know why.

Q. When was it? In September '33?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Approximately, I know when the first board meeting—I recall the early part of September '33, but I have got my own reasons for knowing why this was the first meeting of the board.

Q. What is that?

A. Because there is a man here who only attended one meeting, the first meeting; the man's name is Harvey McCarthy. He attended the first meeting. He didn't attend any meetings after.

Q. May I have that, please? [5254]

A. I know that because Harvey was a member of our slate, and although we had arrangement where he would be marked present at some meetings, but he was busy on other business. He was organizing—he was excused to organize warehousemen's local 34. That was testified. He helped organize Warehousemen's Local 34—38-34, that was testified to here as being organized. So one of the reasons I know about the original meeting——

Q. I notice in some of these meetings that they are written in longhand on what practically amounts to scrap paper. Are you familiar with that?

A. Right.

Q. And then I notice that some toward the end are on the heading, on the letterhead of the Riggers' and Stevedores' Union, Office 113 Steuart Street, organized July 25, 1853.

A. That was some—the answer to that is the stationery there of the Riggers' and Stevedores' Union, that was some old stationery that was left over from the union when it existed in 1919. One of the board members, I forget which one, had some old stationery, because he was one of the former officers of the union in 1919, and he came down and we used that. The union was in such shape at that time that it never had any of its own stationery. That came along later in more prosperous times. [5255]

Mr. Hallinan: And I notice such matters as this:

> "At a meeting in September Brother Miley Farnsworth and Bob Baker wanted permission to establish a lunchroom with cigars, tobacco and candy in this hall. Will pay a graduated rental commencing with $10.00 a month until the maximum of $20.00 is reached, and will also do the janitor work."

Mr. Donohue: May I suggest, Your Honor, we are going a little bit far afield in the examination of this witness.

Mr. Hallinan: This document bears on its face, if Your Honor please, evidence of its relative antiquity, and I do not want to bother to have it passed among the jurors now. The jurors understand they can take any exhibit that we have. I am going to offer the entire book of the minutes in evidence, so there can not be any question that documents have been extracted. There was some criticism made that certain records were not the bound records. For instance, this photostat I am sure we only did it for the purpose of keeping the record down and to prevent an accumulation of exhibits, but it is a copy of a document bound in this book, which was removed and photostated, but now in order to obviate any question——

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

The Court: Mr. Bridges has so testified.

Mr. Hallinan: ——in order to obviate any question, I am going to offer the entire record of the minutes. They run from July down to some time in September, 1933, as Defendants' exhibit next in order. [5256]

Mr. Donohue: I object to the admission of this document on the ground that it has no pertinency or relevancy to any issue in controversy here. There has been no suggestion that any witness who has testified for the prosecution raised a controversy, as a result of which this document might be offered.

Mr. Hallinan: We are directing it specifically at the testimony of Schomaker, that he having come on the waterfront in the middle of October, received some time thereafter directions from Darcy, Samuel Darcy, that he reactivate the union on the waterfront, by showing that the union on the waterfront had been reactivated at least five or six months before Mr. Schomaker even made his appearance there.

Mr. Donohue: The record will show, if Your Honor please, that the witness John Schomaker testified he joined the ILA in November, 1933, Your Honor.

Mr. Hallinan: Exactly, and we want to show all these things were done from July to September, the entire union gotten under way, the machinery that Mr. Bridges described already set in motion before Mr. Schomaker even presented himself there.

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Schomaker never contended, if Your Honor please, and the record will so state, that he ever formed the ILA. It was formed, according to Mr. Bridges' testimony yesterday, by the——

The Court: The photostat, Mr. Donohue, I have admitted in evidence and it is appropriately marked, and it is identified [5257] by Mr. Bridges as the first meeting of the particular committee.

Mr. Donohue: Yes, Your Honor.

The Court: Sufficient foundation has been laid, and accordingly the document has been appropriately marked. With respect to the balance of the file folder, however, I will mark the balance of the matter for identification. I can not see, Mr. Hallinan, how that would affect the issue involved in this case. No doubt extraneous matters appear in the minutes. In support of your contention that it is an ancient document, that may well be true, but we are not attempting to prove any document by that source or upon that foundation.

Mr. Hallinan: No. But I mean if it should be contended by this witness that there is some recent fabrication or that these documents are not what they purport to be or were not made out at the time they were made out, although the minutes themselves bear internal evidence of the fact, for that reason we offer them in evidence.

Here is what we are doing: We are taking out our records from the files and exposing them to everybody. There isn't any concealment. We are not hiding documents and records and pretending that they can not be obtained. We are bringing them in here. He can search through them and see if there is anything that will give him comfort. The jury can look through them to determine if it is true or false that Mr. Schomaker, on the advice of Mr. Darcy, started the reactivation of this union that [5258] involved so many thousands of men. That is the purpose of it. If counsel does not want them in, if he wants to persist in his policy of keeping out as much as possible, not only what we ask for but what we offer ourselves, I do not see why we should make any objection to it. We want to put everything in. We said originally we want all the cards on the table face up. These are the original minutes of that union. They can search through them. If they can find something that indicates Communist infiltration or influence by Mr. John Schomaker or Mr. Samuel Darcy or anyone else, let them dig it out. They are the original minutes. Nothing could be more honest, nothing could be more straightforward than to tender them.

Furthermore, as I say, we have had this criticism, that because a document shows by punchholes in it that it has been removed from some sort of file, that it is open to question. We bring in the entire file and say, "All right, this should remove the question." They should take a position on the matter lest they be banned by the devil for having blown hot and cold in the same breath.

Mr. Donohue: Your Honor, the objection made yesterday to this photostat, as Your Honor will recall, was predicated on the fact that it was unsigned and undated. The original is just as unsigned and undated.

The Court: Mr. Bridges has identified that document. I have admitted it. With respect to the other matters, they may [5259] be marked for identification.

> (The minutes referred to were thereupon marked Defendants' Exhibit B-3 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Have you seen that file before, Mr. Bridges? A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us what it is?

A. This is a file of the official minutes of the longshore local here in San Francisco for the year 1934 and halfway through 1935. These are the minutes of the regular membership meetings as distinguished from committee meetings, executive board meetings.

Q. Are those the original minutes?

A. Yes.

Q. Were they prepared at the time they purport to state the facts? In other words, is that a running set of minutes of the meetings as they occurred?

A. Yes, except this: The secretary at that time, Ivan F. Cox, would make a few notes and then the minutes would be typed up in between meetings. These are the minutes that would be read at the following meeting and approved, in which case his pencil notes would be destroyed, and these became the official minutes. After all, Cox did not sit at the meeting with a typewriter in front of him.

Q. I understand. [5260]

A. These minutes were typed by Cox. These minutes were not typed by a stenographer. Cox used to sit there and peck away at the typewriter and do his own typewriting. I saw him do it many, many dozens of times.

Q. And were they kept in the regular course of business of the union? A. Yes.

Q. And then preserved in the record of the union since? A. Right.

Q. And you are familiar with them personally?

A. To my own knowledge, yes.

Q. Will you turn to page 3, which I think is also marked with a yellow sheet, and tell us what that is. [5261]

A. "Minutes of Special Meeting. Minutes of special meeting of Local held on March 21, 1934," where among other things the District President made a report, that is, William J. Lewis, District President at that time—incidentally, he was also one of the—a part of the slate that were supported as business agents in the 1933 elections. W. J. "Burglar" Lewis, we used to call him. He was elected as a business agent, later on elected against our Henry Schmidt for next president. He makes a report at this meeting on the progress of the negotiations with the President's mediation board. And this was the meeting where the strike committee was elected, and I made a motion there to establish the strike committee. That carried. And then the names of the men who had already been designated by their various docks were given over to the meeting, and the meeting approved the election of the various members of the strike committee by the various longshoremen on the respective docks, and that is the main thing in these minutes.

Q. Did you hear Mr. MacInnis reading out to Schrimpf the list of the names of the strike committee? A. Yes.

Q. Was that the same list that you have there?

A. This is the official list. It is all here.

Q. And then the minutes that you have there, are they documents that recite the very events that you were testifying to yesterday? [5262] A. Yes.

Q. As to not only the formation of the union but the appointment of the committees, the negotiations with the employers and the appointing of the strike committee?

A. The minutes say, "Moved, seconded and carried that we elect a strike committee consisting of 50 members. Brother Bridges spoke, describing in detail how this committee would function and suggesting that one member from the docks in Oakland and Alameda be appointed on this committee. Moved, seconded and carried that the suggestion of Bridges be adopted. The following members were selected and appointed. Each one named came to the platform as his name was called." Then it goes on with the list of the various members, but towards the end it says, "No steady work, J. D. Schomaker."

Q. What does that mean?

A. He was not working on any dock noted in the minutes.

Mr. Hallinan: At this time, if the Court please, we offer in evidence the general membership minutes of the ILA, Local 38-79, from 1/24/34 through 1/27/36, and with the same comment, that they are the original minutes bound together, that documents have been subtracted from these, photostated, and offered here either in evidence or for identification before; that this obviates any contention or discussion that the entire record is not here. Counsel is free to search it again. The jurors and the Court are entitled and invited to inspect it and see [5263] if there is any contradiction in anything Mr. Bridges said yesterday contained in it.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, as I recall this matter, historically the witnesses Schomaker and Schrimpf were called by the United States in support of the allegation in the indictment that these defendants were members of the Communist Party and conspired together to obtain the naturalization of the defendant Harry Bridges by fraud. On the direct examination of both the witness Schomaker and the witness Schrimpf their testimony was restricted by the prosecution to testimony placing two of the three defendants in the Communist Party. Not a single question was asked by the prosecution of either of the witnesses with respect to the question of the 1934 strike, the ILA or the ILWU, or any other organization. These matters came into this record in the very lengthy cross-examination of Mr. Schomaker and Mr. Schrimpf by counsel for the defendants. We took the position at that time that that question of a strike of the ILA and the ILWU and any other union was purely a collateral matter, and that under the law if a question is asked of a witness on cross-examination on a collateral matter, the defense asking the question is bound by their answer. Now, it is all very well and good for Mr. Hallinan to hand a time-beaten folder and have Mr. Bridges say that he has personal knowledge that these are the records that were kept back in 1934 or 1935. Whether they are or whether they are [5264] all the records is a matter about which I am uninformed. But I most respectfully say to your Honor that there is not a bit of help that can be given to the Court or the jury by the offer or the acceptance of the minutes of the ILA in 1934, 1933 or 1935, because there is not a single allegation in this indictment which requires proof of any minutes of any meeting that Mr. Bridges may have attended with respect to the ILA or the ILWU. The indictment charges membership in the Communist Party, and I most respectfully say to your Honor that to clutter up the record with a series of ancient documents of this kind, which can only serve as self-serving declarations [illegible] assist Mr. Bridges in establishing matters concerning the strike which are wholly collateral, can be of no help to any of us in deciding the issue of the membership of Mr. Bridges in the Communist Party. I respectfully say to your Honor that I object to the introduction of this [5265] record.

Mr. Hallinan: Might I say, if the Court please, as counsel so often and vociferously protested his honesty and innocence in this matter, I must attribute what he just said to some discrepancy of memory, because it is very distinct, I think, in everybody's memory that among the pertinent things that Mr. Donohue thought should be adduced so as to bolster the story of the fable of Mr. Schomaker where there was one that Mr. Schomaker received from Mr. Sam Darcy instructions, either written or oral, on every phase and portion of the reactivation of the ILA and every phase and portion and every activity of the strike committee, which he transmitted to Harry Bridges as orders from the Communist Party and which Harry Bridges then put into force and effect. And Mr. Schrimpf testified, not on cross-examination, but on direct examination by Mr. Donohue, that he, accompanied by a number of other persons, made some kind of a fantastic journey to a prune orchard in Santa Clara County where they met a man named Browder, who gave them similar advice, encouragement and directions. And all of those were put in by Mr. Donohue himself. And now the fact that Mr. Donohue finds this important material contradicted by unassailable records is no reason why the defendants should be precluded from putting in those records to establish that contradiction. I can't understand or imagine why counsel should either forget or pretend to forget that these matters were introduced by himself through the testimony of witnesses on direct examination. Your Honor [5266] has his notes; if not, we have the record. If there is any question about it, we can produce it.

Now, you remember that Mr. Schomaker on his direct examination was very definite and specific not only as to the time, place and the frequency with which he transmitted these orders from Mr. Sam Darcy, but the very nature of them. He told us on direct examination in response to questions put to him by Mr. Donohue and in support of the rest of his fable, that he received orders:

First, that the Albion Hall group should be created;

Second, that the ILA should be reactivated;

Third, the wages and other demands that should be given to the employers;

Four, the exact date when the strike was to be called;

Five, every single thing that was done in connection not only with the calling of the strike, but with its administration.

It is true that a considerable time was devoted upon cross-examination to discover again, to have Mr. Schomaker repeat these matters in the face of records which we were able to confront him with and give some sort of a specific statement as to whether the instructions were oral or in writing, how they were transmitted, and that Mr. Schomaker spent a long time, a day or two, evading, running around and trying to get away from answering those questions, and finally, it all seemed to fade into one thing: that it amounted in the end to the transmission [5267] of a document and a resolution that they were supposed to introduce at some meeting. But all of the previous meetings, all these directions, were adduced by Mr. Donohue from the witness on direct examination. I don't see how Mr. Donohue can have forgotten it.

The Court: The document to which Mr. Bridges made reference may be admitted in evidence. That is on the dates in question, the 21st—what was the other? The 21st to the 24th, was it?

The Witness: March 21st to 24th, special meetings.

The Court: That may be admitted in evidence, may be received.

Mr. Hallinan: We also offer all the minutes.

The Court: The minutes may be marked presently for identification. If any question arises, they may be looked at.

Mr. Hallinan: If the prosecution wishes to go over them, they are welcome to.

The Court: Is that clear to you, Mr. Mitchell?

The Clerk: Which page is it?

Mr. Hallinan: I will find it.

The Clerk: May the page referred to, Your Honor, be marked Defendant's C-3 in evidence?

Mr. Hallinan: It is marked Page 18, I notice, in the file itself.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

The Clerk: Page 18. May the folder be marked Defendants' [5268] D-3 for identification.

> (Minutes referred to were thereupon Defendants' Exhibit C-3 in evidence, and the folder was marked Defendants' Exhibit D-3 for identification.)

The Court: Will you have that photostated, Mr. Mitchell?

The Clerk: May I ask that counsel have it done?

Mr. Hallinan: We will provide it.

Q. Now, I notice here in the minutes of May 29, 1934, that the purpose of the meeting being to take in discussion proposals submitted by the employers to the district executive board, May 28, 1934:

> "Meeting called to order at 8:00 p.m. by vice president Joseph Johnston.
> "District President William J. Lewis——"

That is what you just referred to, the district president? A. Right.

Mr. Hallinan (Reading): "Presented to the membership the proposed agreement as submitted by the employers. At the conclusion of the reading, the chairman presented the question formally before the membership for acceptance or rejection:

> "1. All those in favor of the proposed agreement say aye. Not one single sound was heard.
> "2. Now, all those who reject the employers' proposal say no. The 2500 members present with one accord shouted no." [5269]

Do you recollect that that is what happened?

A. Right. That was the rejection of the first proposals we received from the employers.

Q. That was rejected apparently by 2500 members present in the hall by a voice vote taken at that time? A. Right.

Q. And that was on May 28, 1934?

A. May 29th. May 28th we remember because May 28th we had a battle. That is when Schomaker got beaten up.

Q. I notice here in an item May 7, 1934:

> "Motion. Regularly moved by Brother Bridges that the special committee shall have full power and authority to enter in negotiations. This motion after vigorous discussion was withdrawn."

In other words, you weren't directing or running things; your motion was argued and then withdrawn by you, is that correct?

A. I think I was trying—I think the purpose of that was I was trying to have a committee set up that would conduct negotiations, or something of that type, and when it was pointed out that the final authority to conduct negotiations on a Coastwise basis rested with the Coastwise Executive Board, I withdrew my motion and agreed to support such a proposition. And the Coastwise Committee, as I have told you, was headed by the district president, who was William J. Lewis at that time, and a group of other people. [5270]

Q. And then I notice on Tuesday, July 25th a meeting called to order, the purpose of the meeting to be for the specific purpose of discussion of the question whether this local should go back to work without the seamen. Was there some difficulty arose from the fact that the employers offered to make an agreement with the longshoremen and not to include the seamen? A. That is true.

Q. And what was done on that?

A. It was rejected. In other words, on June 16, 1934, an agreement was reached by the national officers. Joseph P. Ryan came out here from New York and he in conjunction with the mayor at that time—that was Angelo Rossi—Dave Beck, Rossi, Beck and one of the board members named Finnegan—that is, the ILA board members named Finnegan—and Ryan signed an agreement putting us back to work, that is, the longshoremen back to work. The first we knew about it was when we read it in the newspapers. And the agreement not only was——

Q. Pardon me; we are a little ahead of ourselves. A. The agreement was rejected.

Q. I want to get something else before we get into that, because we want to keep it in some order of time.

Now, you told us yesterday, Mr. Bridges, about the division of your executive committee into certain subcommittees for picketing, relief, defense, matters of that kind, and you told us something about the relief committee; that they established a [5271] soup kitchen and were sending food and money out to people with families. Now, where was the food and money coming from?

A. The money was collected by—collected from, well, any source we could collect it from. We got quite a large amount of money, the bulk of the money came from other labor unions, from the San Francisco Labor Council here in San Francisco. That is where we got the bulk of our finances, because the Council officially went on record to give full financial support to the strike as well as other support, and generally speaking, all the unions did extend a large degree of support financially. In addition to that, we accepted money from any source; we weren't fancy. I recalled at that time I think that we got a donation from the waterfront employers at that time. We sent them a bumming letter as well as we sent a lot of other people, and for some reason or other, they sent it back with a check for I think $25.00. I can recall we sent a letter to Barbara Hutton, who was just getting married around that time, and we thought that she might help us, we were having a tough struggle. And I forget; I think she was—the reason we sent the letter—incidentally, I think that there was a statement in the newspapers that she was getting married, had planned to honeymoon in Hawaii but the ships were tied up and it was difficult to make it, so they decided to honeymoon in Paris. In some way at least we got the idea we would send her a telegram saying so long as she was getting along so well and having [5272] a happy time, that she might be able to spare a few dollars for the strikers on the waterfront. I don't recall that we got any money. I think we got a nice letter back from her; I don't think we got any money from that source.

So in addition to the trade unions that we asked and who came through very, very generously, we didn't turn down money from any source. And that, incidentally, included the Communist Party. So we got money from the Communist Party. I think we got money from the Socialist Party. There was quite a few political organizations of that type around here then,—the Workers Party, the Proletariat Party—all of them, they sent in donations and it was thankfully received and primarily went to feed our strikers.

Q. Will you tell us now what course the strike then took? First, what day did it start? What day did the strike commence? You told us that yesterday. A. May 9th.

Q. How long did it last? A. July 31st.

Q. Will you tell us now what was the source of the strike?

A. Well, I was the chairman of the strike committee. I pointed out that I was largely selected because they thought—the rest of the committee thought that I had a little bit of prior experience and so forth, and I was also a former sailor. In addition, I was at that time an Australian, and the background [5273] of waterfront history here has been, as I have suggested, one where amongst the first unions that—that is, the first unions of other countries, that always came to the support of the West Coast seamen and longshoremen were the seamen and longshoremen of Australia. These were more or less the reasons I was chairman of the strike committee, more than anything else, I think.

And looking back at that time, as most of us did, over the history of past waterfront struggles, we had, to the best of our ability at least, analyzed the weaknesses of past strikes, what had lost them, and we found that two things stood out. One was generally when the longshoremen were on strike the seamen stayed at work, and when the seamen were on strike the longshormen stayed at work. For example, when I was on strike in New Orleans, I had a picket squad down there, and one of my jobs was to get around and talk to the longshoremen. But that during our 1921 strike, the seamen struck and the longshoremen stayed at work. And then when the strike was broken, then of course later on when the longshoremen struck the seamen found this a chance to do the same thing that they did to us. They went ahead and did it and that ended the longshoremen. So that in 1934, or '33, we wanted to take steps that, above all, that didn't happen, and we took those steps.

Again the leaders of the seamen's union at that time advised their men to stay on the job, advised their men to stay at work. And I attended a meeting in 1933, and later on in early [5274] '34 I went over to a meeting in Sailors Hall here in San Francisco and I heard the officers telling the men it was none of their business, to stay aboard the ships, "You are not on strike, the longshoremen are no good, and never were," and so forth and so on.

The other thing that we had to watch out for, because we regarded it as very important from the trade union standpoint as well as other reasons, and that was the organization of the Negro people, because in the 1919 strike the Negroes were imported in great numbers as strikebreakers. So we were determined that that wouldn't happen this time. So right from the start—right from the start we fought for a policy of organizing everybody irrespective of race, creed, color or background.

Q. Let me ask you this: What justification did the Negroes have for acting as strikebreakers? Were they barred from the union themselves at that time?

A. Up to that time—I think we were about the first union here to start on a program of equality as union people for Negroes as well as every other type of person.

Q. So the colored people first had the reason that they were barred from participating in the union?

A. Attending the unions.

Q. And then went out as strikebreakers?

A. Quite a few unions at that time barred all persons black, brown or yellow. [5275]

Q. What did your union do?

A. We eliminated that. We were about the first union that broke down all of those barriers and everybody was accepted as equals. And even to this day that policy continues. Of course it is a regular thing now, but it was pretty progressive in those days, pretty Communistic in those days. It was one of those things that led to our union being called a Communist organization or being charged as being a Communist organization. It was one of those things that led to myself, Schmidt and others being accused as Communists because we had stood for that policy in those days, and it was considered pretty radical, pretty Communistic.

Q. Aside from any humanitarian principle, it was sound policy not to keep these people off to one side where they could be used as strikebreakers?

A. Very simply; they were there. They had been used before. Everybody knew about it. But even with some of the members of the old riggers and stevedores union, we had to argue with them at first, in the first instance, even though they had been through it, their union had been broken by their refusal to accept various races into the union in the olden days. We had to argue it. Of course we had a straight, simple issue. You can't expect those people, notwithstanding their color, no matter what color they are, you can't expect them to work with us, be a part of us, refuse to go ahead and be strikebreakers [5276] unless they are a part of the union with all the rest of the union members. That is what they were given in our union.

Q. Go ahead. What further——

A. The strike took place, as I say. The strike committee was first of all concerned with getting ourselves organized. The first few days were pretty hectic, and primarily seeing that the rank and file ran the strike; that any agreement reached was a coast agreement; no agreement would be reached or finally lost without a full vote on the strike, in other words, without a vote of the rank and file; that we wouldn't have our strike broken by the seamen not standing with us.

One of the first steps we took was to guarantee to the seamen if they came off the ships and raised a list of demands including an increased wage, and mainly job security, we would refuse to call off our strike until they had attained some satisfactory settlement.

Of course the organization of the whole strike was that we would eliminate the possibility of strikebreakers, and we would eliminate the two large groups of people that existed at that time that had traditionally been used—traditionally been used as strikebreakers, namely, the unemployed and the Negroes. And we were pretty successful along those lines, so that the employers at that time had to scratch around quite a bit to get strikebreakers; they had to go to the universities and get the football teams. That is what they did. And there wasn't too [5277] many takers in the ranks of the unemployed and of the various racial minorities, and we were largely successful in getting the seamen to walk out in support and sympathy with us, and later on to raise their own set of demands, and eventually when the strike was over we all returned to work. And of course in the course of the strike——

Q. Let me ask you this now: Was the strike, so far as the numbers involved and the ability of the strikers at that time to successfully conduct the strike? Did it operate efficiently?

A. I think so. I mean, we have had quite a few arguments with those Waterfront Employers and shipowners over the years. I might say parenthetically we have had less in these days, and it will continue, I hope. There is one thing they agree with us on, and that is that that was a successful strike.

Q. What went on then? Was there any violence or any difficulty in proceeding? What steps did you take to see that your demands were enforced?

A. It was a very violent strike.

Q. Who started the violence?

A. Certainly we didn't. I have never seen a working man or someone who is a striker or a picket, I have never seen them taking a delight into running into a policeman or anyone else that is generally armed with a gun, a club or machine gun or shotgun or teargas gun—in my experience in trade unions I have never seen any group of strikers or individual relish any [5278] type of thing like that, notwithstanding what was said. But in this strike it was a very violent strike, a very bitter strike up and down the Coast. We lost nine men killed—nine men, longshoremen and seamen killed, and hundreds of men wounded, shot and clubbed in various cities, the reason for that being, at least here in the Port of San Francisco and elsewhere, there was a picketing ordinance. It was illegal to picket, so-called, notwithstanding the so-called rights under the Constitution to picket. That ordinance was later on repealed. [5279]

Q. Well, wasn't it declared unconstitutional?

A. It was declared unconstitutional, yes.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor pleases, we have been through this '34 strike three of four times.

Mr. Hallinan: From your side. Now we are entitled to go through it from our side. Mr. Schomaker, Mr. Schrimpf, were allowed to give their versions.

Mr. Donohue: On your examination.

Mr. Hallinan: No, on your examination.

Mr. Donohue: Not on my examination.

Mr. Hallinan: Your memory is sadly deficient on those things.

Mr. Donohue: Everyone, your Honor, has conceded the '34 strike was long, bitter and successful. Now, is there anything to be gained by repeating it again?

Mr. Hallinan: Now we want to show also that it was not run by some magic worker named Sam Darcy, operating through a puppet named John Schomaker; but that it was run by some thirty or forty thousand men, honest working men, who were trying to get some humane treatment and consideration, and that it was not run by any such delegated authority as counsel here has been contending for. While we all know that, he doesn't. He is from the East Coast and he hasn't any recollection of these things. But we are entitled to show now just what was done, the reasons that they were done, that the violence on the [5280] waterfront, and so forth, was not motivated by Mr. Sam Darcy and a few other gentlemen up at 128 Haight Street, but that they were the result of efforts on the part of agents of the employers and of the police to smash the picket lines and break the strike. Now, I think that the simple sort of justice would permit us to tell our side of the story—so much having been already said about the 1934 strike being run in the manner that I have indicated.

Mr. Donohue: I most respectfully say to your Honor that unless we get down to the issue in this indictment, we may be here forever.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, don't be in a hurry. After you get used to California you begin to like it. It is really a very nice place. The spring is coming, and stick around for a while. You will find that it is quite agreeable. I don't think we should be in any hurry; we gave them plenty of time. The corn won't be in the shock or the frost on the pumpkin, or whatever you call it, for several months yet.

The Court: I will overrule the objection. You may answer.

A. There was quite a bit of violence, as I say.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): But tell us—will you give us a little brief narrative now how it started, what was its culmination and how it ended?

A. Well, the shipowners got an old vessel, an old Dollar Line [5281] vessel, and moored it down here at Pier 14, and that was a kind of a floating boarding house. And they recruited strikebreakers and they put—they maintained them aboard that floating boarding house.

Q. Boarding house, you say?

A. Yes, sort of a boarding house.

Q. I think I remember Mr. Paisley suggesting I was turning the court into a "boarding house," or something that sounded like that.

A. No, boarding, where the strikebreakers used to live on the ship. And they would be taken to the various docks by motor launch so that they would never come ashore. However, they got a lot of money, you know; they used to make their money and they sneaked ashore every once in a while to spend it. And generally, in order to protect their persons, because there being quite a feeling built up in the newspapers by and large that if they come ashore they would risk their lives—so they used to come ashore prepared. They'd have a knife or a club or a gun. They would have something of that type. So that was one place where a little violence came along, and I will admit that our fellows were down there protecting their jobs, too. And they weren't at all backward if they run into any of these fellows in saying what they thought of them, and maybe a few other things. But the main thing was the picketing ordinance. The picketing ordinance prohibited picketing, and we insisted on [5282] picketing the docks. And the first clash we had with the police, we were on the picket lines, was May 28. That was the day that Schomaker got beaten up in the picket line, as well as a lot of others—Willie Christensen, incidentally, too, and a few others. Because we insisted on picketing. We said that the law was unconstitutional. We went ahead, and the police just charged in and started to shoot, club, fire tear gas, and the attack was wholly unexpected. As a matter of fact, it surprised most of us. We were under the impression—we had been around that waterfront for quite a while. We knew quite a few of the policemen—at least many of us that had been around—and we were under the impression that they would never do anything like that to us. However, we got a pleasant, or unpleasant surprise. We found out later that they removed many of the old policemen off the waterfront and put them on another beat away from the waterfront and brought in a bunch of younger and newer fellows that didn't know the men down there, and probably got a little fun out of it, a little exercise out of moving in on us. Anyway, that is what happened. Then later on, after the strike was on two or three weeks, the control and operation and the administration of the strike was turned over to the Industrial Association of San Francisco. The Industrial Association of San Francisco was a strikebreaking, union-busting organization, and the shipowners turned over the complete conduct and control of the strike, as well as negotiations for a strike settlement, [5283] to that organization. And from there on in, things really moved, because the whole program of the Industrial Association, avowedly announced publicly, their written program was to break strikes by force and violence. And they had a very simple way of doing it. They would prepare a proposition that might look halfway decent on paper to offer to the strikers as a price of settlement. But a day or before that was going to be offered to the strikers, they would create an incident where the police would move in, as well as a bunch of professional deputy sheriffs, and work over a few of the strikers, that is, by shooting at them, tear gas, vomit gas at that time they used to use, clubbing around, and that was supposed to soften up the strikers so they would be more amenable to considering or accepting a proposition that would be offered a couple of days later. So we knew that every time they moved in on us on the waterfront, and a few more of our fellows were beaten up or shot, we knew that a day or two later we would get another proposition; so we were always prepared. That is what they did, that is what we went by, and sure enough, after a real good rousting around on the waterfront and a real good dumping we would get a proposition to settle the strike in some form or other. But it didn't work out that way. The fellows just got madder and madder. And as a matter of fact, the job of myself and other leaders of the strike, that is, members of the strike committee—it wasn't to push the fellows on or to [5284] goad them on. We were busy at that time holding them back so they wouldn't go out on a very hopeless program of really getting themselves in trouble. We didn't have to push anybody along or goad them into any action. Our job was to try and really keep them together, because they were so mad that they were—they felt pretty bad around things, and it wouldn't have taken much to have them really go on a real drive against——

Q. What was the situation that they called "Bloody Thursday"?

A. That was July 5, 1934, starting early in the morning, and suddenly they rounded up all the police reserves and they suddenly attacked our picket lines. We had——

Q. How many men on your picket lines, approximately?

A. We had strengthened the picket lines that day. Periodically we used to call on all the other unions in the city, as well as anyone else that would volunteer to come down and help us picket. It was truly, really a demonstration—not necessarily a demonstration of strength, but in the form of a public demonstration. So, July 5, the day after July 4, we had called for a massing of everybody on the picket line in the form of a demonstration. So very early in the morning the police attacked the picket lines and ~~the~~ battle went on all day long. They shot down—that day they shot down around 400 of the people on the picket lines, not only strikers but non-strikers. And that was the day two men here in San Francisco was killed—one of our longshoremen and another person, a member of the [5285] Cooks' Union, was down there in response to our request for picketing. So in addition to the two men being killed, we had about 400 wounded that day by shots, clubbed, gassed, and so forth. That was—and then at the end of July 5, July 5 wound up, there was so much battling and fighting that Governor Merriam, at the request of the ship operators and the Industrial Association, called out the National Guard. And a day or two later, why, the National Guard was on the waterfront. They set up machine gun emplacements, armored trucks, they had tanks rolling up and down the waterfront—all supposedly to watch us. And we were cleared away for three blocks on the waterfront for a while, and later on we was allowed to return to our union headquarters, and the National Guard stayed there until it was removed, as a result of the general strike here in San Francisco.

The Court: We might take the recess, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen, we will take the morning recess. The same admonition to you, not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Recess.) [5286]

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. We were coming toward the end of that July 5 matter, Mr. Bridges. Would you finish up the recital of what took place on that day?

A. Well, it was a pretty tough day for us, pretty hard maybe to understand, unless one understands the Industrial Association had a set program which was generally in effect all over the country at that time—a set program for breaking strikes, that is, to whip up a lot of public hysteria. I remember around that time, July 5 and thereabouts, and even prior to that time, the form it was taking. There was a bloody revolution of the waterfront. Russia was running the strike. The Communists had taken control. For a while I was attacked as chairman of the strike committee. In the early days of the strike the general editorial comment or content of the newspapers was I was a British agent out to destroy the American merchant marine. Then when the Industrial Association took over the strike, the whole thing was played up as a strike that was directed from Moscow, a bunch of Communists were running around with bomb throwers. We had a bloody revolution. And of course that built up the circumstances and the atmosphere so that around, first of all, July 3 and July 5 the police suddenly descended upon the picket lines. When I say "descended" I mean just that. They massed by the hundreds, and all of a sudden at a word of command they just charged, shot at us—and when I say—that is with six-guns, rifles, sawed-off shotguns, gas [5287] guns—and then they moved into close quarters and went after the fellows and all of us with clubs. So it was a part of a plan, and the accusations about the strike being run from Moscow, Communist strike committee, Communist union and all that, that was purely for effect and atmosphere.

Q. Did you people have any support from any of the newsapers?

A. No—well, no, not any of the commercial newspapers. The commercial newspapers met together. They, under the leadership of John Francis Neylan or through his orders—he was in London at the time—I know about these things for other reasons—the newspapers had already formed a publishers' committee in order to handle the strike. But we had the support of two papers at the time. We had the support of the Catholic Leader. The Catholic Leader was a paper put out here in San Francisco. Originally it had been founded way back in the early part of the century, that is, around the 1901 strike. It was by Father York, a well known labor priest around here at that time, and that was one newspaper that gave us full support right from the start. And the other paper was the Western Worker, the Communist paper. We received and gratefully accepted support from both sources.

I distinctly recall the Catholic Leader, and it more or less ties into these charges about the strike being Communist-dominated and the police down there merely looking for trouble. As I say, I have never seen a working man yet who wants to [5288] charge into a mounted policeman or an armed policeman or any other kind of person with arms and clubs. We haven't got a chance. But I recall the pictures in the Cathoic Leader; and it was written up so as to show. The caption on the picture said more or less, "Picture of Red Revolution on Waterfront. Workers Attack Police." And then it showed the policeman on a horse—these are regular, official photographs that had been taken by a member of the staff of the paper—showed a couple of mounted policemen, their horses rearing up, and one policeman clubbing down, another policeman is shooting down, and it shows a couple of longshoremen falling to the ground, and the caption of the picture is, "Workers Attack Police." Of course, it was noticeable that no police got hurt. Maybe a punch in the nose or something; that was about the extent of any injuries to any policeman down there.

As a matter of fact, in the City of San Francisco we had quite a few policemen on the force who were former teamsters, longshoremen, and so forth, and quite a few policemen at that time turned in their badges and refused to take orders from the Industrial Association. And I recall the firemen. The firemen were called upon—or they were going to call upon the firemen of the city, the San Francisco Fire Department, to turn out and to turn the hoses on us in order to break up so-called riots, and so forth. The firemen refused. They were not going to do it if called upon, and they officially [5289] told us that. So, as I say, all this led up to the battle of July 5.

Q. As I understand it, you went to your union hall that same day. What happened there?

A. Well, we had to—there were so many people hurt, as I recall, we had a list of them at one time, —we had approximately 400 people that were seriously hurt—I don't mean the ones that were just gassed or clubbed, but I mean clubbed or shot or gassed sufficiently that they had to be laid out. By "laid out" I mean on some form of stretcher or on the floor. We had our whole union hall floor of them, probably a couple of hundred of them at 113 Steuart Street. They were all laid out, stretched over the floor. We had a couple of doctors who volunteered their help. They are still our union doctors. There was Dr. Lagan and a couple of others. They came down and volunteered their help. Fellows were lying all over the floor—not all our fellows, but members of other unions, too. And while we were in the process of taking care of these fellows who were laying on the floor, then the police shot tear gas and vomit gas into the windows of the hall and gassed us out of there, too. So we had to get out and seek some other place. In the course of all this a lot of our people as well as other people were taken up to 121 Haight Street. That was used as a kind of hospital, because again that was one of the places that was available to us. In other words, they came around with [5290] cars and gave us a helping hand. We didn't look around at that time to wonder who they were. We didn't care.

Q. That was the headquarters of the Communist Party?

A. The Communist Party—no, I don't think it was at that time. Maybe I am mistaken. It is my impression that the headquarters of the International Labor Union—I think the headquarters of the Communist Party was somewhere else, but I might be wrong on that.

Q. Mr. Bridges, what eventually led to the solution of the strike?

A. The National Guard was called out by the Government. Governor Merriam was Governor at that time. Governor Rolph had died, and the lieutenant governor, Governor Merriam, took over. Later it was found out that the shipowners had contributed $30,000 to his political campaign. And so he called out the Guard, and as a result of the Guard being called out on the waterfront we started a drive—the newspapers started the drive for the general strike of the city.

Q. How was that? Will you tell us what was the mechanism of getting that into operation?

A. All we did was, we went around with speakers to the various unions. We printed a hundred thousand leaflets, and by simply those means we went around and appealed to all labor as well as other organizations to protest, not only against the shooting down of people simply because we were on strike for a hiring [5291] hall—we was only on strike for a hiring hall and an increase in wages—but there was a big to-do that we were on strike and in a bloody revolution dictated from Moscow and all that, and we just went around and told the unions the truth and told the people the truth and asked them to take a strike vote. And we would bring the thing to a general strike in protest against the violence being exerted against us on the waterfront.

And I remember at the time the strike committee and this talk about—the Communists had nothing to do about the violence down there and neither did the strikers. They neither get the credit nor the blame if either attacked. It was our own battle down there. The strike committee handled every bit of strategy, and I remember when the National Guard moved in the strike committee took an official position, and I went on the radio as the chairman of the strike committee to urge our people and all people not to get in any battles with the Guards, to talk to the National Guard, that they were generally relatives or sons or friends of working people and many of them were; to point out we had nothing against them, any more than we had, for example, against most of the members of the police department. That was the official position of the strike committee at that time. And I was instructed to not only issue a public statement, which I did, and it appeared in the press, but to make the announcement over the radio, which I did. [5292]

And we set about to organize and call for the general strike; No. 1, as a protest against the terror and the brutality and the violence exhibited by the city authorities through the police department, and the special committee set up by the mayor towards our fellows on the waterfront, all of us; two, in order to insist that the National Guard be removed from the waterfront before any negotiations to settle the strike would take place, and the San Francisco Labor Council set up a special committee of seven, it was called the Strike Strategy Committee; and later on, of course, the Labor Council, when the general strike broke out, they set up a general strike committee. The general strike was organized in a very simple way. The people were enraged around here, the people in the labor movement, and they just responded when we asked them. They all took strike votes and eventually walked out. But prior to that time, July 9 and 10—I think it was July 9—we had a funeral here.

We had two men killed, as I say. We held their bodies for a couple of days in the union hall. And then we had a mass funeral for them where we paraded up Market Street and we buried them. We buried one at the Presidio because he was a veteran, and we buried another one at another cemetery. I remember the time, because Sam Darcy—the second man that was killed there was a Communist, and Sam Darcy—I went out to the graveyard and attended the burial, first of all the burial of my own [5293] union member, Sperry, at the Presidio, and then later on I went out to the other burial at a private cemetery. And I remember ~~at~~ that time Sam Darcy speaking at the graveside about this man who was a Communist; Bordeaux, his name was.

So after we had the funeral, then we started amongst the unions to urge them to take a general strike vote.

Q. How many men did you have in the parade?

A. It was quite a large parade. I don't know how many, but there was quite a few there; there was quite a few, between fifteen and twenty thousand.

Q. Marched up Market Street? A. Right.

Q. Orderly?

A. Very orderly. I think very orderly, very quietly. It was a funeral parade. We did our own policing, our own picket captains and squads policed the whole setup, all the way out to Dugan's funeral parlor, and there was no trouble, no disturbance.

Q. Did that help arouse some popular feeling?

A. It certainly did. That was part of our purpose. In addition to burying our people. And part of our purpose was, by having this funeral parade, to show the people just what was going on and to show it in a quiet, peaceful manner, that we weren't looking for trouble; we didn't want trouble. We were getting no fun out of our people getting clubbed and killed, [5294] and we did want to bring to the attention of the people of the city who was responsible for the violence and what was going on, because we were being accused by the newspapers that we were fomenting the violence. If we were going to believe what was said at that time, why, all we were doing, every time we saw a cop with a club or a gun in his hand, we took a delight in charging in on them and took a chance on getting ourselves killed. That was the gist of what was being said at that time. The fact of the matter was entirely different. The entire labor movement responded.

Q. What percentage of the unions in San Francisco would you say participated in the general strike?

A. All of them, all of them except those unions where it was agreed that they would stay on the job, such as the Milk Drivers' Union—that is, the Milk Drivers' Union delivered the milk, the bakers, and the bakery wagons, Bakery Wagon Drivers, hospital workers, people like that. [5295]

Q. Was that by agreement with the other unions and with yours?

A. Definitely. That was by action of the general strike committee that was set up later.

Q. And then that included, did it, American Federation of Labor unions and all unions?

A. Well, yes, all the unions at that time practically were American Federation of Labor unions, and there was a few independent unions, the Maritime Engineers' Union was indpendent, the P. G.

& E. Workers Union was independent, the Radio Operators were independent—those three were independent, I recall.

Q. What was the effect of the general strike? I mean, how extensive was it and how long did it last?

A. Lasted four days; it extended throughout the city and over in Oakland, and in my judgment, it was highly successful, because it achieved exactly what we expected it to achieve, namely, the general strike was called off after it was agreed that the National Guard would be removed from the waterfront, after it was agreed that the ship operators would arbitrate all issues, and after it was agreed that as a part of the arbitration, all strikebreakers would be removed from the ships and the docks. And that was eventually done, and the general strike ended July 20th, and the whole maritime strike ended July 31st, and at 8:00 o'clock on the morning of July 31st, everybody went back to work on the waterfront, seamen and longshoremen. We all went back to work at 8:00 o'clock in the morning. [5296]

Q. Now, let me ask you this: How was that arbitration set up? Who were the arbitrators? Who appointed them? What did they do?

A. The arbitration board was appointed pursuant to a special joint resolution passed by the United States Congress. That resolution was passed some time in June. President Roosevelt called upon the Congress to give him powers through a special joint resolution to set up this board of mediation in an attempt to settle the strike, and also to be a board of arbitration if both sides voluntarily agreed to submit the issues in dispute to arbitration by this board. So early in June—no, I think it was early in June—I mean, late in June or early in July, the board was established by the President, consisting of Mr. O. K. Cushing, a San Francisco attorney; the former Archbishop Hanna and Edward F. McGrady, Assistant Secretary of Labor at that time. So the board came out, and first of all, it functioned as a kind of fact-finding body. It held hearings right in this courtroom. I appeared before the board here, right in this very courtroom, July 11, 1934, when they went into the issues in the strike. They gave everybody a hearing, the various —I spoke for my union at the time, and I spoke as chairman of the Joint Marine Strike Committee. We set up a joint Marine Committee at that time that included in addition to longshoremen, we included seamen, and later on when the shipowners agreed that they would submit the issues to arbitration, and we finally [5297] agreed to that, we would submit the issues to arbitration. And both parties agreed they would be bound by the determination of this board or the decision of this board, that board became a board of arbitration, and it functioned as such. And eventually it rendered an award that in part is in existence to this day.

Q. What was the award?

A. The award, as far as the longshoreman was concerned, established a jointly controlled hiring hall, a jointly operated hiring hall, it set up machinery to handle grievances, it established the Joint Labor Relations Committee that we have heard discussed here; the duties of that Joint Labor Relations Committee was to register every man, every longshoreman that had been working on the waterfront at that time for one year, and that they would be the men that would work on the waterfront, that the work on the waterfront would be divided equally amongst all those men, and unless the needs of the port required more men to work on the waterfront, that list of men would be sufficient to do the work. And also that the men should be placed on the list irregardless of race, creed, color, nationality, so forth and so on.

Q. Was that accepted by the workers?

A. Right.

Q. Was it accepted by the employers?

A. Yes. [5298]

Q. Are most of the matters involved in that still in force on the waterfront?

A. The fundamental matters; that is, the hiring hall, the Labor Relations Committee, the registration, the joint grievance machinery, the arbitration of all disputes, and things like that. All those things are in full force and effect. And of course, over the years, we have worked them out so we have an entirely different situation on the waterfront now than then.

Q. Those matters, all were accepted by the employers? A. Yes, no question about it.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Have they been observed by the employers?

A. Yes.

Q. Has it been found that they were to the benefit of everybody or detrimental to one class?

A. No, I think that any shipowner down there now, none of them, in my opinion, would want to return to the old days. We have our troubles with them. We still represent two interests, of course, but I don't believe there is a shipowner down there now that would go back to the old days of the racketeering, the kickback, the shapeup. They realize our hiring hall is a good, constructive thing. We work out our problems. Right now, as a matter of fact, we are engaged in many joint enterprises. We are engaged right now, the Waterfront Employers, shipowners, and the union, we are jointly going to court to oppose an attempt by the National Labor Relations Board to do away with the hiring [5299] hall. So we are joined together in that endeavor, which I think is as good a proof as any that things do change. We might have our differences with them down there and our various opinions but I haven't met any of them in recent years that would want to get back to the old way of doing things, the old methods of speedup and what not. They want more work—they are always complaining about us not doing enough, and we argue over that. They think we are overpaid, and we argue over that.

Q. But the basic relations between them is one in which they ascribe and give more dignity to the working men and the working class in their dealing with them, is that right?

A. That's right; we have got now—we have had now for about 18 months or since the end of last maritime strike, in '48, we have had what we call the "New Look." And so far we have managed to work out every problem by negotiations. We have got a standing arbitrator, both sides pay him; he is a part of the contract, and he has been operating now since January 1st, 1949. We haven't had to use his services once.

Q. What do you mean by the "New Look"? Is that part of the New Look?

A. The New Look, I mean, is what we call the changed relationship on the waterfront, where we keep out of trying to tear each other's head off, and sit down and work things out. And it has been very successful the last, as I say, since the last maritime strike here, which was in December '48. And also, the [5300] new leadership of the waterfront employers. Some of them came up here,—Vic Pearson. Vic Pearson is a master mariner, he is a practical man in the industry. He grew up with the industry and he knows the industry. With all due respect to the attorneys in this case, one of our troubles down there, we used to have the so-called labor relations experts and attorneys, and they were always butting into things and generally gumming up the works.

Q. You don't have to concern yourself with all due respect to us, because we don't get much respect.

A. Well, I am just saying.

Q. Now, there has been some discussion here, Mr. Bridges, about vigilantism during that period of the waterfront strike. What was that?

A. There was forms of—well, there was various groups roaming the city. We didn't know who employed them. They weren't, certainly, working for us, but they made a practice of calling at the houses of the leaders at night or in the daytime; that is, the strike leaders, members of the committee, our picket captains. And these were a bunch of plug-uglies. They were strangers. They weren't San Francisco fellows. They were out-of-town. They used to drive around in—I remember the type of car they had at that time. They had these Marmons. And they made a practice of calling upon our leaders at nighttime, and if they could get them to open the door,—and it happened two [5301] or three times before we got wise—they just kidnapped them right then and there and beat the daylights out of them, break their arms, their fingers, and really give our fellows a bad time. That was one form of vigilantism at that time. Later on it got to where, under the cover of all this hysteria that was created, it started to raid the various halls of union organizations, the headquarters of the Communist Party was raided, the headquarters of the IWW, the MWIU, various radical organizations around the city at that time. These gangs moved in on them, dumped the people in there, smashed up the place, and broke it up, broke up the furniture and things like that. And then of course from '34 on, until 1936 and '37, in the various parts of the state, we had to contend with organized vigilantes that were organized and set up for the express purpose of fighting the extension of labor organizations.

Q. Were you—were any offers made to you to detach you from the support of the strike?

A. In '34?

Q. Yes.

A. At one time there was an offer, but——

Q. What was it?

A. There was an approach made to me through one of the fellows in the union for a payoff. It was rejected, which was——

Q. What was the amount?

A. Oh, they mentioned an amount of $50,000, but—— [5302]

Q. What was the consideration? What were you supposed to do to get that?

A. To put the issues to arbitration at that time. Only trouble with that was, I couldn't have done it if I wanted to, which I didn't want to do. And furthermore, no credit attached to me because 99½ per cent of the men would have did the same things as I did. So they would have turned it down, too. So no particular credit to me. And even besides, what they wanted me to do, I couldn't have done if I wanted to. So those things happened in the course of any strike; it wasn't peculiar to our strike by any means.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Now, do you remember any incident in which an attempt was made to plant some explosives in the hall of the union?

A. Two or three times.

Q. Where were those?

A. We had a member in the union at that time, a very militant guy—I can recall him because he was very active at the time of the Matson strike. Later on he was exposed as an agent of the employers, a provocateur. He came around with a bunch of hand grenades, and he said he wanted to use them for a little work on the shipowners. He said, "Now, I want to leave them in the union hall. Save them for me; put them in the safe until I come back and get them." Luckily our secretary at that time, who was no great supporter of mine, that was Ivan F. Cox—he had enough sense to sense the possibilities of this thing so he just [5303] quietly wrapped them up in a piece of paper and called in one of the strike committee men and says, "Take these things out in the Bay and dump them." And that is what happened with them. Later on there was—well, there was quite a few amusing incidents at that time. A policeman walked into my office, that is a couple of members of the Homicide Squad here. I think it was Mike Desmond and Johnny Engler. They walked into the strike headquarters at one time and they said, "Now, look, Harry, give us that Maxim silencer." "Maxim silencer?" "What do you mean?" Well, they said,

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

"Look, here's the situation. There's two Maxim silencers in San Francisco, only two—we know. Now, we know where they are all the time. There's one in Chinatown and there's one somewhere else. The one in Chinatown is missing, and our tip is it's down here and you've got it." I said, "Look, I don't even know what a Maxim silencer is, and certainly it is not down here." So, and that was the truth. However, I did find out shortly afterwards that one of the fellows, one of our members, or some of our members, did have that Maxim silencer. So back into the hands of the people who owned it in a hurry. I don't know what they were going to do with it, but I remember that incident.

And I remember also that when the National Guard moved in and after the battles of July 3rd and July 5th a lot of our fellows armed themselves. A lot of our fellows. They was mad, enraged, and they were going to protect themselves. So I [5304] remember the strike committee took official action and we called in, we had a group of fellows who were called our "squad car men." They were the ones that cruised around the waterfront, around all over the waterfront here and there, in squad cars. They were kind of roving pickets. That is all they were. So we used them, and we had rounded up, rounded up everybody, called into the union hall in a file and searched, and we pulled any weapons that any of the fellows had, and we piled them all in the safe, so that not a single man of ours on strike was armed. And we didn't have too much success in the frisking, but what hardware the boys were packing around they got rid of, and we piled it in the safe until we got rid of it, because we were deathly afraid of frameups, provocative action. We was afraid our union hall would be raided and some weapons discovered, and grenades. Of course, those things are usual in a strike, and we took every precaution we could to prevent them. [5305]

Q. Now, sometime in the course of the strike, or when it was in preparation, did the Communist Party or members of the Communist Party offer assistance or help?

A. All kinds of organizations offered assistance. I have got copies of the strike minutes, and all through the minutes are offers of assistance down there from organizations. It included the Communist Party. It included other organizations. I remember the Workers' International Relief came down with a scheme for relief. It was considered by the strike committee at the time.

Q. What was the name?

A. Workers' International Relief. It was claimed to be a Communist organization; I don't know; and at that time we didn't care. Anybody came along with an offer of support, we didn't even think to ask, "Is this a Communist organization, Socialist organization or Republican or Democrat?"

Q. What is your first recollection of any positive action by members or officers of the Communist Party toward giving you some help in the strike?

A. I am not sure whether they came down before the strike started or shortly after, but I distinctly remember that a committee did come down and offer us the full support of the Daily Worker and of the Communist Party generally, and also offered to—offered the services, that is, the facilities—they had a printing press, they had a paper and they printed [5306] their paper, and they offered to print a daily bulletin for us. That offer was accepted. That was in the early days of the strike, according to the minutes. I have read them in the last few weeks at least personally, and they say—it says May 9. I thought it was a little earlier than that, but that is about the way I remember it.

Q. That would be May 9, 1934?

A. Yes. I couldn't fix the date by memory, but I think the minutes are probably correct.

Q. Would you tell us then what was the extent of the assistance which the Communist Party gave you strikers?

A. No. 1, the support they gave us, the Daily Worker would print the strike bulletins. We wrote the bulletins; all they did was print them.

Q. Did they own their own printing press?

A. That is the way I remember it. They had a printing press. We wrote that bulletin. That bulletin was the strike committee's bulletin. There was nothing to even identify the Daily Worker or Communist Party with it, as I recall. They offered us the services of the printing press and we accepted. They offered us what support they could give us through their own organization; that is, where they had an organization in various areas, and so forth; in terms of money, donations of canned food and things like that.

Q. Was that a substantial donation, or were they rather small [5307] relatively?

A. Relatively speaking, it was small. Most of our help came from the labor movement. It was small, relatively small, but every little bit helped. The Communist Party wasn't the only organization. The only point about that, the role was played up, it was magnified. I am not going at this late stage to try to take away any of the credit they are entitled to, because they did contribute something towards helping the strike. We were grateful for it at that time; the men were grateful for it, and I just think it would be crawfishing and ingratitude to try to kiss it off now and say we never had anything to do with them, because they did help in the way I have said, not only with the helping to print the bulletin and with what financial donations as well as food donations they could get, as well as they—when we called upon all organizations, particularly labor organizations, to help us man the picket lines, the Communist Party responded to that call, too, and so did other parties, so did—not the Republican or Democratic Parties; they were darned conspicuous by their absence, but I mean the smaller minority political parties. I recall at that time there was the Proletariat Party around here, there was the Workers Party, the Socialist Workers Party; there were several. Most of those radical, left-wing parties, and they more or less vied with each other to try to prove to the longhoremen and the other strikers how much they were helping. And by and large, the role [5308] of all that was pretty much magnified, particularly the role of the Communist Party was played up purposely by the shipowners and Industrial Association and the city departments, for a reason, and the reason was hysteria so that it was easier to break the strike under that smoke screen of hysteria.

Q. Did you know Sam Darcy?

A. I knew Sam Darcy, yes.

Q. Had you know him before the strike, or did you meet him in the course of the strike?

A. I recall Sam Darcy, I think, speaking on the waterfront in the depression. I think Darcy—I knew him positively during the strike, but it is my recollection that I recall him from earlier, namely, that he used to speak down there on the waterfront around 1932 during the depression. We used to have a lot of people down there on soapboxes.

Q. Let me ask you this: Did Sam Darcy or any other members of the Communist Party, so far as was discovered by you, have any special knowledge or experience that was necessary to you people in the conduct of the strike?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Not that I thought. It was always my position—everybody on the waterfront knows that—that I fought, fought from the very start; I said, "We are the experts on this waterfront"; we took the position we had forgotten more about handling strikes and waterfront problems than any outsider ever knew; and even before there was any question of the Communists, I already [5309] pointed out back in July when some city politicians wanted to come down and say, "Now, look, we are experts at this. We was here on the waterfront in 1919; we will show you how to run the strike." We said, "Yes, you people lost your strike; you know very well that you lost your darned strike. We don't need that kind of advice or help, and we don't want it." The men in that union are the experts about those things, as well as strike tactics. It is ridiculous. I don't want to boast, but I think I have forgotten more about strike tactics than any of those people ever knew. And everybody in that union sees that way. It was the rank and file person in our union that knows that, and they didn't need any help, and they don't want it, and they couldn't get any help from the outside in the matter of tactics. In that particular line they are the experts. They felt they know it as well as anybody does. We have been in the longshore and shipping industry. We have lived in the industry. After all, I have been in this industry since 1916. Why, it is utterly ridiculous that people can come along from the outside and start telling me about it. I am a sailor, I am a seaman, I am a rigger, and the shipowners have said a lot about me, but they never said I wasn't a good workman. I know the game from A to Z. So do our members know it, and they are their own experts, and we have always endeavored to run our business through rank and file control, to run our strikes. The first people that will agree that we [5310] of the union are the experts are the shipowners. They are the ones that had to put up the money in order to pay us off when we won our strikes; they are the ones that know it.

Mr. Hallinan: Shall we adjourn?

The Court: We will take the noon adjournment until 2:15. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions or to form an opinion thereon until the case is submitted to you.

(Thereupon a recess was taken until 2:15 p.m. this date.) [5311]

Mr. MacInnis: Now, so that the Court and jury may perceive the subject matter of this testimony, I will tell you this, Mr. Ortega: In November of this year a man named John Schomaker gave testimony in this case, and referring to page 761 of the transcript, this is what he said: Question by the prosecutor——

Mr. Donohue: Just a minute, if your Honor please. This isn't a question; this is a recitation of evidence.

Mr. MacInnis: I am merely pointing out the subject matter, your Honor.

The Court: All right.

Mr. MacInnis (reading):

"Q. Now, after your discharge from active duty in the [5314] Marine Corps in 1925 where did you go to live?

"A. I went to Santa Barbara.

"Q. And what was your occupation while you were in Santa Barbara? A. Hod Carrier.

Now, Mr. Ortega, some time in the month of December of this year did you receive a request to consult your records to see whether or not a man named John Schomaker was in fact a member of the Hod Carriers Union at Santa Barbara in those years?

(Testimony of Jose Manuel Ortega.)

A. I did.

Q. And pursuant to that request did you go through such records as were available?

A. I did.

Q. Did you find whether or not there was such a man named John Schomaker who was a member of the union? A. I did not.

Q. Now, did you keep those records yourself?

A. I did.

Q. And have you a list, referring to those records, in your [5315] handwriting which you consulted to determine whether or not there was any man named John Schomaker who was ever a member of your local? A. I did.

Q. Now, did you yourself, as secretary of the union, attend regular meetings throughout all of the years from 1922 forward. A. I did.

Q. How often were those meetings held?

A. At that time weekly.

Q. During that period of years what was the approximate number of members of the Santa Barbara local of the Hod Carriers International?

A. Between 20 and 30.

Q. Did you know each of those men personally?

A. I couldn't say definitely, but coming in contact with them I would know them.

(Testimony of Jose Manuel Ortega.)

Q. Now, does the name John Schomaker appear on any of the records as a member of the Hod Carriers Union at that time? A. No, sir.

Q. If a description were given you of a man about 6 feet 4 inches in height, well proportioned in weight according to that size, would that refresh your memory as to any man named John Schomaker who was a member of your union?

A. I think it would. [5316]

Q. Do you remember any such person?

A. I do not.

Q. Now, additional to the endeavor of consulting your own records concerning this man, did you address a communication to the national office?

A. I did.

Q. Of the Hod Carriers Union? A. I did.

Q. And did you ask the International or national office to determine for you if a man named John Schomaker had ever been a member of the Hod Carriers Union? A. I did.

Q. And did you find out from that source as to the time when John Schomaker first joined the Hod Carriers Union? A. I got no information.

Mr. MacInnis: I will show the prosecutor a letter addressed to this witness, J. M. Ortega, Secretary Hod Carriers Local Union No. 195, Santa Barbara, bearing the postmark of February 1, and the letter itself (handing document to Mr. Donohue). I might say we are going to ask that the letter be marked so that these gentlemen can make copies of it, if they wish.

Mr. Donohue: Of course, the letter isn't admissible in evidence, if your Honor please. It is a letter from some third [5317] person to this present witness.

The Court: It may be marked for identification.

Mr. Donohue: Since the letter is apparently written by somebody here in San Francisco, there is no reason why the writer of the letter cannot be called.

The Court: It may be marked for identification, Mr. Clerk.

Mr. MacInnis: And the envelope as well, merely to show the date of mailing.

The Court: So ordered, as one exhibit for identification.

Mr. MacInnis: Yes.

The Clerk: May it be marked Defendants' E-3 for identification.

Mr. MacInnis: Merely to demonstrate the extent of the inquiry made, not for the contents.

(The letter was marked Defendants' Exhibit E-3 for identification.) [5318]

Q. (By Mr. MacInnis): Is that the letter that you received in response to your inquiry?

A. It is.

Q. Now, do you base your recollection upon the contents of that letter as well as upon your personal memory and the records that you kept in Santa Barbara? A. I do.

Q. Additional to that letter, did you, in the noon hour of today, hand me a volume of the records of the International Hodcarriers' Local at Santa Barbara? A. I did.

Q. And does the volume which I have in my hand—I won't trouble Mr. Mitchell to bring it to you—represent that particular record?

A. It is.

Q. Is this volume kept in your handwriting?

A. It is.

Q. And you have been the secretary of that local of the Hodcarriers' Union at Santa Barbara from—since 1921 or '22? A. No, sir.

Q. Since when? A. 1919.

Q. Since 1919, continuously up to the present time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the years 1925 and '26, the years mentioned by this man [5319] John Schomaker, was there any other local of the Hodcarriers International in Santa Barbara?

A. No, sir, not of Hodcarriers, no.

Q. I see.

Mr. MacInnis: I am not going to ask that your records be kept here, but I will state that if the prosecutor wishes to look at them in examining you, of course he is free to do so.

Q. Let me ask you this question, Mr. Ortega: Who contacted you first with reference to coming here?

(Testimony of Jose Manuel Ortega.)

A. A man by the name of Clyde Dorsey.

Q. Did you ever know him before?

A. Never saw him before.

Q. And did he introduce himself to you as a member of the ILWU at Santa Barbara?

A. He introduced himself at that time, he did.

Q. And before today had you ever met Harry Bridges in your life? A. No, sir.

Mr. MacInnis: That is all.

Mr. Donohue: If Your Honor pleases, we have no cross-examination at this time, but I would reserve the right to recall the witness later.

Mr. MacInnis: We will be glad to let you go over these records now. I don't know what there is that you would want—you mean you want to have Mr. Kaiser or someone look into his [5320] background? This man has come up from Santa Barbara and unless some purpose will be stated—I don't want to hamper the examination, but I don't know what this gentleman's situation is either. I can't say whether he has any necessities of getting back or not.

The Court: I have granted each side in this controversy considerable latitude on these things.

Mr. MacInnis: That is true. All right, we wouldn't resist it at all. May I suggest this: that if Mr. Donohue doesn't want to proceed immediately, that Mr. Ortega may go home and be brought back subject to Your Honor's order if he is required?

(Testimony of Jose Manuel Ortega.)

The Court: Mr. Donohue, precisely what have you in mind concerning this witness?

Mr. Donohue: I want to check the record, if Your Honor pleases. I haven't seen the records.

Mr. MacInnis: Here they are.

Mr. Donohue: We want an opportunity to check them.

The Court: All right.

You might remain. Could you remain over tonight in San Francisco?

The Witness: Yes, I can.

The Court: Would you rather have the witness return? Would it be more convenient?

Mr. Donohue: Whatever is more convenient for the witness, [5321] if Your Honor pleases.

The Court: Would it be more convenient for you to return to the court at some later date?

The Witness: Well, it is quite a distance. I am not so young, and I thought maybe I could lay over tonight, until tomorrow.

The Court: All right, sir; if that is convenient to you. Thank you.

The Witness: Thank you.

(Witness excused.) [5322]

resumed the stand on behalf of the defendants; previously sworn.

Direct Examination (Continued)

By Mr. Hallinan:

Q. Mr. Bridges, commencing with the strike in 1934, did you witness any activity of the United States Immigration Department with regard to that strike? A. During the strike, not before.

Q. I mean during the strike. And what were they doing? What was being done by officials or officers of that department?

A. Agents of the Immigration Department were visiting the picket lines, telling the fellows to get back to work, get off the picket lines; that is, if they were aliens, particularly people of Filipino extraction. Telling them, other foreign born people, telling them that they had better get wise to themselves, get off the picket lines, get back to work, get out of the union, or it would be too bad for them—they would get deported.

Q. And with regard to yourself, at what period did you first become aware of any efforts to get you deported as an alien?

A. There was a demand—the Industrial Association—well, let me see. Either the Shipowners Association or the Industrial Association began to call for the deportation of all aliens, I think. I don't think they mentioned me by name, but it was very obvious they meant me. Around in June, 1934. I recall that I discussed the matter with Ed O'Grady, Edward F. O'Grady at that time was Assistant Secretary of Labor. The Immigration and Naturalization [5323] Bureau was under the Department of Labor at that time, and of course he, in his official capacity, was out here trying to mediate or settle the dispute. But I think around June, 1934, the ship operators and the Industrial Association began to publicly call for my deportation.

Q. And upon what ground?

A. Undesirable alien—Communist-dominated, all kinds of things.

Q. So that as early, then, as June of 1934 you were already being accused of being either a Communist or associated with Communists, and your deportation was being demanded upon that ground, is that true?

A. Oh, not only me—every member of the strike committee, every single member of the strike committee.

Q. Who was an alien?

A. Oh, alien—otherwise didn't make any difference.

Q. No, I say as regards to deportation.

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Now, you remember a telegram that was sent by Roger Lapham to the Secretary of Labor some time in the summer of 1934?

Mr. Donohue: I object to any reference to such telegram. Obviously it is hearsay, if your Honor please.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, we can produce the telegram, or you people have it. It goes to the witness' acquaintance with the efforts being made, so as to militate against the probability [5324] that he was then continuing, if he ever had been, any association or affiliation with Communists, and so as to disprove the suggestion that he was joining a party of that kind or having meetings with them and entrusting his safety to such strangers or comparative strangers, as either Schomaker, Schrimpf or any other people who have been produced here.

Mr. Donohue: The witness certainly, if your Honor pleases, is entitled to express his own opinions, what he has said or what he has done. He certainly is not entitled to express an opinion stated by somebody else in a telegram to a third person.

Mr. Hallinan: We are not interested in that. What we are interested in is his knowledge of the activities looking toward an accusation of that kind against him.

The Court: He did state the fact, Mr. Hallinan, he stated the fact that to his knowledge Mr. Lapham did send a telegram. That fact is established.

(To the Witness): You so stated, Mr. Bridges?

The Witness: Well, that was later.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): When?

A. That took place around July, I think. That was later. I think that took place after the board was out here. I had reference to what took place before the special mediation board was set up.

Q. Well, now, tell me— [5325]

A. That was—it seems to me that Lapham's telegram came about after there had been a law and order committee established by the city and so forth, and it was through that channel that he addressed a long telegram to the secretary of Labor. A little later, but before—I was referring to before that time, when an investigation was started against me, particularly, and others, seeking my deportation because of being an officer of the strike committee.

Q. Well, tell us now. What was done, that you participated in, or what questions were addressed to you or inquiry made concerning you in that matter? A. At that time?

Q. Yes.

A. I was questioned briefly once, that was all. I was questioned by some agents about just—there wasn't any more to it. I was asked about when I came to this country and so forth, and I answered the questions, and that was all there was to it at that time. Because amongst other things, we were being accused, or I was being accused of having just came down to the waterfront. When I told the agents, I recall, I told them, "Look, I have been around here since 1922, or 1922 or '3," that "All this baloney about me just being especially imported on the waterfront in the last few months to stir up a lot of trouble, why, that is a lot of hogwash." So apparently they were satisfied—at least at that time. Later on, of course, I found out [5326] differently. But at that time it was just a brief questioning, and they didn't bother me any more. And I was picked up by the police for questioning and I was let go as soon as I more or less established my identity.

Q. Was there any inquiry by the police at that time touching some activities that you were alleged to have engaged in in Australia before you came here?

A. They asked me, yes, I was asked about those things.

Q. Now, did you ever hear around that time any contention that you were in reality a well known Communist named Harry Harvey?

A. They asked me about that. That was the point, that I was supposed to have been a well known Communist organizer that was especially placed on the waterfront in order to organize this strike and agitate and so forth and so on. [5327]

Q. And these were in thumbprints taken that were compared with the record of Harold Harvey or Harry Harvey that disproved that?

A. No, but I had my seaman's passport, and sometime prior to that had sent a circular over to the postmaster general here. They were looking for me. I hadn't written home for many years and they didn't know. They was trying to find out what happened to me. So they sent a printed circular over with my picture on it. So I told them I had my seaman's passport and that had my fingerprints on, and I think by examination of those things they found out they were on the wrong trail.

Q. That there was such a man as Harvey?

A. I don't know.

Q. Were you subjected to any investigation regarding having gone into Canada unlawfully?

A. I was asked.

Q. What was that?

A. I think that was later. If I—I think that was later; that was later. We used to have a man in the local union—I think he is still there—we used to have a little fun with it. He somewhat resembled me, and we used to have a little fun. A lot of people would ask him, "Aren't you Harry Bridges?" and he would generally say, "Yes." His background was somewhat of a vaudeville act. He used to get a little fun out of it. It didn't bother me any. He used to say, "Sure," give him a long [5328] song and dance and make a bit of a joke. That came up later, but with no special significance in so far as these matters are concerned.

Q. Did you ever see any report from the Immigration Department of a man who in Canada had used some sort of resemblance to you to pass as you and declare he was you?

A. That was later on. That was '35 or '36. At that time a Mr. Cahill was head of the Immigration Department here in San Francisco, and Cahill was a pretty decent sort, far different to the average run of the immigration agent, in my opinion. I think that I discussed that or he discussed that matter with me. The reason on that, when Ed McGrady—Ed McGrady, he was a liberal mediator. Incidentally, and in 1936 again, he was assigned by the President to the Department of Immigration because of a maritime strike, and when he came to town he used to borrow Mr. Cahill's secretary as his secretary. There was a woman there. Her name was Rose; I forget her other name. So in that way I remember that connection with Mr. Cahill, and on one occasion—two occasions I had a conversation with Mr. Cahill over my immigration status, and I connect the incident that you refer to up with that conversation with Mr. Cahill, who at that time, as far as I recall, headed up the Immigration Service here in San Francisco.

Q. Was that some inquiry you instituted as to the feasibility of getting your citizenship? [5329]

A. I was the one that was asking for an investigation and inquiry. I was the one that asked.

Q. What advice did Mr. Cahill give you then?

A. In 1935 Mr. Cahill advised me to take it easy until things cooled off. He said although he knew the truth, he knew the score, that if I pushed my citizenship application in 1934 I would lose. He said, "Things are lined up for you. You aren't going to get it, and you will be blasted in the press—after you are rejected for citizenship you will be blasted, and the basis for your rejection will be given as not being in support of the American institutions and the American form of government."

Now, he told me that, and he told me more or less in confidence at the time, and I don't believe I am revealing any great secret by telling it now. I was up there to see him officially, and that was the gist of the conversation.

Q. Was it true that continuously during 1934 and thereafter you did or did not know yourself to be under constant surveillance by the agents of the Immigration Department?

A. I knew it in 1935. In '35 the Anti-Trust was down there, the Internal Revenue was down there —there were charges against us for violation of the Anti-Trust.

Q. Tell us that in detail. Down where?

A. My union headquarters.

Q. What took place? [5330]

A. Oh, they came around, asked questions, asked questions of me, and I think some of the other officers. I was an officer of the union at that time. I had been elected as president of the union. But I remember the Internal Revenue, I remember the Anti-Trust, I remember the local Red squads of the police department, and I remember the local squad prior to that time. And, of course, the incident before that that I refer to, the immigration agents and later on the incident with Mr. Cahill. And I knew there was a form of investigation going on, but my attitude, and I told Cahill and the police department now—"Anything you want to know, we will let you find it out. We have nothing to hide. Investigate all you want." And as far as I know, they did.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Thereafter did you have occasion at any time to testify before the Immigration Department under oath as to any affiliation or membership in the Communist Party?

A. I had a special hearing in 1937 in New York City before the Solicitor General at that time, Generally Reilly, and I testified there.

Q. Were you asked these questions——

A. I was asked a lot of questions.

Q. Were you asked if you were a member of the Communist Party? A. Yes.

Q. What did you answer? A. No. [5331]

Q. Were you under oath? A. Yes.

Q. Were you asked any questions about affiliation with the members of the Communist Party?

A. Yes, affiliations, meetings, top fraction meetings, and a lot of things. The answers—well, I forget all the answers, but I answered anyway, and generally speaking all my answers were "No," so far as I recall. That hearing is a matter of record; there was a transcript there. General Reilly was Solicitor General of the Labor Department at that time. He conducted the hearing. I was represented by an attorney in New York, Sidney Cohen, and that was an official hearing called pursuant to a demand made for my deportation two or three years hence, going over a period of time, not only a demand by the shipowners but certain other organizations as well—I think the Portland police department, Mr. Boyd was in it up to his neck at that time—Boyd, Norene and Bonham. That was subsequent to the tapping of my room in the Portland hotel, and so forth.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Tell us the incident of the tapping of your room in the Portland hotel. When was that?

A. That was in June, 1937. The Multnomah Hotel. I was up there attending a convention of the ILA—no, not the ILA, the Maritime Federation of the Pacific—and I moved into my room on Sunday, and shortly thereafter I got a tip. I really forget [5332] now who gave me the tip, but it proved to be correct, that there was a dictaphone in my room. I think I got the tip a day or two later, around Tuesday. So then we set out to find the microphone or the dictaphone, and the way we did it, we called a bunch of fellows up in the room and we were carrying on a conversation so that the people in the other room could record it, and while this conversation was going on, in order to cover up or distract them, we searched for the microphone, and the lad we used, because he was supposed to be an expert, was this character Krolek who showed up here as a witness. But we staged a lot of funny things. That was the time the Russian flyers flew over the North Pole and flew down the coast and landed, I think, in Santa Barbara. And while we were all sitting around in a rigged meeting for the benefit of the people who were tapping my room, we were carrying on a conversation on that issue—in other words, we used the situation—and in order to protect myself, let me say this: that before we went into this meeting we had a couple of representatives of the press in Portland, Oregon, at that time who we let into the secret so we couldn't be accused of being serious about this matter. So some of the press were in on the secret, and it worked this way: we told some of the members of the press, "Now, look, here is what we are going to do. There is a tap in this room. Here is what we are going to do: When we get in there discussing these matters—you people are in on the secret [5333] in case we need to prove it." And we all sat around there, a bunch of us union fellows. We were talking about the Russians coming over from Moscow and dropping a bag of rubles there to stir up the revolution here. That is what we talked about. That is what we thought the people next door were after, the agents of the Immigration Service and the police department. We rigged up that kind of thing for a few days and a few other stunts until we found the dictaphone. At the same time we had a couple of fellows standing guard on the room next door because we didn't know. We were trying to find out who was on the other end of that dictaphone. We knew they were in the room next door, but we didn't know who it was, so we were trying to find out not only what they were doing but who was doing it. [5334]

Q. And then at that time during that convention did you have some discussion with Bonham of the Immigration Service on the question of the dictaphone?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Yes, when I was—one of the Immigration agents in Portland was a man named Roy Norene. Norene was playing around with the people that were tapping the room. Norene was with the Immigration agents that picked Schrimpf up to question him. I know that because we were standing across the street—we were trailing them—they thought they were trailing us, we were trailing them. We were standing across the street from the hotel when they went into the hotel in company with the Immigration agent, and it was all one dirty mess there together, a few characters in the Portland Police Department, Immigration agents and so forth. Now, we complained, we sent a telegram to the Department of Labor, and as a result of our complaint to the Secretary of Labor, Mr. Bonham, who was Director of Immigration from Seattle, came down —he was Boyd's boss—he came down and pretended to make an investigation to clear the Immigration Service. But they didn't fool anyone; the Immigration Service was in it up to their neck.

Q. Did Bonham come down and address the convention as was disclosed in the testimony of Schrimpf?

A. Bonham came. Bonham was introduced to me by somebody. Bonham had never met me. I told Bonham, "I know you. You and your gang were tapping the room there. Quit trying to kid [5335] people around here." So he got up and made a speech at the convention that was read off here.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. After that event took place, you had the discussion or you had the testimony before Joe Reilly in New York, is that correct?

A. That was after.

Q. That was in the year 1937? A. Right.

Q. Then in the year 1938 was some further activity taken by the Immigration Department trying to deport you?

A. A warrant for my arrest was issued in March, and I surrendered, I think, in Baltimore, early in March.

Q. So that then in about March, 1938, a warrant was issued by the Department of Labor for your deportation? A. Right.

Q. On what ground?

A. Membership in or affiliated with the Communist Party at that time. Then here is what happened. The law, I think, at that time provided for deportation if you was a member of or affiliated with a proscribed organization at the time of the arrest. And in the meantime, a case went before the United States Supreme Court, which was called the Strecker case, and as a result of that decision—I forget what that decision held, but I know this much: that proceedings against me were stopped pending the outcome of that case before the Supreme Court in the [5336] Strecker case. When they stopped the proceedings against me, the union—we started to insist upon a hearing, we started to insist upon a trial, and it was a result of my insistence backed by my union for a trial in order to go into this charge that the proceedings were held before Landis. We wanted to get them there on the record. We said, "Haul in your witnesses," because you must remember by 1938 I had the letter, the Coffee letter of Schrimpf; I had the letter that Lewis had sent here saying that Schrimpf was turning information over to the Department of Labor about me. So we were demanding a hearing, a fair trial, where the witnesses would have to get up and get sworn and tell their lies or tell their stories under oath and we could cross-examine them and point out and prove they were liars, and the hearing was held on our insistence. That trial was held on our demand.

Q. When was that?

A. In '39, only after a period of many, many months when the hearing proceedings were suspended awaiting the outcome of the Strecker case before the Supreme Court of the United States.

Q. In the meantime now, you heard the testimony of Schomaker and Mrs. Harris that in the interim between the issuance of that warrant and the trial, as they put it, some time in the fall of the year 1938, that you got up at some public meeting at Jack Shaw's house or private meeting or whatever it may be and told the people there that you were a member of the Communist Party. [5337]

A. No. I listened to that testimony. Of course Schomaker—I have got an idea what motivates Schomaker, but Mrs. Harris, I don't understand it. No, no such thing happened. The only way that I can figure is this: There have been times that myself and others over a period of time, we have developed a habit when we are being attacked on the basis of issues—there have been many public meetings I have been in, various types of forums, question and answer periods, where I have been asked questions about being a Communist, the Communist program, Communist this, that and the other, and on many, many occasions I and other officers of the union have said, "Look; here is what we stand for; here is what we are trying to do. Here is our program. Here is what we are trying to do. If these things are Communistic, then we are Communists." It is entirely possible such a thing like that happened, but I don't even remember anything like that at any meeting or conference or party at Shaw's place. I have been at Jack Shaw's place. The only time I remember being at Jack Shaw's—I know Jack Shaw well; incidentally, he was one of the four men fired on the Matson dock back in '33 over which we pulled the strike to have him reinstated and he was reinstated. That is how long I have known him. All I remember about Jack Shaw, he bought an old mansion over here on Pine Street, and I remember going down there to some kind of a party or housewarming. I never recall ever making a speech there, but if I ever did I certainly don't [5338] recall that I ever made a speech such as was testified here. The only way that I could explain that incident—I don't recall it ever happening, but the only way I could explain anything like that would be that a statement such as I have just indicated might have been made at some time; but no such statement the way it was described here was ever made by me, that I am positive.

Q. You heard B. B. Jones testify as to the first meeting which you held some time just preceding the strike in 1934 here on a ship where you were a member of the stevedore gang and he was a member of the crew that was just taking over. Do you remember that incident?

A. I remember the incident. I have got a good reason to remember it, because at that time on the Paxon—the Paxon was an American-Hawaiian ship; I worked American-Hawaiian docks; I was in the stevedore gang that worked No. 2 hatch, and I remember Jones sailing at that time, and I remember a few words of conversation. The time he spoke to me everybody was off the ship, the ship was finished, because we were in No. 2 hatch, and because I—the No. 2 hatch was the hatch where the heavy lifting gear was stationed, meaning that in addition to the ordinary ship's gear, there is a derrick there that is used to handle heavy pieces of equipment; in other words, an extra heavy load, a piece of machinery, something like that. There we had been using that heavy equipment, and I was engaged—after all, the [53[illegible]] ship was through, we were all ready to quit, I, together with two or three others, we were engaged in rigging down this equipment and lashing it away. The ship was finished, it was getting ready to go to sea. I remember the conversation with Jones, because we knew there was a good possibility that the strike might be called, I don't know for sure, see, but he knew what the score was as far as I recall it from that conversation, and he knew what he was going to do on that ship if and when the strike took place of the crew. He said, "As far as I am concerned, we are going to pull the boys and picket her in the event any strike takes place, whether we are on this Coast or on the East Coast."

Q. Now, did B. B. Jones or Schomaker ever in a restaurant at Stewart and Market Street in the month of December, 1933, or in any other place or at all or at any time or under any circumstances ever ask you to become a member of the Communist Party?

A. I don't know; they might have. They might have asked me. They might have asked me.

Q. Did you ever on any occasion at the place I mentioned, at the time I mentioned, or any other time or any place, ever sign any application to become a member of the Communist Party?

A. No, and the incident testified to by Schomaker never happened. And when I say they might have asked me, on more than one occasion then I was asked to join the Communist Party, and I never did. So when it comes to the question was I ever asked, [5340] that is one thing; when it comes to a question of signing an application, joining up, or the incident testified to here by Schomaker, that never happened at no time under any circumstances.

Q. Did you ever have any Communist Party book issued to you in your own name or in any other name?

A. No. That is about the only thing in this trial —in this trial there are two things that haven't been testified to. There hasn't been a witness who testified or giving any testimony about me being in a meeting and giving the Communist Party salute, and there hasn't been a witness brought here upon the stand that saw me pasting stamps in a book. Other than that, it is all old stuff.

Q. It sounds like where you came in?

A. Just about where I came in.

Q. Did you ever pay any dues to the Communist Party? A. No.

Mr. Hallinan: May we have the recess?

The Court: We will take the afternoon recess, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Recess.) [5341]

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, Mr. Bridges, with regard to any solicitations that might ever have been made of you to join the Communist Party, what attitude did you take or what response did you make?

A. I declined. I didn't get to the point where it was necessary to discuss the merits of the program, but I knew at that time that membership in the Communist Party would subject one, at least to the possibilities of deportation. I had been a member of the IWW, I had been in the union where later on, many, many years after I was out of it, of course, I—I was only in there a short while—members of the union were persecuted. Many, many of them were deported. So I was no fool—that is, I say "foolish" in the sense that it wasn't a question of agreement or disagreement with the program as much as it was that I knew that membership in the Communist Party would subject me, as well as any alien, to deportation. However, that wasn't the first reason or the main reason, necessarily. The men on the waterfront, myself included, they were seeking an answer to their problems, and the problems were, first of all, job security; the big thing on the waterfront was the fact that the casual nature of the work, you didn't know if you was going to work from one day to another. And the various other conditions, the bad working conditions, the speedup, the chiseling, the racketeering, the kickbacks and the indignities of the whole thing. So the truth of the matter is [5342] that the men on the waterfront, they wanted a solution to their problems, and so did I. And although the spokesmen or the organizers of the Communist Party at that time, as well as the organizers of other groups, such as the Marine Workers Industrial Union, their program might have been somewhat Utopian or idealistic, revolutionary, it didn't as far as I was concerned, and I know that was the general feeling of the bulk of the fellows on the waterfront—it offered no answer to our immediate problems. It was a nice, fine revolutionary program, and all that, but in so far as answering the question, "How can we work steady? How can we get a wage increase? How can we stop the racketeering, the kickbacks, the abuse, and so forth?" we just didn't think that it fitted. That is, that any answers they had fitted our problems. Now, that is about as simple as it is.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

And everybody knew my attitude. No one more so than the few people around there that say they were spokesmen of the Communist Party. I didn't know Schomaker was one of them, but Darcy I did know was a Communist, although I don't recall him ever soliciting me for membership. But, generally speaking, my attitude was well known on that issue. It wasn't an attitude where I particularly quarreled with them, "Well, I don't want to join for this, that or the other reason"; it was largely an attitude such as I have described, "I can't see any need of it; I don't see any answer to the problems." I [5343] had enough sense to know that in addition to the Communist Party not answering the immediate problems, I would also be, as an alien, subjected to the risk of deportation and other things. So there are the simple reasons that, even though I recall being solicited for membership on more than one occasion, it was kissed off just the way I am telling you. They had nothing to offer me, incidentally, in the way of—it has been testified to here, the way I got the testimony, that as a result of joining the Communist Party or as a member of the Communist Party, that that is the way I kept my job. That is sheer, utter nonsense. The way I keep my job, I get elected by the members of the union. And no outside force, like the Communist Party, can elect me or any other officer. Only the working rank and file elects me. And I keep my job by getting elected by those people. And we have the most democratic union in the United States, and they are the only folks that can remove me. And I might say, in parenthesis, that they can do it any time 15 per cent of my membership is dissatisfied with me or any other officer —by merely signing a petition, they can remove me. The membership can get together, 15 per cent of the membership in good standing. They can get a paper petition that says on the top of the petition, "We don't want any more of Harry Bridges; his nose is too long." They can get 15 per cent of the membership and I am finished; I am out of office just like that. That is the way—— [5344]

Q. Who proposed that into the constitution?

A. I fought to write that particular provision into the constitution myself.

Q. And then——

A. And it is still there right now.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. And if a man is removed, then what has to be done, he has to be reelected over again?

A. No, he is recalled; he is out of office. That recall—and then there is charges filed, there is a recall election, and so forth. But before we get around to that, he has got to go through a series of steps, and it is pretty hard to regain office if you are recalled by the 15 per cent petition recall method. It hasn't happened yet.

Q. Now, let me ask you this: With regard to people like Darcy, so far as you knew, did they understand also that an alien would be deported if he joined the Communist Party?

A. As far as I knew Darcy, Darcy for my money was a good man. I had nothing against Darcy. I didn't have many connections with him. All I recall of him, for whatever reasons he might have had or said as far as the union was concerned, he claimed that he was down there to try and help out. He was accepted at face value, and that was that. Many of us recall Darcy. As far as I remember, I recall him being down there in the early days, in 1932. You have got to remember, we was in the depths of the depression. $10 a week was a lot of money at that time. [5345] I recall we struck in 1934, and one of our demands was 30 hours of work a week at a dollar an hour, which meant $30 a week. And when we proposed these demands, most of the fellows on the waterfront said, "Look, that's going too far. There's nothing like that possible in this world, $30 a week every week. Uh-uh (negative).

Don't you think we are asking for too much?" That was the attitude of the fellows down there. So under those circumstances, Darcy was around, along with many others. We overlook a few things. Herbert Hoover was down on that waterfront making speeches, the city supervisors, you and others were down on that waterfront making speeches. I recall Herbert Hoover being down on the '32 election, and him and his people saying, "Listen, if we don't win, there will be no ships running out of the harbor; we will all be starving to death." Because, of course, it didn't make any difference to us; we were starving to death anyway. So I say, there is nothing remarkable about these various people coming down and soap-boxing on the waterfront. I distinctly remember the Communists, because they would mount a little stand like a ladder, they had an American flag there, and they would start to speak, and it lasted about five minutes, and then in would run the cops and beat them up. And the fellows didn't like it. They didn't like to see the treatment. I would guess not one-half of one per cent of the people agreed with them, but the kind of treatment they got, the slugging around and the pushing [5346] around they got, well, none of the fellows down there liked it. I didn't, and I guess no one would.

Q. Don't you realize that if you take a kind of position against the Communists and insult them and repudiate them, you would probably be better off in this court?

A. No, I don't think I would. I don't think I would. I might be better off in the court, but I am still representing a union, and my job, I am president of an organization. I have got a constitution. In a trade union you have got to operate on a basis that no matter what a person is, he is eligible to join the union if he is working for a living in that particular industry. When we go out to organize—Father Paul gave that answer better than I can give it. There is 15 people working for an employer, you go out to organize them. You can't go out—they are hired, they are working. You can't go out and say, "Now, we are going to organize everybody except Communists or alleged Communists." If you do that, you will never have a union. And in a union, at least the way we see it—I know a lot of unions don't agree with it, but our union is a pretty well organized outfit. Now, it can stand up and fight back, and it does. But the one way it maintains its unity is that everybody in its ranks is entitled to their own political belief. There is no discrimination because of political beliefs, no discrimination because of religious beliefs, national origin, color, or anything like that. All we ask them, and that [5347] is the only way you can have a union operate on a united basis—anybody that is in the union, they are asked a simple question: "Are they for better wages, are they for shorter hours?" and so forth. Because a union can give no person anything except a chance to unite and work and fight collectively. That is all a union can give anyone. Now, political matters, of course, are outside the union. They should, and the way we see it, they should be dealt with through a political party, whether it be the Democratic Party or the Republican Party or a labor party. Personally, I happen to favor a labor party, but that is beside the point.

The way the union feels, and the way I am instructed to operate as a union officer, I am bound by my constitution. I am bound by the orders of the people in the ranks. They are the ones that reelect me, they are the ones that pay me. And when I take office, I take an obligation. And the obligation is to carry out the constitution. When it is a question of a union man, my duty is to defend him, right or wrong, practically. That is what I am instructed to do. And I am not allowed—I am forbidden, even if I wanted to personally—which I don't—I am bound to defend him and to stand up for him as long as I am holding office, notwithstanding what his political beliefs are. And we make no change. The best example I can give you is this: We have a large number of Negroes in our union. You can tell a Negro by looking at him. But [5348] there is no way in our union to find out how many Negroes are in the union. You can't take the books of the union, and it doesn't say, "Joe Blow, white; John Jones, colored," and so forth. Absolutely, expressly forbidden. And just the same, you can't go down the rolls of the union, and you haven't got a mark after a man's name, "Communist, Socialist, Republican, Democrat, Catholic, Jew, Negro," or anything like that. Because those things lead to disunity in the union. It splits your ranks. And so we try to operate, even though I admit it brings a lot of criticism, a lot of charges and accusations—but this much is noticeable: Our union still functions in the interest of the membership. It makes gains. It preserves the job security of the people. It gives them as much as possible, anyway, wages, hours and working conditions, and that is what we are in business for—that and nothing else. And all the other accusations against me or any other officer or member of the union, it is a lot of hogwash, it is a smoke screen, a means of attacking the union because the union does stand and does fight for the rights of everybody in the union and the conditions of everybody in the union, notwithstanding their race, creed, color, political beliefs or anything else. That is the whole secret of that. There is nothing more to it than that.

Q. How many are there in the union now, approximately?

A. In our national union, I don't know; around 60,000 in the national union. [5349]

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now——

A. 60 or 70. It varies.

Q. You described here some time ago the weakness of the union back in 1933 and 1934; a few hundred militant men who gathered together, the difficulties they had in bringing up a union at all. Now, what has been the most recent achievement of the union?

A. We just recently here—the most recent achievements for the longshoremen have been—our union is divided into divisions. We have a warehouse division, we have a longshore division, we have a large group of workers in Hawaii. We just concluded a contract with the Waterfront Employers. That is the Pacific Maritime Association headed by Captain Pearson covering hospitalization and welfare plans. That is a prepaid medical plan on a coastwise basis for all our longshoremen, dock workers, car workers, clerks, and so forth, where they will be covered by a hospital plan that gives them hospitalization, medical treatment, life insurance, as well as accident insurance, meaning when they are laid up, in addition to the compensation they get, if they are injured on the job, they will get an additional sum, and if they are injured off the job and have to lay up, in addition to the medical attention, they will also get a certain amount of money. That has just been completed, that agreement.

Q. We went over to Permanente Hospital and had a session the other day with Willie Christensen. Was he receiving treatment [5350] under this plan?

A. Yes, the Permanente Health Plan is the plan that we are both agreed to use, and the Permanente Hospital facilities are the facilities that we have both agreed to use in Los Angeles Harbor, San Francisco Bay Area, Portland in Oregon and we have not been able to use it up in the State of Washington because no such facilities exist up there as yet.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Could you give us roughly, subject to correction and supplying by records that you undoubtedly have, what wage raises there have been in the longshore industry since the 1934 strike? What were they getting before the 1934 strike?

A. We were getting 75 cents an hour straight time and time and a half for the nighttime rate. We didn't really ever have overtime on the waterfront. We had a nighttime rate where you got a premium rate for night work as distinguished from overtime. We used time and a half. In 1934 it was 75 cents an hour and time and a half. If it was an expert, it was $1.10 an hour, 75 and 1.10. Well, when the unions started to organize in an effort to block union organization or the advance of the union organization, a voluntary increase of 10 cents an hour was given, making it 85 cents an hour and $1.25 an hour nighttime rate. That was when the strike took place.

Then the board of arbitration award granted us another 10 cents, making it $1.05 and $1.40, and now the rate is up to $1.82 an hour, and time and a half for the nighttime. That is, [5351] any work after 3:00 o'clock in the afternoon. We have a six-hour day.

Q. So then, since 1934 up to the present time—that is a period of 15 or 16 years—the wages have been increased for the longshoremen by your union from 75 cents to $1.82 an hour for the straight time, and you have a health, medical and hospital plan that is functioning to provide medical treatment and hospital treatment for people injured or ill on or off the job, is that correct?

A. We have many more things than that. We have our vacation, we have our premium scale rates, we have our six-hour day, we have the hiring hall, we have quite a few things.

Q. Tell us what they are. You know them. We don't, Mr. Bridges. What else have you got? The hiring hall has been pointed out as being one of the essential matters, and that is the thing you say the employers and employees are now fighting to maintain in the face of the new Taft-Hartley Act, is that correct?

A. That is true. The hiring hall is the central dispatching hall in the whole Bay Area here in San Francisco. When a steamship owner or a steamship contractor wants longshoremen, they send their orders in daily to the central hiring or central dispatching hall. A dispatcher or a series of dispatchers hired and paid jointly by both sides—that is, the employers and the union—dispatches the longshoremen, sends them out to work, [5352] whether it be the dock here in San Francisco, the docks in Oakland, in Richmond and all around the whole Bay Area. So that is the thing.

And then in addition to the hiring hall being used as a dispatching hall, there is a corps of clerks in there. They keep a record or track of the earnings of each longshoreman daily and the earnings are equalized over a period of time. So that at the end of the year the earnings of each longshoreman are equalized, so that each longshoreman throughout the year again, notwithstanding race, creed, color, nationality or anything else, every longshoreman earns approximately the same amount of money. It hardly varies. It doesn't vary more than maybe fifteen or twenty dollars in the course of a year. That is, if a man has been available for work. If he has been injured or sick, of course, it is an exception. But generally speaking. So that is the reason for the hiring hall, not only to distribute the work, not only to dispatch the men to work, to keep track of their earnings, but also in order to prevent discrimination.

The way the men are hired, there is a list of names on the board and a list of gangs, and when we look at that list of names, you can't tell who the man is. He might be any nationality, any religion, any color, or any political belief, and he might be the supporter of the officers of the organization such as myself, or he might be, in terms of the union, a deadly [5353] political enemy. It makes no difference. And our union is unique in that respect. I can't do anything about any person in the union who is a political enemy of mine or vice versa. He is entitled to his right and my job is to uphold his rights, and that is something both the shipowners and ourselves, in the course of the year, we pretty religiously carry it out now, and there is no argument and there is no dispute about it.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

The hiring hall is the big thing because it represents job security—job security. Every man who is a registered longshoreman and a member of the union, both the things going together, has a claim on his job on the waterfront. He is entitled to an equal share of the work. If there are 4,000 men working, one man is entitled to one four-thousandth of the work, and that is the way it works notwithstanding who he is or what anyone thinks of him. Then there is the six-hour day, six hours straight time and all work after six hours a day is paid at the time and a half rate. There is a 30-hour week, Saturdays and Sundays are holidays. That is premium pay days. So there is a 30-hour week that has been established. And, of course, there is the $1.82 an hour. But over and above the base rate which is $1.82 an hour, there are scale differentials. Gang bosses, for example, get an extra 15 cents. Winch drivers and hatchtenders who are skilled men, get an extra premium rate. And then in addition to that, there are penalty rates for certain cargoes that are extremely dangerous, that is, dangerous to your health. [5354] There are all types of cargoes—they really constitute a health hazard, such as sulphur and things like that. There are premiums for those things. So all those things have been established, and, of course, they are strictly enforced all along the line.

We have established a safety program, where now the safety of the man comes first. We have established a motto on the waterfront that if it is a question of safety versus tonnage, safety first. Safety versus production, in other words. Safety first. Safety versus convenience, and we mean here the convenience of the employer. It is safety first, the safety of the men.

I do not say, of course, the employers agree with us on all these things. They don't. They think in some of the things we go too far. But there is a pretty friendly relationship down there now. We are working together and continue it. I am pretty sure they will continue it. These things have been established by and large because we have battled over them. But now by and large, I think both sides agree that they are good things and will remain. So the union, or working through the union, the men have achieved these improvements, and I don't believe the waterfront will ever get back to the conditions that prevailed many, many years ago, no matter what happens.

Q. Let me ask you this, Mr. Bridges: What was the reason and what was the course of proceedings that carried the ILWU into [5355] Hawaii?

A. We established a longshore union down there in 1934 or early 1935, following the organization of the union and strike here in San Francisco on the Coast, on the mainland, as it were, and then we organized the longshoremen. But the setup in Hawaii, the economic setup in Hawaii, where the longshoremen in reality are employed by the big firms or the big corporations in Hawaii,—they are generally referred to as the Big Five—the longshoremen in reality are employed by them. At the same time the employers of the longshoremen are the employers of the sugar workers. They are the employers of the workers in the sugar—on the sugar plantations, in the sugar mills. They are employers of the cannery workers in the pineapple canneries. They are the employers of the workers that work in the pineapple fields. So we soon found out that we couldn't get to first base trying to get an agreement between the longshoremen and their employers down there unless we organized all the basic industries of the Hawaiian Territory. So after two or three attempts and some years, which were interrupted incidentally by the war, trying to struggle with just the longshoremen, we made up our mind that the only way we will get anywhere down here is to organize the whole work. So we set out to do that.

We started an organization of the basic industries of Hawaii, the sugar industry and the sugar workers, the pineapple industry and the pineapple cannery workers, as well as the longshoremen, [5356] and they are all in the ILWU now in the Territory of Hawaii, and we are the major organization in the Islands now.

Q. The conditions in Hawaii have been testified to here by Mr. Robertson? A. Right.

Q. Would your testimony be substantially the same as to those conditions before the ILWU went in there?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. He knows far more about it than I do. On the organizing end I always got by pretty easy. All the hard work generally was done by Robertson and his staff, and all I mostly got was the credit. I very seldom had much of the work, I am sorry to say at this time.

Q. At the time you three men were indicted there was a strike in Hawaii, wasn't there?

A. Right.

Q. Who were striking then?

A. Longshoremen.

Q. Anybody else?

A. No, no, just the longshore group down there was on strike for a wage increase. Schmidt was in charge of that strike.

Q. The conditions down in Hawaii, at least from reading the papers on it, sounded something like the conditions on the waterfront down here in 1934.

A. Worse.

Q. So far as the breaking of the strike was concerned? [5357]

A. Worse—worse, because the employers in Hawaii are very powerful, far more powerful, relatively speaking, than any employers on the mainland. Hawaii is a Territory. When we moved in to the organization of Hawaii, the first thing we had to do was establish the fact that the Constitution of the United States applied to Hawaii, and we had to go to the Supreme Court to establish that fact. Of course, the employers down there and the government down there, the Territorial Government down there, took the position that the Constitution of the United States and the Bill of Rights did not apply to Hawaii because it was a territory.

Q. And that would deprive one of the rights of the writ of habeas corpus, trial by jury, and anything of that kind?

A. If you struck, you were thrown in jail, and in this last strike down there that lasted almost six months, the Territory of Hawaii, that is, the Territorial Government, which has incidentally far more power than a State Legislature, passed a law saying it was illegal for our people to be on strike; and they ordered them back to work, and they got injunctions that said that if they remained on strike and on picket duty, they would be arrested. And then, of course, our friends of the Immigration Service came in. We have a lot of Chinese workers, Japanese workers, Korean workers, Philippine workers. Our pals were busy saying, "Get back to work. They have passed a law now that if you stay on strike, you are in violation of the law and [5358] we will deport you." And, of course, they intimidated quite a few of our people, and that is how I found myself on the picket line. I had to get on a picket line down there to show them the Constitution of the United States was still in existence and would still protect them.

Q. And were you arrested on some injunction proceedings down there, contempt proceedings?

A. No, they didn't arrest me. They served me,

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)
but they didn't arrest me. The case is still pending, and I am still liable to do a year for it.

Q. At the same time that the strike was on in Hawaii, was there a strike here in San Francisco?

A. A warehouse strike. [5359]

Q. How long did that strike last?

A. 110 days.

Q. What was the result of it?

A. We figure we won. It was a strike for a wage increase and the wage increase was granted.

Q. What about the strike in Hawaii? Who won that? A. Well, we think we won.

Q. Now, do you remember, Mr. Bridges?

A. We settled the strike eventually for 21 cents an hour wage increase. We would have settled the strike before the strike broke, we would have settled for 17 or 18 cents before the strike broke at all, but they wouldn't talk to us. They figured they could lick us. It wasn't just a strike for a wage increase. The Big Five group down there, they thought they could put us out of business, so it was really a showdown fight until some better heads moved in the fight, such as Mr. Buck. Mr. Buck and I, we went down there to Hawaii and finally got that strike settled. But the employer group down there, they have held power so long that it was less a matter of question of wages than a struggle by the workers in Hawaii to establish their position. It became a question of face. Face in Hawaii is a whole lot more important than maybe over here. On wages, we came out all right. We got 21 cents an hour wage increase. We would have taken 17 or 18 cents very early in the game.

Q. Anything else? [5360]

A. A renewal of our contract and a general understanding that we would have more respect for each other in the future; they would have more respect for our ability, they being first around, and, of course, we would have a little respect for their power, too.

Q. About how many people have you in the Islands? A. Around 25 or 30 thousand.

Q. So then the union that started off with a committee of 500 which didn't amount to 500 at all in 1933 has by this time been able to go down and rescue the workers in Hawaii from feudal conditions against the powerful Big Five, is that right?

A. I would say that is correct, without taking maybe too much credit for our movement. I would say every working man in our union in Hawaii would agree with that statement.

Q. Do you remember this, Mr. Bridges: At the time of the filing of this indictment the United States Attorney General made the statement in a public speech that this indictment would break the condition up in Hawaii?

A. No. The statement was that by this indictment we would hope to cure the situation in Hawaii and bring that strike to a conclusion.

Q. Now, with regard to Schomaker and his testimony about yourself signing a document or application for membership in the Communist Party, at the conclusion of which he and B. B. Jones walked for fifteen minutes up Market Street to turn it in, you [5361] say no such incident ever took place?

A. No, not there or any other time with Schomaker or anyone else.

Q. And you have never been a member of the Communist Party? A. That's right; no.

Q. Never joined it? A. No.

Q. Never filed an application to join it?

A. No.

Q. Never paid any dues nor had any book issued to you? A. No.

Q. Under your own name or any other name?

A. Right.

Q. Now, have you ever had any discussions with members of the Communist Party concerning matters that might be of mtuual interest to them and to your union?

A. On occasion. Any time that I thought it was necessary or any time that I thought it would do the union any good, I never hesitated to call upon any official of the Communist Party or functionary or what have you, at any time. That was known to my union members; it was known to the authorities, and in my previous hearings, why, at the first hearing when I was before Gerald Riley, Solicitor General, I made the same statement. He said, "That's all right; I am not finding fault with that. What we are concerned with is any affiliation or membership in [5362] the Party."

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

So they, the Immigration Service, knew all about that; the Government knew all about it. They investigated me from top to bottom, my family in Australia, my schooling. They brought up the question of my marriage status, or the status of my first marriage, and so forth. They went into all that, and they well know it.

Q. Now, you told us that a trial was held in the year 1939 before Dean Landis?

A. That's right. [5363]

Q. He was dean of Harvard Law School specially appointed on that matter, is that correct?

A. That's right.

Q. And testimony was introduced on the very matters that we are concerned with here?

A. For the first time in the history of the Immigration Service, a public trial was held. That was one of the things we forced, very much to their distaste, of course.

Q. Without going into the merits of that matter, without going into any of the matters that were testified there, that matter was decided in your favor, is that correct? A. Yes. Yes.

Q. Now, however, did that end the inquiry and surveillance under which you found yourself?

A. No. Immediately after the Landis I moved immediately at once to secure my final citizen's papers, and what happened then, a few weeks after the Landis trial and the decision which came at the beginning of the year 1940, I think in February,

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)
1940, Congressman Allen of Louisiana introduced a bill in Congress for my deportation notwithstanding any evidence or anything else, a bill of attainder.

Q. Notwithstanding any law?

A. Notwithstanding any law. And that bill was announced by the then Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Jackson, and the bill was pigeonholed eventually. But out of that came a [5364] second investigation, and where, as a compromise,—as a compromise for that bill, the Department of Justice started another investigation against me; and, furthermore, as a compromise of that bill the Immigration Act was amended to make it a deportable offense if at any time since entering the country an alien was found to be a member of or affiliated with a proscribed organization, including the Communist Party. So as a result of that amendment to the law in 1940—I think it was the Smith Act—the amendment was proposed by Congressman Hobbs, and in speaking in favor of the amendment he said that the purpose of this amendment was to secure the deportation of Harry Bridges, "which we haven't been able to do so far." That amendment carried. And then the next investigation and trial took place. That was a trial again in this courtroom, before Judge Sears, right in this courtroom.

Q. Let me ask you this: In the hearing before Judge Landis, or Dean Landis, were you under oath? A. Yes.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. And were you asked whether or not you were a member of the Communist Party? A. Yes.

Q. And what did you answer?

A. "No."

Q. Were you asked if you ever had been a member of the Communist Party? [5365]

A. Yes.

Q. And what did you answer? A. "No."

Q. All right.

A. I was asked about a lot of meetings, too—a lot of meetings, a lot of people, and the answers, generally speaking, were the same.

Q. On the hearing before Judge Sears were you under oath? A. Yes.

Q. And were you asked then if you were a member of the Communist Party? A. I was.

Q. And what did you answer? A. "No."

Q. And were you asked then if you had ever been a member of the Communist Party?

A. That was what the hearing was about. I was asked those things. There was witnesses——

Q. What did you answer to that?

A. "No." And in the hearing before Reilly, too.

Q. You were asked the same question?

A. Yes. That was the third hearing—that was the third hearing before Sears here. That was the third time I had had a hearing.

Q. And after or during the Sears hearing and at any time around [5366] that, did you find any further wiretapping or dictagraphing?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Afterwards. After the Sears hearing I went to New York, and the Department tapped my room in the Hotel Edison in New York. We caught them at it. They was exposed before the whole City of New York, because I played with them—not I, but a group of us, we played around with them for five weeks. We made a joke of them before the whole City of New York, and they have been burned up about it ever since.

Q. What did you discover at that time?

A. Exposed their love-nest, too, back there.

Q. What did you find them doing?

A. They were tapping my room in the Edison Hotel.

Q. What do you mean by "tapping"?

A. Oh, they had a ditaphone in a small telephone box on the wall. They planted the dictaphone in and they bored a hole through the wall where the telephone once went through, and had a recording machine next door.

Q. How did you discover it? What did you do to discover it?

A. I spotted a person in the hotel room—I mean, in the hotel lobby that was carrying on like a dime novel detective, with papers before his face. And I happened to recall that he was one of the agents I had seen in this courtroom here during the Sears trial, see? So I recalled—in the lobby of the Edison Hotel there is big pillars there, and the pillars are kind of square, and they are all surrounded by mirrors. So [5367] where the house phones are, you ~~could~~ stand at the house phone, and I could watch, and every time I tried to call up on the house phone one of these characters was right behind me. So I just kept my eyes and ears open. I soon found out in the space of a few hours that they were next door to the room that I had. So I made a few tests. I remember it was towards the end of the week, and this room I was in—I thought I was getting a very nice room. It was a nice, big room with a bath, twin beds, away over in one corner of the hotel. It was part of a suite of rooms. I think I was only paying $5 a day for it. I thought I was getting very well treated, because those New York hotels don't usually treat you so well. So I checked out of this room for the week-end and I went up country visiting some friends way up country—it was summertime—and when I came back, they assigned me to the same room at the same rate. I thought it was very strange, see. So putting all these things together, I decided to keep a watch out, and I soon discovered, in the course of a few days, that the people next door—some people next door were tapping my room. Other things made me suspicious, too. I knew the room was occupied, but I could never hear a sound of anybody moving around. I have moved around quite a bit and as a result of that I have learned some things. I have got a few little tests of my own, that if there is one man in a room, there is plenty of noise, he sounds like the [5368] room has got a dozen people in it. If there is two guys in a room, there is plenty of noise, too. So when there is a couple of people in a room and there is no noise, you can be pretty sure there is a reason for it. I am only going by my own personal observations in these matters. So I soon discovered that my room was tapped, and then I started searching it, and I found it in this little black telephone box. And from there on we had a little play. I went across the street in another room in another hotel which looked into the window of the room that I was in. I hired a room there, and I went out to my friends, and I lined up all the binoculars and field glasses I could. And I kept that room there for five weeks. And every night it was a regular thing to gather up a group of friends and go up to this room in the other hotel—the name of it was the Piccadilly Hotel—we would go up there and we would work out a little scheme. I would supply my friends with the field glasses and the binoculars, so that they could watch, and we got together, and we worked out a little circus act, and we would go over to my room and we would put on the act, and my friends would be watching the agents next door do the recording.

Q. What kind of an act?

A. Oh, they would put on the earphones——

Q. I mean, what would you do?

A. We would talk about the—we would talk about everything I could think of, all the cops-and-robbers stories, and everything else, and they believed the whole works. [5369]

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Tell us one or two of them.

A. Well, I would get on the telephone, for example, and I knew they were listening in. I would be very mysterious, I would say, "Say, Bill, I will meet you down in the corner drugstore in ten minutes, and I will turn over the loot," or something like that, see? And sure enough, I would show up. I says, "I will sit on the stool second from the end at the lunch counter and I will be drinking a chocolate milkshake with a red cherry in it," or something, just to identify myself—"So keep an eye open for me." Then I would wait a few minutes, then go down to the drugstore, and the place was cluttered with agents; you would look around all over and you would see them all around there.

Mr. Hallinan: May we have the recess now?

The Court: We will take the afternoon recess. Ladies and gentlemen, the same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any circumstances or to form an opinion until it is finally submitted to you.

(Thereupon, an adjournment was taken to tomorrow, Thursday, February 9, 1950, at 10:00 o'clock a.m.) [5370]

February 9, 1950—10:00 A.M.

The Clerk: The United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

Mr. MacInnis: May we interrupt with a short witness, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. MacInnis: Call Mr. Pearson, please.

OSCAR PEARSON

recalled; previously sworn.

The Clerk: The witness on the stand is Oscar Pearson, heretofore sworn.

Direct Examination

By Mr. MacInnis:

Q. Mr. Pearson, we have asked that you come back to the witness chair because of a request made by the prosecution and a statement made by the prosecution with respect to your testimony. I want to call this to your attention and then ask you some questions. On, I believe, Thursday of last week, the special prosecutor, whose name is Mr. Donohue, said this at page 4854:

> "I, therefore, offer to show to your Honor that these witnesses (referring to you) were procured to come here and testify as to the good character of these defendants under the pressure one might well expect to exist between the [5371] Pacific Maritime Association and the particular unions involved when the agreement had not at that time been executed, and I, therefore, if your Honor pleases, by this witness (referring to Mr. Schmidt at that time) who said he knows the signature of H. J. Bodine of the Coast Labor Relations Committee, a man who has, as he stated himself, at one time served as a member of that committee, who knows the addressee of the letter, Mr. O. W. Pearson (yourself), president of the Pacific Maritime Association, that by letter dated January 26, 1950, the day following the testimony of Mr. Buck, and the same day on which Mr. Pearson gave his testimony, Mr. Bodine wrote a letter to the Coast Labor Relations Committee, to Mr. Pearson, concluding by saying, 'We would appreciate a meeting of the parties at your earliest convenience for the purpose of formally signing the respective coastwise agreement, reference being made to the above.' Therefore, if your Honor please, I think it is wholly proper," said the prosecutor continuing, "to ask this witness, who knows Mr. Bodine and who has identified his signature, whether in the light of this letter it is not a fact that these signatures were not, or the fact that the signatures would be appended to this agreement was not made known to Mr. Pearson and Mr. Buck until after they testified in this court, and I then, I think, if your Honor please, have a perfect right to [5372] argue to the jury that it > is apparent that these people came here under pressure fearing lest if they failed to testify, this agreement would not be consummated."

(Testimony of Oscar Pearson.)

(Testimony of Oscar Pearson.)

Mr. Pearson, was that statement communicated to you some time after it was made here in court?

A. I was aware of it, yes.

Q. I mean the statement made by the prosecutor? A. Yes.

Q. And since that statement was made known to you have you consulted with the other members of your committee? A. I have.

Q. Who are those members, so that we will have them in mind?

A. The members of that committee are the two other gentlemen who were here and testified at the time.

Q. That is Mr. Brown, Mr. Hubert Brown, and Mr. Kenneth Finnesey?

A. That is correct, and also the entire committee.

Q. Composed of what other persons?

A. Mr. Joseph Sevier.

Q. S-e-v-i-e-r?

A. Right; Mr. Gordon Jones, and Matland Pennington.

Q. That is P-e-n-n-i-n-g-t-o-n?

A. Right.

Q. In coming here today at the request of the prosecutor are you authorized to speak on behalf of all those men? [5373]

(Testimony of Oscar Pearson.)

A. I am. I am authorized to speak for the committee and to make it clear that in the testimony given by the gentlemen, including myself, we were here as members of that committee. I am authorized to speak for them on that very subject which you have brought up.

Q. In answer to any question put to you on that subject, what is your position—and I will ask you the direct question: Did you or any of the other men come here and give false testimony under any kind of pressure?

Mr. Donohue: I object, if your Honor please. No one has alleged that anyone has given any false testimony. That is a connotation put on the question which I raised to the Court, which is not justified by the statement. I move that the question be stricken from the record.

Mr. MacInnis: Your Honor, the prosecutor made that charge in a kind of polite way without using the word "false." If it is objected to I will rephrase the question.

Q. Did you give your testimony or any part of it or any shading of it or any atmosphere of it out of any kind of pressure exerted on you?

A. None whatever.

Q. Did you give your testimony out of any fear that you thought might be exerted against you if you didn't testify in the manner that the record shows?

A. I did not, and I so stated at my [5374] testimony.

(Testimony of Oscar Pearson.)

Q. Do you have any statement to make concerning the inference, if we can call it that, raised by the special prosecutor in the statement just now read to you?

Mr. Donohue: I object, if your Honor please.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. MacInnis: Your Honor, the special prosecutor asked that Mr. Pearson be brought back here for this very purpose, and I hardly think he can foreclose us now from opening the very matter he wished to speak about.

The Court: The question presented is objectionable as to its form; asking the witness to make a comment on inferences that may be drawn might raise a question in his mind, but it is not altogether apparent to the Court and jury. If you address questions to him you might pursue it [5375] further.

Q. (By Mr. MacInnis): Well, now, Mr. Pearson, were any persuasions or pressures or threats or matters of that kind in any way addressed to you, compelling you to testify here?

A. None whatsoever.

Q. Did you in your mind have the lurking presence of any fear or any possible pressure when you came here to give testimony?

A. No, I did state that I preferred not to testify, but in view of the fact that I was subpoenaed I was here and testified and so did the other gentlemen, as we did.

(Testimony of Oscar Pearson.)

Q. Now, the statement has been read to you and to the Court and jury a few moments ago by me, that is, the statement that was originally made by the prosecutor. Was there any connection between the date of any agreement between the union and the Pacific Maritime Association and the giving of your testimony? A. No.

Q. Well, now, the prosecutor, to be specific, said that he would show that on the same day on which you gave your testimony, a letter was written to the Coast Labor Relations Committee concerning the new contractual relations, and that the letter was not signed until after you gave your testimony. Was there any connection between those two things? A. None whatever.

Q. Well, what was the status of any existing agreement between the union and the Pacific Maritime Association? Had it been consummated before you came here and gave testimony, or did it [5376] hinge on the giving of your testimony?

A. The contract which the letter referred to had been ratified by both sides some time in December. The letter itself was a formal means of advising us of the results of that ratification.

Q. Now, when you say that the contract had been ratified, do you mean by that that the locals of the ILWU had voted to ratify the agreement long before you came here?

A. I have particularly taken pains to develop through our staff in various ports when those ratifications were held, and I would like to give you the dates. I have made some notes on that, if I may refer to those notes?

Q. Yes, I am sure you may.

A. In Seattle, the Seattle local had a referendum vote on December 7, 8 and 9, 1949.

Q. And did they ratify the contract?

A. At which time the master contract was ratified by that local. In Portland the Portland local ratified a master contract in December, 1949, when the union had a coastwise referendum vote. I do not have the specific date. In San Francisco Local 10 had a referendum vote on December 27th through December 30, 1949, at which time they ratified a master contract. At Los Angeles, Long Beach Harbor, they had a referendum vote on the master contract on December 19th through the 21st, 1949. The ballots were counted on the 22nd, and announced to the local membership on January 4, 1950. I might state that this [5377] information was common knowledge in each of the respective ports in December, although no official notice was served by the local union officials on our staff.

Q. So that it is definitely not a fact that the date of January 6th was the date upon which the union ratified the contract?

A. That's correct. We were advised that we would be notified early in January, we were advised that we would be advised by January 26th.

Q. And the charge that the ratification of the agreement was held up until after you testified is not a true charge?

A. It has no basis of fact whatsoever.

Mr. MacInnis: Thank you very much. Now probably the prosecutor will wish to pursue the same matter.

Mr. Donohue: Sure will.

Will you ask the witness to identify the signature on that, on the photostatic copy of a letter?

(Document handed to the witness by the Clerk.)

Mr. Hallinan: It is under your elbow, if you will look around for it.

The Witness: I have the copy of the letter, and that I can identify as being the same, although the copy does not have the signature.

Mr. Donohue: May I move, if your Honor pleases, that this be admitted in evidence as United States next in order and ask your Honor's permission to read it to the jury. [5378]

The Court: May I see it?

Mr. Hallinan: We have no objection.

The Court: It may be marked.

(Whereupon, letter referred to, dated January 26, 1950, from ILWU to Pacific Maritime Association, was received in evidence and marked United States Exhibit No. 27 in evidence.)

The Court: It may be read to the jury.

(Whereupon, United States Exhibit No. 27 in evidence was read to the jury by Mr. Donohue.)

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. That is the letter which you received?

A. That's correct.

Mr. Donohue: I have no further questions.

Redirect Examination

By Mr. MacInnis:

Q. And again, was there any connection between the date upon which that letter was written and the concluding of any negotiations between the union and the Pacific Maritime Association?

A. No, that was concluded, the actual physical negotiations were concluded prior to that time, and the ratification on both sides had been completed.

Q. And before you came here to give testimony, you had knowledge which you had possessed since the end of the month of December that the existing agreement had been ratified by all of the locals of the ILWU? [5379] A. That's correct.

Mr. MacInnis: That is all.

Now, Mr. Ortega, would you step up, please?

JOSE MANUEL ORTEGA

recalled on behalf of the defendants; previously sworn.

The Clerk: The witness on the stand is Jose Ortega, heretofore sworn.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Mr. Ortega, you have been with the union since 1921? A. 1919.

Q. 1919. In Santa Barbara? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall the earthquake in 1925 at Santa Barbara? A. Beg pardon?

Q. Do you recall that there was an earthquake in Santa Barbara in 1925? A. I do.

Q. Is it your recollection that some units of the United States Marines were brought into Santa Barbara at that time to do police duty?

A. There were some brought there to do guard duty.

Q. Was the office of your organization affected at all by the earthquake? [5380]

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know, sir, as a matter of fact, whether or not after the earthquake there was a considerable amount of building and reconstruction in Santa Barbara? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did your union, among others, recruit a number of people at or about that time for work?

(Testimony of Jose Manuel Ortega.)

A. Yes, there was quite an influx of labor come in then.

Q. And some of those came in to your organization, too? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I take it that they were temporary persons, who did not continue for a long period of time to reside in Santa Barbara?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of cards were they given in your union, if you can recall? Were they given a permanent, regular card or were they given a traveling card, or were they given a transfer card, if you know, if you can recall?

A. It all depends on the previous connection with the union.

Q. Assume they had no prior connection with the union.

A. If they had no prior—they were given a permit, issued every week.

Q. Do you know where those permits were granted for your union during the time immediately following the earthquake?

A. Those permits were issued by the business agent.

Q. Do you recall whether or not there was a time when, in an [5381] open air space in the downtown area, persons were being recorded or being enrolled in your union during the period we are talking about?

A. I have no recollection.

Q. Would you say that didn't happen?

A. Definitely, I couldn't say.

Mr. Donohue: I have no further questions, if Your Honor please, of the witness.

Redirect Examination

By Mr. MacInnis:

Q. Mr. Ortega, reference is now made to temporary workers instead of persons who are regular members of the Hodcarriers Union International, so let me ask you this: What would have been the longest approximate time in which a man working under a temporary permit would have been with the Hodcarriers?

A. I should say about two or three months after the earthquake. I don't recall the exact date.

Q. A man wouldn't work for a year and a half or two years under a temporary permit?

A. Absolutely not.

Q. And if a man worked under a permit, he had to pay some fine or penalty back to the union, didn't he, in exchange for his permit?

A. Our rules at that time were a dollar a day for every day worked. [5382]

Q. And would the international office of the union have a record of such payments and such persons? A. They would not.

Q. I see. And you, however, had personal contact with all of the members of your Hodcarriers International at that time?

(Testimony of Jose Manuel Ortega.)

A. As they applied for work, yes.

Q. And you knew every member of the Hodcarriers International in Santa Barbara?

A. I did.

Q. And having checked your own records, as you said yesterday, and having written for further advice to the international itself, you find no record of any man named John Schomaker?

A. No, sir.

Mr. MacInnis: That is all.

Mr. Donohue: No further questions, Your Honor.

The Court: This witness is excused. You are excused. Thank you. [5383]

resumed the stand on behalf of the defendants; previously sworn.

The Clerk: The witness on the stand is Harry Renton Bridges, heretofore sworn.

Direct Examination

By Mr. Hallinan:

Q. Mr. Bridges, in view of the testimony that Mr. Pearson just gave, would you tell us just briefly what is the situation as regards the signing of those agreements between the union and the shipowners that was ratified in the month of December?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Well, the agreements were negotiated prior to the month of December. The negotiations on those agreements ended around September 30th and then, as is the case with all our agreements, they are only negotiated and an agreement reached, tentative agreement reached, subject to ratification by a referendum vote of the working membership.

Q. Once that referendum has been held and ratified, have the officers any other authority except to sign the formal agreement?

A. No, the signing is a mere formality. I mean, the signing is purely a formality. [5384]

Q. In other words, the agreement would be just as much in force after ratification as if it were not signed at all, is that right—as if it were not signed at all?

A. I wouldn't like to get into a legal battle over that under the present circumstances, particularly with Taft-Hartley. We have enough trouble where there is no agreements at all, only verbal agreements. Our agreements, after they have been ratified by a referendum vote of the membership, the officers must sign them. We have no alternative. We couldn't do a thing about them even if we wanted to.

Q. In an earlier part of the trial the same witness, Schomaker, testified that an organization called the Maritime Federation of the Pacific was—I forget just which part of the anatomy of Mr. Darcy he said it originated from, whether his brain, his liver, or his lights—but there was some such matter, thought or plan of having the Maritime Federation of the Pacific an offspring of Mr. Darcy's judgment. Will you tell us what the Maritime Federation of the Pacific was, what and when were its origins, and what its course was?

A. Well, first of all, it was quite true that Darcy, the Communist Party generally, as I remember it, they were quite enthusiastic supporters of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific when it was formed. But in so far as the Federation's springing from that source, that is not a fact as far as I recall. I have distinct recollections on some of this. And the minutes will [5385] show it; the minutes I had here yesterday will show it. In 1933, even before our longshore union was formed, Clyde W. Deal, at that time the secretary of the Ferryboatmen's Union—that was a union affiliated with the International Seamen's Union—and another old-time longshoreman, an old-time organizer on this coast named Ed Morton, who was at that time the president of 38-12, the Seattle longshore local—they had gotten together, together with other people, and had started up an organization called the Council of Marine Crafts. It was aimed at being a coastwise council of longshoremen, seamen and other unions, and that was its name—Council of Marine Crafts—and that was even early—that organization had met even early in 1933, as I say, before we had received a charter here in San Francisco for our longshore union. And one of the first orders of business—one of the first orders of business that came up here in the longshore union of San Francisco after receiving our charter was the question: Would we affiliate and pay a capita dues to the Council of Marine Crafts? The matter was debated at great length. I think we decided against it at the time, not because we were opposed so much to principle as for other things. I remember we had quite a battle over Clyde Deal being an officer of our union. He was not a longshoreman. He was a member of the Ferryboatmen. But the point is that the Council of Marine Crafts was actually a going concern set up with a constitution, officers, and [5386] collecting dues before our union in San Francisco was even chartered in 1933.

And furthermore, when the Maritime Federation was eventually established—and it is true that I introduced a resolution—I introduced a resolution in our convention here in San Francisco in February, 1934, calling for the re-establishment of the old City Front Federation. Now, this was just a repeat of ancient history. In the 1901 Teamsters' strike—and of course I only know about that by reading about it and talking to one of the leaders of it—towards the end, before he died, old Michael Casey and I became friends. Michael Casey was vice president of the Teamsters' Union. Michael Casey was the leader of the teamsters' strike on the San Francisco waterfront in 1901, which was joined by the waterfront unions. So old Mike Casey used to talk to me by the hour about the happenings at that time. And I might mention at this time

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

I recall he used to say, "They call you people Communists and radicals. You are nothing but a bunch of pansies and pantywaists. You should have seen me in 1901. You should have seen me in 1901. Bloody Mike Casey, they called me." And that is the way Mike Casey used to refer to us.

He told me a lot about the City Front Federation and a man named Ed Newman, who at that time was down in Santa Cruz, was secretary of the old City Front Federation that was formed in 1901, and he came up with all his old minutes and [5387] the constitution and he turned them all over to us. So in reality the City Front, the waterfront Federation of the Pacific—the Maritime Federation of the Pacific was merely a continuation of the old City Front Federation that was in this city operating in 1901.

The Council of Marine Crafts followed the same general principle and, as I say, that was an already established concern in the early part of 1933. And later on, right after the strike, one of the first things we did, after the 1934 strike, right here in the San Francisco local, we elected delegates, official delegates to the Council of Marine Crafts, and that, I would say, was around September or October, 1934, after the maritime strike. So all this talk about who set up the Maritime Federation of the Pacific, it had its birth in reality in the Council of Marine Crafts. The Northwest Joint Strike Committee, which was testified to here by Andrews, they set aside money during the strike itself. Our strike was a coastwise strike. San Francisco didn't run the strike. The coast operated as a whole. The Northwest Joint Strike Committee, which covered Oregon and Washington, they covered the northwest part. We operated the Northern California part, and we had a Southern California strike committee, but we collaborated on the coast as a whole, and that strike was not run from San Francisco. It was run on a coastwise basis. And all this talk about who set up the Maritime Federation, any of the [5388] sources outside, that is just not so. The records are there. If you look through those minutes you will see report after report by Clyde Deal to the Council of Marine Crafts as early as June and July, 1933.

Q. That is in the minutes of July, 1933?

A. The minutes I had here yesterday, yes.

Q. I took them back to have a photostat made of the pages that were introduced, so I haven't it here right now. Then what was the course of that organization? Did it get going again?

A. Yes. Why, on June 17, 1934, in the middle of the strike—that was the day after Joseph P. Ryan with Dave Beck and Mayor Rossi had signed an agreement we knew nothing about and was not even subject to our approval, putting us back to work and losing us our strike—the day after we had a meeting here, and the various maritime unions attended the meeting and urged us to stay on strike, and as a result of that meeting we set up here in San Francisco what was called the Joint Marine Strike Committee. It consisted of five delegates elected by each union, and there were ten unions that were members of that Joint Marine Strike Committee at that time: all the maritime unions, the longshoremen, the boilermakers, the machinists' union, and a couple of others. I forget for the moment. So we had the nucleus, you might say, of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific set up as a matter of strike strategy in the 1934 strike, and joined the Marine Strike Committee that [5389] took over the entire negotiations of the strike and eventually negotiated the settlement of the strike..

Q. Did that Maritime Federation of the Pacific continue along for some time? Is it still in existence?

A. No, it was disbanded in 1939, and we established in its stead a national CIO maritime committee. In other words, we tried—our idea was to make it a national organization, and at the suggestion of the ILWU, that is, the longshoremen, myself joining with some other unions, we disbanded the Maritime Federation of the Pacific, or we merged it with the national CIO Maritime Committee.

Q. You were telling us about the matters that led up to the consummation and the winning of the 1934 strike and this matter of Ryan and his efforts. Who was Ryan? Who was Joseph P. Ryan?

A. Ryan was and is the president of the ILA. That was the old organization that we were formerly affiliated to. That is an American Federation of Labor organization. We left that organization and swung over to the CIO.

Q. Where was Ryan from? Where does he operate?

A. Joseph P. Ryan lives in New York. We had our disagreements with him. We didn't like the way he operated and certain other things. That and for other reasons we left the ILA and we left Joe Ryan.

Q. While the strike was in progress in 1934 did Ryan come to [5390] the Pacific Coast?

A. Ryan came to the Pacific Coast, met in secrecy with the representatives of the shipowners, with the Mayor of the city at that time, Dave Beck of the Teamsters' Union, and negotiated an agreement, and then gave a written guarantee that we would accept the agreement and go back to work in a day or two.

Q. What terms did the agreement embody?

A. Oh, I can't recall all of them. I know it set up a kind of a hiring hall that was inadequate. It provided for some type of grievance machinery that was completely inadequate. It made no provision at all for the seamen. The fundamental part about the agreement was it would have put the longshoremen back to work and left the seamen on strike. It would have broken the strike, in other words. It would have broken the solidarity of the marine locals.

Q. Then what happened with regard to that proposal?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. It was rejected.

Q. How? What took place?

A. It was rejected by a vote of longshoremen in almost unanimous vote.

Q. Was that a voice vote or a written vote? Do you remember if Ryan appeared before your organization?

A. It was a voice vote. It was a voice vote. I think it was a voice vote in every local up and down the coast, because the men on strike were so mad and so exasperated they refused to [5391] even give it the consideration of putting it to a referendum.

Q. That being rejected, what happened to Ryan? Did he leave here?

A. He left town with a big public statement saying he threw up his hands; he couldn't do anything; the waterfront was in a state of revolution; all the people on strike were Communists, and all the leaders were Communists, and they were all taking orders from Moscow, and that a good respectable character like Ryan had better get out of here.

Q. So Ryan went——

A. Back to New York.

Q. And all the Communists and Muscovites went on to call the strike? A. That is right.

Q. Mr. Bridges, ultimately, then, did there come a time when there was a division between the AFL and the CIO which involved the transfer of allegiance from one to the other of your organization?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. We switched affiliation from the American Federation of Labor to the CIO in 1937. We received our charter in July of 1937.

Q. Will you tell us briefly now what the CIO was. I imagine most of the jurors know, but if you can tell us in a few words what the CIO was and what its procedure was, we may have a better understanding of what took place.

A. The CIO, now known as the Congress of Industrial Organizations, [5392] at that time was a committee of unions within the American Federation of Labor itself. It was composed of some ten unions led by the United Mine Workers of America, headed at that time by John L. Lewis. All of the unions were in the American Federation of Labor. They were advocating and pushing along a program of organizing the basic industries of the United States. There was no organization in the basic industries such as in steel, in rubber, in the automobile industry, and many other industries like the white-collar industry, the oil industry, and so forth. There was no real organization in those basic industries here in this country. So this group of unions, ten unions, formed a committee within the American Federation of Labor itself, and that committee began to propound a program of organizing the unorganized into industrial unions, particularly the unorganized in the basic industries, as well as to follow a program of organization that did not discriminate in any way because of race, creed or color, as well as to follow an organizational policy that was far more progressive and democratic at the time than anything that existed in the American Federation of Labor, generally speaking. So that was the original Committee for Industrial Organization.

Q. Who headed it?

A. John L. Lewis, at that time president of the United Mine Workers. Its secretary was Howard. I think, a Mr. Howard of the Typographical [5393] Unions.

Q. So that John L. Lewis was then an officer of a union affiliated with the American Federation of Labor and in charge, appointed by the unions within the American Federation of Labor to take charge of this new Congress of Industrial Organizations?

A. Right. Lewis was president of the United Mine Workers. He was vice president of the American Federation of Labor. And the ten unions, because of their organizing activity and because of the program they were supporting, were suspended from the American Federation of Labor by a vote of the Executive Board of the American Federation of Labor. And when the American Federation of Labor national convention came around in Florida that year—that was the year 1936—because the Executive Board had already acted to suspend the ten unions of this committee, they were not therefore allowed to participate in the convention, and that gave the opposition to the ten unions that was led by William Green at that time and Bill Hutchinson of the Carpenters—that gave opposition enough strength in the convention and enough voting power to install those unions; in other words, to support the action of the Executive Board. Unless the Executive Committee of the American Federation of Labor had taken action prior to the national convention to suspend these unions and thereby rob them of their voting strength, the people who were opposed to the Committee for Industrial Organization at that time in the AFL would not have [5394] been able to muster sufficient voting strength in the convention in order to suspend those unions or make the suspension permanent or expelling them. However, by this device they did secure enough voting strength in the AFL so that the unions were suspended and eventually expelled, and after that they set up their own committee, the Committee for Industrial Organization, now known as the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Q. Then what did that congress do with regard to trying to enlist other unions under its aegis instead of all of the AFL?

A. It held out the prospects of a more constructive, a more progressive, a more united program than the leadership of the program that the American Federation of Labor was offering at that time.

Q. In your opinion at that time was the American Federation of Labor a frankly trade union organization?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Not—well, not according to the way our union does things.

Q. What was its porcedure that distinguished it from the Committee of Industrial Organization as of that time?

A. We thought it was, in terms of its views, extremely conservative. It was extremely bureaucratic and undemocratic. It did not believe at all in following a program where matters of policy as well as matters of agreement and strike would be [5395] submitted to the working rank and file for a vote of approval or consideration or matters like that. We were very much concerned with that. I believed in functioning as a national organization where a small group of men, nine in number at that time, I think, or ten, sat in Washington or Miami, Florida, for a few weeks out of the year and made all the decisions and anybody who questioned those decisions were thrown out on their ear.

Q. Did they employ any force to put their programs across?

A. Yes, I would say they did.

Q. In what way?

A. They took a few steps on occasion, as we remember, to push those who disagreed with them around a bit, strong-arm stuff and what not.

Q. Was the AFL a Jim Crow organization?

A. Not as such, not the American Federation of Labor as such. The position that the American

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Federation of Labor took—and technically speaking they were correct—the national organization, which was a federation of labor unions, had no authority to discipline the respective international unions. In other words, each union enjoyed autonomy under the American Federation of Labor, and the matter used to come up in every convention with the national organization, and that is the parent body, the American Federation of Labor, taking the position that if the individual national unions wished to discriminate because of [5396] race, creed or color, there was nothing much the parent organization could do about it because the unions had autonomy to do as they pleased on such matters.

And most unions—well, quite a few unions exercised their autonomy in that direction—not all of them, however, not all of them.

Q. When it came to a choice, then, between the CIO in 1937, what proceeding did the ILWU take and what was the result of it? I mean, what steps did they take to determine what their affiliation would be and what was the result?

A. In the course of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific convention in Portland, Oregon, in 1937, in June, all the unions affiliated with that organization, that is, the Maritime Federation of the Pacific—we all agreed that we would take a secret ballot on the question of affiliating with the [5397] CIO. And we all took a secret ballot, and in each case, in the case of each of the unions, the ballot, the outcome of the ballot was overwhelmingly in favor of affiliating with CIO. But in the case of a couple of the unions, they waited until after the ballot was taken and then they burned the ballots. And those unions didn't affiliate. We were one of the——

Q. What unions were those?

A. Sailors Union of the Pacific was one, headed by Lundeberg. There was another one. I forget. There was two of them, but I remember one. After the ballot was in, they burned it and they didn't affiliate anyway.

Q. Have you any recollection or thought as to the percentage by which the coast unions decided to affiliate with the CIO?

A. You mean the longshore union?

Q. Yes.

A. Oh, I think our vote was 80, 90 per cent.

Q. 90 per cent to affiliate with the CIO?

A. As far as I recall, yes.

Q. All right. Now, did that lead to any bad blood or friction between organizations like the Sailors Union of the Pacific, which, as you say, burnt the ballot, and the ILWU?

A. Oh, well, I think that any person connected with labor, or I presume most people outside of labor, knows about the battle between the two organizations. It gets pretty fierce and pretty bloodthirsty at times, and of course it has led to a [5398] lot of friction. The friction still exists and you still have two organizations in the field, the National A. F. of L. and the National CIO. And they are battling all the time in the jurisdictional battles, political battles, policy battles, all types.

Q. Do those take the form at any time of physical violence?

A. Well, it certainly has in our experience or I would say offhand, our own union, we have lost about six organizers—dead, missing. We don't know what happened to them. We have got our own ideas, but we know what happened to one. One was found.

Q. What was his name?

A. A man named Panto, Pete Panto. He was found, he was discovered buried in a block of cement in a field in New Jersey. As far as we can find out, he was murdered by that crime club, that Murder, Incorporated, that was operating back there, Lucky Luciano and that gang, Costello and his boys.

Q. Whose employ were they under? Whom were they representing? I mean, what organization?

A. Who?

Q. The killers.

Mr. Donohue: I must object, if Your Honor please. I think this is purely hearsay, if Your Honor please. How would he know what organization they represented? I think there is some limit with which hearsay ought not to be permitted, and I think [5399] this is one.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Hallinan: Well, let it go. We will withdraw the question.

There is a paper there that Schrimpf was questioned about.

The Witness: My statement on Panto wasn't hearsay; it was one of our men. That is, the other thing, Your Honor, might be hearsay as to who they represented, but my statement on Panto is not hearsay.

The Court: Well, if you desire to make a statement, Mr. Bridges, you may.

The Witness: No, sir, Your Honor, the question as to who these people represented that did the killing, I don't know. That would be guesswork on my part. But the fact that Panto was murdered, buried in a block of cement and finally dug up in a field in New Jersey, that is not hearsay. And the fact that we had five other organizers on our payroll on the East Coast waterfront, they just disappeared, we have never found them—that is not hearsay. I know those things, personal knowledge.

Mr. Hallinan: That is it.

Q. Do you know whether or not Henry Schrimpf took some position on this CIO affiliation, hostile to yours and to the other 90 per cent of the union?

A. Henry Schrimpf on every single issue in the union has always taken an opposite position, since 1934, since I canned him off that committee in October, 1934, for being drunk. No matter [5400] what the issue was, all Henry stood for, if I was for it or Schmidt was for it, he was against it. That even included—if it was even a raise in wages for Schrimpf, he was against it. That is the way Schrimpf operates.

Q. And——

A. I fired him. The question came up, he was on that committee in '34.

Q. What committee?

A. I fired him off it because he was drunk and not showing up at the meetings. I did give him the break to resign on the record so that he wouldn't be exposed before the membership. He had had a good record during the '34 strike. He was a bad fighter, he was fired, and since that time Henry has followed a simple position. He is a pretty violent guy, and if you argue with him too much, he takes a swing at you. Anything we were for, automatically he was against, just like that.

Q. Did he ever on the floor of the conventions or the union express any hatred or feeling against you or Henry Schmidt?

A. Oh, why, everybody knows that. On two or three occasions on the convention floor he started jumping over chairs to reach us. He started across the convention floor and he would be so mad that he would be hopping over chairs to—Henry is known in all the conventions for where he stands, how violently and bitterly he stands toward Schmidt and I. No question about that—common knowledge. [5401]

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Now, ultimately, Mr. Bridges, has there been some dissention within the CIO itself so that there is now some difference as regards policy, or some difficulty, as regards policy between the ILWU and some of the eastern portions of the CIO?

A. Some. Any labor movement that is going to be democratic, truly democratic, there is going to be disagreement over policy and other matters. The only organization that I see where there is no differences was—well, a good example was the Blue Book on the waterfront, the company union. There was no differences in that union. You didn't get a chance to have any differences. So differences in an organization don't disturb us. They are bound to occur all the time, and they are a sign of somewhat of a healthy organization, healthy disagreements, those things are on and I guess they will continue. They don't disturb us at all.

Q. Let me ask you this: When you were having the 1934 strike on the waterfront, that strike was being held under the auspices of an American Federation of Labor union; that's correct, is it?

A. That is true. As a matter of fact, most of the important gains we made—purely as a matter of fact, was made while we was in the American Federation of Labor, not in the CIO.

Q. And what was the name, what was the designation being given by the employers and the employer groups at that time to the American Federation of Labor? What was the term they [5402] used against it?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Oh, well, it would take me too long to recite them all.

Q. No, I say, did they use the term Communist?

A. Certainly. They accused us of being Communists, anarchists, radicals, and so forth. But it is a long time ago, as I say.

Q. Now, when the CIO separated from the American Federation of Labor, what did the American Federation of Labor call the CIO?

A. Oh, same thing. I think that there was more abuse and more accusations of Communist control, Communist activity, Communist philosophy, Communist program and so forth, more accusations of that nature were hurled against John L. Lewis and the national CIO than were ever hurled against myself and the ILWU.

Q. But now that there is some kind of a rift between the eastern department of the CIO and the ILWU, are the CIO people now calling the ILWU people Communists?

A. Oh, well, we more or less take those things—it might be hard to understand, I guess, for someone that is not a part of the picture, the labor picture. We take those things in our stride. It is pretty common and simple these days; whether it is within a trade union, whether you are running for political office. Any Congressman that is running for office feels duty bound to get up and say he is against Communists and to label anything of the opposite side Communist. Right now in the Republican Party I notice there is a battle going on between the [5403] so-called leftwing and right wing, even in the Republican Party. And so it goes, all the way down the line.

Q. Well, just to complete the circle——

A. That is ordinary stuff, where it is a simple way to handle a member of the opposition, or your opponent. Call him Communist, call him an agent of Moscow, call him a stooge of Joe Stalin, and then you don't have to meet logic with logic or facts with facts, or proper argument. That is true in public life, political life, and it is true in trade unions. And, frankly, there is much more said about it than truly exists. We have gotten used to it, and we take it in our stride. At least, in our union we do. We don't have very much trouble about it.

Q. Well, Mr. Bridges, in order to complete the circle, is the CIO now calling the A. F. of L. Communist in a vote that has taken place right here in this city?

A. Oh, that goes on all the time. I don't want to get into all these problems of labor and so forth.

Q. What about this telephone vote that took place here yesterday or the day before?

A. Well, the CIO lost that vote. That is purely my opinion, that they lost it because—I think that the CIO lost the vote because they were trying to label the American Federation of Labor union a Communist union, and the workers didn't believe them. [5404]

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. So then it swung around complete now that now the CIO is calling the American Federation of Labor Communistic, is that correct?

A. In some cases, and vice versa. Now, we are all even. It happens both ways. So I don't think you can blame either the A. F. of L. of the CIO. They are about even on that score.

The Court: We will take the morning recess.

Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, we will take the morning recess, and may I again admonish you not to discuss the case under any conditions, nor to form nor express an opinion until it is submitted to you.

(Recess.) [5405]

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Mr. Bridges, you remember the testimony of Schomaker and Schrimpf that you attended some sort of meeting which questioned the loyalty of a woman named Norma Perry?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell us what that incident was? First, when did it take place, roughly? Well, I think that Schrimpf——

A. I would say that it was either toward the end of '34 or the beginning of 1935. That is, I refer now to the incident as to the accusations against Norma Perry.

Q. When did you first meet her?

A. She came on the waterfront in the fashion that has been described here. I first recall her working for the strike committee in 1934. I had nothing to do with her being hired. I think that she came down there as it has been testified to here, offered her services. She was a very efficient craftsman, a good stenographer and typist, and her help was gratefully received and duly appreciated like a lot of other help we got.

Q. Then what happened? What was the first thing that you heard that questioned her integrity or her loyalty?

A. For the duration of the strike she served very effectively, efficiently; she was secretary, that is, stenographer to the publicity committee that had most of the paper work to do, and she served for the duration of the strike, and then after the strike was over the chairman of the publicity committee made the proposal that she be hired by the union as a stenographer or [5406] secretary to the president and put on the payroll, which—that happened. I mean, the union approved of the proposal and she went to work for the union as secretary or stenographer. And she made a mistake—in my opinion, at least—that happens sometimes, that she got some fancy ideas about trying to operate the union, pull wires behind the scenes and things like that, as much as anything else. And a few months later I recall Schrimpf, Schomaker and some others, they came to me—I was the president of the union after I had been elected in September, 1934—they came to me with complaints about Norma's reliability as to who she was mingling with and who she was working with and connections with anti-labor forces such as the industrial association or shipowners association and so forth.

Q. Was there any meeting in which you participated in a discussion with the woman in front of those people?

A. Yes, I had a meeting with Schomaker and Schrimpf and those people on that issue.

Q. Did that involve any alleged Communist betrayal or was it a betrayal to the industrial association of what was going on?

A. What I remember of the meeting—I forget where we had the session—and I think that Schomaker and Schrimpf might have been there; I don't specifically recall. I just remember a meeting and I remember the purpose of the meeting was they wanted to tell me what was going on as far as Norma was concerned and what they knew and so forth and so on, and that they were [5407] very, very suspicious. So I listened, and then I said, "Well, let's get together with Norma and find out what the score is." So we did that. We had another session later on, and she explained what her activities were and why, and so forth.

I recall a couple of the incidents that was raised against her, and I agreed with her position instead of agreeing with the position of Schomaker and Schrimpf and the others, and she kept her job instead of being released from her job. One of the complaints was, for example, she was very friendly with the secretary of our union at that time—that is the financial secretary, a man named Fred Frater,

Scotty Frater. Later on he was removed from the union because he was engaged in some very bad activities, that they had more to do with the embezzling of funds than any connections with the employers' association. She was also very friendly and apparently working close together with Bill Marlowe, who later on, in fact, we did find out had connections with the shipowners' association and went over to work for them and is now their manager in Southern California.

So they admitted there was something to charges at that time, although they looked to me to be more of a personal nature than having any foundation in fact. The other thing that was raised against her—and I thought her position was somewhat correct—her husband at that time operated a cafe, a kind of French restaurant out here on Baker Street—Norma's husband—and it was placed on the "We don't patronize" list of [5408] the San Francisco Labor Council as being a non-union concern. This was one of the other questions brought up by Schomaker and Schrimpf against Norma. Norma took the position that the place was unorganized; that it was not organized by the Culinary Workers, which was an A. F. of L. union because there was some Filipino workers working in the restaurant, in the kitchen, and Filipino workers were not eligible to join the union; they were being discriminated against because they were Filipino workers, and that her husband who was part owner of this restaurant, as I recall, took the position that they would pay—they would pay union wages and all the union conditions to them if the union didn't want to take in these people as long as they were working and the union discriminated against them. And that was Norma's position and answer to the accusations against her that her husband was working a non-union restaurant, or participating in running it. And I was inclined more or less to agree with her position, even though I was a delegate to the San Francisco Labor Council at the time. So putting it all together, after I heard all these things—I was president and general manager of the union; it was up to me as to whether Norma would remain on the job—I decided that there was a certain amount of personalities in the matter, particularly from Schrimpf's point of view, and I just dismissed the whole thing and Norma remained in her job. Later on, however, there were certain other developments in connection with Norma's [5409] activities which changed my mind on the whole thing.

Q. What was that?

A. Well, some time later, I think that was in '35, a member of the Waterfront Employers Association tipped me off that she had connections with their association. Now, in order to understand that, even during the '34 strike, all the members of the Waterfront Employers Association, which was an association made up of steamship owners and operators and stevedoring contractors, there was a few exceptions that did not completely agree, at least, with the attitude of the Association towards the longshoremen or the industrial association. They believed that there were a lot of bad things down there that should be corrected, a lot of evils, such as the shapeup and the racketeering and what not. So there was a few of them that remained on a fairly friendly basis with us. And this particular member of the Association told myself one day there, he said, "Listen, I will give you a tip." He had reasons for telling me this. "Watch your secretary; she might not be all that she seems to be." So that was a little surprising to me, and the prior stuff come back, and I said to him, "Well, wait a minute now. Which one?" He said, "Look, Bridges, you are no dumbbell. I have said enough. If you've got any brains, that ought to be enough." So I said, "Well, now, wait a minute. I've got two secretaries. Which one do you mean?" So, oh, he said—so I remember how he described Norma and I said, "Oh, I get you." [5410] So that was all there was to it. And I did a little checking up, and I found out sufficient to my satisfaction that she had connections with agencies that didn't mean any good for our union, so I got rid of her then and there. I called her into my office and I said, "I'll give you until this evening"—the executive board was meeting this evening—"I will give you until this evening to resign and get out of here, and the only reason I am doing it, I feel so darn foolish that you have been around here so long and working for me, and even though the matter was brought to my attention some months ago, I kind of defended you instead of believing. And I would like you to get out of here without me having to fire you, and report the whole thing to the membership, because it makes me look so darn foolish." So she got out.

Q. Now, so then, as early as that time, you were aware of a person in your employ who was spying upon you and retailing matters back to persons hostile to you?

A. In the sense that I mean, in the sense that I mean. I think it was a gradual step for that girl. I don't know. I am only going by the facts as I knew them at this stage of the game.

Q. Let me ask you this. Will you finish what you were telling us yesterday about the matters in 1941 in the hotel in New York?

A. Oh, well, that was an incident. I might say in that connection that as I explained I just came from the Sears hearing [5411] here, and I didn't feel so good about that hearing because there was all kinds of people testified there that I didn't think were worth much, confessed murderers and what not. And so then, I go back to New York and this was in July or August of 1941. My room was tapped and I would like to say this much. Although I deliberately set out at that time and did, I think, successfully expose and hold up to public ridicule those particular agents, our purpose was not to show any disrespect generally or generally ridicule the government agencies as such, but here was a group of government agents. They were sworn to uphold the law. They were sworn to protect my rights, and when they was accused of wiretapping, they sanctimoniously and hypocritically denied that they would ever do such a thing. When they are exposed and held up, as I think was entirely proper, to public ridicule and scorn, they had it coming. They were truly, in my opinion, un-American. In the next room listening in on me. And I even made a test of them at that time. There was a strike on in the city of New York at that time and I pretended to hold a meeting having to do with that strike, just a test as to whether those individuals would pass that information on to that employer in order to hurt those workers and that strike. And sure enough, a couple of days later it appeared in the newspapers that I was running that strike, even though I had no connection with it. And the only way that information could have gotten to those employers was through those agents in [5412] the next room to me, tapping my room.

So when I took the steps that I did over a period of four or five weeks to expose those individuals and to ridicule them and make a joke of them—and we did that—my purpose definitely was to go after them, because of their hypocritical, sanctimonious attitude, even though all the time they were committing a felony. Wiretapping is a felony. And everything I said about them here is said in even stronger language in that Supreme Court decision, that is not yet in evidence. So what I am saying isn't anything I am thinking up. It was a finding of fact. Judge Sears found as a matter of fact that my room and my telephone was tapped, and the Supreme Court had upheld it.

And I have got records in my office now, we have got a teletype in my office, and every once in a while we are trying to put through a teletype and the operator probably makes a mistake because she said, and it appears on the teletype—I can get it here in the courtroom—it appears on the teletype, one operator speaking to another on the teletype, "Hold on, the FBI is not on the line yet," or "The Immigration Service isn't on the line yet." Now, that is what goes on. I've got the teletype tapes, the official teletype tapes of that type of thing. And sometimes even on the telephone they make a mistake. We hear them. I don't know how they tap in, but sometimes they make a mistake. So it is a pretty dirty business, and when people engage in that, I look upon them as not carrying [5413] out their official, legal duties as a government agency. But in other words, they are violating the law, and they deserve to be held up to public ridicule and scorn, and that by doing so I think that myself and my union, we are doing more to support and cooperate with those government agencies and strengthen them than those particular individuals are.

Q. Did you take the matters up with the government agencies themselves?

A. I filed an official complaint with the United States Attorney in New York City.

Q. And recited the facts?

A. Recited the facts, yes.

Q. Did you do anything finally toward leading these men to disclose themselves?

A. Oh, a lot of things, yes.

Q. Well, what did you do?

A. I have already pointed out, this went on for five weeks. Why, they had—the maids in the hotel are kind of elderly women. They were all Irish women. One of them came to me and said, "Look, these agents have told me—and if I don't do it, it will be too bad for me," she was an old woman of at least 60 or 70. She says, "Look, I don't like to do this, but let me tell you, I have to, I have been ordered to turn over the contents of your wastebasket, wastepaper basket to these agents." I said, "You go right ahead. Don't you get into trouble on me. [5414] I can handle these people. They can push you around, but I have got an organization with me." So here they were, searching through my wastepaper basket. But we fixed them up on that. They used to look in my wastepaper basket to see what notes I had thrown away. I had a little portable typewriter, and I used to type. So I got myself some carbon paper and I shoved it in the typewriter and I pounded away at it, and I would turn it upside down and pound away some more. So I had it criss-crossed, upside down and every other way, and I tore it up in little small pieces, as small as I could, and I threw it in the wastepaper basket. And the next day we looked through our glasses and we watched the agents in the next room putting the carbon paper together with tweezers, trying to fit it together. So I told the poor old Irish maid about it, and she thought that it was no more than they deserved. So there was that.

And later on I got ahold of a newspaper man, and we took pictures of these people. The newspaper PM in New York City. At that time the editor or publisher of that paper was—later he went into the army. I forget his name. But he assigned a reporter and eventually, of course, the whole thing was exposed in the public press. And the identity of these people was exposed because after they got out of the room—we kept them holed up. We had them in a spot. They was in the room. The manager of the hotel wouldn't open the room. I made a complaint to the management of the hotel about my room being tapped. By that [5415] time I had my room rent down to $2.00. They wouldn't throw me out so I used to keep on going in and asking for a reduction of rent, just to test it out. So I finally had my room rent down to about $2.50 a day; the room was a $10.00 a day room.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Did you have any little plot of having them come into your room to catch you doing anything in particular?

A. All kinds of things; anything I could think of. I went over that.

Q. Tell us more.

A. But the point of all this was, it wasn't the idea of ridiculing a government agency. I was thinking in terms of those particular agents. I don't know whose instructions they were acting under, but we had raised the question here in this court room as to my room being tapped in various places, being followed and so forth, and of course it was all denied, hypocritically, sanctimoniously denied. "We'd never do a thing like that." These were the same people that, within a month or two after, they were the ones in New York. That is the way I felt about it, and I would do the same thing again. The only point I am trying to make here is that our union cooperates, supports and respects government agencies, all of them: city, federal, state, so forth. But when some of these individuals in these government agencies take it upon themselves to abuse their authority, their badge of office, that is an entirely different thing. We will expose them every chance we get. And I know as well as [5416] anyone knows, since that time, why, they don't like me, and heaven help me if they ever get me into a corner where they can do something about it. I am as well aware of that as they are.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Now, let me ask you this, Mr. Bridges. There has been testimony here about meetings that you are alleged to have attended, participated in. They have been described in various ways—Communist meetings, open Communist meetings, mixed Communist meetings, closed Communist meetings, upper fraction meetings, upper faction meetings, a number of thinks like that. Now, do you remember taking a trip in August or the first part of September, 1936, to Grants Pass, Oregon, with Schomaker? A. Say the date again.

Q. He said in August or the first part of September, 1936, that he and you met some place out on Mission Street and drove up to Grants Pass, Oregon.

A. I remember his testimony, I just wanted the date. In the first part of September it wouldn't be so, because I went to New York then. And that is the first part of September. I want to get the dates nailed down first. Incidentally, on these dates I have got a pretty accurate record of all my movements those years. I was doing something every day and night, practically, and we were busy people. I was in meetings. So anybody that is going to put me in a meeting, they have got to be careful.

Q. You say you did go to New York in September, 1936? [5417]

A. The early part of September, I think.

Q. On what business, on what affair, do you know?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. A meeting with our national organization, and the assistant Secretary of Labor, and the National Labor chairman of the Democratic Party at that time. That was Dan Tobin. We were approaching the '36 presidential elections, so I went back there for a conference of the international union. That is the ILA at that time. It was a conference with the secretary and the assistant Secretary of Labor, because at the same time the expiration of our contracts was coming up, September 30th, and a meeting with the Maritime Commission, and also we had a session back east in the Biltmore Hotel with Dan Tobin, who at that time was labor chairman of the Democratic Party. So that was the first part of September. I left here around September, the first week in September. Now, so that meeting would have to be in-between the time I came back from Seattle, and I got back here in San Francisco around July 10th—or July 20th. The reason I know that, I came back on the train and I met a woman on the train. She lives in Chicago, works in Chicago, and I have got a record on that. So this would be between July 20th and the first week in September. And I made no such trip. And it would be unnecessary for me to make such a trip to speak to Bert Nelson or Rappaport. Incidentally, on that, the first time I went Rappaport was later on. I have a distinct recollection as to when I first met Rappaport. And that was later on. But [5418] on Bert Nelson, I just came back in San Francisco on July 20th after spending a couple of weeks in Seattle where I had had a chance to speak to Bert Nelson every day if I wanted to. So I just can't put together the need for me to suddenly pay a visit to Grants Pass to meet Nelson and Rappaport within a week or within a month or a few weeks, after I had just come back from a visit in Seattle, where I had spent a couple of weeks. I went to Seattle for a board meeting at that time. The reason we know it, because that is when I was sworn in and took office as president of the Coast Union, the Coastwise President. It was my stepping up from the local president to the coast president. And that is what I was doing in Seattle, and I returned from that trip July 20th.

And then I have got the records, I have got the records of where I was during the rest of that month, and generally through the month of August. So if we can only get that meeting pinned down to a day——

Q. They won't do that.

A. No, I know it, I know it, because I have got the records.

Q. Now, you heard the nature of the subject and the discussion that you are supposed to have driven for two days up to Grants Pass to discuss with these two men, when Schomaker was on the stand. Do you remember what he said: You drove up there to discuss something about supporting certain persons for office?

A. I remember what he said, and getting out the left and the [5419] right side and "Hello, Wolf," and so forth. I remember.

Q. Well, would there have been any reason or sense at all in driving up to Grants Pass, Oregon to meet those men just to discuss the matters that he mentioned?

A. There was on such meeting, no such driving. It didn't take place, and I can't conceive any reason why I at that time would be driving up to Grants Pass, Oregon. No reason at all. I don't know where Schomaker got that story or what he was smoking, but he was chewing on something.

Q. Now, you remember a man named Hancock that testified here? A. Yes.

Q. And he testified that in September, 1935, during an American Federation of Labor convention, there was a meeting at which you, John Larson, Schmidt, some sailors, Harry McNeil, J. C. Clark, Hancock, Rayburn and Lambert, Johnstone and Schneidermann? No, he didn't mention Schneidermann. Schomaker says that. Schomaker and Hancock both testified to that. Do you know anything about that meeting? Do you know anything about Hancock?

A. Never saw Hancock; that is, as far as I know, never met Hancock in my life until he came to this courtroom. Now, I met a lot of people, and you can't remember them all. If I ever met Hancock, it was in the way of being introduced to him, shaking hands, saying hello or something, and I don't even recall that. And mine isn't the best memory in the world and it mightn't [5420] even be good, but it is average. I had never spoken or met Hancock in my life until he come into this courtroom. And as far as ever sitting in a meeting with him, at no time, under any circumstances. [5420-A]

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Were there any meetings during that 1935 convention that were not part of the convention caucus?

A. Sure, sure. In every convention—why, in every convention we have our caucuses and sessions and meetings for one reason or another; nothing secret about them. That is, they are secret only to the extent that you try to avoid inviting someone in from the outside in the particular opposing faction, group, or what have you. But to that degree only. And in that convention in 1935 I think the record will show that meetings were announced on the floor of the convention and everybody was requested——

Q. Let me ask you, is it normal in those conventions for persons interested in procuring certain offices for themselves or for other persons or in putting across particular programs or planks in a platform to have meetings together and determine upon strategy and persons who are to be represented and persons who are to be supported? Is that the normal thing?

A. Oh, that is normal in any convention. It may not be the best way to do it. But never mind labor conventions. How about these smoke-filled back rooms of the political parties? I wouldn't want to go into all the quiet little sessions I have been in even around these parts, not only dealing with labor matters but political endorsements and things like that—plenty of them, more than I can ever remember, more than I can count. Some of them you might call secret, some not so [5421] secret, but all for one purpose, to achieve a common objective: elect someone to office, support a program, and things like that. And that goes to the officers of the labor unions, the AFL and the CIO, representatives of all political parties of all kinds, and people who are aspiring to all types of political office, as well as trade union offices.

Q. I think it was the man who described the spiral staircase—I am not sure whether it was he or Krolek. Do you remember whether or not you ever had such meetings in Portland or a private home as well as in the halls of the convention, and so forth?

A. I recall Krolek's testimony and, of course, I recall that convention, and we had quite a few meetings during that convention around the issues, around our slate of candidates. But, first of all, I do not recall that meeting. And there is a strange thing I noticed about that meeting Krolek testified to. The people he named in the meeting were all radio operators, all radio operators. They were a part of our trade group at that time in the Maritime Federation. Those people he referred to, as I recall them, were part of our particular caucus, see?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Mr. Bridges, I skipped from the Hancock meeting to the Krolek meeting. I didn't intend to. All I wanted to do was determine whether it was Krolek or Hancock who described the circular staircase and the apartment on the left side, having gone [5422] down to look at it a few days before.

A. I remember him being the one who described the staircase. He went down to L. A. at his own expense and in his spare time with Mr. Kaiser went over to take a look-see.

Q. With regard to the meeting that Hancock testified to, that is, during the convention of 1935, did you ever at that convention attend a meeting at which everybody, at least so far as you knew, with the exception of yourself, was a member of the Communist Party?

A. No, no. As far as I recall that testimony, the purpose of the meeting was to work out a scheme to present to the larger meeting.

Q. Yes.

A. And the people who was in there helping us work out the scheme and the program were Hancock, and I forget who else. So this is the way it stacks up: Here I am sitting in a meeting; I am a delegate to that convention. We got a whole group of delegates. We are all instructed. Before we ever went to that convention my membership had voted and instructed me what to do at that convention. So this program that Hancock was talking about, the only thing wrong with his story is that before we ever went to the convention my own local union had passed a series of instructions saying, "You people go down and do these things and carry out these instructions," and these were the things that Hancock says were worked out in that meeting. That is [5423] all that was wrong with that. And in addition to the fact that the meeting never took place. Those things are a matter of record in our official minutes. I can bring them up here and show the instructions we voted on before we ever left San Francisco.

Q. With relation to the meeting Krolek testified to, which he says took place at the Venetian Apartments at Long Beach, have you any recollection on that matter?

A. Only what I have stated. We had meetings in 1936. That was a pretty hectic convention. There were two conventions down there, the Federation convention and the ILA convention. Both of them went for some weeks. Pretty hectic, and some pretty bitter factional battles, and we were caucusing all over the lot everywhere. No question about that. Caucusing was a daily and practically nightly affair, in the noontime, and so forth. We didn't have time to get as far away as Long Beach. That is quite a long ways.

Q. What do you mean by "caucus"?

A. All the delegates of the convention of one mind that we could get together to jointly agree to support one program or one set of officers or something like that, we would call regular caucuses or meetings.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. In other words, a certain number of persons might belong to the same delegation or be of the same mind and they would meet someplace and agree to some tactics and then when they returned to [5424] the convention they would try to put them in effect?

A. That's it, that and no more. The whole thing had to do purely and simply with trade union matters and absolutely nothing else.

Q. With Krolek you say the names you recognize as being members of the trade of radio men?

A. Yes.

Q. He named the persons as Pyle, Pringle, Van Erman, yourself, Henry Schmidt, Harry Jackson, Hazel Wood, Walter Lambert, and Mervyn Rathborne. Now, except for yourself, Henry Schmidt and Hazel Wood, do you recognize the other names?

A. Yes, all radio operators.

Q. They are radio operators?

A. Yes, and I know most of the other people there, too.

Q. Do you know whether or not those people were also delegates, representatives at that convention? A. I think they were, yes.

Q. Would it be ordinary that you might solicit the help of other delegates, whether they happened to be members of the Communist Party or not, in putting across a program or slate of candidates at the convention?

A. Sure. Those delegates were all part of our general caucus. They were all supporting the same program. We were all supporting the same program together. I can't see why there would be a meeting of just those three particular people. [5425]

If we are to believe that story, you have got Harry Jackson, Walter Lambert, and two or three other people; you have five officers of the Communist Party allegedly instructing about four of us what to do. Why, that is so ridiculous to the average person in our trade union movement on this coast that it is funny. That is so ridiculous that the average rank and file member of my own union would dismiss it with a horse laugh, it is so stupid.

Mr. Hallinan: Shall we take the recess?

The Court: Yes, we will take the recess and resume at two o'clock. The same admonition to you, members of the jury, not to discuss the case.

(Thereupon a recess was taken until 2:00 p.m., this date.) [5426]

Thursday, February 9, 1950, 2:00 P.M.

The Clerk: The witness on the stand is Harry Renton Bridges, heretofore sworn.

Direct Examination

By Mr. Hallinan:

Q. Now, we want to get to the time that you were elected to the Central Committee of the Communist Party, in June 27th, 1936, Mr. Bridges, and see what we can do with that little tale. Now, were you ever elected to the Central Committee of the Communist Party? A. No.

Q. Were you ever elected to anything in the Communist Party, from janitor up to commissar of public safety or whatever it may be? A. No.

Q. Did you ever attend a Communist Party convention in the year 1936, in New York?

A. No.

Q. 1938? A. No.

Q. Any other place? A. No.

Q. All right. Now, were you in New York City in the year 1936? A. Yes.

Q. And when? [5427]

A. First time for the year in September, later, again, in December.

Q. So you went to New York City in September, 1936. What did you go there for?

A. A conference with the national officers of the international union at that time. I also went on other matters dealing with the maritime industry, Maritime Commission. I tried to appear before a Senate Committee, as I recall, the Copeland Committee. I had a conference with the Secretary of Commerce at that time, Mr. Roper, Daniel Roper. A few other items. I went there, I left here about the first week in September, or so. I was later on in New York in December of 1936, but prior to September, 1936, I hadn't been in New York in the period between July, '35 and September, '36.

Q. And you have told us what you did in New

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

York City in September, 1936. I am just fishing out a lot of papers here.

A. Yes, there's a record of that conference.

Q. Now, Mr. Bridges, in the regular course of its business, as has been indicated before, the ILWU, the ILA, the Executive Committee and all those portions and parts of the operation of that union, kept regular minutes, is that true?

A. Yes. That is, after the first few months, some of the minutes that we have got there, after the first few months or weeks of the organization. I would say the first two or three months of the organization in 1933, until we got fairly well [5428] organized and got a little more efficient. From that time on our minutes, et cetera, were in fairly good shape.

Q. Now, covering, as far as we go, the two weeks involving the time in which it was declared that this convention took place and any possible, reasonable time thereafter at which you could have gotten there during the year 1936, were you pretty busy in union matters?

A. Every day in the week.

Q. And were there meetings, a great many meetings that took place in and around that time?

A. Day and night.

Q. And what organizations now were you chairman of?

A. 1936, I was coast president of the ILA.

Q. Of the ILA?

A. Yes. That is, International Longshoremen's

Association. Also the Pacific Coast District 38, or Local 38. I was chairman of the San Francisco Council of the Maritime Federation. That is District Council 2. That was two. I was a delegate to the San Francisco Labor Council. Later on, during the year 1936, I was elected as a vice president of the State Federation of Labor. That wasn't, however, until September. So prior to September, or all during the year, as I say, those—I held those positions.

Q. Now, I am going to show you a set of minutes (presenting to counsel for the Government for examination). [5429]

A. I forgot to say I was president of the longshore local here in San Francisco until July the 7th, 1936, at which time I left the local to take my position as the president of the Coast. I resigned from the local in July of '36 to become district president. I had just been elected.

Mr. Hallinan: What we have done is, we have taken the original minutes of the meeting involved out of the file and substituted for them photostats, so the original minutes could be here. Now, that has led to some little criticism. In other words, it was called to the attention of the Court and jury that these minutes were loose minutes. Well, the reason is that we took them out, trying to be a little more honest in the thing, and substituted photostats in our original document.

Q. Now, will you look at the paper that is being shown you there, Mr. Bridges? First, what is the matter contained in the file? [5430]

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. This is a file of minutes of the meetings of the longshore local, that is, the membership meetings as distinguished from the minutes of the committee or Executive Board.

Q. Are those kept in the regular and ordinary course of business of the union?

A. That is right, minutes, and including various other things.

Q. Are you personally familiar with those minutes?

A. Right. I was the chairman at all of these meetings, most of them, as the minutes show.

Q. You see the part that you were looking at where the photostats are—— A. Yes.

Q. Where is the original from which that photostat was made? The document that you have in your hand, is it? A. Yes, one of them.

Q. What you were shown was Defendants' Exhibit S-1, and that is the minutes of the regular meeting of Local 38-79, ILA, held in Scottish Rite Auditorium, on Monday, June 22, 1936, meeting called to order by President Bridges at 8:20 p.m. Is that borne out by what you see there?

A. Have you got the original?

Q. I have the original, yes.

A. You have got it there. I haven't got it here.

Q. The photostat is in there.

A. I have the photostat, yes. [5431]

Q. Are you familiar with the signature of Ivan F. Cox, the recording secretary? A. Yes.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Is that his signature at the bottom of those minutes? A. As far as I can tell, it is.

Q. Now, if these minutes show the meeting called to order by you, was it in fact called to order by you?

A. I have no specific recollection of calling that meeting to order, but I wouldn't trust my memory as against these minutes. These are official minutes. And we had a rule in the union in that time that if the officers were not present at the meetings, they had to have some kind of official excuse from the membership not to be present. They could only be absent if they were ill or were on union business. They could be only excused by the membership.

Q. This shows the meeting was declared adjourned at 11:20 p.m., is that correct?

A. Yes, that is the way our meetings used to go in those days. They went pretty late.

Q. So that on the night of Monday, June 22, you were present and chairman at a meeting of the ILA held in the Scottish Rite hall from 8:20 to 11:20 pm., is that correct? A. Right.

Q. Now, I will show you Defendants' Exhibit T-1 for identification and ask you if you will identify that document. [5432]

A. That is the copy of the official minutes we used to put out in our District Council—from the District Council of the Port of San Francisco, Bay Area District Council No. 2, the Maritime Federation of the Pacific. Now, these minutes—here is the way it used to work: Each delegate attending those

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Council meetings was entitled to a set of the minutes and each union was entitled to a set of the minutes. So the secretary used to write the minutes up on a stencil and the secretary would sign the stencil, the secretary of the Council, in this case Rathborne; he signed the stencil. The minutes would then be run off on a mimeograph machine, and these would become the official minutes. They would subsequently be corrected at the next meeting of the District Council, and the first order of business was any correction in the minutes as prepared and mailed out to the delegates and component organizations by the secretary. Any corrections that were made were noted in the minutes of the following meeting. If no corrections were made the minutes were adopted as prepared and mailed out by the secretary. So the only original of these minutes would be the stencils that were prepared for mimeographing on the mimeographing machine, and these minutes are signed by the secretary by signing with the stylus on the stencil.

Q. Who was the secretary? A. Rathborne.

Q. What is his first name? [5433]

A. Mervyn Rathborne.

Q. He was regularly secretary, duly and regularly elected and acting secretary of that board, is that right?

A. That is right, and this is his signature.

Q. You are familiar with the signature?

A. Very much so.

Mr. Hallinan: Might I have both documents?

We offer in evidence, if the Court please, this document which has already been identified as taken from the files.

Q. Were these minutes kept in the regular course of business of the Executive Board of that organization, the document you have just shown to me marked T-1 for identification, signed by Mervyn Rathborne? Were they kept in the regular course of business of the Executive Board?

A. Of the Maritime Federation?

Q. Yes.

A. No, those minutes are the property of our union. They are the official copy of the minutes that we kept.

Q. But I say they were kept in the regular course of business of the union, is that right?

A. Certainly, our union as well as the Council, which I was chairman of.

Mr. Hallinan: We offer it as defendants' exhibit next in order, if the Court please.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, the objection which we [5434] took the other day, we do not advance now, because the deficiency of the librarian has been supplied by the witness. He has identified the signatures and testified they were kept in the regular course of business. We did, however, supply your Honor with a memorandum on the question as to whether or not these union minutes are within the purview of the statute, and subject only to that point we offer no other objections.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

The Court: The objection is overruled.

(Defendants' Exhibit T-1 for identification was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, these are the minutes of the regular meeting of the San Francisco Bay Area Council, District Council No. 2, held in Room F, Ferry Building, San Francisco, California, on June 23, 1936, the meeting being called to order at 8:22 p.m., and adjourning at 11:50 p.m. That is District Council No. 2 of what, the Maritime Federation?

A. The Maritime Federation of the Pacific.

Q. MFP, Ferry Building. Now, this shows the chairman Harry Bridges, secretary Mervyn Rathborne. Meeting called to order at 8:22, and then the secretary read the minutes. There is a roll call showing present ILA 38-79, Bridges, is that right?

A. Right.

Q. And then there is a notation on page 9 that the chairman declared that nominations for the office of secretary of District Council No. 2 for the coming year are now open. [5435]

Now, I have to find the Executive Board minutes of June 24. I have it right here. It will take me a minute to dig it out. There is the photostat, and that is the original (referring to Defendants' Exhibit U-1). [5435-A]

Q. Now, Mr. Bridges, the book in the file the bound papers, you have already identified as being the minutes of the ILA Executive Committee?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. That's right.

Q. And the single page is the original, removed from that book, for which a photostat has been substituted, is that correct? A. That's right.

Mr. Hallinan: All right. Could I have those?

(Documents returned to counsel by the Clerk.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): And these you have already identified as being kept in the ordinary course of business of the union also?

A. That's right.

Mr. Hallinan: Now we offer, if the Court please, this minute of the regular meeting of the executive board, held Wednesday, June 24, 1936, as Defendants' exhibit next in order.

The Clerk: It is in evidence, U-1.

Mr. Hallinan: Oh, it is in evidence? Thank you.

Mr. Donohue: May I see it?

Mr. Hallinan: It has been admitted. Were you going to object to it, Mr. Donohue?

Mr. Donohue: You will never know now.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, this is the minutes of a regular meeting of the executive board held Wednesday, June 24th, 1936.

(Whereupon Defendants' Exhibit U-1 was read by Mr. Hallinan.) [5436]

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): So then on Wednesday, the 24th of June, you were at an executive board of the ILA, is that right? A. That's right.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. From 9:00 to 9:15 p.m. Now, at the time that is involved in this period, you say you were also a delegate to the Building Trades Council, is that right? A. No. San Francisco Labor Council.

Q. San Francisco Labor Council, yes. And at that time, in the month of June, 1936, was the San Francisco Labor Council engaged in some matter or some organization concerning which you were greatly interested?

A. Oh, quite a few activities. Organization of certain workers throughout the state as well as we were engaged in organizing, an organizing campaign in the warehouse industry at that time.

Q. Let me ask you this, Mr. Bridges, preparatory to another question: On the two previous hearings before Judge Landis in 1939, and before Judge Sears in 1941, or even in the preceding matter in 1937, had anybody ever claimed that you were at the Communist convention in New York City in 1936? A. Not that I recall. I don't think so.

Q. Well, did anybody say that they saw you elected to any Ceneral Committee or anything of that kind?

A. No, but I do recall there was some testimony —I forget which hearing—pretty ridiculous testimony, where I was at a convention. I presume that this is the same convention, but I [5437] was up on the stage and I was hiding behind a curtain, and only my nose was sticking out. Every once in a while they wanted to consult me on something, and they would run up and I never appeared before the audience, you understand, and he would run up and I was standing behind the curtain, and they would take up a question with me around the curtain; although the audience was there, all they could see was the curtain. So there was some testimony to that effect. I don't know if that referred to the Communist Party convention in '36 or '38, but that is the only thing that I remember that might have——

Q. Might even wink in this direction, is that right? A. That's right, yes.

Q. What I am getting at is this: Have you ever, up to the present time, been under any necessity of gathering records together or making a search of records to establish that you were in San Francisco in the week of June the 21st, 1936? A. No.

Q. This is the first time, all right. Now, have you made any effort, do you know, can you reasonably guess or estimate or tell where you were on the night of Friday, June 26th?

A. Yes, I was at the Labor Council here in San Francisco.

Q. All right. A. I know why, too.

Q. Well, just a moment. I am going to ask you that. Now, will you tell us what causes you to remember that you were at the [5438] Labor Council on June 26th?

A. When I heard the testimony here in the courtroom, when I heard the testimony here that I was supposed to be in New York at that particular time, I immediately recalled for very good reasons that I was here in the Pacific Coast around that time. Here is the way the dates go: We had our Maritime Federation convention and our ILA convention in San Pedro, and that Maritime Federation convention ended, and I returned back to San Francisco around June the 15th, around that time. I knew that I had to be in Seattle on July 10th, and I was in Seattle on July 10th, and I left here around July 6th or 7th. The reason I knew it, I was running for the presidency, the Coast presidency; the elections were on and I was doing a little campaigning. So I well remember, as well as other reasons. So the only dates that I had to start checking on, I knew as soon as the evidence came out here, because those dates were fixed in my mind, July 10th, when I was installed in office in Seattle, of '36, and June the 15th, when I returned here from the San Pedro convention of the ILA and the Maritime Federation of the Pacific. So when I heard that testimony, immediately it occurred to me, well, that could only be in that period of time. Then the next thing I recall was the meeting was being held, the Labor Council, the day before the Stockton meeting. This all happened here in the courtroom; as soon as I heard that testimony, because I remembered having gone to the meeting in [5439] Stockton.

Q. So you had only three weekends?

A. That's right.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. That the Stockton meeting must have occurred in?

A. Right. June the 20th, the 27th or July 4th.

Q. But why? What made it come into your mind that you must have been at Stockton in that period?

A. Because I remembered two or three things. No. 1, I was running for office as Coast president. I was campaigning. I was—I held the proxies for the Stockton unions. I was duty-bound to make the report to those unions after coming back here from the convention. So I not only had an independent recollection of having been at Stockton, but I knew that according to the rules of our union, that as long as I held the proxy of those locals up there, I was duty bound to make a report to those locals from the convention, see? But I remembered the Stockton meeting and started to run-down that date after I remembered the Labor Council, because at that period of time the Labor Council was pretty active and pretty important to us. We had, for example, the whole hardware warehouse industry here in San Francisco on strike. We were organizing the hardware industry, and that was on strike. At the same time we were engaged, we were taking the lead—that is, myself and some others in the ILWU and other unions—we were taking the lead advocating a drive to organize the agricultural workers in the United States. [5440] We had done so much work on that, that some of the office of the State Federation of Labor finally agreed for one reason or another that the drive would go ahead. And I was concerned at that time with seeing that two particular people that we didn't think so much of, for certain reasons, were not put in charge of that organizing drive of the agricultural workers. The two people were named Fred West and J. B. Nathan. Both of them had been involved in the original organizing effort on the waterfront of the longshoremen and two of them, both of them fell in the category that I have described here, where we thought that they were trying to horn in on the organization on the waterfront, even though they were not longshoremen. Then the next time they would pop up, after a certain amount of activity, they were going to start an organizing drive of agricultural workers, even though neither of them was an agricultural worker.

So these are the things that brought it to my mind. And I remembered that period of time, because it could only happen in those three weekends, of the Labor Council meeting Friday night. I remember the start or the announcement of the organizing drive. Ed Vandeleur—Vandeleur was the chairman of the State Federation of Labor, and at the same time, chairman of the Labor Council. There had been an agricultural conference also in Stockton. So I remembered being at the Labor Council and all I had to do was to find out, was it June 20th, 27th or July 4th. [5441]

Q. Let me ask you this, Mr. Bridges.

A. So I checked up on it and found out when it was.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Now, in one of the prior hearings, when the importance of this was not immediate or when there was no importance to this, do you remember—I haven't the volume right here, but we can get it out if necessary—that you testified that you did attend all of the Labor Council meetings that were held in San Francisco in this period while you were in San Francisco? A. Yes, that's right.

Q. We can find that piece of evidence?

A. I think so.

Q. All right. Now, I want to show you now some further documents here. We will have to go through this matter again.

(Documents handed to witness by Clerk.)

You have seen that photostat of the Stockton Record already, is that correct?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. Now, does that refresh your recollection as to the—well, wait. Withdraw that.

I want to show you at the same time (indicating) —I will show you at the same time the Voice of the Federation for that year, including the editions of July 2nd and July 9th. Now, look at the July 9th first. That little part that I indicated down at the bottom of the page. [5442] A. Yes.

Q. Do you see the date that is given there to the meeting in Stockton?

A. June 27th, Saturday night.

Q. All right. Now, and is that before or after the meeting took place? A. After.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. All right. That is in the edition of July 9th, 1936, and gives what information?

A. That I spoke at the meeting. I spoke at the meeting Saturday night, June 27th. That was a mass meeting of the longshoremen, ship clerks and bargemen and so forth, and that I was invited to speak at the Labor Day picnic they were holding Labor Day.

Q. All right. Now, turn to the photostat of the Stockton Record there, and will you tell us what, if anything, that refreshes your recollection concerning?

A. Well, it says that I will address the Stockton members of the Association tonight and this meeting will be in the Teamsters Hall, 421 East Miner Avenue, at 7:30 o'clock. Then it goes on to say, "Bridges is waging a campaign for Pacific Coast presidency of the ILA. Other ILA officers and candidates for district office to be heard will include Henry Schmidt, member of the Executive Board of the San Francisco local; Eugene Dietrich and Henry Schrimpf, members of the Executive Board of the Maritime [5443] Federation of the Pacific, leftwing organization of the waterfront workers. Walter Mahaffey, business agent for the Stockton ILA, this afternoon urged all members possible to attend the meeting."

Q. And what date is that? A. That is——

Q. Look at the masthead of the paper.

A. June 27th. This appears in the Stockton Record of June 27th.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. So now, Mr. Bridges, are you certain that around that time you did speak in Stockton?

A. I remembered speaking—I am certain, and I remembered. I was the one that remembered.

Q. No, just answer that question first.

A. Yes.

Q. You did remember before you saw these documents at all and you told us that you had gone up and spoken at Stockton on one of those weekends?

A. (Nodding in the affirmative).

Q. And are you certain now that you did go to Stockton and speak? A. Certainly I am.

Q. All right. Now, refreshing your recollection from those documents that you have just seen, those writeups in the paper, can you tell us what dates you spoke at Stockton?

A. I spoke in Stockton on June 27th, 1936, and I remembered [5444] speaking in Stockton as soon as I heard the testimony here. I was the one that remembered the Stockton meeting, and from there on, followed the search for these documents to guarantee the fact that I did speak there.

Q. You personally advised us to send someone to Stockton to look at the records there and find which of those Saturdays it was, isn't that correct?

A. I was the one that went to this file and went through the file of our union paper at that time and got out the story that showed that I had been speaking in Stockton, because I remembered speaking in Stockton as soon as I heard the evidence here in this courtroom. All I had to do was nail it down to what, whether it was June 20th, 27th or July 4th.

Q. All right. Now——

A. And it had to be a Saturday, you see. It couldn't be any other day in the week because every other day in the week I was busy. I had a meeting.

Q. Now, since this transpired, did you send over and have a search made of the records of the Labor Council to discover whether or not they had some record of your presence there and what was said and so forth?

A. I went over to try and get the roll call, because at the Labor Council they kept a roll call, a sergeant-at-arms.

Q. Were you able to obtain it?

A. No, I couldn't. [5445]

Q. Why?

A. Oh, they said they didn't have it or something. At least they didn't have the record, the record didn't go back any further than '41 or so.

Q. Don't you remember, they said they were soaked by water in the basement?

A. That's right; they said water had seeped into the basement, the basement had got flooded.

Q. Destroyed the record? A. Yes.

Q. But do you remember that in the Labor Clarion there is a record of a meeting having taken place on that night of the Labor Council?

A. Right. But my memory springs from the fact that we had a big important strike of the warehouse hardware industry at that time, as well as the other incident I referred to, namely, the agricultural drive that involved the later appointment of West and Nathan to head that drive, and those incidents took place at the Labor Council that night. As a matter of fact, there was a discussion about that, and I also remember another thing. It used to be a regular habit of ours after the Labor Council meetings, we would go away in a group to a restaurant or to a beer joint and have some coffee or beer and discuss these matters. And I first remembered the Labor Council because it was the Labor Council, the night prior to the Stockton meeting, [5446] that I recall knowing that I was going to Stockton in Willie Christiansen's car. The reason I remember that is because I came, I drove back from San Pedro with Willie Christiansen in his car. He had a new Chevrolet, I had a car—a Ford coupe at the time—and I had driven back along with some others from San Pedro after the convention, and Willie Christiansen's car was used and it was at the Labor Council that night, with Willie Christiansen—he was also a delegate—that I knew we were going to drive to Stockton the next day in Bill's car.

Q. Now, do you remember any of the incidents of going to Stockton and what transpired at the meeting, and what took place after that or anything of that kind?

A. I remember going up, I remember getting there, I remember having supper. We had supper in a restaurant right across the street from the old

Stockton Hotel, or down near the railroad tracks, I think, in Stockton. Then we went to the meeting, and I remember going out after the meeting to a nightclub of some kind. But all I remember about that was the incident with the spotlight, and nothing more.

Q. You do not remember the instance that was testified to concerning some men in full dress or matters of that kind?

A. No, no recollection. I remember the spotlight incident, and that is all. I remember going out afterwards and the spotlight incident, nothing more.

Q. Now, calling your attention (indicating) to the issue of [5447] the Voice of the Federation of July 2nd, 1936, can you tell us, can you refresh your recollection from that and tell us some of the points of your talk up there and some of the things that were discussed? If necessary, in refreshing your recollection, you can read them off, if that is the only way you can remember. [5447-A]

A. Well, the only thing I have an independent recollection of now—of course, it was important—the article says so—I reminded the Stockton membership I was a candidate for district president and hoped they would vote for me, and apparently they did because I carried these locals at that time. And I notice that in this column it mentions other things, and I have no recollection of these other items, but it would be the same things I would talk about. But the only thing I do have a recollection of was going up there and trying to line up a few votes for myself as coast president, and that column refers to that.

Q. Do you remember leaving the night club, what time you left or how you returned?

A. We drove back. I don't remember what time we left.

Q. Do you remember whether you came directly over to San Francisco, or what you did?

A. I remember the incident of having breakfast at Willie Christiansen's house.

Q. When? A. The next morning.

Q. Sunday morning. About what time would that be, Mr. Bridges? A. I don't remember that.

Q. At any rate, it would probably be in the early morning, is that correct? [5448]

A. That is right.

Q. Now, at that time in the year 1936 you say you went to New York in September and you also went in December, is that right? A. Right.

Q. How did you get there? A. Plane.

Q. From your experience what was the time that it ordinarily took to get from San Francisco to New York by plane in that year?

Mr. Donohue: I object, if your Honor please. I think he might well tell the time he left and what time he arrived in New York.

Mr. Hallinan: That is all I want, so far as his experience goes.

The Court: His own experience he may testify to.

Mr. Hallinan: They can bring in their logs and show exactly.

A. Well, as I recall it at that time, in '36, I would say 24 to 28 hours it used to take to get—the schedules might be one thing, but those planes are still having a tough time keeping on schedule. I made quite a few trips around in those days.

Q. Starting when?

A. Oh, after I was the coast president, because at the same time I became a national officer of the union and I used—it [5449] used to take me 24 hours to get to New York by plane.

Q. Why was that? A. And more.

Q. Where would they stop and where would they go?

A. The plane would go to San Francisco, San Francisco to Oakland, Oakland to Sacramento, Sacramento to Elko, Nevada; Elko, Nevada, to Reno, Reno to Utah, that is, Salt Lake City, and after Salt Lake City there were other intermediate stops—North Platte, Grand Island, Des Moines, and so on to Chicago, and then after leaving Chicago, Toledo, Cleveland, and so on down the line. They used to hop short distances, hedge-hop across the country. They were the old Boeings and later the DC-3s. And I remember those trips because they weren't very good. I had a bad case of stomach ulcers at that time.

Q. From the time you would leave San Francisco until the time you arrived in New York City flying by plane at that time, you had to count from 24 to 28 hours, is that correct?

A. That is the way I remember it.

Q. In one of the previous hearings there was some testimony that you gave relative to a talk with a man named Aaron Sapiro, who was a witness in the hearing against you? Do you remember so testifying?

A. I remember testifying with respect to Aaron Sapiro.

Q. You have read the transcript and that portion of your testimony. This is the hearing before—was it Sears or Landis? [5405] I see Miles G. Humphreys, so that would be——

A. That is the Landis. I can't be expected to remember all that transcript.

Q. You were asked about a meeting with Sapiro in June of 1936? A. Right.

Q. And the question was put, "Where was that meeting and what did you discuss, if you recall?"

> "A. I had more than one meeting with him in 1936. I met him in Los Angeles, I think I met him after June, 1936, in San Francisco, and later on in the year.
> "Q. I refer to the San Francisco meeting at the Hotel St. Francis. Do you recall that meeting?
>
> "A. I recall at least one meeting. I think there were more.
> "Q. Can you place that meeting? Was it in June or July of 1936?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

> "A. I would say the latter part of June, but more likely in the early part of July."

Now, I want to show you a document. The original of this has been marked for identification also. It is the minutes of the regular minutes of the San Francisco Bay Area District Council No. 2, held in Room F, Ferry Building, San Francisco, California, on June 30, 1936, Chairman Harry Bridges, Secretary Mervyn Rathborne, and I want to call your attention to a portion there alongside of which I have drawn a pencil mark, and [5451] then, Mr. Bridges, I want to show you minutes of a regular meeting of the same organization on June 23, 1936, Chairman Harry Bridges and Secretary Mervyn Rathborne, and show you something on page 7, alongside of which I have drawn a pencil mark.

A. That is right.

Q. You notice that one of those documents refers to the fact that Aaron Sapiro has been retained as an attorney in some piece of litigation?

A. Right.

Q. And the other one refers to the fact that Mr. Sapiro will address a meeting of the organization on June 26, 1936, is that correct? A. Right.

Q. Taking your testimony given in the Landis case with the statement of Sapiro's retention and the fact that he addressed that meeting on June 26, 1936, can you make some sort of approximation as to when it was that you had the conversation with Sapiro in San Francisco that you testified to?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. I think it was Friday, the morning of Friday, June 26th. I think that could also maybe be nailed down. The matter that I discussed with Sapiro, in addition to the Modesto matter, I specifically had a discussion with Sapiro, who had a legal matter on hand at that time. It had to do with the Sailors' Union of the Pacific, and I was protesting his legal approach to that [5452] matter, in separating the Sailors' Union of the Pacific from the other two maritime unions, that is, the Firemen and the Cooks, because those three unions had always dealt as a group through the ISU, and I thought it was unwise, legally unwise as well as unwise from the trade union point of view, for him to separate the sailors from the other two, and that was in the courts here before the NLRB at that time, and it was the day that he was proceeding on that or filing it.

Q. Take a look at that document; that is Defendants' Exhibit V-1. What is that, Mr. Bridges?

A. These are the minutes of the regular membership meeting for Monday, June 22nd.

Q. No, look at it again. It is minutes of the reconvened meeting of June 22nd, but held on what date?

A. Oh, that is right; June 29th. It is a continuation. It is a reconvened session of the meeting of June 22nd held on June 29th.

Q. In other words, the exhibit Defendants' S-1, which are the minutes of the regular meeting held at the Scottish Rite Auditorium on Monday, June 22, 1936, was adjourned and carried over to the subsequent date: "The chairman added this meeting would be reconvened next Monday night to take up unfinished business." That is the next to the closing line on the meeting of June 22nd.

A. The meeting was not adjourned then; it was recessed.

Q. So that this Exhibit V-1, then, is the reconvened session [5453] held at the Scottish Rite Auditorium on Monday night, June 29, 1936, and states, "Continuance of session held Monday, June 22, 1936. Meeting called to order by President Bridges at 8:15 p.m.," and the meeting adjourned at 11:10. So then on Monday night, June 29, you were at the ILA reconvened meeting, Scottish Rite Auditorium, from 8:15 to 11:10?

A. That is right.

Mr. Hallinan: This one has only been marked for identification, your Honor. We offer it as Defendants' Exhibit next in order; that is V-1, the minutes just identified.

Mr. Donohue: In the light of your Honor's ruling we offer no objection to it.

The Court: It may be marked in evidence.

(Minutes of 6/29/36, previously marked Defendants' Exhibit V-1 for identification, were received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Will you show him that?

(Defendants' Exhibit V-1 was handed to the witness.)

Will you tell us what that document is, Mr. Bridges?

A. Minutes of regular meeting of San Francisco Council of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific for June 30, 1936. These are the minutes signed by Rathborne.

Q. And were they kept similarly in the ordinary course of business as you have identified the previous minutes?

A. That is right. These are the official minutes kept in the files. [5454]

Mr. Hallinan: We offer them in evidence, if the Court please, as defendants' exhibit next in order.

Mr. Donohue: Likewise and for the same reason we have no objection, if your Honor please.

The Court: They may be marked in evidence.

(Minutes of 6/30/36, previously marked Defendants' Exhibit W-1 for identification, were received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): So these are the minutes of the regular meeting of the San Francisco Bay Area District Council No. 2, which would be the same one as is marked on Tuesday, June 23, Chairman Harry Bridges, Secretary Mervyn Rathborne. Meeting called to order at 8:18 p.m. The roll call shows ILA 38-79, Bridges present, and the meeting adjourned at 11:57 p.m.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. The Council met every Tuesday night. That is a membership meeting. The Executive Committee met at other times.

Mr. Hallinan: Might we take the recess at this time?

The Court: Yes. We will take the recess, ladies and gentlemen of the jury. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions or circumstances.

(Recess.) [5455]

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, I have two documents, Mr. Bridges, marked defendants' for identification A-2 and X-1, and I will ask you to take a look at them and see if you can identify them.

(Documents handed to witness by the Clerk.)

A. One of them, X-2, is the minutes of the Executive Committee of District Council 2 for July 1, 1936, signed by Rathborne, and the other, A-2, are the minutes of the regular meeting of the longshore local executive board for July 1, 1936.

Q. All right.

A. Signed by Henry Schmidt, secretary pro tem, also countersigned by Ivan F. Cox.

Q. So then on Wednesday, July 1st, there were two meetings, one of the Executive Committee of the District Council at 268 Market Street, Harry Bridges, Chairman, and Mervyn Rathborne, secretary. The roll call shows Harry Bridges present, representing the ILA. It involved a consideration of the July 5th memorial services and you recognize the signature as being that of Mervyn Rathborne, is that correct? A. That's correct.

Mr. Hallinan: We offer it in evidence as Defendants' exhibit next in order, if the Court please.

Mr. Donohue: I assume, your Honor, it will be admitted subject to the same objection we made before?

The Court: It may be marked in evidence.

(Whereupon, Defendants' Exhibit X-1, previously marked for [5456] identification, was thereupon received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): And the other document which you identified, Defendants' A-2 for identification, is the minutes of the regular meeting of the Executive Board of the ILA held Wednesday, July 1, 1936, at 8:30 p.m., is that correct?

A. That's right.

Mr. Hallinan: And we offer this, then, as Defendants' next in order.

The Court: So ordered.

(Whereupon, Defendants' A-2 previously marked for identification, was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): So that at 11:00 a.m., on Wednesday, you were present at a meeting at 268 Market Street, of which you were chairman and which adjourned at 12:45. So it ran an hour and 45 minutes. And that same night you were chairman at a meeting of the ILA Executive Board.

commencing at 8:30 p.m., and adjourning at 12:18 a.m.? A. That's right.

Q. Now, we have no record that will establish your whereabouts on July 2, 1936, but we have two documents here, one already introduced in evidence, being Defendants' E-2, being the minutes of the meeting of the Longshore Labor Relations Committee of San Francisco, July 3, 1936, called to order at 10:00 a.m., and adjourning at 12:35. And this document was a record of the employers' group already introduced in evidence, and shows [5457] that you were present at that meeting, and for the Employers' Association: F. C. Gregory, Allan Boyd and James Cribbin; and for the ILA, Charles Connors, R. Goulet, J. Creary, H. R. Bridges and J. E. Hogan. And among other things this document states that Mr. Bridges discussed the possibility of using the radio to broadcast orders for gangs, but no action was taken.

Now, I want to show you the other document marked Defendants' Z-1 for identification (handed to witness by the Clerk).

A. These are the minutes of the Executive Committee of District Council 2 for July 3rd.

Q. All right.

A. Meeting called to discuss the July 5th parade.

Q. And who was the secretary of that?

A. Signed by Rathborne, his signature appears there.

Q. All right.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Hallinan: We offer Defendants' Exhibit Z-1 for identification in evidence as Defendants' next in order, if the Court please.

The Court: It may be marked.

The Clerk: Marked Defendants' Z-1 in evidence.

The Court: Subject to the same objection heretofore made.

(Whereupon, Defendants' Exhibit Z-1 for identification was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, the next day, then, was Saturday, July 4th, and I have a document here on the July 5th celebration, [5458] but this appears in the Voice of the Federation of July 9, 1936. Do you remember if you did officiate, having refreshed your recollection from some of these papers, at the ceremonials held on July 5th of 1936?

A. Definitely. In 1935 and '36, that is, within the two years after the '34 strike, the July 5th demonstration was a big affair, and I was bound to be there, separate and apart from my own recollection, because I would not have been excused from participation in that particular parade or demonstration.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, I don't intend to go through that.

Q. But, at any rate, you officiated at the parade on July 5th, and then I have a final document, the last one being marked Defendants' B-2 for identification. And it is on Monday, July 6, 1936, minutes of the regular meeting of the ILA, meeting called to order by President Bridges at 8:10 p.m., and adjourned at 10:35 o'clock.

That is still marked for identification, but I don't think we have to bother going beyond the one week to prove that matter further.

Mr. Hallinan: I might also say that with regard to the date of 6/26, that is, Friday, the 26th of June, 1936, I can refer counsel to the addition to the Labor Clarion, which can be found in the San Francisco Labor Council library, the issue of 7/3/36, at page 10, which shows that minutes of the 6/26 Labor Council meeting, that shows that it lasted from 8:15 [5459] to 9:05 p.m. That was an Executive Committee that reported on resolutions and so forth, and by consulting that you can make some check upon the holding of a meeting on Friday, the 26th. But from the information we get, the minutes of that have long since been destroyed by water and are not available now.

Mr. Donohue: May I say to your Honor that the Clarion itself would not be admissible in evidence. I am sure that no search of mine of the Clarion would make it any more admissible. I move the statement just made by Mr. Hallinan be stricken from the record.

Mr. Hallinan: I only suggest that as giving counsel an opportunity to check upon it. If he doesn't want to, he doesn't have to. We are not concerned if he does or not.

Q. Now, Mr. Bridges, in view of the fact, and unless all sorts of things are denied categorically and eliminated, people think a tacit concession has been made to the truth of them. You have already stated that the incident that was narrated by Schomaker of a meeting in a restaurant between you, B. B. Jones and himself, which resulted in your signing an application for admission to the Communist Party, that that meeting never occurred, nor anything like it, is that correct?

A. That's right, it didn't.

Q. Now, in the meeting that took place with relation to injuring as to the activities of Norma Perry, was that a meeting just of union members engaged in determining whether there was [5460] some espionage ~~as~~ regards their union activities, or was that a Communist meeting?

A. It was a union meeting. That is the only way I remember it. No need for it to be any other type.

Q. Now, you remember Schomaker's testimony that some time late in 1935 or early 1936, your first wife, Agnes, was injured by falling from a window and that you asked him to go up and get your book so that if the "snooty" reporters came around, they wouldn't find it. Did any such incident as that ever take place? A. No, no.

Q. And with regard to your wife, now, concerning the testimony that was given before the Court at the time you were admitted to citizenship, some sort of affidavit was presented, not introduced, but shown to the judge; do you remember that incident?

A. That's right.

Q. But prior to that time and prior to the divorce from your wife, your wife had furnished an affidavit for use in these deportation proceedings denying all of the things that were contained in that second affidavit, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. And had testified in the divorce case in accordance with the statements in her first affidavit, isn't that so?

A. I think—she was asked certain questions. I think there is a record of that. [5461]

Q. Well, if so, it is in the affidavit?

A. She was asked about signing that statement, and in the divorce proceedings a part of her defense was that she had given these statements, so forth, without any pressure, voluntarily, of her own free will, and so forth, as I recall it. I think, however, that there is a record of all those things.

Q. Now, you have already stated, you have already discussed the meeting at Jack Shaw's house.

A. And let me say this much. On the Communist Party book, there is an alleged Communist Party book of mine in the possession of the Immigration Service. It was introduced in a hearing, into evidence at one of the prior hearings.

Q. What name was on that?

A. Dorgan, I think—Harry Dorgan, one of the books was under the name of Harry Dorgan. It was introduced in one of the prior hearings. The Government has still got possession of it, and at that time there used to be a character running around here manufacturing so-called party books of mine and peddling them for $500. Now, the Government has got a copy of one of those books, and they can produce it if they want to.

Q. Was that a book ever issued to you?

A. Never, never. It came about, as I have described, because a particular person here in San Francisco in the labor movement told me about it and told me how he and some other people around here were stung by this fake character. Mr. Boyd's friend, [5462] Stanley Morton Doyle. Mr. Boyd was just interviewing him a couple of months ago in connection with this case.

Q. Is he the man who was selling the books?

A. Yes. Not Boyd—that is Doyle.

Q. Now, with regard to the alleged resolutions and directions that Schomaker says were transmitted from him to you, emanating from Sam Darcy, did Schomaker ever deliver to you any instructions or resolutions or recommendations that Sam Darcy was supposed to have given him for use in the 1934 strike?

A. Well, certainly not in that form. Not that I can ever recall. I can't ever recall Schomaker coming along and saying, "Now, look, here's what Darcy orders, proposes, instructs," or so forth. The best that Schomaker could ever do on that committee was to get up as a member of the committee and make a motion. And if the people agreed with him, his motion was carried; if the people didn't agree, his motion didn't carry. That is the way our union is today. People get up and they are supported on the basis of the program or idea they propose, or they are not supported. And that is the best that Schomaker could ever have done all during that strike. The minutes of the strike committee will show that we—various people appeared before the strike committee and made propositions. They were debated, accepted or rejected by the strike committee as a whole. And there was no instructions at any time that I can ever recall, in no way, from Sam Darcy or the Communist Party. [5463]

Q. And you say that Sam Darcy used to come down to the waterfront and help out in the strike, and gave the use of the printing press, and that the Communist Party put up some money for food and things of that kind, is that right?

A. That's right. Now, insofar as Sam Darcy coming down to the waterfront in the '34 strike, so much. I said I recall his first coming down there as a speaker, soapboxing in 1932. And, of course, I remember seeing him around in 1934. I seen him on two or three occasions. I have a couple of occasions in mind. I am pretty sure that Darcy came down, and it is also my recollection with Ross, I think, in the early part of the strike to make the proposition on the Waterfront Worker. I recall talking to Darcy on at least a couple of other occasions during the '34 strike because they are fixed in my mind by certain events. So that is what I meant by Darcy being around. [5464]

Q. Now, after the president's board had made a recommendation, did you take that question as to whether it should be accepted up with Darcy and Schomaker out near Candlestick Cove, Lambert, and one or two other people?

A. We had agreed and voted to accept the recommendations or the decision of the arbitration board before the arbitration board had made a decision. We were bound—in other words, the return to work was coupled to an acceptance of any decision that the arbitration board handed down. So there was no way out of that. We couldn't take that up with anyone, because we were bound by an agreement to accept the award of the board, and we may have worked under the conditions of that award, and the award was not put to a vote. It could not be put to a vote because we had already agreed beforehand. It was an arbitration award. So, therefore, the answer to the question, of course, is no.

Q. Mr. Schomaker also said that he, Mr. Schomaker, and Darcy discussed the formation of the Albion Hall group and you were present. Is that right?

A. Well, I have discussed the Albion Hall group.

Q. No, this is the formation of it.

A. No, the Albion Hall group—the Committee of 500 was formed, as I have told you and when I told you, in July. It was the Committee of 500 who got the name of Albion Hall group, because later on we held meetings in the Albion Hall. That was formed [5465] before Schomaker ever came on the waterfront, if he told the truth here in his testimony.

Q. Did you ever receive any instructions emanating from Sam Darcy and carried by Schomaker as to what you were to do with regard to the Ryan sell-out agreement?

A. No. I mean, that was very simple. It was not a question of what I wanted to do. The meeting was called—after all, I was only the chairman of the San Francisco local. We had a Northwest strike committee covering two States and we had the Southern California strike committee.

Q. That was the meeting at which you say the membership unanimously rejected such a settlement agreement?

A. And we had delegations from a half dozen unions up there. We had a delegation from the Sailors' Union of the Pacific, a delegation from the Firemen's Union, the Marine Engineers, and the Masters, Mates and Pilots. All those unions sent special delegates to our meeting at that time on June 17th and urged us to reject that agreement and urged us to remain on strike until they had secured recognition, and an agreement, and urged us to return to work, if we ever returned to work, as a group, as a united body.

Q. Schomaker also says that he transmitted some instructions to you as to the manner in which you should conduct yourself before the National Longshore Board. Did any such thing as that occur or were you born that way? [5466]

A. I guess I was born that way.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Did you need either Mr. Schomaker or Mr. Darcy to tell you how to conduct yourself in the meeting before the board?

A. There were two hearings. There was the hearing before the board when it was sitting as a board of arbitration, and there were hearings of the board held in this courtroom here in July of 1934. Now, I remember representing my union right here in this courtroom when the board was here, and I didn't have any orders as to what I should say. I knew what to say. I was speaking as a representative of the union, and I was able to speak also as a practical longshoreman.

Q. Did you ever attend any meeting that was a Communist Party meeting? A. As such, no.

Q. Did you ever attend any meeting at which any information was conveyed to you or you had any intimation that nobody but Communists were supposed to be present at it?

A. No. Well, it all depends now on what you mean. No, I never attended. I was going to give you an example. I had in mind something else, but not in that form.

Q. In other words, I am not talking about a meeting now such as Krolek described in which labor leaders were asked to participate or talk, but any meeting which you understood was supposed to be limited to Communist members, so that the other members would have any reason for assuming that you were a [5467] Communist.

A. No, not in any meeting where I knew in advance or during the meeting or had any understanding at all that it was exclusively a closed meeting or a Communist meeting as such, and I distinguish between such a meeting now and, for example, say a delegation of official officers of the Communist Party might come up to see me in my office. There might be two or three of them, and they are all Communists, and I know it. My office is open to them. Everybody knows that. If it is a question of union business they want to take up with me or anything at all.

Q. What would a matter like that be? Can you give us an illustration of some problem in which you might be engaged, in which a meeting of that kind would be held?

A. Well, for example, not so long ago the officers of the local—I think the local or the State Communist Party came around and asked if they could see me about a matter, and they came right into my office. They were sitting outside for a while, while I was busy on something else, and later on they came in. There was two or three of them. What they wanted at that time was to see if they could get authorization or permission from me to have their candidates for political office appear at our local union meetings. So all there was to that discussion, I said I wasn't in charge of such matters; they would have to ask the local unions directly; they had control of such matters. [5468] That was one thing.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

They have come around on various other matters, and I can't specifically recall them all at the moment, but I could, with possibly a little thought. And that is all there was to it. Now, a meeting like that or a conference like that, a delegation visiting me in my office or something like that, I didn't have any reference to that one. I was referring to so-called Communist meetings. That is not the way I understand it.

Q. Delegations to consult you about some matter or seek your assistance where they felt they were being oppressed or unjustly treated or something like that, I suppose?

A. It might be anything. I don't know. It might be anything. It is no secret. It is no secret. I have discussed this before in prior hearings. I have never made a secret of it that any time I thought in my official capacity as president of the organization or as an officer of the organization I had to meet with anyone or confer with anyone, I have done it. I didn't understand there was anything wrong with it, and I will probably continue to do it, unless it is illegal or something. It might not be—well, what happens is this: It is not considered maybe too politically wise. I might avoid it for that reason, because it might represent the general viewpoint of my membership. But now I am describing what has happened in times gone past and what I have in mind when I describe a [5469] meeting, a Communist meeting——

Q. There are enough timid people. Keep on doing what you have been doing. Now, did you ever meet that Manning Johnson that was up here?

A. Never met him in my life.

Q. While he did not profess to have seen it or been there, he said during the 1934 strike you, Stachel, Eisler and Browder used to meet secretly in San Francisco. Did any such thing occur?

A. I never met Browder until 1936. The first time I met Browder was here in 1936, when he spoke at the Dreamland Auditorium, when he was speaking as a presidential candidate. That was the first time I ever met Browder in my life, and since then I think I met him once.

Q. How about Eisler?

A. All I know about Eisler is what I have read in the newspapers.

Q. You knew Wilson, who testified here?

A. George Wilson, yes.

Q. He was head of the Bridges Defense Committee for a long time, wasn't he?

A. Secretary, yes.

Q. How long?

A. He wasn't head; he was secretary. Oh, two or three or four years. [5470]

Q. And he said he attended some sort of meeting with you that was a Communist meeting. Would your answer be the same touching that one as you gave on he other so-called Communist meetings?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. That is right. That is right. He knows—he well knows that is not the case.

Q. Can you tell us whether or not you ever did attend any sort of meeting at Herman Mann's house which concerned Norma Perry?

A. No need for that. Well, my memory may not be as good as some of the witnesses', but I have no specific recollection of attending any session at Herman Mann's house on any occasion on anything, Norma Perry or anything else. However, I can't recall at this time any particular date, unless there is something to fix it by, and the recollections I have of the meetings I referred to with respect to Norma Perry—I think they are in our union headquarters, not in anybody's house. No need for them to be.

Q. These people, Mann, Schomaker, Schrimpf, Perry, were all employees of the ILWU, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. So what reason would there be for going any place else?

A. None that I know of; none that I know of. The question of Norma and the scuffle over her—it might not have been exactly common property throughout the union at that time, but [5471] it was known by more than just a handful of people.

Q. Did you ever have any such meeting revolving around the lady at 121 Haight Street?

A. No. I was at 121 Haight Street two times in my life, and I can recall those occasions.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Now, with regard to Lawrence Ross, did you ever attend any meeting at Sokol Hall that you can remember?

A. No, I never was at Sokol Hall in my life, not that I can recall, at any time, for any reason at all.

Q. So in the early fall of 1935 you have no recollection of being at Sokol Hall where 40 or 50 people were present, including Schneidermann, Hanoff, Oleta O'Connor, Black, Schomaker, Lambert, Schmidt and Ross, is that right?

A. I am about as vague on Sokol Hall as Ross himself, and that sure was vague.

Q. There was a discussion about a trip you are supposed to have made in June of 1934 with a group of other people who went down to a prune orchard in Santa Clara to meet Browder. Did anything like that happen?

A. That is the Kincaid ranch, Cupertino. That is an old chestnut from my previous trial. The answer is no. I have heard about that one before. No such meeting. No prune orchards.

Q. There was some collection of documents to discover if it could be established where you were on the Sundays in the month [5472] of June, 1934, somewhat similar to the research to establish your whereabouts during the month of June, 1936, is that correct?

A. With this difference: I didn't need any documents to know that I wasn't there. The other place I remember that I was there. I don't need to have any documents to know I wasn't there. I know I wasn't there.

Q. We have here copies of letters and matters of that kind that have been introduced in evidence or offered for identification relating to your whereabouts on the four Sundays of June, 1934. At least, at this time I am not going to bother to——

A. I remember what I was doing on some of those Sundays because I have since looked at the documents and refreshed my memory on them, but I have no independent recollection as to where I was on those Sundays. I have a very good recollection as to where I was not, and one of the places I was not was the prune ranch or orchard.

Q. How about a meeting near the Harding golf course at which Henry Schrimpf was called upon to express his critical faculties on the proper conduct of the 1934 strike, together with Larson, Jackson, Schomaker, Perry, Darcy and Walter Lambert? Did you ever have any such meeting as that? And to put it a little more closely, and even poetically, around dusk?

A. No. I mean, it is ridiculous. All of those people there [5473] except two were members of the union, members of the strike committee, and what would we be poking around at Harding golf course at dusk for during the 1934 strike?

Q. Maybe you were stealing golf balls.

A. It is absolutely ridiculous. We didn't need any such meetings. I don't know.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Was there anything to prevent Darcy, who seems to be the only one here who was not a member of your union, was there anything to prevent Darcy from coming into your union headquarters and talking to you if he wanted to do so?

A. Not particularly. Our attitude on those matters is pretty well known. Jackson you have there —Jackson, incidentally, was an organizer for the MWIU, and was seated as a fraternal member of our strike committee. Walter Lambert—I think he was a member of the AFL union at that time, the Cigarmakers seem to connect up in my mind. So the only purpose of such a meeting—and I know Lambert; I first met him in 1933, as I recall, a good trade unionist, and the only purpose of that meeting—I can't figure out what the purpose would be. If the idea is the purpose of that meeting was to tell us how to run the strike, that is as much a pipe dream as all the other stories. We were running our strike, and apparently we were making a pretty good job of it, and we didn't need any advice. That I remember. We needed help; we didn't need advice. I draw a line between advice [5474] and help.

Q. People like Jackson and Walter Lambert, if they were members of the Communist Party, and the fact that they are identified by people such as Schomaker, Ross and the others would cast considerable doubt upon them, were also working men interested in the strike itself, is that correct?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Donohue: I object to that question. Mr. Hallinan will be given ample opportunity——.

Mr. Hallinan: We will withdraw the question if it is objectionable.

Mr. Donohue: It is objectionable.

Mr. Hallinan: If you don't like it we won't force it on you.

Q. Then Mr. Krolek had some other meetings at a studio building on Park Street, and from his astounding memory he gives the date as the second week of June, 1937. Have you any recollection of such a meeting? A. Where?

Q. Portland, at the Studio Building on Park Street, the second house from the left.

A. No. I was in Portland possibly around that time. We had our convention. The Maritime Federation convention was on in Portland at that time, so I was there. We had a lot of meetings. I don't know what I would be doing on Park Street. It was more likely some of the meetings he described in our hotel rooms. We would have plenty of them, but they were in connection [5475] with our convention, and so forth.

Q. Some of these people that have been presented in here you would expect to find on Park Street feeding the squirrels. How about 121 Haight Street? He said two weeks after the Long Beach meeting in May, 1936, while he and two other men waited in the corridor, he could look in the door and see you and Henry Schmidt in the office of

Mr. Schneidermann. Did anything like that take place that you know of? Have you ever been up to 121 Haight Street with Mr. Schmidt to meet Mr. Schneidermann?

A. No. I have been in 121 Haight Street twice, and both of those times were in 1934. I was not in the building after that. I was never in 121 Haight Street since 1934 for any reason at any time, any purpose whatsoever. Anybody that says otherwise, they are making a mistake or they have a reason.

Q. Previous inquiries have been made here as to whether or not you should be expelled from this country for all the bad things that are narrated here. You heard that you enlisted in the Communist Party under the name of Harry Dorgan. When is the first time you heard that you were enlisted under the name of Comrade Rossi, if at all?

A. I think that was testified to—it was either in the hearing before Riley or in the Landis hearing. I think either Riley asked me that question or it was testified to in the Landis hearing. [5476]

Q. Any contention made that you had been elected to the Central Committee of the Communist Party under that name or any other name at any of those hearings or were you ever questioned in relation to them?

A. Not that I recall, outside of the incident I related this morning, if that in fact referred to that convention. I can't recall. However——

Q. Did you ever meet this Russian brigadier general Crouch before he planted his form on the stand there, Mr. Bridges?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. No. I remember the incident on Gypsy Rose Lee.

Q. But not Mr. Crouch's being in the audience?

A. No.

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, I will have a few more questions, not many more.

The Court: We have reached the adjournment period, Mr. Hallinan. Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, we have several matters to discuss in connection with the future of the case, that is, so far as the court days are concerned, and this Court this evening will stand adjourned out of respect to the memory of the Most Rev. James T. O'Dowd, late bishop of San Francisco, whose untimely and tragic death has been brought to our attention within the last week. The services are to be held tomorrow morning at the cathedral. Accordingly this Court will adjourn out of respect to and for his memory.

Tomorrow afternoon Mr. Mitchell has some matters for the [5477] Court to attend to in connection with other pending cases, and Monday we shall take the legal holiday.

Therefore we will separate this evening and meet again next Tuesday, February 14th, at 10:00 o'clock. Is that clear to everyone now? Next Tuesday, February 14th, at 10:00 o'clock.

In the interim, separated as we are, may I again admonish you not to discuss this case under any conditions, in your home, socially or otherwise. We are reaching the closing stages and as has been indicated by counsel, and it is particularly important during the closing stages, during the arguments, during the instructions, during the closing matters of evidence, to refrain from any discussions at all. I have given you that admonition persistently and constantly. I again admonish you with respect to newspapers and the radio. Accordingly, this Court will adjourn as indicated.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to Tuesday, February 14, 1950, at 10:00 o'clock a.m.) [5478]

February 14, 1950—10:00 A.M.

The Clerk: The United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

The witness on the stand is Harry Renton Bridges, heretofore sworn.

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES

resumed.

Direct Examination

By Mr. Hallinan:

Q. Now, Mr. Bridges, you are shown a press release with a signature on it. Whose signature is that? A. My signature.

Q. Have you seen the document before?

A. Yes.

Q. Now if you will look at it, Mr. Bridges, you will see that it is a press release announcing the period for July 5, 1936, is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. And the document itself says that some resolution was passed on the 30th of June. Do you notice that? A. That is right.

Q. Now, it also asks that it be printed in the Friday paper. Do you notice that?

A. That is right. [5479]

Q. This is your signature and a release that was put out by you, is that right?

A. It is an official release that we put out at that time from the San Francisco Council.

Mr. Hallinan: We now offer in evidence Defendants' Y-1 for identification.

Mr. Donohue: No objection.

The Court: It may be marked in evidence.

The Clerk: Marked Defendants' Y-1 in evidence.

(Defendants' Exhibit Y-1 for identification was received in evidence.)

Mr. Hallinan: Now, the document reads as follows. It is on the letterhead of the San Francisco Bay Area District Council No. 2, Maritime Federation of the Pacific, Room 145, 268 Market Street, San Francisco, California. Harry Bridges, President; Mervyn Rathborne, Secretary-Treasurer; Harry Hook, Vice President. From the letterhead

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

I take it that the document is written on a piece of stationery no longer in use; that isn't the address any more, nor the persons who are officers, is that right? A. That is right.

Mr. Hallinan: It reads this:

> "Official Release by District Council No. 2 for Friday's papers.
> "On Maritime Memorial Day, July 5, 17,000 of San [5480] Francisco maritime unions will pay tribute to the seven union men who were killed on the Pacific Coast during the maritime strike of 1934.
> "The San Francisco Bay Area District Council of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific Coast, at a regular meeting held on June 30, requested its 27 affiliated unions to take part in the observance of July 5. The day will be commemorated by a parade of several thousand seamen and longshoremen; a memorial meeting at Civic Center and services at the graves of Nicholas Bordoise and Howard Sperry, two union members who were killed by police on a picket line at Mission and Steuart Streets on July 5, 1934.
> "The line of march for the parade will begin at noon, will be on Market Street from the Ferry Building to the Civic Center. The memorial meeting will be held at 2:00 p.m. The spot where Sperry and Bordoise fell will be decorated and a guard of honor will be posted during the day.

"The San Francisco Bay Area District Council has invited trade unions and friends of organized labor to participate in the observance of July 5. Similar services will be held in Seattle, Portland and San Pedro.

"San Francisco Bay Area District Council No. 2, Harry Bridges, President," and signed "Harry Bridges." [5481]

Q. Now, to pick the day on which this release was sent out, Mr. Bridges, it asks that it be printed in Friday's paper, and it discusses that on June 30 the resolution was made to put that out, so that this paper then was obviously put out either on Wednesday, July 1, or Thursday, July 2, is that correct?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if your Honor please. It is leading and argumentative.

The Court: It is argumentative, but I will allow it.

A. It was our practice to put out such release the day before it was to appear in the press. It wouldn't be put out on Wednesday, because Wednesday night—I wouldn't think it would be put out on a Wednesday, because Wednesday night we would wait for the approval of the local union as to the Council's action.

Mr. Donohue: I move that the answer be stricken, if your Honor please, as apparently an attempt to give what was a common practice and not inquire as to what specifically was done in this instance.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Hallinan: I think there is a presumption of law that the ordinary course of business has been followed, so that if he says that that is the fact, that the ordinary course of business was to put it out the day before, that would be some evidence to that effect.

The Court: Motion denied.

Mr. Hallinan: I have another document (handing to witness). [5482]

The Witness: These are the minutes of our District Executive Board; that is, the Pacific Coast Executive Board of District 38, ILA.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): And what does that show? There is only one matter that I am interested in. Those are the minutes of the meeting or convention that started on July 10, 1936, where?

A. In Seattle, Washington.

Q. At Seattle, Washington. And that is one of the incidents that you used to refresh your recollection or determine whether you were in Stockton in 1936, is that correct?

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, I object to the use of this paper. It is a mimeographed paper, unsigned, and therefore we are denied the right to cross-examine whoever may have——

The Court: It is asked for the particular purpose of refreshing his recollection——

Mr. Hallinan: That is all.

The Court: ——as to the week-end events?

Mr. Hallinan: That is all. [5483]

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Let me ask you this, Mr. Bridges: Have you had that document in your possession or in the possession of the union ever since its execution and ever since it was drawn up?

A. Yes, I don't know—yes, I saw these minutes in the Landis hearing, because the point came up then as to where I was at this time. It came out, I think, in connection with something else, but this is when the board met, July 10th, 1936, in Seattle, Washington. The purpose of the meeting, amongst other things, was to install me as the new Coast President. I had just been elected.

Q. And does that recite that you were installed as the new Coast President?

A. Amongst other things. These are the minutes. The Board at that time was required to count the ballots, that is, to check the ballots, and in addition to installing the new officer, that is, the new president and secretary and the new members of the executive board, and that was the purpose of this meeting.

Q. Now, Mr. Bridges, there has already been introduced in evidence here minutes and records showing the convention in, was it San Pedro?

A. That is right.

Q. That ended some time in June?

A. That is right.

Q. All right. And then this is the—these are minutes of the subsequent convention that you went to in July in Seattle, on [5484] July 10th?

A. That is right.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. So the three weekends in between would enable you to direct research to the Stockton local to find out if you had been up there on the 27th of June, 1936?

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor pleases, every question Mr. Hallinan is asking Mr. Bridges, who is on direct and not on cross-examination, is a leading question. I submit——

Mr. Hallinan: Well, that one is somewhat leading. I will withdraw the question.

Q. Mr. Bridges, now you remember that documents were put in here. Is there any question that documents were put in here evidencing the convention that was held in San Pedro ending in June? What was the name of that convention? What organization was that?

A. Maritime Federation of the Pacific.

Q. And that followed some other convention, is that right?

A. International Longshoremen's Association convention.

Q. And they were held in San Pedro?

A. Right.

Q. All right. And ended approximately when?

A. Around the 12th of June, the last one.

Q. And then the next thing that you have a document of, the next convention or meeting out of San Francisco, is this meeting or this convention in Seattle, Washington, starting July [5485] 10th? A. That's right.

Q. All right. And then——

A. I went to this convention, I left here, went to Portland, and Mack Meehan, who was the new coast secretary, we drove up from Portland to Seattle, got into Seattle the night of the 9th and registered at a hotel called the New Richmond. We tried to check the record of that hotel since; they haven't got it. But I remember it now because I was reminded of it by Meehan, to whom I was speaking not so long ago, and he said, "Don't you remember that night? We were only able to stay at the hotel a couple of nights and then we had to leave because there was a convention on and the hotel was sold out, and we had to go and search all over town for another hotel, because every hotel was filled up on account of the convention."

Q. And then since Crouch and Johnson testified that you were in New York on the 27th of June, 1936, an effort has been made to see if that hotel's records were still preserved, but we have been unable to locate them, is that right?

A. The New Richmond Hotel in Seattle, yes.

Mr. Hallinan: Might I have the document again, please?

Mr. Hallinan: Now, we will offer that document in evidence, if the Court please, as Defendants' exhibit next in order.

Mr. Donohue: I object to it for the reasons stated, if your Honor please. It is a mimeographed document, and unsigned. [5486]

Mr. Hallinan: Well, that doesn't mean anything.

Mr. Donohue: We are denied the right to cross examine whoever might have signed it in order to question the authenticity.

Mr. Hallinan: You can question him.

Q. Let me ask you this: You say this document was also introduced in the Landis hearing or referred to?

A. I don't know if that is the particular document; a similar document was introduced.

Mr. Hallinan: The only purpose——

The Court: Mr. Hallinan, other than to establish the purpose of his presence at that time, has the document any other purpose?

Mr. Hallinan: No.

The Court: I will allow it for that limited purpose; not the contents thereof.

Mr. Hallinan: The only purpose is to show that he was inducted into office in July, July 10th of 1936, at Seattle.

(Thereupon minutes relating to 7/10/36, ILNU, referred to above, were received in evidence and marked Defendants' Exhibit F-3.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): So to finish this particular subject now, Mr. Bridges, the documents that you have introduced here, that you identified, in addition to what is contained in the document—is your recollection refreshed that on Monday, the 22nd of June, 1936, you were chairman of an ILA meeting at the [5487] Scottish Rite hall on the evening of that day? A. That's right.

Q. All right. And on Tuesday, that you were chairman of a meeting at the District Council No. 2, Maritime Federation of the Pacific, held at the Ferry Building from 8:20 to 11:50 p.m., is that right? A. Right.

Q. And is your recollection refreshed that on Wednesday, the 25th of June, 1936, you were chairman at a meeting of the ILA executive board that adjourned at 9:15 because there wasn't a quorum? A. Correct.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, all these questions are leading. This witness is under direct examination, and I object to it.

The Court: Well, probably it is a resume.

Mr. Hallinan: That is all, yes.

Q. Now, as far as the arrangement that Mr. Silk and Mahaffey testified, and Christensen testified, occurred on Thursday, the 25th, have you any independent recollection of those? A. None.

Q. Don't remember those. But now, on Friday, the 26th of June, is your recollection refreshed by the documents that you have seen and the previous testimony given that you were present at a meeteing of the Labor Council in San Francisco on the night of [5488] Friday, June 26th, 1936?

A. I remember that for the reasons stated, the hardware strike, as well as making the arrangement to drive up in Christensen's car.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. And taking the testimony——

A. As well as, incidentally, the other item that I recalled that was important to us at that time, the beginning of the drive to organize the state agricultural workers; and we was concerned because two of the principals involved in that, one Fred West and J. B. Nathan, we had had experience with them in the waterfront drive in '34 and——

Q. You testified to that already.

A. And '33, yes.

Q. Now. And you had testified in a previous hearing in the Landis case before any question came up about being back in New York that you had a conversation with a man named Aaron Sapiro, and taking your previous testimony as to the time, plus the document that was shown you for your recollection as to Sapiro making a talk before one of the union bodies on the 26th of June, 1936, is it your recollection that it was on that day that you had the conversation with him?

A. I think so.

Q. All right. Now, looking at the document, refreshing your recollection by the documents that have been introduced here, the newspaper announcing the date of it, the Stockton Record, [5489] the Voice of the Federation, stating that the meeting was held on the 27th of June, 1936, the document from the union showing that the payment for the rent of the hall was made on Monday, reflecting back to that day, the letter from Mahaffey to the Voice of the Federation stating that you, Christensen and Schmidt had talked at Stockton on the night of Saturday, January the 27th, are you certain that you did speak at a meeting at Stockton on January 27th? A. Right, I am.

Q. Now, taking Sunday, June 28th; do you remember you stated already that you remembered having breakfast at Christensen's home the morning after you came from the Stockton meeting, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. And refreshing your recollection from the ILA record that has been introduced in evidence here, is your recollection now refreshed that on Monday, the 29th of June, 1936, you were chairman at a reconvened meeting of the ILA, held at the Scottish Rite Hall, which was reconvened from the preceding Monday, June the 22nd?

A. That's right.

Q. And then on Tuesday, the 30th of June, reading the document, the union record that has been introduced in evidence here, is your recollection now refreshed that on that night you were chairman at a meeting of District Council No. 2, Maritime [5490] Federation of the Pacific?

A. That's right.

Q. All right. Then on Wednesday, July 1st, is your recollection refreshed by the document that has also been introduced in evidence that that evening you were chairman of a meeting of District Council—no, this was in the afternoon; one was in the morning and one was in the afternoon—the District Council No. 2 at 11:00 a.m., and chairman of an executive board meeting of the ILA from 8:30 p.m. to 12:45 a.m. that night?

A. That's right.

Q. And then the document that I have just introduced here, the press release, undated, about calling attention to the parade on Sunday, July 5th, and stating that a resolution had been passed on Tuesday, June 30th; does that refresh your recollection that it was on Thursday, the 2nd of July, that that press release was issued? A. Right.

Q. And then finally, on Friday, the 3rd of July, is your recollection refreshed by the documents that were introduced that you attended the—well, if you can read that, you are better than I am—on—oh, yes, the Longshore Labor Relations Board, from 10:00 a.m. to 12:35 p.m. and an executive board of District Council No. 2, Maritime Federation of the Pacific, from 3:12 p.m. to 4:25 p.m.?

A. That's right. [5491]

Mr. Hallinan: I think I will move that out of the way now.

A. (Continuing): Plus the fact that those times, no officer of the local union was allowed to leave the city without permission from the local. And if such permission had been sought for and granted, it would have been a matter of record in the minutes. We had a strict rule that no officer on the payroll could leave his work. He could go away on Sunday, maybe, out of the city, but during the working hours that he was paid for during the week, if he was on the local payroll and the law is still in effect, he was not able to leave the city and leave his work without express permission of the local, voted by the membership.

Q. Now, you spoke here the other day about the FBI tying in on calls and tying in particularly on a teletype message that you have, and you have seen this document that I am showing you here, this long teletype message? A. Yes. [5492]

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, we object to the use of this piece of paper, first, on the ground that it is immaterial to any issue in this case, and, secondly, I think it will probably take an expert to explain the system——

Mr. Hallinan: No.

Mr. Donohue: ——in order to determine exactly what purpose is sought to prove.

Mr. Hallinan: We will have it identified first by Mr. Bridges.

Q. Now, will you explain just what that document is that you have been handed?

A. It is a teletype paper. That is one of the sheets of paper that come off the roll on the teletype, from our files.

Q. Will you tell us briefly what a teletype is and how it operates, in case some of the jurors might not know precisely what it is.

A. I will have to think just how to describe a teletype.

Q. I am taking you away from the book.

A. Well, it is a machine that—established in a place of business or an office where an operator employed by an agency such as Western Union types out messages and it appears on a paper like this. That runs on a roll, so that you stand around and look at it or get the message, and it is like a typewriter operating with no one at the keys, that is, when you are receiving a message. When you are sending a message someone sits [5493] at the teletype and types away just like you would on a typewriter, and the message goes out over the wires to the person who is receiving on the other end. And there is relay stations in between, I presume—I don't know—but generally it operates, you want to put in a call, it is like sending a telegram, you just sit down at the typewriter in your office or the teletype in your office and type out the call number. Each teletype station has got a call number. You type out the call number, and when you get connected, then you just type your message. These companies charge you not on the number of words but on the amount of time you use teletyping. We have this teletype in our organizations all over the country, as well as other organizations have teletypes. Sometimes we talk directly. And sometimes we get them all on the line, which is known as a conference call. This here reads that I had a conference call. We have sent out word that we want a half dozen stations on the line at once. In that way you kind of have a union meeting—you have a union meeting by teletype; you have got a group of union officers, you might say, standing around the teletype in each union office, and we started to talk to each other by this method. And in this case there was someone with me in New York, Washington, D.C., Seattle, Los Angeles, and other places.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Donohue: I object to any reading or any description of what is contained in the paper until your Honor rules on it.

Mr. Hallinan: He isn't doing that. He is just telling the [5494] customary thing.

Q. In other words, members of the union would be standing at the rolls, I suppose, and the same message would be coming over each wire on each station, and each one could read it as it revolved and came out of the machine, is that correct?

A. That's it. You send the same message to, say, half a dozen union officers at the one time.

Q. Is that the original paper that came out of the machine at the time we are discussing?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you present as that was coming out of the machine, as the messages were being written, or would you remember, or do you happen to know?

A. Well, I am trying to figure out where I was present. I could be present at any one of five or six stations.

Q. Let me ask you this—I will have to read it: When you put a statement in there from Operator; in other words, when an operator cuts in, is that an employee of the ILWU, or is that a telegraph company operator?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. That is the teletype company operator. "Operator" means the company's operator. When our employee talks, we give our own number.

Q. Now, would that person who would come in as operator be an employee of the union?

A. No. [5495]

Q. Now, you said in your last testimony, your recent testimony, that during the course of certain teletype conversations that you had, the operator stated that the FBI were coming in on the conference. Do you remember giving that testimony?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, is that the original record of your statement, interrupting the conversation between union members?

A. At least this is one of them. I think we have others, but this is one of them.

Q. Does it show on that teletype just what the operator said on that subject? A. Yes.

Mr. Hallinan: We offer it in evidence, if the Court please.

Mr. Donohue: Objected to for the reason stated, your Honor; that it has no pertinency to any issue.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Donohue: As I said before, it would take an expert to explain it.

Mr. Hallinan: The places mentioned are marked with pencil marks on the side.

The Court: I will sustain the objection, Mr. Hallinan.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Hallinan: Very well. We will offer it for identification.

The Court: It may be marked for identification. [5496]

The Clerk: Marked G-3 for identification.

(The document was marked Defendant's Exhibit G-3 for identification.)

Mr. Hallinan: If counsel wants to use it, he may do so; we don't care. It is only substantiation of what has already been testified to.

Q. Now, Mr. Bridges, you heard the testimony of Lawrence Ross that he saw you present at a Communist convention in Fresno at one time. Do you remember that testimony? A. Yes.

Q. Were you ever present at any Communist convention at Fresno?

A. No, that was—that convention was—that same question came up in the hearing before Sears, I recall. The convention was held on Saturday just before or after Christmas, so we couldn't get it nailed down. It was the only date around that month where I couldn't prove my whereabouts, so that date was carefully selected. I think it was Sunday, the 24th or 26th of December of 1935. So I was never at the convention, and it was hard to prove that I was somewhere else because I couldn't get that date—I had nothing to show that I was elsewhere on that particular date.

Q. With regard to the testimony of Michener

as to a meeting of Communists that was held in the Sunset District—did you know Michener?

A. Yes. [5497]

Q. Did you ever attend any Communist meeting with Michener in the Sunset District or any other place?

A. No, not as such, no. I have attended a lot of meetings with Michener, but not in the way he describes them or not a meeting as you describe it now.

Q. What is your relation with the Reuthers?

A. Well, if you mean do we see eye to eye on certain matters——

Q. I mean, is there a grave hostility, or what is the situation, just briefly?

A. We don't agree.

Q. Now, with relation to the testimony that he gave concerning the transfer of the presidency to one of the unions from a man named Connolly who had been elected to some other person, would you tell us what that was.

A. That was purely and solely my idea. I decided——

Q. As I understand it, according to Michener, Connolly was a member of the Communist Party, and you made some suggestion of transferring the presidency of this organization from Connolly, who was a Communist, to another man who was not.

A. That wasn't my purpose. That wasn't so. The reasons that I wanted the change was for other reasons entirely. Connolly had just been elected president of the San Francisco—I mean of the California State Council. We were approaching the 1944 Federal elections, that is, the national presidential elections. It was my idea, and I got to work on this even before we went [5498] to the Philadelphia convention in 1943, that we should broaden the leadership of the State Council. There was quite a few complaints being raised, separate and apart from whether the complaints had any merit to them or not, that the State Council was too much one way in terms of leadership. So I thought, Well, if that is the case, let's make the leadership all-inclusive in terms of the unions represented in the leadership. So, even though Connolly had just been elected president shortly before, I approached Connolly as well as a couple of other people and put forward my idea, because right from the start—that was nothing new; when we first set up the State Council in 1938 I made the same approach, to have broad leadership, right, left and center, in the State Council. And that is a matter of record.

So when we got back to the Philadelphia convention, the first person I talked it over with and got complete agreement wasn't Phil Murray at all, it was Sidney Hillman. And when I explained the purpose of the move and why, Sidney Hillman not only agreed to it but supported it wholeheartedly. I discussed the matter with Jim Thimmes, as well as with Connolly. It is true that Michener didn't agree with it. And of course another person that didn't want any part of it was Rathborne. As a matter of fact, as a result of the switch, he just disappeared for two or three weeks, went on a drunk or something. And I know that he eventually sent me a picture with Thimmes, and [5499] being a little—trying to be a little sarcastic, he sent me a framed picture of Thimmes to put on my desk; with a Chinese back-scratcher—one of the wooden back-scratchers. So I talked the matter over back in Philadelphia with Sidney Hillman, saw Phil Murray on the matter, then I assembled a caucus of the entire California delegation—that is, all the delegates to the CIO convention from the State of California, all of them, and we discussed the matter there and I put forward the idea, the reasons for it, and got general agreement. And then we elected a committee to talk the matter over with Murray, so that he would understand what it was all about, and that was done. So the whole idea of that was that—it was my idea, no one else's—purely for trade union purposes, purely with the idea of strengthening the union and the State Council, purely with the idea of greater unity and greater solidarity. Now, I remember that was the 1944 elections. My position was that 90 per cent unity wasn't good enough; we needed 100 per cent unity, and we wanted the lowest common denominator. And that was the purpose of that move, and the question of who was or who was not or might be or might not be a Communist,, had nothing to do with it at all. It is nothing new in trade unionism. We do it all the time. That is the whole story of that, and as far as anyone else having anything to do with it, no one else had anything to do with it. I was the Regional Director at that time, I was the president of [5500] same organization I am president of now. I thought of the idea, and nobody had to suggest it to me, order me or tell me what to do, or anything like that.

Q. Now, some talk has been had here about the position that the union took, or, more specifically, that you are alleged to have taken, with regard to certain policies of the national Government of the United States with regard, I think, to matters pertaining to war and things of that kind, and the inference has been raised that you followed what they call the Communist line. Could you tell us something about your position on the situation as the United States has been drawn into the European war?

A. Our union is against war. We are against war, always have been; no change; no change at any time. However, we are not pacifists. We do not follow a policy of pacificism, because we believe if you are attacked you must fight. That is true within our union. That is true with respect to any matter of war. However, the position of myself and the union is a matter of record on any one of these points, and instead of me depending upon my memory on any particular item like that at all, I can come here with the records, the minutes of our union conferences and everything like that. I can bring into court the records of how we have stood and what I have said officially as an officer of the union over the years on every one of those specific points. And if there was any truth at all to some of [5501] the accusations that have been made here by Mr. Donohue and others, if there was any truth at all, they certainly must be able to bring forward one simple example, just one, to prove their point. If they can do it I will be very surprised. On every item that I have taken a position on, on any matter of international policy, national policy, war and peace, and so forth, they are a matter of record in our union files, in our convention minutes, in our conference minutes, in our caucus minutes, in our union minutes, and so forth. And we have always taken a position on such matters as trade unionists. Many times we have taken unpopular positions—that is, unpopular at the time. I can think of many positions, but always our position has been based on what we thought was the best for our membership. Now, of course, we might have been wrong; we could have been wrong—I still don't think so, incidentally. We are not infallible. At all times, we thought we were doing the best thing for the membership of the union, and at no time did we see anything incompatible between—or that was incompatible in so far as the interests of our union are concerned and our country was concerned. We always operated on the theory that what was good for the membership of our union was good for the nation, and what was correct for the nation was correct for the membership of our union. And that went for matters of national policy as well as international policy. There is quite a few items along those lines. Sometimes we [5502] are being subjected to pretty severe criticism not only by agencies of the national Government but by the executive branch. Well, they didn't—such criticism didn't bother us a great deal as long as we felt we were right and as long as we were doing our best upon our own convictions upon matters of that sort. However, there has been many times—there has been quite a few accusations leveled against myself and other members of the union and the unions as a whole against positions we have taken, and all I can say about it is we have got the records on every single item; we have got the record of every position that we ever took. Name the occasion and the item and I can come in and show you with the official records the how and the why and the wherefore, how it was done, and so forth and so on, including at all times what position I took, because I was always—myself and other officers, that is, we always—it is our policy that we couldn't duck an issue; we had to speak up one way or the other; we had to be for or against an issue. We could never take positions such as some union leaders take that they will take no position, they will leave it up to the ranks. We always operate this way: that we would take the position, we would make the recommendation to the whole ranks, and then the ranks could accept or reject as the case may be, and many times because of that policy we have found ourselves in hot water as far as the ranks are concerned. We have taken a position on certain political [5503] questions, and we have taken a position of certain matters of international policy, and so forth, and that on numerous occasions our ranks did not agree with us at all. So what they did, they voted the officers down, and that was that. But at no time did our policy come from any other source than what we thought was best for our union. We operate as trade unionists always—at least, I always do, I am a trade unionist, and we have operated as trade unionists at all times and in no other way. [5504]

Q. Now, with regard to activities that took place, even before the United States was drawn into war, did you personally have anything to do with furnishing information to the United States Government of threats to our peace or security?

A. Only in the course of my work as an officer of the union, when the information came to my attention, I passed it on where I thought it would be helpful.

Q. What would be an example of that?

A. Years ago when we were first of all engaged in organizing the aircraft plants in Southern California, we found what in our opinion were certain activities going on in those plants; as I recall it, we found that the Nazi Bund was holding meetings in the plants or on the job. We tried to get something done about such meetings. I personally on that occasion conveyed the information to the Attorney General at that time, who was Frank Murphy, later on Supreme Court Justice of the United States. Went to see him in his office in Washington. Then we complained about certain activities of the fishing fleet here on the Pacific Coast. Many of the fishing boats being manned by Japanese. We got the information, I forget how at the moment, but we were organizing fishermen, too; we got the information some of these boats were equipped with certain types of equipment that we didn't see where such equipment was necessary for the type of work they were supposed to do, namely, catching fish. So we sought to have that type of activity investigated by [5505] the government. It eventually was, I think, and we were more or less proven correct in that respect. There were some other activities. I can't exactly recall them at the moment. But I think they are a matter of record. With a little research work, I could dig them up.

Q. Did the ILWU or the predecessors take any position on loading scrap iron for Japan?

A. That is true. Not only in 1933 here in San Francisco in the Labor Council, but our union was one of the first acting upon the request of the German trade union leaders.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

In 1933, quite a few unions in the United States here,—I know the American Federation of Labor national organization received an appeal, and our union, amongst others, was appealed to by the trade union leaders of Germany who at that time were already behind the barbed wire in concentration camps. Our union was appealed to by them to boycott German goods, because the trade union leaders pointed out that the goods that were being manufactured at that time by the workers of Germany were being used to build up Hitler and his whole political regime and his war machine. So we raised the question here in San Francisco in the Labor Council, in the San Francisco Labor Council, in 1933 for a boycott of German-made goods. It wasn't a very popular idea at the time, at least not right then. It got to be a little more understood later. Shortly after that, around 1934, '35, in '35 specifically, we opposed the shipment of war [5506] materials to Italy. That was during the war—that was during the invasion of Ethiopia by Italy. And at one time here in the city of San Francisco, the city garbage wagons were sent around the city to get scrap iron, mainy brass and copper and things like that. And that scrap iron was hauled down and placed upon the docks and it was consigned to the Italian Red Cross, part of Mussolini's government. We refused to handle that type of cargo. We considered it blood money on the docks here.

And from 1935 on, around that time, on every occasion that we could, the men on the waterfront not only in the port,—and these activities were not just confined here to the port of San Francisco, they were coastwise in scope, the longshoremen, they didn't need any particular urging. It wasn't a question of their officers asking them to do it, they felt that way themselves. They did everything they could to refuse to place aboard the ships the scrap iron; in addition to scrap iron, there was all kinds of other materials going to Japan. Scrap iron was one of the main items, but there was oil, that is, gasoline and lubricating oil, there was airplane engines and airplane parts, certain types of ammunition and things like that.

So for a period of years the workers on the waterfront in the city that they considered that they were loading ships and material for Japan that would eventually come back the way it eventually did come back, and I can recall when we first of all engaged in these programs, number one, we were [5507] severely criticized from many, many directions and sources for engaging in such activities. Such activities were called Communistic, the fact that the union engaged in those activities was part of the charges against me in the previous trials; in other words, that was a ground being urged for my deportation, that only a Communist would advocate such things, or only a Communist organization would advocate such things. But generally speaking, it was the official attitude of the union, we thought we were doing right, and although we were severely criticized by some branches of the government of that time, the workers still kept on doing it and we haven't changed our opinion yet as to whether we were right or wrong. We think we were right.

Q. And those criticisms, for instance in the 1939 hearing, were before the United States was drawn into the war? A. That is right.

Q. Now——

A. And our position never changed. Our position never changed before the war, during the war or after the war, with respect to any of those governments, any of those aspects of the war. At no time.

Q. Now, did you ever do what has been described by one of the major authorities on the subject, the Russian brigadier general Paul Crouch, as a flip-flop?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if Your Honor please. [5508]

Mr. Hallinan: Well, that is a description of him, isn't it—Russian brigadier general?

The Court: The objection is sustained.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, he lost his rank through a ruling there, so we will put him down to just Mr. Paul Crouch.

Q. There was some discussion that you, particularly, took these 70,000 members of your union into a flip-flop. Do you know anything about that? That is, after Germany attacked Russia?

A. The position of the union and myself—and after all, we have to think of the position of the union; my position doesn't count, and without my union I am an individual. Nobody worries anything about what I do or say. There was no flip-flop in our union, and if there were, such things don't bother us. We do what we think best to do. And maybe it can be considered a flip-flop, but lots of times we change our strategy, we change our pace, we change our strategy, the only part we have in mind at the time is, "Will it be good for our union?" And again I say that we have never had any other thought in mind than that anything that is good for our union —because the majority of our union members are American workers, and we think it is good for the country as a whole. We operate that way. I know of no flip-flops. I don't know of any time that the union engaged in any flip-flops. I don't know of any time that the officers engaged in any flip-flops. And if anyone has got any evidence [5509] of such flip-flops, again, I will be mighty surprised if such evidence can be produced. I am talking now in terms at least of evidence of a documentary nature or of some people that can be believed. I will recognight that people can be produced who will testify to anything for a few dollars. I don't mean that type of evidence.

Q. Let me ask you this: Did the union have any difficulty with Schomaker within recent years?

A. Yes.

Q. What did that stem from?

A. Schomaker wanted us to set him up in business. Schomaker was in the business of—he had a business after he came back from the Seabees of making——

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. What year would that be, do you remember, approximately?

A. What I am talking about, the time that I am speaking of, was around late '46 or the beginning of —well, the early part of 1947.

Q. And then what took place, what conversations did you have with him or——

A. Schomaker had spent quite a bit of time during the war years in Hawaii. Our organization was organizing Hawaii. One of the problems we have to meet in Hawaii is the question of low-cost housing. Our union has been very active in Hawaii trying to work out ways and means to develop a constructive program of low-cost housing. The problems that stand in the way largely is [5510] the question, first of all, of the availability of land. There is very little land available in Hawaii. That is, land that is not owned or controlled by certain economic interests down there. You build a house in Hawaii, you can't buy the lot; all you can do is lease it for 99 years. So we have been engaged for some time in trying to, as I say, make available to the working people of Hawaii some low-cost housing.

Schomaker was in business after he came back from the war, of building cement blocks which are used for building houses. He had had a chance to observe the situation in Hawaii, so he came around to our union with a program to have the union set him up in business in Hawaii to build houses. He wanted us to finance him. He had the machinery all ready and if we financed him, he agreed that he would sign a note to repay the money, and in addition, we would get a cut; that is, the officers would get a cut on the profits of 10 per cent or something. Well, Schomaker was down to our headquarters, him and his wife were down at our headquarters, 604 Montgomery Street, around '46 or '47. He didn't speak to me directly on the matter, that is, in detail. He was sitting outside in the reception hall when I happened to come in, and said hello, and spoke to him and he outlined what he was after. And I kissed it off by saying, "Well, that's Lou Goldblatt's department; he is the secretary-treasurer." And later on they seen Lou Goldblatt. I had gone out in the meantime and was coming back, and I run into Schomaker and his wife [5511] as they were leaving the building at the foot of the stairs. Then I said, "Well, how did you make out?", meaning, "How did you make out with your program with Lou Goldblatt?", who was the secretary-treasurer of the union. So Schomaker kind of sneered, and he said, "No good." Said, "I guess there's not enough left after you fellows get through with it." Now, the remark—I didn't pay much attention to it at the time, but the remark meant, in view of the conversation I had had with him shortly before meeting him at the foot of the stairs—he had explained the proposition to me and was trying to enlist my support of the proposition. And later on, see, Schomaker's remark at the foot of the stairs meant that there was no money in the—no money to spare to finance him, that after we had got through getting our cut out of the funds of the union, there was none left over for him. That is what he meant at the time.

Q. Well, now, coming to that, Mr. Bridges, what is your present salary from the union?

A. $135 a week.

Q. $135 a week; and how long have you been getting that? A. Since 1947.

Q. And prior to that what was it?

A. Oh, I forget. Let me see. I think it was— I think it was $115, and that——

Q. And that was since when, 1945?

A. Our convention meets every two years; the convention sets [5512] our salary. So the best way to go at it would be the other way. Our salary, the salary of all of the officers, and I am the highest paid officer of the union, was $75 a week up until, I think, 1943.

Q. $75 a week?

A. 1943. There was a raise, I believe, to $90 from 1943 to 1945. There was a raise from $90 to $115, I think, from 1945 to '47. And in '47 it was raised to its present amount. And in '45, in the '47 and '49 convention, our '49 convention took place last April, the '47 and '49 convention, the officers opposed any salary increases for themselves.

Q. Now, have you personally held down the salaries of all the officers, including yourself, during all that time, to an amount less than what the member wished to pay you?

A. No, not necessarily, no. We have a rule in our union that the officer can't receive salaries out of line with what the average member receives, or another way of putting it, there are men in our union that work on the job and receive more money in salaries—not many of them, a minority of the union, that is—that receive more money working on the job than the officers of the union receive. And at best you might say the way our union functions, we can't, the officers of the union can not receive more money than some of the members of the union might receive working as workers.

Q. Well, take your present salary of $540 a month. Is it [5513] possible that a man working, a man working in the union, could earn a much as that?

A. Oh, we've got quite a few that earn more. I say, that is what I was trying to explain that we haven't—the rules of the union provide that the officers can not receive more than the highest paid worker in the union, let us say, and we've got quite a few people in the union that earn more than the officers.

Incidentally, they are not the average worker on the job. They work in some capacity, as a boss or a supervisor, like a walking boss.

Q. Yes. Do you own your own home?

A. After another twenty years of payments I will, I hope.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Do you know what it cost originally?

A. $14,000.

Q. And about how much is still owing against it?

A. Oh, around nine, I think, ten.

Q. And do you have an automobile?

A. I have.

Q. What year? A. 1940.

Q. What make? A. DeSoto.

Mr. Hallinan: Might we have the recess at this time?

The Court: Yes. We will take the recess, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you, not to discuss the case under any conditions nor to form an opinion thereon.

(Recess.) [5514]

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, Mr. Bridges, laboring a little point on that meeting with Sapiro on Friday, June 26, 1936, I want to show you a photostatic copy of the minutes of the San Francisco Bay Area District Council No. 2 of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific and ask you if you can identify that document. It was offered for identification before, I think. No. This is what it is (exhibiting document to counsel)—the one for the 23rd, relating to Sapiro.

Do you know what that document is? That is the photostatic copy of the minutes of that organization for what date? A. June 23, 1936.

Q. June 23. Will you look at that page and read that blocked part. What does that relate to?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. "Dietrich reported there will be a special meeting of the Modesto defense committee on Friday, June 26, at 2:30 p.m. to Hansford Building."

Mr. Donohue: I don't think he can read from the document.

Mr. Hallinan: I want to refresh his recollection. I will offer it in evidence.

Q. These are the regular minutes kept in the regular course of business of the union, are they?

A. Yes, these are the official minutes.

Q. You are familiar with this book of minutes, are you? A. Yes.

Q. Who are they signed by? [5515]

A. Mervyn Rathborne.

Mr. Donohue: I object, if your Honor please, unless they are offered for some specific purpose.

Mr. Hallinan: I will tell you the reason. We want to see if we can more definitely pin down the conversation with Aaron Sapiro to Friday, June 26.

Mr. Donohue: Then I object, if the Court please. He can refresh his recollection——

Mr. Hallinan: You asked me to state the purpose. Permit me to finish. These are the minutes of June 23.

The Court: I understand. That one excerpt, Mr. Bridges, does that refresh your recollection, by reading that reference to the minutes?

The Witness: Reference as to what?

The Court: As to the meeting in the afternoon with respect to Aaron Sapiro.

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, I want this for another purpose besides refreshing his recollection.

The Court: All right, proceed.

Mr. Hallinan: I will tell you what it is.

The Court: Proceed.

Mr. Hallinan: This one is dated June 23. It says Sapiro will address a meeting on June 26. I want to follow it with the minutes of June 30 showing that Sapiro was employed as an attorney to represent these men although it doesn't [5516] give the date on which he came in, but it is obviously some place between the 23rd and the 30th.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Hallinan: It will heighten the inference that it was on the 26th that Mr. Bridges had a chance to talk to Mr. Sapiro. That is my purpose in offering this particular set of minutes in evidence, merely to support the inference and to support the witness' recollection, which he only has refreshed by these documents, that it was on that day that he had the conversation with Mr. Sapiro.

I want to show afterwards that he did testify that he had had that conversation on or around that time, at a time when there was no question of his having been in New York on that date, so that it would bring it within the rule of what they call recent fabrication, to take away any such supposition.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, the mere statement by Mr. Hallinan that it will perhaps heighten an inference obviously would negative any possibility that these documents are admissible in evidence.

Mr. Hallinan: I think you can heighten an inference—why not?—you can support, add to it. The documents do this. They are documents made in 1936. That is 14 years ago.

The Court: Mr. Donohue, have any objection with respect to the documents themselves apart from the matter you state? [5517]

Mr. Donohue: No, if they are used for the purpose of showing, at least in so far as the document may show it, that Mr. Bridges was some place as he states in the stated alibi, I would have no objection, but for any other purpose I do object.

Mr. Hallinan: That is our only purpose.

The Court: Apparently Mr. Hallinan is seeking to correlate the events with the conversation had with Mr. Aaron Sapiro, who was then representing an organization or certain persons charged with a crime. Is that the purpose?

Mr. Hallinan: Exactly.

The Court: You may proceed.

Mr. Hallinan: We offer them both in evidence for that limited purpose.

The Court: They may be received for that limited purpose.

Mr. Hallinan: I also want to call to the attention of Mr. Bridges, upon the matter of possible alleged recent fabrication, that in the hearing before

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Judge Landis, Dean Landis, in 1939, and in the hearing before Judge Sears in 1941—and it must be understood, if the Court please, that in neither of those two hearings was it contended that he was in New York attending the Communist convention, so there would be no necessity of fabricating a date—that he testified to being present at the Labor Council meeting, inferentially the one of the Friday, the 26th of June. And that is the sole purpose of this evidence. [5518]

Mr. Donohue: No objection.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Then, Mr. Bridges, in 1939, in the hearing before Dean Landis, do you recollect this testimony by you:

> "A. Friday evening was Labor Council night. The record of the San Francisco Central Labor Council will show my attendance on every Friday night I was in San Francisco all during '34, '35 and the major part of 1936."

Do you remember giving that testimony?

A. Yes, I remember that, and the reason for that testimony was this: In the 1939 trial we had drawn up a calendar of my movements for every day going back over the past five or six years, back to 1933, and in the course of drawing up that calendar we had inspected the minutes of the Labor Council. So that testimony was pursuant to the knowledge that we had at that time, that the book of the Labor Council, roll call of the Labor Council, would show me present at every night when I was in San Francisco.

Q. And then importantly too in 1941 before Sears the same proposition arose:

> "A. Oh, yes, I think that was around 1936 some time.
> "Q. Now, how often would the San Francisco Labor Council hold meetings?
>
> "A. Every Friday night.
> "Q. Did you attend all those meetings until the time you [5519] resigned?
> "A. Every one. As long as I was in San Francisco I never missed a meeting."

That was your testimony?

A. Again, it was the rule of our union that if you was a delegate to the Labor Council you were bound to show up, and you couldn't be excused unless you were working or you were ill.

Q. And so far as you know, the records of the Labor Council which now have been destroyed because of leakage into the basement were then in existence and could be consulted?

A. That is correct; they had been checked.

Mr. Hallinan: And I might say that there is added significance in this in that the witness Manning (Johnson) testified that he was present ready to testify in 1941 and was not called. And I think that this has some bearing upon his testimony, too, as to whether he had informed the authorities——

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

The Court: You made one error, Mr. Hallinan. You referred to Manning; the man's name is Manning Johnson.

Mr. Hallinan: Manning Johnson.

Mr. Donohue: I move to strike that statement, if your Honor please.

The Court: The motion is granted.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): You also stated here on your last examination that in one of the previous hearings a Communist membership book had been presented by the Government, and I [5520] call your attention to this statement made in the Landis hearing in 1939.

Mr. Donohue: I object to the statement being read, if your Honor please.

Mr. Hallinan: It is just to show that there was such a book, not presented in evidence, but stated by the Government to be in its possession and offered for identification.

Mr. Donohue: It has no bearing here, if your Honor please.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Hallinan: Mightn't it have this bearing? I was going to ask them to produce that book and let us take a look at it. It must be still in their possession, since they presented it at that time. And the only thing that I want to read here is the statement made not by Mr. Bridges but by the attorney for the Immigration Department on that hearing.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Donohue: I am not bound by a statement that he made.

Mr. Hallinan: No, but the Department is, it seems to me. I might ask now: Where is that book?

Mr. Donohue: I never saw any such book.

Mr. Hallinan: I wouldn't assume that Mr. Donohue had, but somebody connected with the Immigration Department must still have it.

The Court: You make formal demand for that book?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

The Court: Upon Mr. Donohue as an [5521] attorney?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, and these other attorneys here.

The Court: As far as the reference is concerned, I sustain the objection.

Mr. Hallinan: Very well.

The Court: The demand is made, for whatever significance it may have.

Mr. Hallinan: Very well.

The Clerk: At this point, if your Honor please, may I call to Mr. Hallinan's attention that the two documents last offered, copies have heretofore been marked for identification on January 26 and both had been admitted in evidence on last Thursday, the 9th.

Mr. Hallinan: These two have already been offered?

The Clerk: They are in evidence as of the 9th.

Mr. Hallinan: I will withdraw the photostatic copies.

I want to just read one paragraph from each of these that bears upon the subject that we had in mind.

Mr. Donohue: Wait a minute.

Mr. Hallinan: First, Defendants' W-1 are the minutes of June 23, 1936, and they state: "Note: All delegates are urged to make sure that their organization's representatives to the special meeting of the Modesto Defense Committee to be held Friday, June 26, at 2:30 p.m. at room 220 Hansford Building, 268 Market Street. Attorney Sapiro will be present at this meeting. Do not fail to [5522] attend."

And then in the minutes of June 30, 1936, it contains the statement that Brother Pyle for a committee, reported for the Modesto Defense Committee, and states certain discussions that he had with attorney Sapiro and states that Sapiro has been retained to defend one of the men in the Modesto murder. And both of these documents are signed by Mervyn Rathborne as secretary.

And that is all that we have with Mr. Bridges.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. How much was your expense account last year, Mr. Bridges?

A. I don't know. I can produce the record.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. What is your best estimation?

A. I have no idea, Mr. Donohue. I think I can dig it up in the recess or at noontime, ask the bookkeeper to give you a detailed account. It is all a matter of record. I have got a bookkeeper; she knows more about a set of books than I ever knew.

Q. You have had an expense account for some time, haven't you, Mr. Bridges?

A. What kind of an expense account? We have——

Q. How many expense accounts do you have?

A. It depends. An expense account can be a train—train fare, airplane fare. An expense account can be a voucher we fill out. [5523]

Q. I understand that, Mr. Bridges. I am only concerned with the kind of expense accounts you have and the extent of such expense accounts.

A. I will enumerate them. I will enumerate them.

Q. I wish you would, please.

A. When the officers of the union leave town or go out of town, they are allowed a per diem as well as transportation expenses. The per diem is $14 a day. That is supposed to cover board and room. That is a maximum. It doesn't necessarily mean that you draw $14 a day, you may draw less. On many occasions the officers draw less, but if it costs you more than $14 a day, and many times it does, that is just your hard luck, plus as I say, train fare and plane fare. That is one form of expense account.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

We have an allowance for a car, depreciation, gas and oil allowance. That is another expense account.

Then we have a flat sum per week.

Q. What is your flat sum each week?

A. $25. That is all I get, no matter how much I spend, and believe me, I spend more.

Q. Would you think that your expense account was greater than your salary per year?

A. At all times. Wait a minute. What is that?

Q. Would you think that your expense account was greater than your salary in amount each [5524] year? A. No. You mean the $25——

Q. Your total expense. You travel a lot, don't you? A. No.

Q. You don't?

A. No. I probably travel least of any of the officers.

Q. Since the time of your indictment last May you have traveled a good bit, haven't you?

A. I have traveled more on account of the indictment. The membership wishes to know what's cooking, what you are trying to do, so they demand that I travel around and tell them.

Q. As a matter of fact, even before you were indicted you were in New York?

A. Yes, I traveled to New York upon numerous occasions, Washington, D.C., Hawaii, yes. I don't know—I mean "frequently" is a relative term.

Q. How much of your time would you say in the last year have you spent traveling?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Oh, figured on the basis throughout the year, last year was a pretty exceptional year, maybe about 15 or 20 per cent.

Q. Going back to this statement——

A. I have got records of those things, Mr. Donohue.

Q. I wish you would get them for me.

A. If you can name the item, I will ask the bookkeeper. We have got an excellent bookkeeper; she keeps wonderful records.

Q. I would like to know what your total expense was for all [5525] purposes, let's say for the last two years.

A. I couldn't tell you, but I will furnish it if you wish it. I will bring you the figures if you wish. I will give you the audit.

Q. Now, Mr. Bridges, going back to your testimony this morning about this incident concerning——

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. What do you want, the two calendar years of '48 and '49?

Mr. Donohue: Yes.

Mr. Hallinan: Or do you want two years back from today?

Mr. Donohue: '48 and '49. [5526]

Q. Going back to your testimony this morning about the removal of Mr. Connally, that was in 1943, wasn't it? A. That is right.

Q. Did you know at that time that Mr. Connally was a member of the Communist Party?

A. Not necessarily, no.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Well, did you?

A. No. Of my own knowledge?

Q. Yes. A. No.

Q. Do you know it today? A. No.

Q. You don't know that he is a functionary today, a paid functionary of the Communist Party?

A. No.

Q. How well did you know Connally?

A. I have known Connally very well over a period of years. He has been a personal friend in many ways, as well as done me certain favors—did certain favors for me. So I would say I know Connally pretty well.

Q. But it never came to your attention that he was a member of the Communist Party?

A. Oh, well, I have heard it said. I am operating now on the theory that you would ask me to state that positively, and my answer would be I really couldn't. Even now. Now, it is one [5527] thing to have someone say so-and-so is a Communist or something like that, but when you get right down to brass tacks and have to say how you know, or could you be sure, that is a different thing, the way I understand it.

Q. Did you ever sit in a meeting of persons, the admission being restricted to members of the Communist Party, at which Mr. Connally was present as well as yourself?

A. Not that I know of, no. The answer to that is "No."

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Now, you stated that the California CIO State Council was too much one way in terms of leadership. A. That's right.

Q. Did you mean too much Communist in terms of leadership? A. I didn't.

Q. What did you mean?

A. I meant too much old-time unions in the state, as against the newer unions that had grown. For example, the union I represent, we were around here before there ever was such a thing as the CIO. We were battling and organizing and fighting around here before CIO was born. I meant in the sense that the ILWU, that is, the Longshoremen & Warehousemen and certain other unions, they had been around here for many, many years, whereas, as a result of CIO, new unions had formed. And there was just too much of a tendency for the older unions or the older union members and officers to regard the new unions as Johnny-come-latelys and not extend to them a sufficient share in the [5528] affairs in the organization and the leadership of the organization. That is what I meant.

So my idea was to—Thimmes represented the Steel Workers Union. That was a union that wasn't organized until 1937. So it was more just a point of extending leadership to cover, to give the later unions, the unions organized after we were organized, a greater share of that leadership.

Q. And what union did Mr. Connally represent?

A. Guild, Newspaper Guild—also organized away before the Steel Workers.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Now, when did you first make up your mind that Mr. Connally should be removed?

A. Oh, I didn't make up my mind to any such thing. No one could remove Connally unless he wanted to voluntarily agree with the plan and resign. And I can't exactly say when. It is before I ever went to Philadelphia.

Q. Didn't you say this morning, "It was my idea"? A. Yes. My idea.

Q. Your idea? A. Yes.

Q. Now, is that the usual way in which you impress your ideas upon your rank and file?

A. I am not backward about impressing my ideas. If I think I have got a good idea, my rank and file knows that I go all out to try and sell it. And that is all that I can do. I try to [5529] convince them by argument and logic, and no pressure of any other type than that. So when it is a question of my idea, my rank and file knows that I work hard at selling them on the idea. I don't always succeed, you understand, but I try.

Q. But you continue, whether you succeed or fail, don't you, Mr. Bridges?

A. No, that is not so either. When the rank and file says, "Wrong," and then when we make a decision I have to change; change or get out.

Q. Well, now, did you sometimes make decisions without consulting the rank and file?

A. Not necessarily no.

Q. Well, did you consult the rank and file in your decision about Connally? A. Yes.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. When? A. Back in Philadelphia.

Q. Well, now, who was in Philadelphia with whom you consulted, representing the rank and file?

A. I assembled the entire delegation from the state of California and in that sense I meant that I consulted the rank and file. I don't think it is truly consulting the rank and file in being able to go to a meeting of the rank and file, in that sense, but in terms of the elected delegates, that is what I had in mind. [5530]

Q. Let's see how truly it was representative, Mr. Bridges. How many delegates were there from California to the CIO convention in 1943?

A. I don't know. A matter of record.

Q. What is your best judgment?

A. I don't know.

Q. Were there two or twenty?

A. Two or twenty?

Q. Yes. A. Oh, closer to twenty.

Q. Closer to twenty?

A. I would think so, yes.

Q. About how many do you think would constitute the rank and file eligible to elect Mr. Connally to the position of president of the California CIO Council?

A. Oh, I don't know, but I am making—I am holding no brief for this method. I don't believe that operating through delegates elected by the rank and file is truly democratic or truly rank and file, in my opinion. It was the way it was done in this case. I will admit that. But I am not a supporter of the method, by any means. I believe, when I talk about really operating through the rank and file, I have in mind putting the matter to a vote of the rank and file, either by a referendum or by a membership meeting.

Q. Which you didn't do in this instance? [5531]

A. That's true. That wasn't done in this case at that time. Later on, however, later on, I believe it was referred to the local unions for approval. Now, that often happens in a union, too. You just, if you are going to take any responsibility as a union officer at all, you have got to take some steps upon occasion subject to subsequent approval.

Q. You mean after it had been accomplished, an accomplished fact, then you gave the rank and file an opportunity to rubber-stamp it? Is that what you mean?

A. No. What happened was this: No one could remove Connally unless he wanted to agree to the program for the reasons stated. And subsequently, at an executive board meeting that occurred some weeks or months later, Connally resigned, explained the reasons for resigning, said that he agreed with the general idea and thought it would strengthen the Council. And that is what happened.

Q. Now, when did you first discuss it with Mr. Connally?

A. That was, in my opinion, prior to going back East. Now, I have a distinct recollection of taking this up with Connally in Los Angeles prior to going back to the convention at that time.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Well, if you had discussed it prior to the time that you went to Philadelphia, why didn't you get the approval of the rank and file before you went to Philadelphia?

A. I don't know. First of all, I had to find out if the thing was workable. If there was no chance of persuading Connally it [5532] was a constructive move, you may as well drop it right then. If there was no chance of persuading Thimmes in his turn to accept the presidency if Connally resigned, why, why take it any further and cause confusion?

Q. Well, you knew that Connally had been popularly elected to this office, did you not?

A. Yes.

Q. He had been opposed and had defeated his opposition? A. Yes. So what?

Q. Well, why did you reserve to yourself the right to decide that Mr. Connally should be removed?

A. I didn't reserve to myself. I had what I thought was a good idea, and when I get a good idea, I try to do something about it. It mightn't be a good idea, I will admit that—but in this case I had a good idea, and I went to work on it and we won the election. We did a good job on the election. So I am satisfied, and I think so was everyone else at that time, that the idea was a good idea. And when we carried it out, it added quite a lot of unity and solidarity to our organization. Sufficiently, incidentally, to allow us to do an excellent job in the 1944 federal elections.

Q. Now, will you explain to us, Mr. Bridges, how it adds to the solidarity of a trade union unit for you to remove the elected president and to substitute in his place someone else?

A. It wouldn't. If I was to do that, I doubt if—there might be [5533] some extreme circumstances where that might help, but generally speaking, that wouldn't help at all. That would create disunity, if I was to do the removing or anyone else.

Q. Well, who did it if you didn't?

A. I would say that it was done through the machinery that we had at hand, the State Council and the individuals themselves, after being discussed and acted upon in the way that I described. Now, if I was able to go out and remove the president of the State Council, that would cause disunity and do harm.

Q. Had you supported Connally in his campaign for election?

A. I think I did, yes, against Pollard. I am sure I did. Later on, incidentally, in 1946, I had to have another session, and I was in this spot. Thimmes was the president of the State Council. The question come up as to—this was in 1946—whether he should be reelected. I said to Thimmes, "Look, Jim, as far as I am concerned, if you run I will throw all the support I can get behind you. It won't be as much as we have been able to get in the past. I wouldn't even be able to persuade my own union to give you full support. And it might be a 60-40 deal. But if you want to run for the office, I feel duty bound to do my best." He decided not to run and we elected, we joined together to elect another president. Now, those things are commonplace in conventions, Mr. Donohue, in union conventions.

Q. Now, I take it from what you have said about this meeting that the fact that Mr. Connally was a member of the Communist [5534] Party and that Mr. Thimmes was not, had nothing to do with your carrying out your idea that Mr. Connally should be removed?

A. Purely a trade union move. I was acting purely as a trade unionist. I was—all my decisions were made as a trade unionist. That is the way I operate and that is all I was thinking of, that is all we did.

Q. Now, was the decision which you say was your idea about Connally in any way influenced by any of the proceedings before the national CIO convention in Philadelphia in 1943 on the subject of Communist Party and its relations to the national CIO?

A. No, not that I know of, in any way at all.

Q. You were present at that convention, Mr. Bridges?

A. That is the time we was—as a matter of fact, we were present at that convention. That was the convention of the CIO that the PAC was formed. Sidney Hillman says, "We are putting your union down for a donation of $10,000." Well, I screamed all over the place. I said, "What's the big idea? We are only comparatively a small union. You can't put Murray's union of a million strong down for $100,000 and put our union down for $10,000, one tenth." He said, "Look, $10,000 from your union. It is not the amount of money. The mere fact that your organization is in fighting and supporting this thing is the big thing that counts. It won't work unless you people are in with it and supporting it and fighting for it." That was the CIO-PAC. [5535]

Q. Now, my question, Mr. Bridges, was, was there any discussion at the national convention of the CIO in Philadelphia in 1943 on the question of Communist infiltration into the national CIO?

A. Not that I know of. What do you mean by "communist infiltration," Mr.——? I know what the term "infiltration" means when I read it in a dictionary. Now, if you will tell me what you mean? Because, after all, I have been in the union for quite a while. I have heard this term loosely applied. I have been accused of Communist infiltration myself, and the only way I can figure that out I had to start a long, long way back to infiltrate into the labor movement. Now, if you will tell me what you mean, I will be able to give you a better answer than I will otherwise. And all I am trying to do is to let you know all the facts, believe me, because I don't think—there is quite a few you don't know.

Q. Well, Mr. Bridges, I hope through you we will learn all the facts.

A. That is what I am trying to do.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Particularly the facts about this so-called question you now raise about Communist infiltration.

A. That's right. Now, I will give you all the answers I can properly give.

Q. Now, you have been in the labor movement since you joined the IWW, have you not?

A. I was in before that. [5536]

Q. When before that and where?

A. I joined my first union in Australia in 1916, shortly after I went to sea. That was the Australian Seamen's Union.

Q. Now, as a member of the Australian Seamen's Union, did you ever have to cope with the problem of infiltration into that union by the Communist Party?

A. Not that I recall. I don't think so.

Q. And of course, when you belonged to the IWW, you had no problem, did you?

A. Meaning in what sense?

Q. Of coming in contact with any question of infiltration into the IWW by the Communist Party?

A. Not that I recall.

Q. The IWW was a pretty revolutionary organization, wasn't it, Mr. Bridges?

A. It was, it was.

Q. But you didn't leave for that purpose, did you, or because of that fact?

A. I didn't agree with its policies. I wasn't much concerned with its revolutionary policies at the time. I left it because I thought it had, I thought it developed some pretty bad trade union policies. It developed a policy I mentioned here before, that one of its leading officers was an employers' agent. That wasn't the main reason I left it.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Isn't that the reason you stated the other day? [5537]

A. Amongst others. I didn't mean to give the impression that was the only reason.

Q. What was the other reason or reasons why you left the IWW?

A. We had just gone through, or the Seamen's strike of 1921 was still on. And the IWW, at least in the Gulf, the branch of the IWW was the MTW510. They developed a policy of urging all the members to go back to work on the ships and to carry on the strike on the job. In order to go back to work on the ships, the other part of the policy of the union was to go back to work on the ships even if you went back at a wage below prevailing rates. Now, as a result of a strike, wages, I think, were cut to seventy-two-fifty or sixty-two-fifty a month. And the basic policy of the union as it was construed, or to be carried out, was, you go down to apply for a job on a ship, and if you had to go to work for $5.00 a month less, you do so, with the idea in mind that you would get on the ship at almost any cost in order to organize the ship and carry on the strike on the job. Now, it didn't make sense to me and that is the main reason I quit the organization at that time. As well as, as I said, I was pretty disillusioned with the International Seamen's Union. It sold out the strike, I think, through its policies. There was no unity between the longshoremen and the seamen. I was running a picket squad in New Orleans at the time.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. When? A. That was in 1921. [5538]

Q. Yes?

A. I came back to New Orleans from Central America. I forget when I landed, although it is a matter of record. That also came up in prior hearings. And I went right on the picket line there and I had a picket squad of seven men around the docks in New Orleans. And one of them, I can still remember that one of the main things I used to try to do was to get support from the longshoremen. The longshoremen were working, the strikebreakers were on the ship. The seamen—and the longshoremen, who were union longshoremen, ILA longshoremen, they were working with the strikebreakers, and we were trying to point out, "Look, you shouldn't be working with these strikebreakers. You break our strike and after we are broken, you people will be broken." And that is exactly what happened.

Q. Well, you became unhappy with the IWW and you left, didn't you? A. Yes.

Q. Now, the next union you belonged to was a company union, wasn't it? A. Yes.

Q. And how long did you remain a member of the company union?

A. Around 1932, I think. I have got my book. I think I have got a record of it.

Q. Mr. Bridges, can't you testify to anything without your records? [5539]

A. Oh, yes. I said around 1932. Look, Mr. Donohue, I will get it down to days, months.

Q. With your records?

A. Yes. Now, I don't——

Q. Without your books, what is your best recollection?

A. I don't want any of this "summer months" business. I will try to get it down specifically to the day, if you want me to.

Q. Well, for the present purpose, what is your best recollection as to how long you belonged to the company union? A. '32—late in '32.

Q. You joined it late in '32?

A. No, no, no.

Q. When did you join it? A. '23, I think.

Q. Then you were in the company union for about nine years? A. Right.

Q. And you became unhappy with that and you left the company union?

A. I was unhappy from the very start.

Q. Unhappy for nine years?

A. Don't get me wrong. The waterfront employers, the shipowners of this port, had a tight hold on that waterfront.

Q. So you have said.

A. No, that was the one place we infiltrated, in the company union. That is where we did a little infiltration, would be my [5540] idea.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. You are quite familiar with the term "infiltration," aren't you, Mr. Bridges?

A. In that sense.

Q. We will come to the other sense shortly.

A. But you see, when you talk about infiltration into the labor movement, the only way I can tie that in, I had to start right in off in 1916, when I was a seaman, and as a part of going to sea we used to do longshore work. And after going to sea, I started as a longshoreman. I started a long, long time ago to infiltrate.

Q. Well, now, after nine years of unhappiness in the company union, you joined what other union?

A. The ILA.

Q. And that at that time was affiliated with the American Federation of Labor?

A. Right.

Q. Then you became unhappy with that infiltration, with that affiliation?

A. You forget, I joined the old ILA in 1924.

Q. Well, wasn't that an A. F. of L. union?

A. Right, it was the same union.

Q. And you became unhappy with the A. F. of L., did you not? A. No.

Q. When did you disaffiliate from the American Federation of [5541] Labor?

A. You mean the move to CIO?

Q. Yes.

A. Well, it wasn't a question of whether I was unhappy or not. I think that there was a little more to it than that.

Q. But you did disaffiliate?

A. The union disaffiliated and went to CIO.

Q. And now, the CIO is unhappy with you?

A. I can't tell you that, Mr. Donohue.

Mr. Donohue: We will come to that after lunch. May we take the recess now, your Honor?

The Court: We will take the noon recess, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions, nor to form nor express an opinion thereon until it is submitted to you.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to 2:00 o'clock p.m.) [5542]

Afternoon Session, Tuesday, February 14, 1950

The Clerk: The United States of America vs. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

The witness on the stand is Harry Renton Bridges, heretofore sworn:

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES

resumed.

Cross-Examination

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Mr. Bridges, you do know, do you not, that the Mr. Phil Connolly we are talking about is the same Mr. Phil Connolly who is carried on the masthead of the People's World as the Los Angeles editor of the People's World?

A. That's right.

Q. When did you come to believe, if you ever did come to believe, that Mr. Connolly was a member of the Communist Party?

A. I didn't say that I ever came to believe it.

Q. I asked you, have you ever come to believe it?

A. I haven't given it any thought. I haven't particularly had any reason to believe it. I know he has been connected with the People's World in the last—well, fairly recently since—I know something about his resignation from the Los Angeles CIO Council. That resignation took place some time [5543] ago, and then somewhat after that I heard he was one of the staff of the People's World.

Q. Do you know that a non-Communist would be Los Angeles editor of the People's World?

A. I don't know, Mr. Donohue. It could be; I don't know. You expect me to know more than I am supposed to know or need to know. I have got—incidentally, I have got over here what you asked me to bring. I have got the minutes of the Executive Board of the State CIO Council that Connolly—where Connolly resigned. I haven't got the transcript that carried the verbatim remarks of everybody at that time. That is available being used in another court.

Q. I think we all agree that he did resign?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Oh, it says here why he resigned and what happened. And in that transcript it will show something I forgot myself this morning, why he resigned, and a complete explanation. I will have that.

Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute. We will offer it in evidence, if the Court please, if there is such a transcript. Any objection?

Mr. Donohue: To what?

Mr. Hallinan: We will offer the transcript in evidence.

Mr. Donohue: I understood him to tell me he didn't have the transcript in his possession.

Mr. Hallinan: He said he will get it later, the verbatim [5544] transcript. If he hasn't it we will offer the minutes in evidence.

Mr. Donohue: I know of no——

The Court: Mr. Donohue, you may proceed. If Mr. Hallinan has something to offer, he may offer it at a later time.

Mr. Hallinan: Very well.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Bridges, you will have an opportunity to explain what Connolly said in just a minute, but before we come to that, do you recall telling me just before the recess that when you said that it was your idea that Mr. Connolly should be replaced by Mr. Thimmes, that your purpose was to make a representation of the CIO Council not so much one way in terms of leadership but to make it all-inclusive?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. To broaden it, yes. That as well as maybe some other things.

Q. Do you recall that you told me——

Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute. Pardon me. Counsel inadvertently——

Mr. Donohue: I don't think that the witness ought to be allowed to make a speech every time I ask him a question.

Mr. Hallinan: Inadvertently, counsel doesn't permit the witness to finish his answer.

Mr. Donohue: He tries to make a speech every time I ask him a question.

Mr. Hallinan: May I make a little speech?

Mr. Donohue: Surely. [5545]

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, after Manning Johnson was permitted to make long, long speeches in explanation of his answers, the least that should be accorded the defendant is he be allowed to finish his answer. Now counsel asked him a question. The witness is about halfway through his answer when counsel interrupts him. I think we ought to be permitted to hear what he has to say.

The Court: Maybe on that question I think there was an interruption. However, Mr. Bridges has not been circumscribed thus far in his testimony.

Mr. Hallinan: No, certainly not by any rulings of the Court, but counsel, I think he did it inadvertently, as he has done with other witnesses, when the answer is halfway through he asks another question.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Donohue: Would you read the question and answer of Mr. Bridges back to him, Mr. Reporter?

(Record read.) [5546]

The Court: You have something to add to that?

The Witness: Yes. Here is the point, your Honor.

A. (Continuing): The State Council of the CIO, the California State Council, like all councils, are composed of the local unions, affiliated to the State Council. Jim Thimmes was the West Coast regional director of the Steel Workers Union, CIO. Quite a few locals of the Steel Workers' Union were not affiliated to the California State Council. So amongst other things, in order to broaden the leadership, another consideration that I had in mind was—and Thimmes promised to do it—that if Thimmes, the West Coast regional director of the Steel Workers, was president of the State Council, that that would be one way of getting all the local steel workers' unions in the state of California to affiliate with the State Council. As I recall, only about 60 per cent of them were. So that was another consideration, where we thought the other 40 per cent of the locals would affiliate with the State Council if Thimmes was made president. Now, if the steel locals affiliated with the State Council, that would also mean that they would contribute financially and in other ways to the political program as well as to the organizational program of the State Council. That was also a consideration.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Now, Mr. Bridges, isn't that the third reason you have given for supplanting Mr. Connally with Mr. Thimmes?

A. Well, it is an additional one. I didn't know that when I [5547] was asked before. I didn't necessarily break them down.

Q. Well, do you recall that I asked you just before we recessed if it wasn't a fact that you had stated on direct examination that your purpose in supplanting Mr. Connally with Mr. Thimmes was to bring about a broader representation between right, left and center?

A. Right, that was my——

Q. And did you not then——

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. Let him finish.

Mr. Donohue: Let me finish my question; pardon me.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, no, there were two questions asked. First he asked the question, and the witness starts to answer and then counsel starts to ask another question, "And didn't you——." Now let him answer the one question.

The Court: In this instance, Mr. Hallinan, I think Mr. Bridges had answered that question and Mr. Donohue was about to address another one to him.

Mr. Hallinan: He should give the witness a few moments more time. Counsel is in such a hurry to get home, your Honor, that now he is rushing the thing too rapidly. I think that we ought to give a few moments now. We have spent a lot of time in the prosecution's case. We only want a few minutes to explain everything out. Let's not keep anything covered over or hidden.

Mr. Donohue: You had four and a half days. [5548]

Mr. Hallinan: Well, give him a few minutes. You are a young man yet; you have got a long time.

The Court: Mr. Hallinan, I say it without reflecting on either counsel at this time; there was very little, if any, interruption on the part of Mr. Donohue in your examination, and I think that unless there be some reason—and I think Mr. Bridges is probably a judge of that.

(To the Witness): Do you have any explanation you desire to make? If so, you may make it.

The Witness: Thank you.

Mr. Hallinan: And, your Honor, I might say this: the only objection I make is to letting the witness finish the answer. In other words, it isn't an objection to the question or it isn't saying that he shouldn't be asked that. It is just to let him tell the story, let him finish his answer. That is all I asked.

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Reporter, would you read back the last question, please?

(Record read.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Have you fully answered the last question, Mr. Bridges?

A. It was one of the reasons.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Now, isn't it a fact that when I asked you the question on cross-examination you said that the reason for supplanting Mr. Connally with Mr. Thimmes was in order that there be a broader [5549] representation from the point of view of the new unions and the old unions? A. Right.

Q. Now, which of the three explanations you have given is the one?

A. All of them are correct.

Q. Then why didn't you give us the full explanation on the first question?

A. First, I wasn't asked, Mr. Donohue; and second, in the noon recess I went to the records. As I say, my memory, I think it is fairly good, but I can forget things. So instead of trusting my memory and having a lot of union records in my office and all I have to do is go through the minutes. I have got them here and I can help you out. Now, all I did was, I gave the main reason that stuck in my memory. But when I checked up on the written record, I find additional ones, and that is all I am adding now. That was all.

Q. Well, will you search through all your union records and tell us what the record shows was in your mind when you told the jury that it was "my idea" that Mr. Connally be supplanted by Mr. Thimmes?

A. I don't need the union records for that. I remember that. Now, you were not asking me that; I thought you was asking me why did I get the idea, for what reasons. Now, I remember that was my idea. I remember that much. The records mightn't reveal [5550] that. But all I can find out from the records is, why did I do it. What were the reasons. And I thought that was what you was asking about.

Q. Now, after you decided to do it, and you told us this morning that you decided to do it before you left California to go to Philadelphia?

A. That's right.

Q. What did you do about it when you got to Philadelphia?

A. I discussed it, as far as I recall, I dismissed it with Sidney Hillman and I asked him, "Do you think this is a good idea, Sidney?" He said, "I think it is." And I called the delegation, the California delegation, together and I took it up with them. And then they agreed, and then from there on we went to Phil Murray with a committee. And I have got the minutes of the '43 convention here; and incidentally, looking through the minutes, I find no speech or any action by the CIO or Murray on the question of Communist infiltration into the labor movement. I looked through it. I couldn't find anything about that. But I've got it here.

Q. Did you look through the 1935 A. F. of L. convention? A. '35?

Q. Yes. You remember me asking Mr. Schmidt about it? A. 1935?

Q. State convention, A. F. of L.

A. Oh, yes, I have looked through those, yes. And I can recall [5551] the proposition No. 1. I can tell you the whole story about it if you like.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. I am sure you could, Mr. Bridges, but let me ask you this.

A. I can tell you the true story about it, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Did Mr. Hillman vote to elect Mr. Connally to the presidency of the California CIO Council?

A. No, no, he didn't, because he never had any authority. But his representatives, that is, the representatives of the local unions in California, did. I have got that, that is what this record shows here (indicating).

Q. Why did you talk to Mr. Hillman about it? He hadn't helped elect Mr. Connally?

A. Mr. Hillman at that time was in charge, although there hadn't been any official machinery set up, he was in charge of the political action for the national CIO. We faced what we thought at the time a very delicate or tough political question. President Roosevelt was running for his third term. That was 1944. It was coming up. It was the general opinion of all of us that we had to have far more understanding and agreement amongst the ranks and leaders of all trade unions, if that election campaign was going to be successful. And that is one of the things that I say that motivated us. We tried to build here in California, because we didn't only have the national elections, but we also had a series of Congressional races that we wanted to be successful. And we were largely successful. We [5552] cleaned out some of the reactionary—to us at least—people in the state here that was holding office.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Now, Mr. Bridges, when you gave us as your supplementary explanation for the removal of Mr. Connally and the substitution of Mr. Thimmes on the basis of new and old unions, you said that the steel workers' union was a new union, correct?

A. Sure.

Q. When was it formed?

A. 1937, as far as I recall.

Q. And when was the Guild formed that Mr. Connally represented?

A. '34, to my knowledge.

Q. Are you sure that it wasn't formed in Los Angeles, California in 1937?

A. Which Guild?

Q. The Guild that Mr. Connally belonged to.

A. Oh, you mean the local? That could be. I mean, the local chapter of the Guild in Los Angeles, I didn't—I didn't mean that I knew when that was formed. I know when the Guild was formed in this city, I know when the national Guild was formed.

Q. The national Guild was formed in the East, wasn't it? A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. Connally belonged to the Guild in Los Angeles where he lived and worked, didn't he?

A. As far as I know, that is correct. But he was at one time a national officer of the Guild. [5553]

Q. Then it is your statement now that the difference in age between the Guild that Mr. Connally belonged to and the age of the Steel workers' union in the CIO was a substantial factor in the removal of Connally and the substitution of Thimmes?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. No, I didn't mean that, no.

Q. Well, you stated that this morning, didn't you, sir?

A. Well, if I did, I didn't mean to convey that impression. I was talking generally, and I had in mind mainly that the ILWU was an old, established union here on the Pacific Coast and certain other unions, maritime unions, the Woodworkers and the Steel Workers' union, was only formed after the CIO was formed.

Q. So was the Guild, wasn't it, the Newspaper Guild?

A. No, the Guild was an independent organization that was a going concern before the CIO was formed. And it joined, it first of all joined the A. F. of L. and then it switched to CIO.

Q. When did he switch to CIO?

A. As far as I recall—let me see. 1937, I think.

Q. And it was new in the CIO, wasn't it?

A. Pardon?

Q. It was as new in the CIO as the Steel Workers' Union, wasn't it?

A. Oh, in that sense, yes. But I mean, it was a union that was organized and had already been organized for some time before the Steel Workers' Union was organized. [5554]

Q. Mr. Bridges, isn't it a fact that not only did you not discuss with Mr. Connally his removal before you went to Philadelphia but that you bitterly opposed the removal of Mr. Connally?

A. No, no.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. That is not a fact?

A. No; Michener was haywire on that.

Q. Now, it is a fact that Mr. Michener was at the 1943 convention in Philadelphia, wasn't it?

A. I don't know. I would sooner look at the record and check.

Q. Well, since you are a man who can only tell what happened by looking at the record, suppose you look at the record and tell us.

A. Oh, no, that is not so, Mr. Donohue. I can tell by records and I can tell by my recollection, but when I have got both, I would sooner depend on the record. That is the only point.

(Consulting book.)

Lew Michener is listed as an official delegate from the Automobile Workers' Union, CIO.

Q. Now, having looked at the record, does that refresh your recollection to the point, Mr. Bridges, where you can tell us whether or not Mr. Michener was in Philadelphia as a delegate to the CIO national convention, 1943?

A. I don't—he could well have been. I have no distinct or independent recollection on that point. He could well have [5555] been. I don't know.

Q. Now, this caucus that you said you called of the California CIO delegates—— A. Yes.

Q. Where was it held?

A. In one of the hotels there. I couldn't say which one. I have a distinct recollection of the caucus. I can remember that we held it in a room,

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

or a suite of rooms, where we were sitting on the backs of chairs and things like that. So——

Q. You wouldn't know whether it was at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, where the convention was held?

A. It sounds reasonable to me. It might very well be at the Bellevue-Stratford. I was staying at another hotel. I was staying at the Benjamin Franklin Hotel at the time, at that convention, so the Bellevue-Stratford was the headquarters of the convention, the convention like all conventions had conference rooms available for those committees that want to meet, or those unions that want to hold caucuses. It could well have been at the Bellevue-Stratford.

Q. Well, the action that was discussed at that caucus wasn't taken until you came back to California, was it?

A. The action—do you mean the actual resignation of Connally?

Q. Yes.

A. That was taken here. That was taken at the meeting of January 14th, 15th and 16th, 1944. [5556]

Q. Well, then, why did you call a caucus of the CIO delegates from California in Philadelphia in 1943 to discuss it?

A. Because that is the way we do business, work it out with the national CIO, so that they know what is going on, so that we keep the national leaders of the CIO acquainted with what is going on and——

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Why couldn't you wait—I am sorry. I didn't mean to interrupt you. Go ahead, Mr. Bridges.

A. And to gain all the benefits we could out of the move.

Q. Couldn't you have waited until you came back to California and discussed it with all the members of the California CIO Council?

A. Not necessarily because all the delegates of the national unions were assembled there in one spot, so in addition to having the delegates of the unions assembled there in Philadelphia, we also had the national leaders of the CIO assembled. So we took advantage of the opportunity to do it that way. [5557]

Q. Well, having taken some action at this caucus, did you notify leaders of the CIO that you were going to reverse the outcome of a rank and file vote and supplant Mr. Connolly by Mr. Thimmes?

A. That isn't the way to put it. We weren't reversing anything. We weren't setting aside a rank and file decision. We did what I have said. We sat down there. I explained the reasons for the move. I succeeded in convincing most of the people. I discussed the matter with Sidney Hillman, and after we had agreed that it was a constructive step in the interests of great unity and better understanding all around, we took the matter up with Philip Murray. Phil Murray said, "I think it is a fine idea. Glad to see that is the way you people are doing things. Too bad we haven't got more of that throughout the national CIO; too many darn

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

State councils here, they are always bickering among themselves with factional fights. I am darn glad to see in an important State like California that is large enough and big enough on these things, that you people are making this approach." Phil Murray blessed the whole business, and that was that.

Q. Then it is a fact that this thing, which was your idea and which your co-delegates ratified in Philadelphia, was communicated to the national president of the CIO, Phil Murray? A. Sure.

Q. Why? [5558] A. What is that?

Q. Why?

A. Well, first of all, I was president of the CIO and I guess because there are other reasons. I said, "Phil, we are a bunch of good boys here; that is the way we do things." He is president of the organization. I have always felt it a policy of keeping him as well informed as I could as to just what was going on. I was, understand, Regional Director of the State of California at that time, as CIO Regional Director instead of being president of the ILWU. So to some degree the full participation of the local CIO unions in the State of California in all phases of the CIO program was my responsibility. That is why I made the decision. So I was duty-bound to take such matters up with my superior, who was Phil Murray.

Q. Now, which of the three explanations did you give Mr. Phil Murray for the action that you took at this caucus?

A. Just the ones I have given here, Mr. Donohue: that we were trying to draw together the State of California, to get a more solid united movement.

Q. Did you perhaps—I am sorry, did I interrupt you, Mr. Bridges? A. No.

Q. Did you perhaps emphasize to Mr. Bridges the first explanation you gave with respect to greater equality, left, right and center? [5559]

A. No. You mean Mr. Murray?

Q. Mr. Murray, yes.

A. Yes, I am sure that we made that point: that by doing this we would develop greater unity in the State of California between the various groups.

Q. Now, Mr. Bridges——

A. Look, Mr. Donohue, you see, let me tell you something. The ILWU, Longshoremen and Warehousemen, in the State of California, they sometimes—all too much so—have quite an idea that—and to some degree it is a matter of fact—that they built the CIO in this State. Now, to quite a degree that is true, because if it had not been for the longshoremen and warehousemen in the State of California, there would never have been a CIO. They were the people that got it started and kept it going. They were the men that got out and fought the battles, and they were the men that put up tens of thousands of dollars to finance and help finance and build and organize the CIO in this State. So one of the problems we were up against there, I had to say to my own people, "You are not the whole labor movement. So these other people, union people, came along later; maybe they are not the big battle veterans of '34 and '36, but nevertheless they have had considerable to do with building this union." They are the kind of things we had to straighten out within our own ranks and within the unions. [5560]

Q. Mr. Bridges, isn't it a fact and a fact known to you that almost since its inception the California CIO Council has been wholly and completely dominated by Communists and the Communist Party?

A. Absolutely not; not a fact, not known by me. And I think that I can come in here with the records, I can come in with the record of the first convention—I was chairman of the first convention, and the record will show where I went out of my way to go down and urge certain people to run for office. I was more or less severely criticized not only by left-wing people but right-wing people even for asking a labor faker like that to run for office.

Q. Isn't it a fact that only within the last matter of days that the national CIO has revoked the charter of the California State CIO Council because it is Communist-dominated?

A. They have revoked the charter and they have set forth as reasons for it what you say, but the reasons is something else again, Mr. Donohue, and I know the reasons are something else again, something that is an internal matter in the organization, and I am in a position to know. I am still an officer in the national CIO; I am still on the Executive Board of the CIO, and I know.

Q. You are still——

Mr. Hallinan: Let him finish.

Mr. Donohue: I am very sorry. [5561]

Mr. Hallinan: He is giving his reasons. Let him finish.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Are you finished, Mr. Bridges?

A. Well, I will stop there. I don't want to give the real reason if I can avoid it.

Q. Were you reelected in the national CIO convention in Cleveland?

A. As Executive Board member?

Q. Yes. A. Yes, unanimously.

Q. Mr. Bridges——

A. I can bring the record in to show you, Mr. Donohue.

Q. I will show it to you before I get through, Mr. Bridges.

Mr. Hallinan: May I say this, your Honor: Since it is a fact that the inquiry should cease with the year 1945—now there is some contention here by the indictment that Bridges was a member of the Communist Party up to the year 1945. I think these inquiries into present controversies in the union are outside the proper scope of the inquiry. What difference does it make what happened in 1949, 1950 or 1948? I submit that these questions as to the present controversy in the CIO do not come within the scope of the indictment.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Donohue: May I say these questions are pertinent and proper, your Honor, to test the credibility of this witness, who has testified under oath on the stand that he was not ever, either on the day he sought his naturalization, before that day, [5562] or up to the moment he sat on the witness stand, a member of the Communist Party. For that reason——

Mr. Hallinan: Of course, your Honor, any inquiry on a collateral matter such as that, he would be bound by the answers, so it wouldn't do him any good anyhow, wouldn't attack his credibility. I submit he is limited in his inquiry as to the facts up to the date of the indictment. If we are going to go into a question of the intramural difficulties of the CIO as of the present time, that isn't going to solve any question in this matter. As a matter of fact, that is all that counsel is trying to do, he is trying to build a case on the controversy that exists now between Mr. Bridges and other officers of the CIO or Mr. Bridges' union and other persons of the CIO to bolster what he thinks is a case that is supposed by its terms to have ended in 1945.

Mr. Donohue: I may suggest, your Honor, that these men are trying to build a case upon attacks by the police department of San Francisco upon the strikers in the 1934 strike.

Mr. Hallinan: No, because their inquiry went back to that.

The Court: The objection is overruled.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Bridges, could it be that you have confused the caucus which you have described as being held at some unknown hotel, with a Communist Party meeting which Mr. Michener described as having taken place at the Bellevue-Stratford [5563] Hotel in Philadelphia?

A. No, I didn't confuse it; maybe Michener did. I have a recollection of that caucus that you are referring to, and it was held as stated. I organized it, I was responsible for it, and I know.

Q. You heard Mr. Michener say that among some 15 people present was Mr. Connolly himself?

A. Yes.

Q. You heard him say that Jim Dougherty was there. You know Jim Dougherty, don't you?

A. Yes.

Q. You heard him say that Ruby Hyde was there?

A. I heard him say Dougherty was there. Of course the record shows that Dougherty wasn't there.

Q. You mean the record shows he wasn't a delegate? A. Yes, that's better.

Q. That wouldn't stop him attending a Communist meeting in Philadelphia?

A. I guess it wouldn't stop him attending a meeting, no, sir.

Q. You heard him say Ruby Hyde was there?

A. Right.

Q. You know Ruby Hyde?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Sure. And the record shows she was a delegate.

Q. Do you know whether or not Ruby Hyde was a member of the Communist Party? [5564]

A. No, sir, I don't.

Q. Do you know whether Jim Dougherty was?

A. Look, just so that I won't make any mistakes, Mr. Dougherty—believe it, I would like it for you to know all the facts in this case as well as I know them.

Q. Very anxious to, Mr. Bridges.

A. That is what I am trying to do. When you ask me—now, when you ask me do I know whether someone is a Communist, I want to know, so that I can answer properly and so that I won't be making any mistakes, just what do you mean? Now, I assume that when you asked me the question you want to get an answer, Do I know of my own knowledge?

Q. That is correct.

A. All right. The answer is no.

Q. Just the same as when I ask you, Are you a member of the Communist Party, as of your own knowledge.

A. That's right. All my answers—I base all my answers on that understanding. That is what I know, in other words.

Q. Then as of your own personal knowledge, all the persons I have named to you were not known to you as being members of the Communist Party?

A. That is right.

Q. Including Mr. Michener?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Mr. Michener?

Q. Yes. Do you know him to be a member of the Communist Party? [5565]

A. No, I certainly did not. I didn't really think he had it in him, frankly.

Q. You mean you didn't think he had what in him?

A. I have got my own ideas about Communists, that it takes quite a bit of courage from what I have seen and from what has been going on around. I may lack enough of what it takes to be a member of that Party. I never thought Michener had enough of what it takes to be a member. That is my own personal opinion.

Q. You mean it takes some virile qualities to be a Communist?

A. I would say—you take a fellow like B. B. Jones—you take a look at Michener, and it tells me something.

Q. You are a man of some courage, Mr. Bridges.

A. Not enough to boast of, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Enough to be a member of the Communist Party?

A. I wouldn't say so, no. One of the things—one of the weaknesses I have, I just don't have enough something; I get too darn scared on a lot of occasions.

Q. Did you know Mr. Charles Pfeiffer, who Mr. Michener said was at this meeting?

A. Sure. Charlie was one of the local officers of the union in the State of California.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Do you know whether or not he was a member of the Communist Party?

A. I do not. [5566]

Q. He mentioned one more name, Roy Hudson.

A. Hudson I know. I have known Hudson for years. That is, I have known him. I haven't seen him for a year and a half.

Q. When did you last see Mr. Roy Hudson and where?

A. Oh, I seen Hudson—let me see; a few months ago.

Q. Where?

A. I ran into him right outside our building at 150 Golden Gate Avenue. I was just coming out of there and I ran smack into him and said, "Hello," talked for a few minutes. I was on my way home, as far as I can recall.

Q. Did you meet him in an automobile?

A. Recently, not that I remember, no.

Q. When you met in front of 150 Golden Gate Avenue was he walking?

A. I don't remember. As far as I know, he was.

Q. Mr. Hudson is from New York, isn't he, Mr. Bridges?

A. I don't know. I don't know. I would say he was from New York, sometimes other places. He is a sailor. He might be from a lot of places.

Q. When to your knowledge did Mr. Hudson sail last?

A. Well, I am a sailor too. That has got nothing to do with it, when I sailed last. I am a darn good sailor. So is he. I haven't been sailing for years, but I could go back and sail tomorrow. That is what I mean by being a sailor.

Q. You meant that Roy Hudson can sail, not in the sense that [5567] it is his occupation; correct?

A. Oh, well, that is true. That is true. I think you are right there.

Q. Mr. Bridges, don't you know, and haven't you known for years, that Roy Hudson is and has been the national director of trade union activities for the Communist Party?

A. I don't exactly know what his position is, but I have known for years that Roy Hudson has been some important national officer, some national officer of the Communist Party. I have known that for many, many years.

Q. You have talked with him on many occasions, have you, Mr. Bridges?

A. Some occasions, yes.

Q. How many times would you say you have talked with Mr. Hudson?

A. I couldn't tell you over a period of years. I have known Hudson since, I guess, oh, probably I have known Hudson since 1936, I would say, and to start asking me the number of times I have talked to him, that is a pretty tall order. I couldn't tell you.

Q. You couldn't tell me whether it was a great many times or a very few times?

A. Both of those terms are relative. What would you call a great many times?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. What would you call it, Mr. Bridges? [5568]

A. I don't know. Again it would depend.

Q. Are you unable to tell us how many times you have talked to him?

A. I would say if it was in a period of time of say thirty days, ten times in thirty days, that would be a great many times. If it was ten years it would be a few times.

Q. How many years have you known Mr. Hudson?

A. I think since about 1936—'35 or '36.

Q. In the last fourteen years what is your best recollection of the number of times you have talked to Mr. Hudson?

A. Probably a dozen or so, maybe.

Q. And where?

A. Various places. I have seen Hudson in New York on one occasion—I recall only one occasion—and the other times I think have all been here in San Francisco.

Q. Where did you see him in New York?

A. I forget.

Q. Isn't it a fact that you saw him on several occasions in New York at Communist Party headquarters?

A. No, I have never been in Communist Party headquarters in New York in my life.

Q. You are sure of that?

A. Postive of that, Mr. Donohue, in my life. I have heard about it, and one of the reasons I didn't go there, I—I figured there was people just watching to see if I would do [5569] that very thing.

Q. Do you know where it is now, Mr. Bridges?

A. I only know West Ninth Street, or Tenth Street, something like that, I know it in that sense, not where it is by personal knowledge. And if I were to go there, the way I would get there, I would go to New York and take a taxicab.

Q. Have you stayed with Mr. Hudson at his home?

A. Never in my life. I couldn't tell you where he lives for a million dollars. Never in my life.

Q. You are positive of that?

A. Postive of that. That gang of informers you have got are off the beam.

Q. You know some of them, Mr. Bridges?

A. I have seen some of them up here. You pay them too much.

Q. Mr. Bridges, when is your best recollection within the last few months that you saw Mr. Hudson in front of ILWU headquarters?

A. I think it was after—it was after or toward the end, but my recollection it was after the 1948 maritime strike. There was a story in the paper—I remember there was a story in the newspapers during the maritime strike that Hudson was in town and had been observed around, and I remember saying to someone, "Well, look at that." And connecting it up with that, I think it was shortly after the maritime strike.

Q. Now, you want us to believe that it was purely a coincidence [5570] that you happened to meet the national trade union director of the Communist Party out in front of your building at 150 Golden Gate Avenue?

A. As far as I was concerned, it was a coincidence. When you say a coincidence, do you mean that I didn't meet him by design?

Q. Yes.

A. That's right. Just the way I stated it.

Q. You are sure of that as a fact?

A. Look, Mr. Donohue——

Q. Yes, Mr. Bridges——

A. There is no reason that I should deny meeting Hudson. I have known Hudson off and on. Any time Hudson wants to see me, he knows he can call right in my office and say, "Harry, got a few minutes?" "Sure." Hudson is an old sailor. He has been around here for years. It isn't a question of whether I agree with his program or policy or anything like that. But that is how it is. Now, it might seem strange to you, but that is the way it is. So I wouldn't have any reason that if I had met Hudson in any other way or any other occasion, I would tell you about it. And believe me, anything I said, you want to know, you will get a straight answer, whether it is Hudson or anyone else. Believe me, if I have met them by design, you will get an answer, and if it is by accident, you will get that answer. [5571]

Q. You wouldn't have had occasion to go up to his office?

A. It would be the first time I ever knew that guy had an office.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. The first time you ever knew he had an office?

A. Yes.

Q. You don't think the Communist Party has enough room in its headquarters to give the national director of trade unions an office?

A. In that sense of having headquarters, yes, I understand, yes. Again, if I did have something that required me going to his office, I would probably go. Now, by that I don't want you to get the impression that it is daily or weekly occurrence. Such meetings as I have had with Hudson or any other Communist officers or officials, they have been very infrequent, they have not been a regular occurrence, not a daily or weekly or monthly occurrence; they have been very infrequent. But as president of the organization, the CIO—I was West Coast Director—or the director of the CIO, I have to operate in such a way that anyone that wants to see me, they can make an appointment and see me. I don't know what they are going to talk about, or what they wish to see me about, but any time someone wanted to see me, I don't care what political party they belong to, they can see me. I frankly didn't give a great deal of thought if I considered them members of the Communist Party. At the same time I have met people of other political [5572] faiths far more frequently then in Philadelphia than people who were Communist officers.

Q. When you and Mr. Hudson would have these meetings, Mr. Bridges, did you talk sailing, Communism, or trade unionism?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. What meetings, Mr. Donohue?

Q. You said you have met with Mr. Hudson many times.

A. I didn't understand that you meant meetings.

Q. Let's say conversations.

A. All right.

Q. Did you talk sailing, Communism or trade unionism?

A. Probably all three. Probably all three.

Q. Are you sure, Mr. Bridges, that the last time you saw Mr. Hudson was in front of your building in San Francisco in the year 1948? A. Yep.

Q. You are sure of that?

A. Yes, as sure as I can be. I don't recall seeing him any other time.

Q. Now, Mr. Bridges, Mr. Michener said that at this meeting in the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel in Philadelphia; among the other persons I have named as being present, Roy Hudson was also present, was he? A. Are you asking me?

Q. Yes.

A. No, no. As a matter of fact, the last time I seen Sam [5573] Darcy was in Philadelphia.

Q. You don't remember seeing Hudson?

A. No, but I did see Darcy in Philadelphia at that time. [5573-A]

Q. Are you asking me?

A. No, no. As a matter of fact, the last time I seen Sam Darcy——

Q. But you did not see Hudson?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. No, not that I recall. He wasn't at that meeting that I remember.

Q. A few minutes ago, Mr. Bridges, you said that the last time you saw Mr. Hudson was the incident you described in front of your building a few months ago. Do you consider just after the 1948 maritime strike was not being a few months ago? A. December, 1948?

Q. Yes. A. About a year——

Q. About a year.

A. Yes, it could have been. When I say after the 1948 strike, I have in mind the last month in 1948, or early in 1949. That is what I have in mind.

Q. Could it be that you have seen him since this trial began in November?

A. No—that is, I haven't seen him. I have seen other people, but not Hudson, that I recall.

Q. Well, if you had seen Mr. Hudson here in San Francisco as recently as a few months ago when this trial began, you would remember it, wouldn't you.

A. I sure would, I sure would.

Q. Your statement is you have not seen him? [5574]

A. Yes, because I got hold of some of those people. I was looking for some information. I wanted to get some records and do some research work. So I have seen them to get some of these records, and if Hudson was amongst the people I have seen, number one, I would recall it and, number two, I would have no hesitancy in telling you.

Q. Who are the people you saw?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. I had a session with Bill Schneidermann and a couple of others about a month ago. That was pursuant to a meeting I had with them before. I was trying to find some records having to do with some events that I figured would come up in this trial, and which have come up, such as some of these people who are claiming they were members of the party. I asked what records they had available, if I could get any of them, and so forth.

Q. You knew the man you called Bill Schneidermann pretty well, Mr. Bridges?

A. I have known Schneidermann, I think, since 1936 or 1937—around 1936.

Q. Where did you have this meeting about a month ago with Bill Schneidermann?

A. In my office.

Q. Who was with Mr. Schneidermann?

A. Schneidermann, Archie Brown, a couple of others—I forget who—one or two others—I forget who. There was a couple who came in, stayed for a while, and left. There was two of them. [5575] I forget the other two.

Q. Archie Brown has the same position in California as Roy Hudson has on a national scale, does he not? A. I don't know.

Q. You do not know that Archie Brown is the director of the Communist Party in the State of California?

A. No. This meeting was pursuant to a request of mine. See, I had a session with them before, right after the indictments in conjunction with the attorneys, in starting to do some research work to prepare for this case. I contacted those people to see what, if any, records might be available to us to disprove some statements that might be made here, statements as to my membership in the Communist Party, records as to the membership of other people. I had a couple of sessions at that time, and this last session that occurred four or five weeks ago was a kind of a windup where they said, "Well, more or less, no records available or anything like that that was of any use."

Q. Then it is a matter of fact that before and since the beginning of this trial, you have asked the Communist Party to make available for the purpose of impeaching prosecution witnesses and sustaining your defense that they make available to you and for you any and all records in their possession?

A. I asked them if it was possible for me to get anything we thought might be valuable. They said, "Maybe yes, maybe no. [5576] If we could make available anything that might be helpful, we think we can do so in accordance with our regulations, we will do so."

So far the amount of material we have been able to get has been very little. We have had to depend on our own research work, and we have had very little assistance from them, very, very little. That is the sum total of it.

Q. I take it, then, Mr. Roy Hudson was not at this meeting that Michener described?

A. Which one now? In Philadelphia?

Q. The Bellevue-Stratford Hotel in New York.

A. Certainly not, not the meeting of the California delegates or any others that I recall at that time in that convention that I was at.

Q. Then Mr. Michener was not testifying to the truth when he said Roy Hudson came to that meeting and stated in substance that the Communist Party high command felt that unless some of the more permanent Communist Party members like Mr. Connally as head of the California CIO Council were supplanted by so-called right-wingers that there was a likelihood in the CIO convention then in session that action might be taken to exclude or expel the Communist Party members from the CIO? You heard Mr. Michener in substance say that?

A. Yes, I heard him say that, but if you will check a little more on Michener's record in the labor movement, you will know [5577] that—you will soon find out from people who are far more friendly than I might be that he has got a habit of making exaggerated statements and making things up, and as far as anything like that taking place in the 1943 convention, it is news to me. It is something that is pure fabrication of Michener himself. It is something that he thought up or dreamed up.

Q. Michener was not telling the truth about that?

A. Of course not, Mr. Donohue. Maybe—I am not saying, you know, he wasn't telling the truth.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

You can be fooled, you know. But I know he wasn't telling the truth.

Q. Let's see, Mr. Bridges, whether you do or not. Did you call San Francisco on the telephone during the 1943 convention of the CIO and discuss this question of Connally versus Thimmes with anybody?

A. I might have. I don't know. I might have.

Q. You said this morning when you came back you talked with Mr. Mervyn Rathborne about it, didn't you? A. Undoubtedly, sure.

Q. Do you remember now that you talked to Mr. Rathborne on the telephone from Philadelphia?

A. It could well be. I don't think he was a delegate to the Philadelphia convention. I remember that I talked to him, as far as I recall, before I ever went East.

Q. I am asking your if you recall calling him from Philadelphia on the telephone. [5578]

A. No, but I am saying I make calls back to my home office while I am away, out of town, or when something occurs, very, very frequently, and I see no reason why I shouldn't have called. The chances are I probably did.

Q. What was Mr. Rathborne's position with the CIO at that time?

A. Secretary of the State Council.

Q. Of which Mr. Connally was, at least momentarily, president?

A. Oh, no, not momentarily president. He had been president for quite a number of years.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Except he was being removed at this convention? A. He was what?

Q. He was being removed at this convention?

A. No, he was not. No, he was not.

Q. He was removed, Mr. Bridges?

A. He resigned.

Q. Let's say he resigned.

A. The point is he resigned voluntarily. He didn't resign under pressure.

Q. Then why did you call a caucus if he resigned voluntarily? Why was it necessary to call a caucus?

A. Well, we have to get the value out of a move. There is no good having a man resign unless you explain it to everybody, so that everybody gets the idea and learns the reason as to why these moves are made, and the good that comes out of them. There [5579] is no good doing these things unless you explain it to people, so that they draw the full value. That is all.

Q. Isn't it a fact, Mr. Bridges, not only that you called Mr. Rathborne on the telephone from Philadelphia but that while you were making the call, you had Mr. Roy Hudson talk to Mr. Rathborne on the telephone?

A. Not that I know of. No call of mine, nothing like that. I had nothing to do with it. If Rathborne were talking to Hudson without my knowledge, I know nothing about it—know nothing about it as of this moment.

Q. Isn't it a fact, Mr. Bridges, that when you returned to San Francisco you discussed this matter with Mr. Rathborne in some detail?

A. Oh, yes, I remember that. He was on a drunk, didn't show up for two or three weeks.

Q. Were you with him when he was on this drunk? A. No.

Q. How do you know he was on a drunk?

A. He told me.

Q. Told you so?

A. He told me he was so disgusted he couldn't resist the temptation. He went out and got soused.

Q. So disgusted at what?

A. At what he said was a phony move, this matter of moving a man like Connally out and putting in a hobo like Thimmes. [5580]

As I say, he went on a drunk for two or three weeks and expressed himself by sending everybody pictures of Thimmes with a little note, "You love the guy so much, put this on your bedroom dressing table." And he gave me one of these wooden back scratchers. I didn't quite get the point of that. I guess it meant, you scratch my back and I will scratch yours, something like that. And I still have the picture and the back scratcher.

Q. Isn't it a fact, Mr. Bridges, when you talked with Mr. Rathborne here in San Francisco about this matter that you told him that you had bitterly opposed this move at this Communist Party fraction meeting in Philadelphia?

A. No, that does not make sense to me either, Mr. Donohue. If I had bitterly opposed it—if I had bitterly opposed it, I think I could have swung enough weight.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Could you swing enough weight to overcome the command of the Communist Party headquarters, Mr. Bridges?

A. At any and all times, Mr. Donohue. There has never been a time when I didn't pack at least that much weight. I think frankly you are making a mistake in trying to give to the Communist Party much more influence than they have got coming, particularly in the trade union movement.

Q. Isn't it a fact, Mr. Bridges, that you told Mr. Rathborne here in the city of San Francisco that you thought it was about time to stop red-baiting and that you saw nothing to be gained [5581] in the removal of Connally except to weaken the Communist Party control over the California CIO Council?

A. No, absolutely not, nothing like that. The move was made for the reason I stated. I engineered it. It was my idea. I am darned proud of it and it worked out very well.

Q. Isn't it a further fact, Mr. Bridges, that when Mr. Rathborne opposed this move—and he did oppose it, didn't he? A. Yes.

Q. When Mr. Rathborne opposed this move, you said, "What is the sense of you and I discussing it? The Party decision has been made. All we can do is follow it"?

A. No, nothing like that. That is cops and rob-ber stuff, Mr. Donohue. Things don't happen that way.

Mr. Donohue: May we take the recess at this time?

The Court: We will take the afternoon recess, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you.

(Recess.) [5382]

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, Your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Bridges, was Mr. Sam Darcy a delegate to the 1943 CIO convention in Philadelphia? A. I don't think so.

Q. How did you happen to meet him there?

A. Run into him in the convention hall, come up and said hello to me, and I had known him since '34. That is the first time I had seen him for many years. We went into a nearby place there where I was having lunch, had a cup of coffee and talked with him at that time. I saw him in the convention hall. He told me he was living in Philadelphia, said he was doing something or other and we just talked for a while. That was all.

Q. When had you seen him last before 1943?

A. I don't remember. I couldn't tell you. Not for quite some time, not for some years prior to '43.

Q. Do you recall when it was that he left California? A. No.

Q. Did you know him quite well when he was here?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. I knew him—yes, I ~~knew~~ him in 1934 and '35, I believe.

Q. He was then district organizer here for the Communist Party, was he?

A. I think he was, yes.

Q. Have you seen him since 1943?

A. No. [5583]

Q. Mr. Bridges, you seemed quite disturbed in talking about the incident in 1941 when you claim that your telephone in a New York hotel was tapped by agents of the FBI, were you?

A. Yes, sir. I was disturbed. I have got my reasons. I wasn't disturbed because I suffered from any guilty conscience, I wasn't disturbed because I thought they would find out anything about me. I was certainly disturbed at the officers of the government tapping my room and the way they were doing it. And as I say, amongst other things I made a few tests. I satisfied myself as far as I was concerned that the information they were getting from my room, they were using to break a strike of workers that was on at that time among workers in New York. And all these tests, and I was pretty disgusted and pretty shocked. At the same time these were the officers, the government officers that proclaimed publicly and pretty sanctimoniously, I thought, that they would never do such a thing. "Tap telephone wires? Tap a room? Oh, no, not us. We are officers of the law. We represent the U. S. government. We uphold the law." So I was disturbed in that sense, definitely.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. And you spent four or five weeks playing cops and robbers with them, to use your own expression, didn't you?

A. In that sense you are right. I thought that they deserved to be exposed, and, you might say, shamed, and I did my best to bring that about, yes.

Q. Now, why do you think that agents of the Federal Bureau of [5584] Investigation would tap your telephone wire if they did tap your wire?

A. Oh, it was a part—that was a part of what had gone before. I know why. I know the whole picture and I know why the deportation cases came about in the first place. I know what they were directed at. I knew where they started, how they started, what had happened and I knew that this was merely a continuation of the previous deportation cases. I knew that back many, many years before that a certain group of employers in the city and on this Coast got together and they worked out a program where I was handy for a stalking horse in order not to attack me so much as to attack the labor movement. I was a handy stalking horse, a whipping boy—everything made to order. I was an alien, I was the officer of a union, I had been a part of the union and had gone through a strike, the union had accepted help from the Communist Party during the strike, all those things were a matter of record. So all the ingredients could be put together and that is a matter of official record. And I knew those things. I could bring that record into court here. That was investigated over a period of time by the United States Senate Civil Liberties Committee. It is a matter of record there. And a decision was made, a decision by certain employer interests and certain political interests controlled by those employer interests to make me the goat in order to attack labor unions. They didn't—it wasn't a question of me, because after [5585] all, unions will come and go whether I am a part of them or not. We don't make any mistakes on that point. But here was the whole matter built up. So everything was made to order. And I knew that the tapping of my room there in the Edison Hotel in New York, after I had been on trial here for the third time—I had just completed my third hearing on the same issues, right here in this courtroom before Judge Sears, and even after that, after the trial here, they had—during the trial they had again denied that they were following people around, trying to frame people up. I caught them in the act trying to frame me. For what purpose? Not because I was a member of the Communist Party or anything like that. I was no danger to the country. Everybody knew my record, the Government more than anyone. But in order to attack organized labor, that was what was going on, and I did just what I thought was the proper thing to do. I exposed the fact to the labor movement and to the people of America because I just don't believe that the average, ordinary American of the United States here believes that the agents of government should stoop so low as to tap phones, listen in or conversations, tap your room, bribing the poor housemaids to go down and search your room, your wastepaper basket and things like that. Pretty dirty business. And I will do it again and I don't mean any disrespect to any government agency whatsoever. But there comes times, you know, when officers of the government, they forget who they are supposed to [5586] represent, who they work for, what their authority and duties are and who pays them. The people pay the Government and the government agencies, and the people pay these agents to protect the rights of the people and to observe the laws. Wire-tapping is a felony. You know that, Mr. Donohue. So I went down, I couldn't get anywhere by complaining to the authorities. We tried. We went to the U. S. Attorney General. He kissed us off. We couldn't get anywhere complaining to the authorities, so I did the next best thing. I exposed the fact publicly. I enlisted the aid of a couple of newspapers in New York. They took pictures. They took pictures with telescopic cameras of these people, catching them in the act.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

So all I did was, as I say, to expose the fact that agents of the Government, sworn to uphold the law, servants of the people, were the very ones that were violating the law, committing a felony, and they in truth were the ones that in my opinion were undermining our form of government, not me. I never have, and wasn't then.

Q. Finished, Mr. Bridges? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know of any other labor leaders whose wires were tapped when yours were tapped?

A. At that time?

Q. Yes.

A. Not to my own—not that I could swear to. I am talking [5587] about something I know, now. The same as, "You know someone is a Communist?" "No, I wouldn't want to swear to it."

Q. You are not either an alien, a whipping boy or a stalking horse now for the waterfront employers, are you? A. Some of them I am.

Q. Then there is a difference of opinion on the waterfront, is there?

A. About Bridges, Mr. Donohue?

Q. Yes, "about Bridges, Mr. Donohue."

A. Yes, Mr. Donohue, there certainly is.

Q. I am glad to hear that.

A. And unions as well as in the ranks of the employers. Now, I go down to Hawaii, a lot of employers down there, they've got a long way to go. I just came through a battle down there where they insisted that the demand of the federal government, supported by our union, to arbitrate labor disputes was a plot directly from Moscow. So there is a difference of opinion.

Q. Was it?

A. No. Why, of course not. The Department of Labor and Conciliation, Mr. Cyrus Ching, heads that department. They proposed before the Hawaiian strike came out, they proposed to both sides that the issues in dispute be arbitrated. On behalf of the union I accepted. The answer of the employer group was, "We are not going to go for any Communist plots like that." The strike [5588] ensued.

Q. Mr. Bridges, you have twice told us that tapping a wire is a felony. A. It is.

Q. Don't you know that it is not? That it is only a felony to make or publish the effect or result of wire-tapping which is proscribed by the law?

A. Well, my lawyers told me it was a felony then.

Q. Suppose you ask them again after court.

A. I sure will. I thought that tapping a wire, I thought that tapping a telephone wire is a felony, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Suppose you consult with your counsel——

Mr. Hallinan: If Your Honor pleases, just a moment. I ask that counsel's statement be stricken out and the jury be instructed to disregard it because wire-tapping is itself a felony. Taking off any communication address by one person to another over a wire is a felony. It isn't a disclosure of it at all. I don't know why counsel makes that statement. It seems remarkable that he should be so ignorant of the law that he is talking about now, and wire-tapping itself is a felony—not just the disclosure of it to anybody. That is ridiculous, and that is stating something that is not a fact, and I don't see what right he has to impose that upon the jury or to attempt to impose upon the witness. We make the motion, if the Court please, that the jury be advised to ignore Mr. Donohue's misstatement of the law on wire-tapping. Now the law is available, the Court can [5589] refresh his recollection on it if there is any question.

The Court: There are two or three cases on the subject, just as familiar to you gentlemen as they are to me.

Mr. Donohue: Correct, Your Honor.

The Court: And my recollection of it—and I may have to consult the books at the recess also—is that the disclosure of the subject matter of the wire-tapping is the gravamen of the offense and constitutes the felony.

Mr. Donohue: That is my idea.

The Court: Now, I may be subject to correct on that, but that is my recollection of the law.

Mr. Donohue: That is my recollection, too.

Mr. Hallinan: I think I can refresh Your Honor's recollection as to that.

The Court: There are two cases on it, as you know, bearing upon the matter.

Mr. Hallinan: In other words, we are to understand that it is the law that any person can tap anybody's wire and learn anything he wants to, so long as he doesn't convey it to somebody else.

The Court: There are two federal cases on the subject. You have to distinguish the State code section from the Federal section.

Mr. Hallinan: I mean the federal statute, Your Honor; the federal statute makes it a felony to take off from anybody's wire, [5590] whether you do it for your own delectation or your own profit or in order to convey or gossip on the subject to somebody else.

Mr. Donohue: I shall state the federal statute to Your Honor at the close of the day. Will Your Honor withhold your ruling on Mr. Hallinan's motion concerning my ignorance of the law?

Q. Mr. Bridges, do you not know as a matter of public information that only a few days ago the Attorney General of the United States stated publicly and it was carried widely in the press, that at the present time there are 170 telephones being tapped in the United States?

A. I read a statement to that effect.

Q. And they would continue to be tapped?

A. I think he said that, too.

Q. And do you not recall that he said at that time that the only way a telephone may be tapped is on his order, on application by the director of the bureau of investigation to him as attorney general?

A. Attorney generals still depend on political support for their appointment to the job. I know that, too. I am familiar with attorney generals and they are politicians, too. I don't—they just don't get there because they are always great brains or 100 per cent trustworthy, either.

Q. Let me ask you a question, Mr. Bridges. As a loyal American [5591] citizen, do you approve of the action of the Attorney General in approving the use of wire-tapping, which resulted in the arrest of a British scientist as an atomic energy spy?

A. I am not opposed to any measures taken against espionage.

Q. Now, did it ever occur to you that your wire may have been tapped, if it was tapped, as you say it was, because you have been reputed to be a member of the Communist Party?

A. No, I don't believe that is it at all. That might be offered as an excuse for it. A lot of things can be offered as an excuse of "fighting Communism." That is the way many things happened. I notice that in the trade unions. Anyone that has got a scheme that they are going to make a little money out of, if they've got a personal ax to grind, whether it be in trade union politics or other types of politics, my experience has been that the safest way and the popular way to do is to say, "I am fighting Communism." That is what Hitler said, that is what Mussolini said, that is what the Japanese said. I am hard to convince on that point. So I quite realize that the best excuse to give for tapping my wires is for a government agent to say, "We have got nothing against Bridges; what we are doing here is fighting Communism." But then to take the information gained and use it to fight a group of workers, organized workers that are trying merely to get better wages and better conditions, that is what happens, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Now, you knew—— [5592]

A. I have already told you, if you will look up the report of the Senate Civil Liberties Committee, it is all spread out there for you about the meeting right here in our state, back in 1935, I think it was where the meeting was held and certain employers were given the job to carry out my deportation and to raise the question, that the means or the best means of stopping the growth of organized labor here on the Pacific slope was to raise the question of Communism, say that, "We are fighting Communism," and ask my deportation. Not that the labor movement would stand or fall because I was here, or a part of it. That is not the point. But I was just a handy stalking horse. Now, that is a matter of record in the Lafollette Senate Committee's report, the Committee on Education and Labor. That is a matter of record. And as a matter of fact, the man that first sent the telegram in 1934 demanding my deportation in the 1934 waterfront strike, Mr. Roger Lapham. We have got that as a matter of record. That is all in the report, too. He was the person that was assigned at that time to start the ball rolling, by a meeting of the industrialists.

Q. Finished, Mr. Bridges?

A. For the time being, yes.

Q. Now, you have just quoted Hitler and Mussolini. Let me ask you, sir, if you agree with Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, the director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, that the Communist Party in the United States is the greatest existing threat to our [5593] national security?

A. To agree with a statement like that, I would have to be somewhat of an expert on the Communist Party, wouldn't I? I would have to know—in order to be able to state here under oath just what the whole program was. And believe me, Mr. Donohue, I am not that well informed. I am a trade unionist. That is my job and I consider myself a good trade unionist.

Q. Do you think Mr. J. Edgar Hoover might be an expert on Communism and its subversive effect on the security of the American people?

A.. He might be.

Q: Would you accept his word on that subject?

A. There's a lot of things I wouldn't accept his word on. A lot of things I wouldn't accept his word on.

Q. And his views on Communism are one, are they not, Mr. Bridges?

A. Oh, no, no, no, no—I am not going by that. Look, I had a little experience with some of the government agents that get busy, like some of those characters in New York that were poking around my hotel room. And there has been a few trials in the East lately, this Coplan trial and this Hiss trial, and I have seen reports of those agents that were made public in that trial, and they were pretty—I thought they were pretty ridiculous, and in some places pretty outrageous. They had everybody in the report. I remember here some years ago, some of these reports, [5594] they had Shirley Temple in the Communist Party—darned near everybody in Hollywood. Now, some of these things get to pretty ridiculous lengths, and I have learned the hard way, maybe; maybe I am not as trusting as I used to be. I want a little evidence on something before I am liable to believe anyone.

Q. Do you object to the use of wire-tapping in the Hiss case that you just mentioned?

A. I don't know enough about it.

Q. Do you object to the use of wire-tapping——

A. I am only going by the position of our government, Mr. Donohue, what the Supreme Court, what the President said at one time, and it is a pretty dirty business. And I still think—and it has been said by better people than I am—that what you might lose and what might happen to our general, the way of living by tapping people's wires might be worse than what we might gain by the evidence we get from such tapping.

Q. Do you think it was dirty business if it resulted in stopping an employee of the Department of Justice from turning over vital secrets of the United States to a Russian agent?

A. I am not opposed to any means that are properly taken against espionage, Mr. Donohue. That is all I can tell you on that. Now, when you get down to specific details, all I would have is your statement to that effect. But generally speaking, there is my position. It is not a new one, it is one I have had all the time. [5595]

Q. At the time of your——

A. The wire-tapping, per se, you have got my opinion on it. I don't think it will change.

Q. You don't want to give me any further expression of yours on the opinion of Mr. Hoover with respect to the Communist Party, do you, Mr. Bridges?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Well, I guess the Department can make a few mistakes. I know that during the war there was all kinds of ships leaving the East Coast, and something was happening to those ships, and we tried to get the agency to conduct an investigation. They conducted an investigation, and somehow or other, they couldn't seem to get very far, but the ships continued to sail, the cargoes continued to shift, and the ships continued to capsize and disappear. They found nothing wrong, even though we put the evidence before them. The stevedoring company that was loading the ships, they being interned in the first World War as a German agent, a German agency, that was doing the same thing then. But old J. Edgar Hoover couldn't find out much wrong, and we kind of lost a little faith then. We thought that they could be a little more efficient. We are not ready to run away with the idea that they are super-duper.

Q. You are not one of those who is seeking his removal at the minute, are you, Mr. Bridges?

A. Not particularly, no, no, no. I would like to see him carry out the job that he is supposed to carry out. Lay off [5596] the labor unions, for a change.

Q. Mr. Bridges, at the time of your indictment, who was your counsel? A. My counsel?

Q. Yes, sir. A. Personal counsel?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Yes.

A. Well, I never had any, you might say. We had, the union had a firm of attorneys, and that was Gladstein, Sawyer, Andersen, Resner. They have been mentioned here many, many times. And then later on, I was lucky enough to get the services of Mr. Hallinan and MacInnis, and so forth, as attorneys.

Q. Now, Mr. Gladstein, Resner, Andersen and Sawyer made a number of appearances on your behalf in this matter prior to the time when Mr. Hallinan and Mr. MacInnis filed an appearance, correct? A. In the preliminary stages.

Q. Yes.

A. On arguing the legal motions and things like that.

Q. Yes. A. That is right.

Q. And you heard Mr. Hallinan state that Mr. Leonard, who is in association with that firm has been doing some work in assisting your defense?

A. Still is, right now—doing an excellent job, too. He does [5597] research, does a wonderful job.

Q. And Mr. Resner of that firm has done some work in assisting your defense, has he not?

A. Well, as far as I know, everyobody that we think we can get to help us in research work, we make no bones about asking them. We probably would come around and ask you, if we figured you could be of any value.

Q. Except I am busy otherwise?

A. Yes, you are very busy.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Or perhaps I couldn't be of any value?

A. I am not so sure.

Q. Do you know, Mr. Bridges, of your own knowledge, whether or not the firm of Gladstein, Resner, Andersen & Sawyer are currently acting as counsel in an injunction proceeding for the California CIO Council, of which the charter was recently revoked by the national CIO?

A. I know Mr. Resner is; now I don't know whether the whole firm is employed at it, but I certainly know that Mr. Resner is, and he is acting on behalf of the Council as well as the unions, trying to prevent the property of the Council being taken over. I know that much. [5598]

Q. Do you recall at the time or just subsequent to the time of your indictment that Mr. William Schneidermann was called to testify before the Grand Jury which indicted you?

A. Yes, I think he was one who was called in some capacity or other. I don't recall the details, but I remember hearing about it.

Q. You recall that the public press widely stated that Mr. Schneidermann was called and refused to answer questions which were asked of him?

Mr. Hallinan: If the Court please, when we tried to inquire of some of the prosecution witnesses as to matters that occurred before the Grand Jury, who was present, and so forth, objections were sustained to such questions. Now, Mr. Bridges hasn't any connection with Mr. Schneidermann and I suggest that these questions are incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

Mr. Donohue: I am only asking him, your Honor, what appeared in the public press.

Mr. Hallinan: We are not bound by what appeared in the public press. What appears in the public press is ordinarily matter dictated by Mr. Donohue as press releases and handed out. We are not bound by what appeared in the public press.

Mr. Donohue: I submit the question is proper.

The Court: The objection is sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Bridges, do you know who was [5599] counsel for Mr. Schneidermann when he appeared before the Grand Jury?

Mr. Hallinan: Now, if he means does he know of his own knowledge or what he read in the public press? I do not think the question is specific enough.

The Court: Do you know of your own knowledge?

A. I saw Schneidermann after the Grand Jury appearance. I told you I seen him after that. He told me about being up there.

Mr. Donohue: That is right.

A. I can't recall who his counsel was. We didn't talk about that. I remember talking to him about his grand jury appearance. That is one of the meetings I referred to, when I asked him what the chances were of getting any records the Communist Party had to prove the defendants in this case were not members at the time you are saying they were. That is what we were after.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. And you did not discuss with him who his counsel was?

A. As far as I remember, I didn't, I don't think.

Q. To your knowledge, Mr. Bridges, was Mr. Schneidermann ever a member of a trade union?

A. I think he was, yes.

Q. Of what union was he a member?

A. Carpenters, I think, at one time. I have never known him to be active as such, as a member of a trade union. What knowledge I have had of Schneidermann has been as an officer of [5600] the Communist Party. I do not know him in any capacity as a trade unionist.

Q. What was your mutual interest, if there was any? A. Mutual interest?

Q. Yes. A. With who?

Q. With Schneidermann.

A. I never said there was any.

Q. I said if there was any.

A. Offhand I don't know now. That is a general question. Any interest I might have had as far as Schneidermann was concerned had to do with certain things in the trade union movement. That and only that.

Q. What was Mr. Schneidermann's interest in the trade union movement as district organizer for the Communist Party? A. I do not know.

Q. You have talked with him many times, haven't you, Mr. Bridges?

A. Well, that may be, but that is a different question. Now, if you are asking what we talked about, as far as I recall, I can tell you.

Q. Yes. What did you talk about?

A. Oh, the sessions I had with Schneidermann—and this can go back over quite a few years—would be generally, for example, they would seek an endorsement or support of some [5601] enterprise by the union movement, at least that part of the union movement that he thought I might be able to officially influence. They would seek some endorsement or financial or other support of some particular part of their program. They might want to bring to my attention as a representative of the CIO or a labor union certain matters such as—I can recall one case in particular where there was some colored people on trial in the deep South and they said that they were the only ones that were doing anything about seeing that they got a fair trial, and wanted to see if we could help out on something of that type. As I say, there have been occasions when they had candidates running for political office and they would not only seek my endorsement but ask me if I could get some endorsement from the unions.

There have been a couple of occasions when I wanted to talk to them on certain matters that concerned something I was after. One of them I have already told you. Since these indictments I tried to find out what records they had that I could use in this trial to prove that some of the people getting up here didn't know what they were talking about, and they said they didn't have any such records.

I can recall another occasion where, as a result of a situation in a union, I called upon them in connection with some of the activities of their members or alleged members in the union. I took up a matter with them on that occasion. So [5602] I could go into further detail on these items if you wish me.

Q. Mr. Bridges, have you been conscious at all of any degree of infiltration into the ILWU by members of the Communist Party?

A. As such, no. That is not the way I regard infiltration. Infiltration to me means that someone is deliberately put into a particular position for a definite purpose and a definite objective, and the very contemplation of the word indicates somewhat a destructive objective, and I have not been conscious of that, and as far as I am concerend as a trade union officer the handful—first of all, this is being overdone. Now, I know the membership of our union generally. I do not mean to say that of all the thousands I know them individually, but the handful of Communists in our union, they couldn't do much about our union one way or the other in so far as deciding its policy. The best they could do, and everybody in the union knows it, they stand up on the floor, Communist as well as other people, and they propose a certain proposition, make a certain point, and generally the attitude of our rank and file of the union is if the person talking, man or woman, has got a good point, they will get support, notwithstanding whether they are Communists or not. If they haven't got a good proposition, they won't get any support no matter who they are. And that goes for me, too. I go down to those union meetings, and if I have got a good program, some of the rank and file [5603] will support me, and if I haven't, you would be surprised what happens, Mr. Donohue. They don't take anything from me or anyone else.

Q. But they take you, Mr. Bridges?

A. Well, they don't always do that. I guess they are just waiting until someone better comes along, and seeing how successful you are in getting me, if this scheme succeeds this time. This is about the fourth trial. Our union won't die whether you do or not. We take our risks. We don't build a one-man union; and that union or any other union is not dependent on Bridges-Robertson-Schmidt. We don't build unions so they fold up. No one is indispensable.

Q. You know a great many union leaders and labor leaders, Mr. Bridges?

A. I certainly do. I know a great many union officials. I might differ with you as to whether they are leaders or not.

Q. Is there any leader other than yourself, Mr. Bridges, in the union movement?

A. Quite a few, far better leaders than me, far better than I will ever be.

Q. Have you discussed with any of these other leaders of the labor unions the problem of infiltration into their membership by Communist personnel?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Possibly, not in the way you talk about it, but in so far as talking with them about Communist activities, and so forth, [5604] the answer is yes, yes.

Q. And do you find that some of these union leaders have indicated that they have a problem in their particular unions because of Communist Party infiltration?

A. Quite a few of them have said that that is what is wrong, but I don't always agree. There may be some cases where there is something to it, but in the majority of cases my experience with union leaders or union officers would be, hollering about Communism and activities of Communists in the union is a handy smoke screen. When I see someone start hollering about Communists I begin to look around behind the scenes to find out wherein he is getting away with union funds or whether he is grinding a personal ax or doing something like that.

Q. Your union has no such problem?

A. No, we've got no such problem. The question comes up once in a while and everybody knows my position. Anybody in the union, no matter who they are, can stand up and speak their piece, and anybody who wants to get up and ask that question stands up and asks it, no matter who they are. If someone wants to get up and extol the alleged or real advantages of Communism, they have the right to do it in the union, and then someone else can get up and speak as to how they feel about any alleged advantages of Communism or disadvantages of Communism, and that is that. Therefore, we all get along; we [5605] have unity, and therefore when we find we have to put on a strike to improve our wages or working conditions, we manage to stick together and get that much done. That is how smooth it is. We think in terms of unifying our ranks and not getting our ranks split up. It is not only a question of Communism, but another thing, if you inject in the local the question of religion you will bust the local wide open. You will even do that in a drawing room. There are certain rules we follow. We are peculiar in that respect. We manage to stick together, and looking around I notice that these unions that start witch-hunts and looking under beds for alleged Communists, once you start down that path you can't stop. Now, I know unions in the country that have gone to work and have spent most of their energy that should go into protecting the rights of the working rank and file, so they have spent a lot of energy in cleaning out the official Communists or admitted Communists, and then they go after the alleged Communists, and then they have to start after the ex-communists, and by the time you get around to that you've got a beautiful union. The only trouble with it is that it has no membership. We just don't want to make that mistake. That is all there is to that.

And believe me, Mr. Donohue, I can take you down to the waterfront and elsewhere and you can speak to the people yourself. You just speak to some of those fellows. You will learn, in a way better than I can describe here. You can't [5606] fool those people. They know where you stand. They know what you stand for. You can't fool them. They know what they are after, and they are not letting any problems of Communism bother them. What bothers our workers today is they want to be able to work; they haven't got enough work. There isn't enough jobs. The unemployed are growing. The people aren't making enough. They are beginning to go hungry. They are getting insecure. Payments are becoming due on their house, the automobile, the radio, and they've got to give them up. Day in and day out we get more and more complaints, and believe me, the question of Communism is not a real problem, not as far as our union is concerned. The question of the workers getting enough to make a living and getting a little security, that is the real problem.

7.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Communism is a real problem in Local 6, isn't it, right now, Mr. Bridges?

A. That is not so. Let me tell you about that. A bunch of fellows in Local 6 are trying and did succeed to some degree in fooling the working rank and file by talking a lot about Communism, but behind the scenes here is what was going on: They were on the payroll of another union, the Teamsters Union, and the whole purpose of it was to raid Local 6 of the warehouse union, and the officers, myself and Bob Robertson, we moved to expose the whole thing. We called the working rank and file together in a convention a couple of weeks ago, where the people [5607] in the convention were elected right off the job. The various rank and file workers in the warehouse elected their delegates right from the warehouse and those delegates were responsible only to the rank and file workers. We had a little convention, and the so-called people who were raising the question "What was wrong with the union was Communism," they walked out, and now they suddenly turn up. Now it is exposed to all the rank and file that they are working on the payroll of the other union out to destroy our union altogether. Now our locals are wise. Now our rank and file workers are going around and saying, "Gee, Bridges and that gang are once again being proven right, doggone it. They keep on telling us they know what they are talking about, and once again they are being proven right." Here is Gallo and his gang, they come around trying to say it was an issue of Communism, whereas they were simply on the payroll of the Teamsters Union, working to bust the union they were part of. They made an issue of Communism in that form, Mr. Donohue, and again I extend you an invitation right now to present yourself at the next meeting of Local 6. The working ranks are there. They aren't Communists; they aren't pro-Communists. Most of them are anti-Communist. I extend you, as president of the organization, an invitation to come down and bring Mr. Paisley, if you wish, down to speak to the next meeting of Local 6, Warehousemen's Union, and you ask them the question you just asked me, and the answer you [5608] will get—well, it will probably be a better answer. It might not be as windy as I am.

Q. I take it your answer is you have no Communist problem in Local 6?

A. No, no Communist problem. We have a problem of keeping the union together, preventing raids on it, and keeping the union doing the job it was set up to do, namely, to organize and fight for improved working conditions, hours and wages. That is what we are in business for. We are a trade union and nothing else. And any Communist Party or outside organization—it is impossible for them to gain control or affect the program or policies of our union in any way whatsoever.

Mr. Donohue: We will ask you about that tomorrow, Mr. Bridges. May we have the recess?

The Court: We will take the adjournment, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, until tomorrow morning at ten o'clock. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case or form or express an opinion until it is submitted to you.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken until Wednesday, February 15, 1950, at 10:00 [5609] a.m.)

February 15, 1950, 10:00 A.M.

The Clerk: United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

The witness on the stand is Harry Renton Bridges, heretofore sworn.

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, before any proceeding in that takes place, I want to call your attention to Title 47, Section 605, on telegraphs, telephones, etc.: "Unauthorized publication or use of communication by wire or radio shall divulge or publish the assisting in receiving, or transmitting, or assisting in transmitting, any interstate or foreign communications by wire or radio shall divulge or publish the existence, contents, substance, purport, effect or meaning thereof, except through authorized channels of transmission or reception, to any person other than the addressee, his agent or attorney, or to a person employed or authorized to forward such communication to its destination, or to proper accounting or distributing officers of the various communicating centers over which the communication may be passed, or to the master of a ship under whom he is serving, or in response to a subpoena issued by a court of competent jurisdiction, or on demand of other lawful authority; and no person not being authorized by the sender shall intercept any communication and divulge or publish the existence, contents, substance, purport, effect or meaning of such [5610] intercepted communication to any person."

So far it relates to intercepting and divulging it, but then the next paragraph goes on:

> "And no person not being entitled thereto shall receive or assist in receiving any interstate or foreign communication by wire or radio and use the same or any information therein contained for his own benefit or for the benefit of another not entitled thereto."

And then a third paragraph:

> "And no person having received such intercepted communication or having become acquainted with the contents, substance, purport, effect or meaning of the same or any part thereof, knowing that such information was so obtained, shall divulge or publish the existence, contents, substance, purport, effect or meaning of the same or any part thereof"—and then in the disjunctive—"or use the same or any information therein contained for his own benefit or for the benefit of another not entitled thereto."

Now, the violation of this is a felony. There are cases holding that the section applies to officers, Federal agents and others in the prosecution of the violation of criminal acts. It applies to them also. And there are cases holding that even where by accident an operator puts another person onto a conference and he uses the information, that he is guilty of a violation of the act. [5611]

I might say also with regard to another comment upon this matter that twice within the last few years the Federal Bureau of Investigation has attempted to procure an amendment of this act to permit wire-tapping by Federal agents in espionage cases, and in both cases Congress has refused to make that amendment to the law. So it still stands today the same.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, there is only one case on the point that we raised yesterday, and I read briefly from U. S. v. Gruber, cited at 39 Fed. Supp. at page 291, in which the court says this:

> "'There is no Federal statute that prohibits or punishes wire-tapping alone. The only offense under the present law is to "intercept any communication and divulge or publish" the same. Any person, with no risk of penalty, may tap telephone wires and eavesdrop on his competitor, employer, workman or others and act upon what he hears or make any use of it that does not involve divulging or publication.'"

Mr. Hallinan: The facts in that must have been entirely different.

The Court: That appears to be a quote from a letter emanating from the Attorney General, as I read the case. I also have that case, and in the course of the investigation I made last evening after we recessed I concluded, Mr. Hallinan, that divulgence is a necessary criterion under the statute, and I [5612] see no occasion at this juncture to admonish the jury with respect to any matters of law as requested by you yesterday afternoon. As a matter of fact, the subject matter appears to be collateral to the investigation before this court.

Mr. Hallinan: I grant that.

The Court: It creeps in in a purely collateral vein, and to that extent I see no occasion to comment to the jury here upon the matter before the Court.

Mr. Hallinan: But then it does also cast some question upon Mr. Bridges' interpretation of his rights, the things that he was interested in when he was spying upon the people who were tapping his telephone. It throws some question upon the proper interpretation of what he considered his rights to be. I think Mr. Bridges was entirely right. I will call your Honor's attention to this, that recently here in California a man was arrested and charged with tapping his own telephone. He suspected that his wife was having some sort of affair with another man. He went into the basement, tapped the telephone, and intercepted the message, and he was convicted under that.

The Court: As I attempted to point out to you yesterday afternoon, the State statute is entirely distinct and apart from the Federal statute. The State statute under subdivision 1, as I recall it prescribes against interception and subdivision prescribes against interception and publication, so that mere interception under the State statute is a misdemeanor. [5613]

Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

The Court: I think I am correct in my view of the law, Mr. Hallinan. If there has been any misconception on the part of Mr. Bridges concerning his rights, I admonish the jury to disregard any misconception on his part, so the matter may be clarified. The question of wire-tapping has come into this case only as a collateral matter. There is no contention before this jury or before the Court that any of these matters which occurred on some prior date in any wise affect the matters before this Court or that the prosecution is using or has attempted to use any of that evidence. Accordingly, I instruct you to disregard any version that Mr. Bridges may have had or any misconception of the law that he may have had. [5614]

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Hallinan: Of course we can't agree to that, that they are not using matters so obtained. We don't give them any such credit as that. They contend that they are using matters, whether legally or illegally obtained.

Mr. Donohue: Before Mr. Hallinan came into the case, the law firm of Gladstein, Andersen, Resner & Sawyer couldn't agree to it either, but we argued the matter fully before Your Honor, and one of the numerous motions that were filed by them——

Mr. Hallinan: I was just reading this morning a statement made by this gentleman in that exact connection.

Mr. Donohue: Exactly.

Mr. Hallinan: He says, "I will not put a single

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

witness on the stand for whose credibility I will not personally vouch."

Mr. Donohue: And I so stated.

Mr. Hallinan: So I don't think we ought to go into matters that occurred before the trial. I think Mr. Donohue might rather well wish to relegate those to the past and obscurity. We are not blaming him now; we think he might have been mistaken in so offering his credit to support these people.

Mr. Donohue: And I still so vouch, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, then, your credit is getting less and less.

The Court: At this juncture the matter before the Court is clarified to the extent that Mr. Bridges, or at least the view obtained by Mr. Bridges in the past concerning the wire-tap [5615] incident, is not to prejudice Mr. Bridges in the eyes of the jury. That was a concept that he had, and apparently it was based upon some representation made to him. What error of law there may have been is not his error.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Mr. Bridges, directing your attention to page 5343 of this record, the testimony by you on Wednesday, February 8th, do you recall saying this:

"I didn't know——"

Well, let me go back to the beginning of the paragraph:

> "And everybody knew my attitude. No one more so than the few people around there that say they were spokesmen of the Communist Party. I didn't know Schomaker was one of them, but Darcy I did know was a Communist, although I don't recall him ever soliciting me for membership."

Do you recall saying that, sir?

A. Yes, that is right.

Q. Now, may I ask you, Mr. Bridges, if you remember at the first deportation hearing to which reference has been made,——

A. Which one was that? There's so many I lose track occasionally.

Q. Well, just to help your recollection, so you will have the record,—— A. The 1937 one?

Q. 1939 one, Mr. Bridges, at page 2596. [5616]

A. Oh, I see.

Q. Do you remember being asked these questions and making the following answers, and this in 1939? A. Yes.

Q. (Reading): "Do you know whether John Schomaker was a Communist in 1934?

"A. I don't think he was.

"Q. Do you know whether he is now?

"A. I don't know. I believe that Schomaker is. My opinion definitely would be that he is, but he never told me so.

"Q. What leads you to that impression?

"A. Schomaker has been pretty active in Communist Party affairs."

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Do you remember having so testified in 1939?

A. No, but the record is there; I wouldn't pit my memory against that record.

Q. And referring further in the same proceeding,—

A. And that is consistent there with what I said here. I am not trying to say my memory is better now than it was ten years ago, eleven years ago. It was far better on those facts eleven years ago than it is now.

Q. Eleven years ago Mr. Schomaker didn't testify against you, did he, Mr. Bridges?

A. No, he didn't.

Q. Mr. Schomaker has never testified against you until this [5617] proceeding, has he, Mr. Bridges?

A. I guess he was still trying to make out some other way. He couldn't get what he was after any other way, so he wound up here on the witness stand in the courtroom.

Q. And that is the first time he has ever testified against you, is it not, Mr. Bridges?

A. I don't know. The first time he has testified publicly. After listening to his testimony here, that hundred page statement and a few other things, I don't know. Now all I have got is his word for it. He has told me a lot of things. I accepted them at one time, but now, of course, I am a little skeptical.

Q. Well, now, let me ask you, Mr. Bridges—you have referred to a 1937 inquiry made in New York and to a 1939 inquiry made here, and to a 1941 inquiry made here, have you not?

A. Yes, that is right.

Q. On any one of those occasions did John Schomaker testify against you? A. No.

Q. On any one of those occasions did Mr. Henry Schrimpf testify against you?

A. Do you mean in terms of getting up on the witness stand and—I think Schrimpf's been passing information on to the Immigration Department since '37.

Q. Would you answer my question, Mr. Bridges?

A. Well, in terms of getting up on the witness stand where he [5618] can be faced and cross-examined, no. But in terms of sneaking around the back door and telling a lot of lies, yes.

Q. Now, in either one of those three hearings, did Mrs. Harris testify against you?

A. No, no.

Q. And at any of those hearings did Mr. Stanley Hancock testify against you?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. And at any one of those hearings did Mr. Lew Michener testify against you?

A. Not that I know of. That is, publicly, no. Not that I know of. I don't know what he might have done otherwise.

Q. As a matter of fact, Mr. Bridges, has any witness who has testified in the proceedings here and now ever testified against you before?

A. In terms of getting up on the witness stand, well, where we can see them, come out in the open, no, not as far as I know.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Now, referring again to the 1939 proceeding and reading now from page 2689 of the record, may I ask you if you recall the following questions and you having made the following answers:

> "Q. Well, I think you stated yesterday—for your information that was on page 2596—'Do you know John Schomaker,' and the answer is, 'I do.' 'Was he ever known as Delaney?'
>
> 'That was his middle name—John Delaney Schomaker.'
> 'Has he ever gone by the name of John Delaney?' 'I don't [5619] know. Not on the waterfront.'
>
> "A. That is right. He has been a member of the union since early 1933, as John D. Schomaker, and that is the only name I have ever known him by.
> "Q. Do you recall when it was that you first met John Schomaker?
>
> "A. Yes, in 1933.
> "Q. Was that during the Albion Hall——
>
> "A. (Interrupting): Before it.
> "Q. Before that?
>
> "A. Before the Albion Hall group. I met him around——
> "Q. (Interrupting): What name was he known by then? A. Schomaker.

"Q. Was he a member of the strike committee when you were chairman?

"A. He was.

"Q. Did you ever hear him at that time referred to or called John Delaney?

"A. No, he was charged—I recall the charges, that were disregarded. There were a lot of things said like that. For example, my name. Even at that time I had three or four other names or was supposed to have. Everybody was.

"Q. (Interrupting): What would they be?

"A. Oh, I forget. I was supposed to have a long list of aliases and be wanted for dynamiting in South America and [5620] had blown up a few bridges in Australia or what not.

"Q. You never used any of those?

"A. I never used any other name. I am just talking about these phony charges that they made during the strike. Everybody was a Red, every conservative leader in the A.F. of L. was a Red at that time.

"Q. Do you remember any aliases for John Schomaker, for instance?

"A. Any aliases for Schomaker?

"Q. Yes.

"A. No, if I recall the court case right, he was charged with working under an assumed name somewhere else and the whole thing was investigated, and when it was brought up in court, it was found that the whole thing was a lot of lies, as I recall. That is my distinct impression and the case was dropped.

"Q. Did you ever hear that his party name was John Delaney?

"A. Oh, certainly I have heard that.

"Q. You have heard that his Communist Party name was John Delaney?

"A. Certainly I have heard it.

"Q. Do you remember when you first heard that?

"A. Around the same time. I believe that was one of the accusations made.

"Q. Around what? [5621]

"A. I believe that during the early days of the union or during the strike ~~or~~ at some time."

Do you remember being asked those questions, and did you make those answers? [5621-A]

A. I don't remember, but it sounds like my testimony, is just about what I would say. I wouldn't change it right now either. I already told you at that time we didn't go very deeply in when Schomaker came on the waterfront. It would have been very, very simple for me to look at the union records like we did in this case. I was going by the fact that my memory told me that Schomaker had always pretended he had been on the waterfront prior to 1933. Now, Schomaker could have been on that waterfront. Nobody told me. What misled me, until he testified in this courtroom that he didn't.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)
come on the waterfront until November, 1934, I was always under the impression he had been there since 1932.

Q. Don't you mean November, 1933, Mr. Bridges, not November, 1934?

A. No, since he testified here for the Government here in this courtroom, I have seen the records of the union and found out—when you register on the waterfront—and that was the record I think Mr. Robinson identified here—you have to say when you started work, and the records show that Schomaker said that he started work on the waterfront in '32.

Q. Didn't you introduce, or your counsel introduce in evidence here, the minutes of the ILA which showed that John Schomaker was inducted into the union in November of '33?

A. That's right. That's why we introduced them, because he told us, he had always pretended he had been on the waterfront prior to that time. [5622]

Q. Why did you say November, 1934, a few minutes ago?

A. I didn't. Well, if I did, that was a mistake; I meant '33.

Q. I thought that you probably did.

A. If I said '34 that was a mistake, Mr. Donohue. I was under the impression for many, many years that Schomaker had been on the waterfront prior to the formation of the union, because—and the reason I was under that impression, he had not only told me that many, many times, but I have heard him say in various meetings and conferences—in other words, he would parade as an oldtimer; he would parade as someone that was down there prior to the union being formed, and until he testified that he never came on that waterfront until November, 1933, I was under the impression, and it is a matter of record, that he started working on the waterfront from '32. That is what I went by, and the testimony that I gave in '39 was based on that. We didn't go into that. In 1939 if there had been a point made, if I had been asked, "Could you go to the records of the union and find out?", I would have said, "Yes"; I would have been able to produce the record at that time. Going only by memory and what Schomaker had told me, I had no reason to doubt his word then. That was the reason for that answer. That and no other reason.

Q. Mr. Bridges, the fact that in the 1939, you were quite free to testify that you knew that John Schomaker was a Communist, even knew his name and the fact that in this trial you stated under oath that you didn't know that John Schomaker was a [5623] Communist is not influenced or affected at all by the fact that John Schomaker testified in this hearing and didn't testify in the 1939 hearing, is it?

A. No. As I see it, there is no difference between my testimony in 1939 and what I have said now. Again, 1939 is eleven years ago, and I will go by what I said then because I can't—there is reams and reams of testimony in the former hearings; it is impossible for me to memorize it or even attempt it. The best I can do is go by what I remember and what I recollect, supported by such records as I can produce. And what I said in 1939 as you have read, is just about the way I remember it now, with such changes that are necessary to be made because of Schomaker's own testimony here.

Q. You were quite friendly with Schomaker, weren't you? A. Yes.

Q. You were neighbors? A. Pardon?

Q. You were neighbors for some time?

A. For a while.

Q. How long?

A. Oh, I forget; about a year; a year or a year and a half.

Q. Visited each other in your several homes?

A. Occasionally.

Q. Do you think John Schomaker would have any reason for coming here and testifying under oath falsely against you, Mr. Bridges? [5624]

A. Why, of course. Let me tell you, Mr. Donohue, I have known Schomaker for a long time and it is just the same in a labor union as any other place; you have got to organize the people that are working, you have got to try to trust people; you have got to find workers on the job; at least that is the way that we do it in our organization, and you have to put them in positions of responsibility and trust and leadership. And sometimes, you know, people can't carry the load. There is too many people—the way they see it, some people in the trade union movement, they look after their own selves, their own security at the expense of the people at Schomaker got the point, he tried it in the union movement, got elected a couple of times and they didn't like the way he did business, [5625] and they didn't reelect him. He was disgruntled over that. I remember he came to see me and said, "Look, I want you to do a little more for me." He kind of hinted around as to whether I didn't have a job for him on the national payroll. So that the going just got too tough for John Schomaker, and he sold out. The only people in the union movement that can't sell out are the people down below working on the job. The leaders can always sell out. You take it from me, every day, there isn't hardly a day goes by when an officer can't make a good deal for himself and lots of money in the game if you want it that way. That is all that happened to Schomaker. So he got work down below; or the other way to do it is to understand that your own security depends upon the security of the people down below. So over a period of time, after all these steps, Schomaker put up in the union movement, he didn't move along fast enough; he didn't make enough money out of it; it took too much hard work and sacrifice; his wife used to come—on two or three occasions his wife came to me and complained bitterly. She said, "I have served notice on John, he can choose between me and the union. Enough of this business of attending business meetings, out every night in the week. I am supposed to stay at home. He has got to give me at least a couple of nights a week. There is no money in it." and so forth. So finally bogged down in the country down there with his boarding house, and mortgages and one thing and another. His business to be a housebuilder didn't work out. And I have even got the letters he wrote to our officers in Hawaii offering to cut them in on the deal, to give them 10 per cent of the take. I have got that in writing. So the story of Schomaker is not a new story. It happens all the time, not only in labor unions but in governments, too, you know. Even members of the bench, you know, sometimes sell out. And these people—I have always noticed another thing: in the process of selling out, the best way to cover up what you are doing is to be an expert anti-Communist and holler Communism all over the lot, be a superpatriot, pretend what you are doing you are doing in the interests of security of the country. [5626]

Here we have a spectacle of J. Parnell Thomas, who was the leading expert on Communism in the United States, chairman of the un-American Activities Committee, and all the time he was engaged in that activity he was making his four stenographers on his staff kick back. And now, after that he is only doing six months. If that had been me, they would have thrown the key away from me. Things like that, when I see what happens, the story of Schomaker is an old story, and it happens all the time.

Q. Now, will you tell me, Mr. Bridges, what you think Mr. John Schomaker has personally gained by coming here under oath and identifying himself as a former member of the Communist Party?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. You ask me what I believe. I think that Schomaker, from what B. B. Jones told me, he says, "Look, I am stuck here with a big house, and Donohue and his gang have been around, and they have told me that if I don't play along with them, they will pass the word at the university, whom I depend upon for roomers and boarders in my house, they will pass the word amongst the students to keep away, and I am stuck with this house on my hands, the mortgage is due, and I will be out of luck." That is what I think the truth of it is, as well as the fact that Schomaker is bitter, he tried it the hard way, he just didn't have enough to keep going and he gave up the battle, that is all. That isn't a new thing—you forget a few things, Mr. [5627] Donohue—for a fellow that is disgruntled and bitter. There was even one amongst the Twelve Apostles, you know. It isn't a new thing; pretty old.

Q. Now, Mr. Schomaker—I am sorry.

A. Yes, it is all right. I don't get mixed up, though.

Q. You didn't find any fault with John Schomaker in all the years that he was your close, intimate friend, did you?

A. It wasn't a question of being a close, intimate friend. I don't find fault with anyone——

Q. And you didn't——

Mr. Hallinan: Let him finish.

Mr. Donohue: When he is finished, and I sometimes doubt if he ever will be.

Mr. Hallinan: If counsel wouldn't hurry his

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

questions so fast and give the witness a chance to collect his breath and answer——

Mr. Donohue: And think.

Mr. Hallinan: Then counsel is in such a hurry. He shouldn't be that way.

Mr. Donohue: If it wasn't for you, maybe I wouldn't be.

Mr. Hallinan: If you will let him finish his answer, that is all we will ask.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): I am sorry, Mr. Bridges, I didn't mean to interrupt.

Mr. Hallinan: Don't let him interrupt you, Mr. Bridges. [5628]

A. My point is this: It wasn't my job to find fault with Schomaker. Schomaker was an officer of the local union. I don't find fault with people as long as they are doing their job. Maybe the standards we set are pretty high. We leftwing unions have, I guess, a hard driving program, and Schomaker just didn't measure up. It wasn't my finding fault with him, it was the men that he represented. They elected him, and he didn't measure up, and they tossed him out. And Schomaker went around trying to find another way, trying to find an easier way where he didn't have to work as hard, and it just didn't work out. There isn't enough room for everybody to be officers in a union, just as there is not enough room for everybody to be lawyers or capitalists or anything like that. Somehow or other most of the people find there isn't enough room for them in those places.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Have you completed your answer? A. Yes, Mr. Donohue. [5629]

Q. Now, when Mr. Schmidt was defeated by the right wing, you took care of him, did you not?

A. When was that?

Q. In the last election. A. No.

Q. When was he last defeated?

A. Local office, just a couple of months ago.

Q. What is he doing now?

A. He is working for the international—has been for the couple of years prior to the elections.

Q. You mean he was on the payroll of both his local union and the international payroll, too?

A. No, I do not. Henry Schmidt, very much against his objections, has been on the international payroll for the last couple of years.

Q. Against his objections?

A. Against his objections.

Q. If you hadn't put him on the international payroll after he had been defeated for president of Local 10, what alternative would he have had?

A. He would have been back on the waterfront, and that is where he is going. You watch now. He will be back on the waterfront. If he had had his own way, he would have been back there months ago. We made him. He takes orders. He is one of the officers of the union, and when he gets orders [5630] for a job to do—and that strike in Hawaii wasn't any picnic, believe me. If Schmidt wanted to do as he liked he would have been back working on the waterfront, and as soon as this case is over that is where Schmidt will be, back on that waterfront.

Q. When was he last on the waterfront, Mr. Bridges, to your knowledge?

A. I don't know. No so long ago.

Q. When?

A. I forget—I don't really know. Three, four or five years ago, I think. I don't know.

Q. Who was the president of Local 6 prior to the present president of Local 6?

A. James Kearney.

Q. Who defeated him?

A. Bulcke, Germain Bulcke, I think—no, I think Walter Bell preceded him.

Q. Mr. Bridges, yesterday you indicated as one of the necessary qualifications for membership in the Communist Party the quality of courage. Do you think Schomaker had the courage necessary to be a member of the Communist Party?

A. I never said that yesterday, Mr. Donohue. I said I might have had some of my own opinions. That is the way I look at it. I see those people. The way I see it, everybody is blasting them, pushing them around, all the rest of it. Sometimes [5634] I wonder what they see in it. It is only my own personal opinion that people that want to join, sponsor, advocate and work for such an unpopular cause, doggone it, it seems to me to take quite a bit of what it takes. And on Schomaker? No, I don't think he's got it. I used to think so one time, but I don't think Schomaker has got it, and I haven't thought that for quite a while. And that is something that pre-dated his coming up here, too.

Q. Do you think he had it the day he got dumped on the picket lines?

A. So what is the dumping?

Q. Where were you?

A. I was right there with him; don't worry, Mr. Donohue. The way our union functions, the officers don't ask the rank and file to take any chances they won't take themselves.

Q. You didn't get hurt, did you?

Mr. Hallinan: Let him finish his answer. Your Honor, he cuts him off.

A. No, that has been a matter of luck in all these skirmishes. Maybe I can run a little faster than the others; that's all. I haven't managed to get hurt. Maybe I duck faster or run faster. But I have been there. I am darn painful that I didn't get it. And I don't want to get hurt, and if I can keep on preventing getting hurt, that is just what I am going to do. I'm not backward about saying it. Don't judge people [5632] by me.

Q. It couldn't be that you are at the union headquarters?

A. For a while I was, yes. I was all over the place at that time. I was generally where I thought I was needed.

Q. Mr. Bridges,——

A. You are trying to say, Mr. Donohue, I was scared? Because if you are saying that, I was.

Q. You said so yesterday.

A. If somebody comes at me with a rifle or a shotgun I am scared. I am not one of those people who aren't scared. I would like to try it on you.

Q. It has been tried, Mr. Bridges.

A. All right. And you weren't scared?

Q. No, I wasn't scared.

A. You are a better man than I am, Mr. Donohue.

Mr. Hallinan: That is wonderful. Now we have Mr. Donohue the hero. He has been wearing Army boots around here for months and wearing an Army coat to let everybody know he saw some service. If he did, I'll bet the only injury he might have gotten was his backside blistered sliding around on a swivel chair.

Mr. Donohue: I will match mine against yours any time.

Mr. Hallinan: We have had so much talk about alleys around here, I don't want to indulge in any discussion, such bombast. People who have to bark about their courage [5633] don't ordinarily show it when the time comes. I am not pretending to be any more courageous than the most insignificant person, and I am not going to pretend to something just to make an impression on the jury in order to get something on some other people.

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, your Honor?

Q. Mr. Bridges, yesterday you testified that you had been unanimously reelected to the Executive Committee of the National CIO at the eleventh constitutional convention on Friday, November 4, 1949. A. That is right.

Q. May I read you from the record and ask you if this is not what took place: "Secretary Carey, calling the roll of unions"——

Mr. Hallinan: This is not an answer given by Mr. Bridges. I think he ought to be shown the record if it is intended to refresh his recollection.

Mr. Donohue: He was there.

Mr. Hallinan: Let him see it. He can't take your word that you are reading it correctly. Your eyesight may be defective. It looks like you might be having difficulty, observing you putting on your glasses.

(The document was handed to the witness and returned to Mr. Donohue.)

Mr. Donohue (reading):

> "Secretary Carey, Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's [5634] International Union, delegate Meehan"——

I take it he is from that union?

A. He certainly is.

Q. "——on instructions of our membership I wish to place in nomination the name of our worthy president, Harry Renton Bridges..

"Vice President Curran: Mr. Chairman and Delegates, I wish to challenge the eligibility of Harry Bridges to serve on the Executive Board on the basis of the constitutional amendments which have been adopted and are now a part of this CIO constitution. Also on the same grounds that were enumerated by Delegate McDonald. I hope the Executive Board will take action in > this case, too. In the meantime the National Maritime Union and its delegation will abstain from voting on this nomination.

>
> "President Murray: The question of the eligibility of Delegate Bridges will be brought to the attention of the next meeting of the executive Board. Those favoring his election to membership on the Board will say Aye; not a very loud vote. I shall refrain from asking for a vote in opposition in deference to the wishes of Vice President Curran, and the matter of Bridges' eligibility to serve as a member of the Executive Board will, under the constitution, be brought to the attention of the next Executive Board meeting of the CIO." [5635]

Is that what took place?

A. That is what took place, Mr. Donohue.

Q. And that is your conception of a unanimous reelection?

A. No, the convention rules, governed by Cushing's Manual, lay down the rules, and by all the rules of the convention what I told you yesterday is an absolute fact. If there was no "No" vote, the election was unanimous. You can't find a "No" vote in the record.

Q. I ask you again, Mr. Bridges, is this your conception of a unanimous reelection?

A. No. I am saying I agree with what the record shows there. There is no "No" votes there.

Q. You do not question the record?

A. I do not, in that respect. I question the record in a lot of places, but not on that particular point. The record, I would say, is correct. You have just read what actually took place, and an election is unanimous if there are no "No" votes cast in opposition. Votes to abstain are counted for the affirmative as a matter of parliamentary law; correct, Mr. Donohue?

Q. That is right.

I was trying to find whether this is your conception of a unanimous reelection.

A. Technically it is a unanimous reelection, but representing a good rank and file union it is not my personal idea of a [5636] unanimous reelection, no, sir.

Q. Mr. Bridges, while we are on the subject, what was the constitutional amendment to which Vice President Curran made reference when he challenged your eligibility to serve on the basis of that constitutional amendment? [5636-A]

A. It is a matter, I think—you have got it in the record there, Mr.—Look, on some of these matters, Mr. Donohue, it is a policy of our union that we don't like to wash, you might say, labor's dirty linen here in a courtroom or in public, but I am getting a little bit afraid that my reluctance to go into those matters might be construed as wanting to conceal something. Now, if you want to get into this little battle we have had over certain matters of policy in the labor movement, I have no real objection, except I am still a member of organized labor, and as a matter of principle and policy I just dislike ironing those things out in a court of law. That is the only reason I have had for not going into some of these matters. Now, if we get into this, I will tell you what the story is on them, and I will tell you what it is from the inside. But of course I will hurt a lot of people's feelings, and cause some people of my own union—those who agree with me as well as those that don't—to question my conduct in this matter. That is, when I say "my conduct," why, to question my actions in talking about these matters here particularly in a court of law, although there is nothing secret or wrong about it. But in any labor movement differences of opinion over matters of policy occur. There's all kinds of pulling and tugging for position and one thing and another. And I just hope and always strive to have the machinery of the trade union organizations themselves democratic enough to [5637] straighten out the matters within that machine and by that machine. That is my only point.

Q. Do you think that the question of the infiltration into the American labor movement by Communist Party members is merely a matter of policy as far as the union is concerned?

A. No, I think it is a big smoke screen, where a lot of—well, we call them "pie cards" or "labor fakers." I think it is just a big smoke screen behind which such type of individuals operate. It is true what I have told you, Mr. Donohue; when I see a person in the labor movement that begins to operate as an expert on Communism, begins to squawk about Communist infiltration in the labor movement, I begin to look around and find out where he is feathering his own nest, what ax has he got to grind, what office is he running for. And it is the same in public life, the same in public life. Most politicians employ the same device, and I have got a little skeptical and cynical, you know, because I have found that most all the crooks in the labor movement, all the crooks and the liars and opportunist, they climb on that bandwagon. So that——

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Do you think that Mr. Phil Murray is a labor faker?

A. Well, you know—will you accept my definition of a labor faker?

Q. Well, you used the term; it is yours, Mr. Bridges. You have a right to define it. [5638]

A. Well, there's quite a few things that Phil Murray does that I don't agree with. I don't think they are democratic; I don't think they are good trade unionism. I don't believe, for example, that people should be called out on strike without the people that are going to do the striking and the suffering getting a chance to vote whether they will go on strike or not. That is one disagreement I have with Mr. Murray. I don't wish to comment or criticize his standing as a union leader, but we can have those differences without them going to the question of his honesty and integrity, and they are honest differences in many cases.

Q. Do you have any difference with Mr. Phil

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Murray on the question of how important it is for a union to determine whether or not the Communist Party has infiltrated into that union through Communist Party members?

A. Maybe I wouldn't if I knew that that was really the subject they were concerned with; but I know it is not. I know that that is the argument that is used, and what is really going on in the CIO is someone is trying to make a political party out of it instead of a trade union. You've got too many opportunists in the CIO that are trying to feather their own nests and secure political positions for themselves by making a trade union organization a political organization. And I am opposed to that, my union is opposed to it, and we are trying to do what we can to have the trade union movement used as a trade [5639] union movement, to improve wages, hours, and working conditions, and not to be used for political purposes by some of its leadership.

Q. Now, is it your contention, Mr. Bridges, that the ILWU is only a trade union and has no politics, has no views on political matters?

A. It is a trade union first, second and last, and any political actions or any political views it has are purely incidental and supplementary to its trade union views and trade union program. It is a trade union. That is the purpose for its existence and it is going to stay that way, and it is a good trade union, too.

Q. Don't you remember a very extensive answer which you gave us yesterday in which you discussed not only your own but the viewpoint of your union on all the great national and international problems of the last few years?

A. No, I didn't give you any such answer. You ask me about any problem or issue, and I will dig into the records and show you where we stood on it. That is what I told you. And I also said that you couldn't produce one single instance to support some of the things you have said here about the union and about me, about the "flipflops" and things like that. If it is true, what you have said, that the union is Communist-dominated, the officers run the union and all those things, you ought to be able to produce at least one example of that, [5640] one documentary example, I mean, Mr. Donohue. I don't mean the witnesses you have produced. But you can't do it.

Q. You don't trust witnesses, do you, Mr. Bridges?

A. Oh, it depends. Some witnesses I am perfectly willing to trust; but when you bring people up here and you've got them in a rack and you make them talk (indicating), otherwise you take an extra turn of the screw, you don't trust people like that because you know it does happen. The policemen can get people down in the basement of the jail and they can beat confessions out of them. Now, look, we are grown-up people, Mr. Donohue, you and I—and we have been around, at least I have.

Q. You much prefer records to confessions——

Mr. Hallinan: Let him finish the answer.

A. Yes, I do. I think that records certainly speak for themselves, and they can't be changed. However, witnesses, you know, you can put the squeeze on. And I have had too many dealings with Mr. Boyd and his cohorts there (indicating); Boyd's been working on this case for too many years, and it is a matter of record. Don't take my word for it; there was a finding of fact on these things, Mr. Donohue, by the Senate of the United States, the Committee on Labor and Education. It is all in there, it is a matter of record. I can bring it down here and read it to you by the hour, if you will let me do it. So it is not a question of what I think, but the United States Senate [5641] set up a special committee to investigate and found out far more than I am telling you here, far more than I am telling you here, where this was plotted and programmed, and that certain witnesses were brought along here. And when you start talking about your witnesses, the only suggestion I have to you, you are paying them too much. Take a guy like Rathborne; you don't need to pay him $25 a day, Mr. Donohue. You will get him for $5; he will do the same thing for $5. And I am still a taxpayer, and you are still spending my money.

Q. You get $14 expense, don't you?

A. Only when I am out of town. Only when I am out of town. Would you like me to bring along—Listen, at that Cleveland convention you are talking about, I have got my expense account, my hotel bill. I was getting $14 a day, my hotel rent alone was $10 a day.

Q. I haven't forgotten the Cleveland convention, Mr. Bridges. We are going to come back to that.

Mr. Hallinan: Let him finish the answer. Mr. Bridges, you are entitled to finish your answer, and if counsel interrupts, just go right ahead.

I object, your Honor, to this constant interruption.

Mr. Donohue: I am not a mind-reader, if your Honor please.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, counsel is infatuated with the sound of his own voice. I think everybody else would sooner hear the witness. We want to hear what the witness has to say, not [5642] what counsel has to say. And these remarks that he hasn't forgotten about Cleveland, the Cleveland convention, are of no interest here. I think that we want to hear what Mr. Bridges has to say in response to the questions that are put to him. He should be entitled to finish his answers.

A. On my expenses, Mr. Donohue, now a room, on expenses—we want to have the right thing. Why, during the course of this trial, for example, I went to Honolulu, stayed over a weekend. So my plane fare amounts to around $350 or $360, and taxicabs to and from the airport a couple of dollars more. But my personal expenses was $28. So although the final expense account might show up to around $450 or $500, the amount of personal expenses I got out of that shows up as $28, Mr. Donohue.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

So it is unfair to take the money that is meant for train fare or plane fare and charge it to me. And I didn't go down there for the fun of the thing. I had to go down there on business, and I don't get any fun out of taking those trips. I would sooner stay home right here in San Fracnisco with my family. I would get much more fun doing that. But when there's an expense bill of four or five hundred dollars, and that is the charge, that trip to Hawaii. All I get out of it for my expenses was $28, a couple of days at $14 a day. And I can bring you my hotel bill again, and you will see that again—the room alone cost me $8 a day. Well, so that—I used the [5643] other $6 a day for all the other expenses—taxicab fares, telephone—not telephone calls, they are additional—but meals, and so forth. And believe me, you don't make any money on it. The expenses I get when I am traveling out of town, particularly in your city of Washington, is pretty expensive to live in those places. But we have got a pretty unsympathetic rank and file. They figure we should get along. We have got a flat sum, and if you spend any more, that is just too bad. Now, that is the whole story. But we are coming in, I have got my bookkeeper and my office staff preparing a detailed breakdown, and then we have got the certified public accountant lined up if you want him to attest to the truth of expenses, to turn over to you.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Have you finished, Mr. Bridges?

A. Yes, thank you.

Q. You have made several references to a finding of fact by a Senate committee on labor and education. That committee didn't hear the testimony of John Schomaker, did it?

A. I am not so sure; maybe it did.

Q. Did that committee hear the testimony of George Wilson?

A. Maybe it did; I don't know.

Q. Did that committee hear the testimony of Mrs. Harris?

A. You mean the testimony they gave here?

Q. Yes. [5644] A. Not that I know of.

Q. Did that committee hear the testimony of Lewis Michener? A. Not that I know of.

Q. Can you think of any witness who testified before this trial on the subject of the issues framed by this indictment who appeared before the Senate committee on Education and Labor?

A. I don't know. I couldn't—I will get the record and look it over. I will read the record there. That is a pretty long book, you know. It is a big, thick volume, and I will have to look. But I will do that tonight. That will give me something to do at home.

Q. Now, Mr. Bridges, going back to this unanimous election or re-election of yours, may I ask you again, do you have any independent recollection of the constitutional amendment to which reference was made by Mr. Curran in the statement that I read to you? A. Yes.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. What is your recollection on it?

A. There was a constitutional amendment slipped over by crooked means, in my opinion, that gave the Executive Board of the CIO power to suspend or expel a union or a member of the Executive Board if the union or the member of the Executive Board persisted in following Communist Party objectives or—yes, trying to achieve Communist Party objectives instead of following policies [5615] of the national CIO. That was the amendment.

Q. Generally termed an anti-Communist amendment; true?

A. Oh, well, I mean—that is—I wouldn't term it that. When you say "generally termed," you mean the sponsors of it, they would term it that. But if you would ask me what I would term it, I would term it a racketeering, corrupt, crooked, cover-up for a lot of dirty goings on, so that certain people can use a great organization like the CIO for their own personal political advancement. And it is a very simple thing to explain, Mr. Donohue. The big argument there is, I am a hundred per cent opposed to any union top brass sitting in the city of Washington and telling the rank and file workers that live here in the city of San Francisco in the State of California, who after all dig up their hard-earned dollars to pay the freight, how they should vote, who they should endorse for political office, what type of a political policy they should follow.

Let me give you a concrete example. That amendment stops me as an officer of my union, and stops my membership, from working together with our employers here on the waterfront, some of whom appeared in this courtroom. Now, there's a lot of things we disagree on with our employers. They are still operating ships in the interest of profit. The more profits they make, we figure that is the less we are getting wages on, so we don't—we continue to fight over those things. But far more friendly and constructive atmosphere than heretofore, [5646] and we have learned a lot of hard lessons. But let me give you one concrete example. There's one thing that we are agreed upon, generally speaking, and that is, we would like to increase the amount of traffic or freight moving through the port of San Francisco and other ports.

We are not a manufacturer's area here in the Bay area so much; we are a commercial gateway, the old "gateway to the Pacific," as we say. Now, then, the American shipowners, members of the Shipowners' Association of the Pacific Coast, the PMA, they are all desirous of doing trade with China. Notwithstanding the change in the government of China. They agree with us, both sides, the employers and our union agree that in the interest of our city and in the interest of our industry, they will make profits, our men will get work. We would like to work together and we are working together to try and have trade resumed with China, as well as Indo-China, as well as Indonesia, and as well as British Malaya, because their ships will operate full both ways and our men will be working. There will be more work and they will make more money.

The CIO tells me that I can't work together, even if I am instructed by my union; I can't work together with my employers for those ends. And the answer we have given to the CIO is one that I don't want to repeat in this courtroom, and I have did so under the instructions of my own union membership, who retain the right, in their opinion, to formulate policies [5647] that they think will be to their best interests.

Q. Were you as anxious to trade with Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy as you now are to trade with Communist China? A. No.

Q. What is the difference?

A. Well, now, that will take me a little while to answer that, Mr. Donohue.

Q. We have lots of time.

A. All right, fine. O.K., let's go. Now, look——

Mr. Donohue: May we take the recess first, if your Honor please?

The Court: We will take the morning recess. Same admonition to you, ladies and gentlemen, not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Recess.) [5648]

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, Your Honor?

Q. Did you want to answer the last question, Mr. Bridges?

A. I think the question, Mr. Donohue, was that we were not so ready to do business with Nazi Germany, Fascist Italy and Spain as we were with China, and I said we were not, and here are the reasons:

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Our yardstick happens to be maybe our own supplemented with the opinions of other people, opinions that I think we can afford to trust. The way I look at another country, and the way, generally speaking, the union I represent looks at another country, if no unions are allowed to exist in that country, that is not a democratic country. If the people can't vote, it is not a democratic country. If they can't organize, it is not a democratic country. If they are denied trial by jury, it is not a democratic country. And if they discriminate against their own citizens because of religion or race, it is not a democratic country. Now, there is a few of the simple tests that we apply to a nation, and in the case of Nazi Germany, I have no direct personal knowledge. I have to admit that my information is secondhand. It has come from other people. But I have no reason to doubt it. I am not going by anything I read in any newspaper or heard over the air or from any propaganda agency, but I think it is a fact that Nazi Germany was built around a principle and a policy of discrimination against Jewish people and against other people because of their religion and [5649] their race. Certainly they advanced the idea of the super-race, the super-man, the Aryan race. Certainly they smashed and eliminated trade unions. Certainly they did away with the people's right to vote. And certainly they—Nazi Germany and the leaders of Nazi Germany set out to conquer, capture and enslave the world, and all the time they accompanied it with righteous claims and declarations that they meant no harm to any country, including our own here. What they were trying to do was save the world from Bolshevism. Mussolini and Italy the same thing. Mussolini started off as a Socialist and so did Hitler in Germany. They all started off with claims and proclamations that they are out to do the right thing for the common people. But as the whole situation developed in Italy, the Fascist corporate state was set up and inevitably—inevitably as a result of those things we find the nation engaging in a war, and generally in a particular type of war, a war that has as its purpose the conquering and enslaving of another country and another country's people; in the case of Mussolini and Italy, at least an attack upon Ethiopia, a feudal state, maybe not too much to commend the state of Ethiopia—it is a slave state—but nevertheless it was a country that was more or less minding its own business. And I can well recall a few things about that. I recall the book written by Mussolini's son, the fun he got out of dropping bombs on the defenseless people and saw the bits of people rise in the air like the [5650] unfolding of the rose. I was down in Hollywood some months ago when Mussolini's son was imported into Hollywood to make moving pictures by the Hal Roach Studios, and I got together with some people down there to run him out, to shame him out. That is a matter of history. So in so far as Mussolini and the Italian regime that he founded, built, with all its cruelties, lack of privileges and liberties, of course I think that is an entirely different situation. The same goes as far as Spain is concerned. It is many, many years ago since I was in China, but from what I saw of that place at that time the cheapest thing in China was the human life, and I think the people have finally taken over and changed things, something like they did here in the United States in 1776. I think they have had a people's revolution down there, and if they are wrong, then the people of the United States were wrong in 1776.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

And, blieve me, I am no supporter of the British Empire. I have been anti-British Empire from the day that I could first understand what it meant. I visited most of the parts of the British Empire. The British Empire is a slave empire. The parts of the empire that are not a slave state are only—they only got their independence because they took up arms and fought for their independence, the same way the colonies did here in the United States. Australia did. Very few people know that. Australia fought to establish her independence and become the commonwealth of Australia by force of arms. I am glad she did. [5651] The same with Ireland.

Well, to put it simply, those parts of the British

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Empire that are slave colonies, I think that as soon as they can find some ways or means to change their status, they ought to do it, and I would be perfectly willing to do everything we could to help them. I draw a line, therefore, between a country—on one hand, a country dominated by a Hitler or Mussolini, where the general rights of the people are abrogated or done away with, and a country that is going through a revolutionary struggle where the people try to get away from corruptness and inefficiency and starvation and famine; it takes some very extreme means to set up a new government.

I recognize that in China, from what I have heard again—it is many, many years since I was in China; I have only got secondhand reports—these people have risen up, armed themselves, and have changed their government by force and violence. They have overthrown their government. But from what I have also heard, there was a pretty corrupt and inefficient government. Now, for quite a while, our union again took the lead and we were in a mighty unpopular position for many, many years in supporting the old government of China, the Chiang Kai-Shek regime, and I had recorded a speech made to our union by Madame Chiang Kai-Shek herself some years ago, where she was instructed to make that speech to our union, and that was the only union in the country she was ordered to do that. And it was in [5652] recognition for the support and services our union had tried to render to her country and her government. That, of course, was support against the Japanese nation, support against Japanese bombing of defenseless Chinese people and Chinese citizens. And over in my union office now hangs a banner, a special banner presented to my union by the Chinese people in this city, the city of San Francisco, in recognition of the steps we took to try to prevent the shipment of ammunition and scrap iron to the Japanese at the time they were being used to bomb the Chinese people.

Now, that had nothing to do at that time with whether we saw eye to eye with the government of the country, what was going on in another country, without official declaration of war, without any reason at all, because Japan had fallen into the hands of a certain military clique; they had decided to go over and seize the port of the other country and butcher and torture the people, as we all know. We didn't stop and consider whether the government of China was a good one or bad one so much. We were not so much interested in its political aspects. It was a pretty simple thing. But today there is the story. Now, on the other hand, we are not right now so much interested in the various aspects of the political regime or control of the Chinese government. We, of course, have heard that it is a Communist government. I am under no illusions at all that some of the leaders of that revolution or that fight down there are [5653] Communists, officially so, proclaiming themselves to be, and so forth. But what we are concerned with here is this: San Francisco lives by its port, by its trade. There is no coal mines around here, no steel mills, anything like that. We are a commercial center. We import and we export. Unless the West Coast, and particularly San Francisco, gets back that China trade, we are heading for one great depression around here and everybody will suffer injury, and the people I represent, the workers who work on the waterfront and in the warehouses, we see eye to eye on that point with the shipowners. Now, no one is telling me—Mr. Roger Lapham, I understand, is going to be a witness here—Roger Lapham was storming all over the place. He is one of the leading advocates of the resumption of trade with China. He, of course, points out as far as he is concerned, it is not a matter of who is running the government of China at the moment. Apparently people in control of the government have been people who, one way or the other, get the support—maybe even grudgingly or reluctant support—the recognition of the Chinese people, and that is true. We had the same thing occur after the American Revolution. Remember, after the American Revolution here in 17—this word "revolution"—people seem to shy away from in these days. I didn't invent the word. But in the days of the American Revolution, like the French Revolution, America, the United States, went through the same thing. All the world was jumping on it and pointing out the Communists in [5654] the United States, meaning George Washington, Paine and others. The same thing was happening, and it will happen more and more. So our union can't bear any responsibility. And because we have advocated trade with China in the interests of getting more work for our longshoremen on the waterfront, who unless they get work, of course, they can't have a union, the union will fall apart, and maybe I will have to do something else, even myself—that is not so much what I am thinking of—but it is as simple as that. The port here, the City of San Francisco, believe me, lives by its waterfront. That is a matter of simple economics. And the bulk of our trade, fifty per cent of the foreign trade that moves through the port of San Francisco was China trade. We have got to re-establish that trade, otherwise we can't have prosperity and employment here in the United States, particularly in the port of San Francisco, and a lot of people around here would be out of a job, and if people are out of work around here, our city, of course, will not have properous times and will not have security.

So here we have a situation where people who do not agree with us on anything else, certainly people you can't call Communists, pro-Communists or anything else as they are anti-Communist—they agree with our union on the promotion of trade relations with China, so the merchants of the city will do business, the exporters and importers will do business, the ships will run full both ways, and there will be more work for a large number [5655] of workers in the city, and because there is more work there will be more money to pay the grocery bills, to pay the house rent, buy furniture and other things. It is as simple as that. And the question of the whole political complexion of the government is secondary or incidental. And as far as the difference is concerned, I see a vast difference between the program of Hitler and Nazi Germany and what they set out to do.

Gosh, it isn't so long ago that I have forgotten it, I still remember—I still remember pictures and the stories, the stories I read as well as the stories the people who came back told me, of the ovens—you know, Buchenwald, the concentration camps, the Jews being burned in the ovens and things like that. Nothing like that has happened in China. Now, even when China, Russia or any other country starts doing those things, I will guarantee that you will see, if I've got anything to do with it, you will see our union in the front of the fight, complaining and doing all we can to damn and criticize and prevent and urge and fight against those things no matter where they happen. We play no favorites.

I have a few simple tests, as I say, of what is a democratic nation. One of the first leading tests is a nation that does not allow trade unions to be organized. A nation that does not allow trade unions to be organized is not a democratic nation and can't be called such by any stretch of the imagination. That is one of the tests we make. And, of course, a country that [5656] discriminates against its own citizens because they are of a different color or different religion is not a democratic nation. We all know the Hitler and Mussolini attitude toward the Jewish people. We all know the question of the trade unions. We all know the question of the right to vote. We all know the question of trial by jury. Those are tests we make. The countries that do not have those things, as far as our union is concerned, they are not democratic countries, and I am in favor of resorting to some particular extreme measures to change them.

Q. Have you finished, Mr. Bridges?

A. Yes. [5657]

Q. What was your attitude and the attitude of your union on the rape of Poland by Russia?

A. Well, I don't know much about it. Now, here is the way I understand that situation—and again, my information is second-hand, other than this point: Because of a lot of questions being asked me, such as you are asking me, Mr. Donohue, a lot of questions being asked of me by my own union membership as well as people outside of my union, I got this idea. I says, "Well, about the best thing to do is select four of our own union workers off the job, four American workers, all officers barred, four workers responsible only to the membership of the union right off the job, and pay their expenses and send them on a tour of Europe; send them to talk to the Polish people, the Russian people and the German people and to bring back a report in their own words to the membership." We did that not so long ago. We did that, and the report is printed, I can bring it up here and you can read it for yourself, and there is a report in there about Poland and what the Polish people think about that.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. When? A. What is that?

Q. When? A. You mean——

Q. When was this survey made?

A. A couple of years ago; two or three years ago. In 1948; [5658] just in 1948.

Q. Do you think that Poland—I am sorry; if you had something more to say, go ahead.

A. So in addition to the information that I got, now, four men of my own union, four workers, men right off the job to make the trip—it was my idea, I worked it out, to have them selected by the union, all local and national officers were barred, they weren't eligible, and it was as democratic as we could be in the selection. The union selected them; I didn't select them. They were told to go over and find out the truth the best way you can and bring back a report to the members. We didn't want to go by the newspapers; you can't trust a newspaper on these issues. I didn't want to have to go by the statements of self-seeking politicians or anybody like that. In addition to that, I have been fortunate enough to have many conversations with quite a few people who were born in those countries, that were over there and observed such things, and from all I can find out, at that period of time, after many, many detailed conferences and not any one conference, here was a country where the government collapsed and the way I look at it, the country of Russia she took steps to prevent or to meet what eventually transpired; namely, she figured her country was to be invaded and she took certain steps. That is what happened. It isn't a question of what I think or what my beliefs are. I am going by what happened. [5659]

If you want a good report, there is a report, and I will refer you to the report put out by the Foreign Policy Association. That is a good non-union or anti-union organization and makes a practice of studying such matters, and that is what they say. Amongst other people that have told me the same thing was a man named Henry Wallace—he is still alive—and a man named Wendell Willkie who also told me those things along the same general line. Of my own personal knowledge, I don't know. I haven't been there, but as far as what I have found out secondhand talking to other people whose word I would hesitate before I would ignore, that is the best I can tell you about it.

Q. Do you think there is democracy in Latvia, Lithuania, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Bulgaria and in Russia?

A. If I am going by what people have told me, that come from those countries, such as Estonia and those states, the Baltic States, who left those states when they were under the regime before the Russians took over—if I can go by what they have told me, and I have no personal knowledge, I would say that there is more democracy in those countries now than before they were seized by the Soviets. Prior to that, they were all dictatorships. If you want to know where I stand on dictatorships, I am against dictatorships, Mr. Donohue; I don't care where they exist.

Q. Is it your belief that Russia is a totalitarian state? [5660]

A. Well, what do you mean by that?

Q. What do you mean by it, Mr. Bridges? I am interested in your thinking.

A. If I look in the dictionary, I will find that the meaning of totalitarian is this: That is a state or an organization that is governed by one faction.

Q. Then according to that definition, do you think that there is democracy in Russia?

A. According to that definition, well, I would have to—on the other hand, certain agencies of our government and certain—I am just reading a newspaper now where there is a report by a man who is writing for the Christian Science Monitor who spent many, many years in Russia, and he says that a majority of the Russian people are urging to break loose, they are trying to get away and they want a change in the setup, if I am to believe him. Well, if that is the case, it seems to me there is more than one faction in Russia. Therefore, the definition of totalitarianism as I read it in the dictionary falls down; I can't believe that definition.

There is another definition of totalitarianism and that is that there is only one party or people run for office without any party, and it can be both. Now, if you apply that term, I find myself in this position: that the majority of trade unions in the United States are totalitarian, because when you run for office in a trade union, you don't run as a Republican, a [5661] Democrat, a Communist or a Socialist, you run on your own record and you are elected or rejected on the basis of your record. So a technical application of the totalitarian principle to a trade union, you would have to designate trade unions as totalitarian. So I can't apply that principle.

Now, I think that, if what you mean by totalitarian—I asked you what you meant by totalitarian.

Q. I mean what any American means by it, a democracy as opposed to totalitarianism.

A. I will have to—there is a lot of difference of opinion on democracy. Your idea of what a democracy is and mine might differ. Your idea of democracy might mean putting me on the griddle and trying to run me out of the country or throw me in jail on the word of a bunch of liars, perjurers and stool pigeons.

Q. Do you think you would get that chance in Communist Russia?

A. I don't know. If I didn't get it, I would yelp just like I am trying to do now. If I couldn't have those things, I would try in some way to make myself known and where I stood. If I can't get those things, if I can't get the right to speak in Communist Russia and the right to a fair trial, I don't want any part of Communist Russia or any other country. This is my country, Mr. Donohue. I came here voluntarily. I wasn't driven out of any country. I am not ashamed of where I came from. I am not ashamed of being born in Australia, or being an [5662] Australian. It is a pretty good country, and a lot of G. I. Joes were over there and they are going back. This is my country. If you want to cross-examine me on where I stand with respect to the United States, I will go with you.

Q. We will come to what you have said about the United States at a later stage.

A. I hope so.

Q. Just now I am trying to find out what you have to say about Communist Russia as compared with your statements about Nazi Germany.

A. I am trying to speak of my own personal knowledge. You know, I get around quite a bit. I was never fortunate or unfortunate enough to pay a visit to Soviet Russia. I have been to other countries—so I can't speak from my own personal knowledge. And one of the things that I stand for in the CIO—I have told you, and I think in the CIO there are experts on Communist Russia, and I generally start off by asking them one question: "Have you ever been there?" And if they say no, I say, "I don't know where you stand, but I have learned this much, I will keep my mouth shut if I don't know what I am talking about." I generally don't like to talk about places where I haven't been.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

If you are asking me about places I have been, I could tell you about them.

Q. Have you ever been in Germany?

A. No. [5663]

Q. You talked a lot about Germany.

A. I can talk about Russia the same way, based on what I have heard and the people I have talked about. I will talk to you about Russia the same way.

Q. As an American citizen, Mr. Bridges, do you have any faith or confidence in the Department of State of the United States or the foreign policy of the United States?

A. Certainly. Not blind faith. I think, and I have said this before—they have made their mistakes. Up until September, 1941, right on these ships, the men in my union were loading steel and scrap iron and airplane engines for Japan. I used to go down there aboard the ships with a crowbar, and I would break open these big packing cases marked "Farm Implements," and every one was a Pratt & Whitney airplane engine, being shipped to Japan. And right now our men on the waterfront are still unloading dead bodies off ships.

Q. What about sending airplane engines to Communist Russia?

A. I will get to that in a minute. I have a telegram in my file from the State Department—we said: "Look, we don't want to work these ships. There is going to be a war, and if we send them scrap iron and steel and these airplane engines and airplane parts, they are going to be used to kill our people." And I have got a telegram from the State Department, Mr. Donohue, saying, "Don't interfere with our diplomatic relations with a friendly nation." And I did not only not believe [5664] those things or got very cynical, but so did my entire membership. What was your question about Communist Russia?

Q. In our foreign policy, according to our Constitution, is the foreign policy established by the President of the United States or the President of the ILWU?

A. Oh, I think by the President of the United States plus the Congress.

Q. Aren't you satisfied with the decision of the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States makes?

A. I thought it was my right, Mr. Donohue, any time I am not satisfied that I can yell my head off.

Q. Nobody complains about your right, because you have been doing it.

A. That's right; that is why I am in trouble, I guess.

Q. I am simply asking you to explain how you can excuse your present desire to trade with Communist Russia on the ground that your motive is purely economic.

Mr. Hallinan: He didn't say Russia; he said China.

Mr. Donohue: Communist China.

Mr. Hallinan: You said Russia.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): And at the same time justify your position about trading with another totalitarian state, Germany, on the ground that your objection was political.

A. Because I was of the opinion and the members of my union are of the opinion, and our opinion came about because we were [5665] told, as I already told you, away back in 1933 the German trade union leaders that were put in concentration camps behind barbed wire and later on burned in the ovens, they sent us word that many years ago saying that the whole program of Hitler Germany was to make war on the United States. The German trade union leaders told us, "Watch out what you are doing; don't support this program, or you will pay for it in blood." That is how we got that idea. The situation isn't just the same. I still don't believe—and I understand that is the policy of our Government—that Russia means to make war on us. If she does—if she does, I guess it won't make much difference what I think, the people of the United States will determine what to do then. They will fight. I don't believe in getting pushed around [illegible] anyone. I don't believe in looking for trouble, but when someone starts to pushing anybody around, I believe everyone else will react the same as I do. You just don't turn the other cheek. I believe in fighting back, and that goes again for any country. Any country. [5666]

Q. Now, Mr. Bridges, before we get into the question of foreign policy, you made the statement that with respect to this non-Communist amendment to the constitution of the national CIO, adopted in November of 1949, that it was slipped over by illegal means. Now, just what did you mean by that? How was it proposed, how was it acted upon, and in what measure was that conduct illegal?

A. Again, Mr. Donohue, I just don't like to go into all the little things that happened in the trade union movement, but the purpose of the amending of the constitution at that convention is in order to empower certain leaders in the trade union movement to be able to do certain things that, in my experience and in my opinion, are for the purpose of advancing themselves politically and in other words, instead of doing the best thing for the rank and file of the trade union movement. And that amendment was slipped into the constitution to give a small handful of officers at the top of CIO complete dictatorial political control of an important national organization. We had—let me give you this kind of example, Mr. Donohue. In the course of the testimony of Henry Schmidt here, a list of endorsements by my own local union was read off, where candidates appeared before the local union. The people that are standing for political office show up or send a representative, and they get up and say, "I am a candidate for District Attorney. I promise you that if I am elected District Attorney, with your [5667] endorsement and support, I will do thus and so." or "I am a candidate for Congress," and so forth. The CIO has decided—And then, to continue that up a little further, then my own local membership, who are residents, taxpayers, registered voters here in the City of San Francisco, they look the field over, they make their choice, they go on record and they urge the membership of the local union to support, finance and help elect so-and-so to such-and-such a political office. In all honesty and sincerity. And they believe they have —they are doing the best thing for themselves and the community as a whole, and they go forward and do it. Of course, they can't force any man to vote or any woman to vote as they so vote. But it is an expression, it is an endorsement, it is leadership. Well, what has happened is this: There was a sudden change of policy by that national CIO, where the officers of the national CIO tells me and tells my local union they can't do it; they've got to only support, endorse and finance people selected for them by the officers of national CIO sitting in Washington, 3000 miles away. If my local union down here wishes to endorse and support, contribute funds to the campaign of Jack Shelley for Congress or Franck Havenner or even His Honor the Judge here, that is the business of my local union here, who live and pay taxes and are registered voters of this city. And we don't concede to Mr. Phil Murray or any of the other officers of the national CIO in Washington [5668] to be able to tell us what to do in that respect in order that they can go around and pull certain political deals in Washington that redound to their own benefit and credit. Now, that is what we are opposed to and that is what—it was in order for them to have greater power to do those things that they put that amendment in the constitution.

If you will read a little further in that record, Mr. Donohue, you will find I stand up on the floor of the convention and I address the chairman, and I will say, "Where are the resolutions calling for constiutional amendments that were sent in here in accordance with the rules and regulations of the constitution by the ILWU?" The chairman says, "What resolutions? We are sorry, they have disappeared."

Q. I will give you an opportunity, Mr. Bridges, to state fully what you said before this meeting, but I would like to get down to the question to determine whether you and I are talking about the same thing. A. We are.

Q. Whether, when you were talking about his Honor and Jack Shelley and voting for somebody else—let me ask you if this is the——

A. I am telling you the purpose of that amendment. When I said it was put in there for corrupt purposes, you say it was put in there to fight Communism.

Q. Let me read it and see if we are talking about the same—— [5669]

Mr. Hallinan: Let him answer the question.

Mr. Donohue: I have let him answer all along.

Mr. Hallinan: All counsel is doing is indulging in a bad temper, unseemly tirades back and forth with the witness. If he doesn't get the answer that he would like to get, I don't know why he should want any answer but a true answer—if he is the honest man he says he is—why, then he should let the witness finish and not lose his temper and snap and snarl and get waspish about it. I think counsel could be a little more urbane in his demeanor toward the witness. All we ask is that the witness finish his answer. Counsel shouldn't scream at me.

Mr. Donohue: I might say, my soft-spoken friend might be right.

Mr. Hallinan: Mr. Bridges, the Court can support you, and you can finish your answer. Don't be frightened by this counsel, however much he might protest his heroism; he will not make any personal assault on you, I feel nearly sure. So just answer fully.

A. My only point, Mr. Donohue, was, I know that the wording of the amendment states certain things, but I am here to tell you, I am an officer of the CIO, I am not a newcomer in the labor movement; that it very often happens not only in labor circles but in Government too, it is like the small print in an insurance policy. It can mean an entirely different thing, you know. [5670]

Q. Let me read it to you, Mr. Bridges.

A. That is what that amendment means.

Q. And see whether we were talking about the same amendment. A. Yes.

Q. Article IV, concerning officers and Executive Board, is amended by the insertion of a new section 4, which reads as follows:

> "No individual shall be eligible to serve either as an officer or as a member of the Executive Board who is a member of the Communist Party, any Fascist organization or other totalitarian movement, or who consistently pursues policies and activities directed toward the achievement of the program or the purposes of the Communist Party, any Fascist organization or other totalitarian movement, rather than the objectives and policies set forth in the constitution of the CIO."

That was the amendment, wasn't it?

A. Right.

Q. Now, you were, prior to your unanimous reelection in November of 1949, already a member of the Executive Committee of the CIO?

A. I have been a member since it was formed.

Q. Isn't it a fact, Mr. Bridges, that in May of 1949, the May preceding the November we were talking about, that the quesiton of this resolution or this change in the constitution [5671] was fully discussed by the Executive Committee of the CIO in Washington?

A. No, you are wrong, Mr. Donohue. Let me tell you what happened. You see, that is one of the other complaints that I have against the CIO, that they won't make available—I am instructed by my union, I come back and report to my union on what happens at Executive Board meetings. And I have to tell my union, "You've got to take my word for it, folks, because the minutes of the CIO Executive Board seem to be top secret. They are not even allowed to be circulated amongst the members of the CIO."

Now, here is what happened at the May, 1949, meeting. An entirely different resolution than that was adopted. The resolution that stated what the CIO was truly trying to do. That is exactly what happened, and there was no mention of Communist Party activities. But that is where these people come out in the open and they said, "From here on in, members of the CIO Executive Board must take orders from the national officers of the CIO and not from the union that elects them." And the resolution started out—I will bring you up a copy of it and you will find it is entirely different.

So what happened in the months intervening between May, '49, and the CIO convention, the officers of the CIO saw that they would have to retreat, and they would have to do some double-talking; they couldn't put over their scheme to [5672] establish the CIO as a political dictatorship. So then they came along with the old red herring. And it has been my experience in the labor movement, when you have got something crooked to slip over, dress it up in the old red herring and you've got a better chance of doing it. And the same in a lot of other things, too. And that is what was done here in Cleveland, and the resolution adopted in

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Cleveland, the constitutional amendment was entirely different than the resolution passed by the CIO Executive Board in May. And in that way, that is another little crooked bit of crooked business. The CIO resolution passed by the Executive Board in May was referred to the convention for action. That disappeared, too. The action of the Executive Board, the resolution passed by the Board, that disappeared. And when we came to the CIO convention—this is the thing that crops up—and this is one of the questions I asked, "What happened to our resolution that was passed by the Executive Board in May?" "Where is that in this convention?" That was gone with the wind, too, along with the resolution introduced by the ILWU.

I led a delegation down before the constitutional committee of the convention. I said, "Listen, where is the resolutions put in by the ILWU asking for certain matters?" The committee says, "We haven't got them. They have disappeared."

So there's a quite a few things. Another thing let me tell you, Mr. Donohue, what that amendment is to conceal. I have [5673] been one of a group of officers in the CIO that have been demanding a financial accounting of CIO. The CIO has been going for many, many years. It has collected and spent many, many millions of dollars. The members of my union that work in the warehouses and the docks of the city, they asked me to get a financial accounting from the officers of CIO as to what happened to the millions of dollars, part of which they have contributed to. And in all the years I have been in CIO I have not been able yet to persuade the national officers of CIO to turn over a financial accounting to my membership as to what has happened to all the money. So that has caused some differences between myself and the national officers of the CIO.

Q. And is that why you voted against the non-Communist amendment to the constitution of the CIO, because you couldn't get a financial statement?

A. One of the reasons, certainly—one of the reasons, because I well recognized in order to combat our drive to get a financial accounting, as well as to keep the CIO a democratic organization, the old red herring was being raised. Now, the ones that decide what is a Communist activity are the officers of the CIO, you see. And the way it works, Mr. Donohue, if you are going to play ball with the top, there's all kinds of things, come your way. But if you are going to buck and try to fight for a democratic trade unionism, you are going to be in [5674] trouble, and that is—I am not being kidded—that is one of the reasons I am here today on this witness stand. I am not being kidded.

Q. Have you finished your answer, Mr. Bridges?

A. Yes, thank you.

Mr. Donohue: May we take the recess?

The Court: We will take the noon recess and resume at two o'clock, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you, not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Thereupon a recess was taken until 2:00 p.m. this date.) [5675]

February 15, 1950, 2:00 o'Clock

The Clerk: The United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

The witness on the stand is Harry Renton Bridges, heretofore sworn.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

May I proceed, Your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Bridges, are you at all familiar with the trade union situation in Russia?

A. Not too familiar, Mr. Donohue. My information on that comes, I would say, from three sources: reports of officers of the national CIO themselves; and reports of various other representatives of the United States Government that have —I have talked to on the matter; and the reports of the delegation that my own union sent over to Russia a couple of years ago. Now, that is my information. I have never been to Russia. I don't put any faith in newspaper reports. I don't put any faith in the reports of renegades or—I mean by that people that allegedly escaped from Russia and came over to the United States and write best sellers about their experiences. I think those things are self-serving. I have talked to various people about Russia. I have talked to Mr. Donald Nelson, I have talked to Mr. Henry Wallace, I have talked to Wendell Willkie when he [5676] was alive. I have talked to my own union delegation and I have talked to the officers of the CIO, and their reports are officially—have been publicized.

During the United Nations Conference here in San Francisco, when the United Nations was established, I talked to the representatives of the Soviet trade unions themselves. That is what my information depends upon.

Q. Do you know when, if ever, there was a strike by a labor union in Russia?

A. No, but I heard that point discussed by Mr. Torazo (?), who was secretary of the Council of Russian Trade Unions on the possibility of a strike in Russia. I asked him that very question. I said, "Listen, how about this business of strikes in Russia?" So he gave me an explanation and whether that explanation is correct I don't know, but I got an explanation that did kind of make a little sense.

Q. Now, Mr. Bridges, have you ever read in the bulletin issued by the United States Department of State a report on the infringement of trade union rights which was a statement prepared by Leroy D. Steinbauer, United States deputy representativ in the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations?

A. I haven't read it, but I am certainly willing to. I will read anything.

Q. May I ask you if this statement coincides with the information you got from the various sources you have already stated: [5677]

> "Trade union rights are meaningless or worse if the associations are state-controlled, state-dominated and state-serving. A labor union in a Communist dominated country can hardly be distinguished from a labor front of Nazi Germany. Both serve the interest of the state or the party against the freedom of the worker. Even if the trade unions were free and independent, workers could hardly be bargaining equals of the government. The fact that the employer is the government which controls not only the condition of work but all other aspects of daily life makes the worker all the more helpless. That is bad enough, but when the so-called labor unions themselves are agents of an employing government operating through officers picked by the union oligarchy, the worker is really exploited by both."

Does that conform to the information that you have received from your sources?

A. It may be true of Russia. It sounds also to me to be a true description of the situation, that is, as I have heard it, that exists in England at the present time and in Belgium and in France.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. Could we see the document and inspect the rest of it and see if there is something in it?

The Witness: It is my understanding, Mr. Donohue, that there is no collective bargaining left in England. Just recently [5678] the trade unions of France went on strike in order to reinstitute their collective bargaining. There is a wage freeze and because the workers in effect work for the government, it seems to me to be a similar situation. Now, that is the facts. I didn't say I approved or disapproved. I know something about the trade unions of the United States, and on that I consider my knowledge is good. I am not so well informed, only by second-hand information, on the trade union movement and methods and strategy of Russia or any of those places. But I do know this much: It is quite an issue in England today. Trade unions in England can not strike today, and that is a vaunted democracy, not that I think it is, but I know that it is just too bad. And I know there is a labor government over there, and I know that trade union leaders are members of the Cabinet. I know there is a wage freeze, and if you try to strike, the troops are brought in and shoot you down. That is the situation in France because the majority of the workers work for the government.

Now, if that is what you are referring to, I have no use for it in England, France, Russia or any other place, for this is my country, sir, the United States of America. I came here voluntarily, of my own free will, and I hope to stay here.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Mr. Bridges, do you recall Mr. Murray stating this on the Monday, October 31, 1949, session of the eleventh constitutional convention of the CIO, quoting Mr. Murray:

> "In May of the present year the CIO executive board met [5679] in the city of Washington."

Mr. Hallinan: If the Court please, this isn't a proper way of examining the witness. First we have had a dissertation or a statement by some person, I don't know who he is. Now, we are having read into the record what counsel says Mr. Murray said. That isn't a proper way of examining the witness. The only thing that he could be confronted with is something that might be shown to him to find out if it refreshed his recollection as to something that occurred that would dispute what he has already said, or something that might refresh his recollection on some matter. Now, to stand up here and read off a statement by Mr. Philip Murray is to introduce Mr. Murray's testimony without the benefit of cross-examination.

Mr. Donohue: I have no objection to the witness refreshing his recollection by looking at it.

Mr. Hallinan: If it does. [5680]

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Does that refresh your recollection on what Mr. Murray said, Mr. Bridges?

A. Sure. He wasn't telling the truth, that's all. I have got the resolution he referred to right here, Mr. Donohue, if you want to see it. And if you will compare the resolution to what he says there, you will see he is not telling the truth. I have got it right here in the official CIO paper. I brought it with me to help you.

Q. I appreciate the help, Mr. Bridges. Will you tell us now before you call that to my attention, in just what measure Mr. Murray fails to tell the truth in this statement which you have just read?

A. His statement that you are referring to there says that he is speaking at the convention in Cleveland, November of this year, of last year—October. And he is saying that in May of this year the executive board of the CIO met and adopted a resolution on Communistic activities in the CIO. Isn't that what he says?

Q. You just read it, didn't you?

A. And I have got the CIO paper here dealing with that same resolution, and if you can find a word in there about Communism I will eat it.

Q. Then Mr. Murray is not telling the truth when he states in this speech of his at the convention on the day I called to your attention that in May of the present year, "The CIO [5681] executive board met in the city of Washington"——

A. Oh, he is telling the truth to that degree.

Q. Were you at that meeting? A. Yes.

Q. "In pursuance to instructions given by the last national convention of the CIO, it adopted another resolution, and that resolution proclaimed to our membership the fact that no > one who adhered to the Communistic philosophy and propagated Communism to the detriment of our trade union movement in this country could hope to serve in office or be a member of our international executive board. The May declaration of the CIO executive board was fought bitterly by certain elements within the board. This servile process of serving the interests of the Communist Party continued following the May declaration of the CIO executive board."

Now, you tell us that didn't happen?

A. That's right, it didn't happen. Now, here you see, I have here what the resolution said, following CIO policy. In the May executive board meeting of the CIO——

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me, pardon me. I think it should be suggested that Mr. Bridges read the actual declaration.

Mr. Donohue: I have no objection to Mr. Bridges reading anything, Mr.——

A. (Continuing) Mr. Donohue, at the May executive board [5682] meeting the resolution did come in——

Mr. Hallinan: I would light that light, Mr. Bridges.

The Witness: I can see.

A. (Continuing) And the resolution was adopted by the CIO executive board, and I am one of the elements there that fought bitterly against it, and it is a matter of record why I fought it. I said, "Look, with all due respect to you, President Murray—"; Philip Murray is not a person I exactly detest. I have a certain admiration and respect for Phil Murray for the good things he does. When he is wrong, I say so, that I think I disagree with that. But I said, "What you are doing here, you are destroying this union, this CIO. I represent an organization that helped build it." We poured in approximately $600,000 into helping build the CIO, Mr. Donohue, as well as many of our fellows hurt and pushed around and a lot of other things.

I says, "Now, what you are doing here—I am elected to this board by my membership. The CIO doesn't elect me to the executive board. My union elects me. I am instructed by my union that elects me and pays my wages to carry out certain policies to this board. I am the voice, the representative of my union on this CIO board. You come in with a resolution now and say that unless I take orders from you, Mr. Murray, notwithstanding what my membership tells me, I am not eligible to serve on this board." I said, "That is a violation of the CIO [5683] constitution, that is a phoney, it is a racket, and if you are going to carry through a policy like that, you are going to destroy CIO." And that is what is happening to CIO today; it is being destroyed because of those type of policies.

In addition to the fact that it is depriving my membershp—I was one of the leaders here on the Pacific Coast that took the lead in 1937, urging my own union to get out of the American Federation of Labor. And certainly we had a lot of faults to find with the American Federation of Labor, and to go over into the CIO. And we have got a solemn written compact, a solemn agreement with the CIO saying that our membership could always have its autonomy—autonomy meaning its right of self-government. There is a long background to it, Mr. Donohue, with our organization. Believe me, to the ILWU, autonomy means the same thing as home rule to Ireland. It means the same thing. Our fellows like to have the right to fight amongst themselves. The CIO comes along and says, "Well, we will take care of that. There is no further need to fight amongst yourselves. We will make the decisions for you, and then you will all have to go along." So our fellows being the kind of people they are, because of the background of the fight for home rule, they insist upon the right to fight amongst themselves if they want to fight, and that is what the big battle is all about.

Here was a resolution passed, in effect, saying "No more [5684] need to fight amongst yourselves. We will make all the decisions for you back here in Washington. All you people have to do out there in the West Coast is pay your dues, send the money in, keep your mouths shut, don't raise any questions, do as you are told, and when we tell you what to do, do it and carry out the orders and be good boys and you will be out of trouble." I tried to stand up and say, "Mr. Murray, you don't know my union. You don't know my membership. No one could get away with that.. It is not a question of the merits of the issue, whether they agree with you or not; they reserve the right to disagree. That is the way they see it. That is what they were promised when they joined the CIO, and you are heading into trouble when you try to pass a resolution like that."

However, the resolution had nothing to do with Communism. The resolution said, and I have got it here:

> "All members of the board who are unwilling to enforce the constitution and to carry out the instructions of the convention, and in between conventions the decisions of the board, are called upon to resign. All unions affiliated with the CIO who are represented in this board by members unwilling to do the above are called upon to insist upon the resignation of such representatives and to nominate successor representatives who are willing and will comply."

And that is the end of the quote. And that is the resolution. So I took this resolution, I came back, I called meetings of my [5685] own local union and I said, "Listen, fellows," I said, "Look, here's the way the national CIO wants it. In order to get along with them, let's say we do this. Let's let Phil Murray appoint from the ILWU anyone he wants to represent the ILWU on the board, and let Bridges resign. And let us furthermore instruct the representatives of the ILWU on the CIO executive board that any time Murray says, 'Vote yes,' to vote yes; any time Murray says, 'Vote no,' vote no; any time Murray says, 'Abstain,' to abstain. Let them have that." And my membership said, "Look, Bridges, if that is the way you feel, if you carry out a program like that, we will get ourselves another president. We didn't elect you for a program like that. Now, if you haven't got the guts, if you haven't got enough in you to get in there and fight, we will find someone who will do the job for us."

So that was my orders, and that is the way that wound up. And in the May resolution at the May board, there wasn't one single word in this resolution on Communism, Mr. Donohue. And again, I will produce the original resolution and I will swallow it whole right here in the courtroom if you can find one word along those lines.

Q. When, Mr. Bridges, was the resolution which you agree this morning, when I read it to you, was the resolution which was adopted by the convention at the convention in Cleveland first presented to the CIO? [5686]

A. I don't know. I marched into the constitution committee looking for the resolutions that our union had presented.

Q. And what are the rules or what were the rules then which were called to your attention about the time within which such a resolution must be presented to the resolution committee?

A. Ten days prior to the convention. We lived up to the rules; we was in there 60 days prior to the convention, Mr. Donohue. And somehow or other all the resolutions presented to the national CIO convention by my union, they had disappeared. And if you will look in the record there, you will find that I stood upon the convention floor in Cleveland and said, "President Murray, where are the resolutions of the ILWU?" President Murray says, "I don't know." I says, "Well, they are in here, they were sent in." He says, "Well, that's a fine thing to raise on the convention floor." I said, "Well, I raised it in the committee." He said, "Let's go on to the next order of business."

Q. In other words, you said that you had sent them in but the CIO said they never received them, correct?

A. Yes. Well, I admit, I turned around to my delegation and says, "O. K." I says, "next time we will register them." I told my own fellows, my own delegates, "that is one up on us, fellows. Next time we will register them."

Q. Now, Mr. Bridges, this isn't the first time that you have rebelled against an attempt within a labor organization to pass [5687] an anti-Communist resolution, is it?

A. As such, I don't worry about such things. When I see an anti—it depends. Here's my position, Mr. Donohue, and I am well known for it.

I am opposed, in my union or any labor union, to any outside agency trying to run that union. Now, I am all over the record, I can bring you all kinds of documentary proof on that. I will fight any organization that tries to operate or manipulate the union from the outside. The union is the property of the members that belong to it, and they are the ones that must operate it. And I have fought and will fight anyone that tries to do anything else. But here's what happens: There are quite a few people in the labor movement that make a specialty of being anti-Communist. Look, here's a beautiful example, Mr. Donohue.

See this paper here? Charlie Real, "Teamsters oust" him. Charlie Real is the former president of the State Federation of Labor in California. Charlie Real is an officer of the Teamsters Union. Charlie Real was the leading anti-Communist in the state of California, and when he was telling the membership, "Look out for them Communists," over there, Charlie Real was stealing $110,000. A good example of what I am telling you about here. It is in the newspapers today. Now, I don't want to put any faith or trust in this lousy sheet here (indicating), believe me; it is a Hearst sheet. But just as a matter of example, it is one what I am telling you about. [5688] Charlie Real of the Teamsters Union in Oakland, one of the leading exponents and battlers of Communism. Charlie Real never attended a meeting, in my experience, where he wasn't warning people like you warn them,

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

"Look out for Communist infiltration." But all the time while he was pointing in this direction, he had his hand over here in the moneybags, $110,000. That is more money than I have received from the trade union movement here in the United States all the time I have been connected with it. And you can add in expenses and everything else, Mr. Donohue. And he stole it. While he was telling the working rank and file, "Look out for Communists."

Now, that is what I mean. And when people come along with anti-Communist programs and resolutions and things like that, as soon as I see it is for the purpose of raising a red herring or a smokescreen, so that they can advance themselves or line their pockets, that is when I fight. Now, what it means—whether it is anti-Communist, anti-Republican, Democratic or anything else—when the idea is to let someone poke around and utilize the trade union movement for political and other selfish purposes, that is for the advantage of the individual, I am opposed. I don't care who it is or what it is.

Q. Have you finished, Mr. Bridges?

A. Now, look, my idea, Mr. Donohue, is not to make speeches. I am the first to admit, my own membership tells me, that I talk too much. I will agree. But all I am really trying to do [5689] is give you all the information. You know, you have been dealing with a bunch of characters like Rathborne and Krolek, and those guys, Mr. Donohue.

Maybe they have been kidding you. Maybe they have been fooling you.

Q. Now, before I come back to the question which you have not yet answered, let me hand you another newspaper, which you probably won't equally characterize, and ask if you are correctly quoted. (Newspaper handed to witness by the Clerk.)

A. Can I read it?

Q. Well, surely. Read the headlines first.

A. The headline reads, "Bridges urges support of the People's World." San Francisco, June 5th, 1947;

> "Harry Bridges, president of the CIO International Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, issued a statement today urging support of the Daily People's World."

Now, I don't know at the moment whether I issued this statement. Let me read it first.

Q. Sure.

A. If I issued this statement, don't you worry about me saying so here. I am not going to make any statements here, Mr. Donohue, where I am backing away from anything I ever said or done to try and change it.

Q. We both understand what the People's World is, do we not, Mr. Bridges?

A. The People's World is a newspaper that, in my opinion, [5690] represents the aspirations and the desires of the American workers and the American people far more than the average commercial daily paper here in the United States, that must depend upon its advertising from the big corporations of the United States.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. It is a Communist——

A. Now, I don't want you to misunderstand. I don't care whether it is Communist-dominated or not.

Q. Now, you—— A. I don't care.

Q. Now, that is a Communist paper, isn't it, Mr. Bridges?

A. I don't know. I never said that. I said that as far as I am concerned, my union, the members of my union, my local union, are far more liable to get an accurate account of what they stand for in this paper than they are in the Hearst press. Now, don't let's get into any argument about what the Hearst press is; we both know that.

> "Reaction pounds away 24 hours a day with its controlled radio, controlled press, propaganda through the mails, and even phoney programs designed to teach school children to hate unions.
> "On the other hand, labor unions and progressive people, such as those who turned out by the thousands to hear Henry Wallace, are woefully short of the means of getting both sides of a proposition to the common people—the man on the street, the average [5691] worker.
>
> "The average people are now in danger of having what few inadequate instruments they have got taken away from them, through such measures as the Taft-Hartley bill.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

"We saw the cries of outrage raised against Henry Wallace who had to travel to Europe so the American people could hear in the American press and on the American radio what he had to say.

"To some degree, at least, the People's World fills a part of the gap. And if similar papers were scattered throughout the country, we wouldn't face the dangers of a slave labor bill, nor could the people be so easily hoodwinked with a program of hysteria such as that embodied in a so-called Truman Doctrine.

"If the Taft-Hartley bill passes, it's broad enough and vicious enough to deny a union bargaining rights if an officer of the union was a subscriber to the People's World—or for that matter, to any liberal magazine, including the one of which Henry Wallace is the editor, the New Republic.

"In short, it will be a crime to read what you want to read and think what you want to think.

"If the People's World is successful in organizing only a handful of people to support labor, under its aims and oppose passage of slave labor legislation, it's worth my support as a union officer and worth many times [5692] the price of a subscription."

I don't remember the article being given out at that time, but I am certain—I am for it right now, Mr. Donohue. I don't remember issuing the statement then, but I certainly think it is a good statement and I subscribe to it right now at this moment.

Q. And you are for the People's World right at this moment?

A. I am for that statement and what it means to say.

Q. Are you a subscriber now to the People's World, Mr. Bridges?

A. Yes—oh, now, listen; that is not fair, Mr. Donohue. It is just like these meetings I have with people, like the meetings with Communists. You take meetings that occupy about one-hundredth of my time, notwithstanding the scores of meetings or the dozens of meetings I have weekly or daily with Democrats, Republicans. You jump on a few meetings, infrequent meetings I have maybe with some Communists in the course of my work. The same with this paper; I subscribe to that paper, but I subscribe presently to a lot of other papers. I subscribe to a lot of other magazines. Now, if we are going to be held up here by what I subscribe to, that is too bad.

Q. Mr. Bridges, to go back to the question I asked you a few minutes ago, and which I submit you did not answer, let me repeat it. Is it not a fact that your opposition to the non-Communist amendment to the CIO constitution was not the first or only time upon which you have also opposed a non-Communist [5693] program in an American labor union?

A. I am not trying to dodge any answers. I have opposed and rebelled against all kinds of programs in the union movement. I will do it again. I am not ashamed of it. I am against corruption and gangsterism and racketeering and crookedness and lack of democracy in any trade union. I have always opposed any measures that sought to encourage such things. Now, of course, too many people try to call opposition to such matters anti-Communism or Communism, or what have you. Now, when you get right down to what I have opposed, you point out what you mean and I want to try to answer and not to dodge any answers.

Q. All right.

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Clerk, will you ask Mr. Bridges to read Proposition No. 1 to the A. F. of L. convention in 1935 in the State of California. (Presenting document to clerk.)

The Witness: I don't need to. I remember it. You can save yourself the time. I remember it very well, if you like.

Q. Now that was, I think you recall——

A. Proposition No. 1.

Q. Yes.

A. It was passed prior to the convention by the Theatrical Federation of the State of California. The labor union, the Theatrical labor union, met and adopted Proposition No. 1. [5694]

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Well, now——

A. You want me to tell you about it?

Q. I want to ask you, Mr. Bridges, if it isn't a fact that the proposition was adopted at the subsequent convention of the A. F. of L. at San Diego, California, in September of 1935, by a vote representing, by delegates representing 55,113 votes, against delegates representing 16,328 votes?

A. I think so. That is in the record, and I fought and voted against it. I think I spoke against it, voted against it, did all I could do to defeat it. Now, I know the reasons why, and here is the reasons why, if that is what you are after. The Theatrical Federation, at that time, Mr. Donohue—you don't know these things, but I do, and very, very few people do—but it recently has come to light, these many, many years after. Let me put it this way: In November of last year by a finding in the Federal Tax Court there was a finding of fact, the situation came about as a result of a man named Frank Mitti. He was called the "Enforcer." Frank "The Enforcer" Mitti. He was one of the Capone gang. He was called "The Enforcer" because he used to follow the collection man, who was a man of another name. So here was this mobster, the mobster used to go around to collect for certain things, and if the mobster had any difficulty in collecting, he was followed up by Frank "The Enforcer" with the "Chicago Pianos," as they say (indicating). It was just too bad. Now, this all grew out of the gangster situation in [5695] Hollywood.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

where Bioff and Brown, who captured the IATSE, the International Association of Stagehands' Union; they captured it with machineguns. That union, the mobsters of that union held control of the production workers in Hollywood. So here many, many years after, where I and a few others tried to do something about freeing the workers of Hollywood from gangster control, where the gangsters were working with the Hollywood Motion Picture Producers Association to keep honest trade unionism out of Hollywood and get paid off for it; that is all they—all those mobsters were doing that, fighting Communism. Bioff and Brown. Their big battlecry, lined up with the Hollywood Producers, was they were trying to keep these Communists out of Hollywood, including Bridges. And of course all Bridges was doing, according to them, was to try and bring Communism into Hollywood. But what we are trying to do was to organize an honest trade union down there, and an honest industrial trade union, so the Theatrical Federation meets, and because we were beginning to gain some ground because we were beginning to make headway with the rank and file of the workers in Hollywood, the Theatrical Federation meets and passes this big "hoopdedo" resolution on Communism. And later on, as I say, last November, a finding in the Federal Tax Court—you will see it if you look it up because Frank Mitti died and he evoked this novel defense in order to have his estate pay taxes, Mr. Donohue. He says that the money he left behind was not money [5696] earned. He wouldn't say where he got it. He left the implication he stole it. So the U. S. Government goes into court and proves the case in court, and a decision is handed down that the estate of Frank Mitti was in reality the result of money earned, and that money was earned by being paid off by the Hollywood producers in order to keep honest trade unionism out of Hollywood, in the years '35 to '40, and the money was paid to Frank "The Enforcer" Mitti because he was collecting for Al Capone and he was collecting from Bioff or Brown at that time, who were the leaders of the union in Hollywood at that time, you see. And at first the split was fifty-fifty, fifty per cent for the Hollywood boys, fifty per cent for Al Capone. [5697]

Later on it was two-thirds to the leaders and one-third to Al Capone, and we tried to expose and wreck the gangster set in Hollywood at that time, and some of the leaders in those unions, some of those gangsters, as well as some honest people, were misled and intimidated and dragged this resolution out and rammed it through the State Federation of Labor. And I fought and opposed that resolution, because I was interested in getting an honest, decent trade union in Hollywood, getting rid of the gangsters and mobsters in Hollywood, getting rid of the Capone mob, getting rid of the Costello mob and a few others. And it is a matter of record in Hollywood they came out here in 1936 with their Lincoln Zephyr black limousines——

Q. This was 1935?

A. It went to 1936, Mr. Donohue, and a similar mob came from Chicago in 1936; they came out in the big black Lincoln Zephyr bulletproof limousines, and I got an emergency call from the actors and others in Hollywood to have some of the longshoremen come up from San Pedro harbor and take care of those gunmen and other mobsters in the Lincoln limousines, and they did it bare-handed. So if you want a story of that resolution, I have given it to you, and that is only very, very briefly, and it is a matter of record, too.

Q. And that is why you voted against the non-Communist or anti-Communist resolution in the 1935 AFL convention? [5698]

A. Because—exactly, Mr. Donohue, because the resolution came from the theatrical union, and the purpose as I seen it was to over up the activities of the mobsters in Hollywood by a big smoke screen of fighting Communism, and the money that the gangsters got was a million dollars; I might say heaven knows how much they paid off, but the money that Mitti got alone was a million bucks. That is a matter of record. I refer to the Tax Court. I will come in here with the whole matter. I will bring you the whole record of it from the Internal Revenue, that is the Tax Court where the Internal Revenue was the prosecutor.

Q. Mr. Bridges, is it your point of view that every anti-Communist is a gangster or a crook or both?

A. No, Mr. Donohue. As a matter of fact, there might be some like you that may be honestly misled. I don't think you are a gangster or a crook, but you could be fooled, you know.

Q. Mr. Bridges, did you note as you read this resolution that proposition No. 1 was presented by Robert L. Ennis of the Federated Trades Council from Sacramento?

A. I know that, but I know that Ennis got it from the theatrical division. I can check—there is no question in my mind. Ennis was from the Sacramento Trades Council. He was the stooge that shoved it through. That is how it worked. Ennis was down there representing the Trade and Labor Council of Sacramento, he was the front; it was shoved in through him. [5699]

Q. He wasn't a gangster or crook, just a stooge?

A. I never said that. So you know that can happen. I don't go by the newspaper accounts, but I just read a report in yesterday afternoon's newspapers about a little matter of gangsters or some other fellows pulling a lot of stuff down in Los Angeles. Something is cooking down there. Such things do happen, Mr. Donohue; at least, out here in the State of California.

Q. Mr. Bridges, would you be good enough to tell us something about the organization which is known as the World Federation of Trade Unions?

A. I can't tell you very much, Mr. Donohue.

Q. What do you know about it?

A. Well, here is what I know. It is a federation—the WFTU is a federated body of trade unions of most of the countries of the world that have gotten together on a general economic—on a general program of working together on a worldwide basis. It is a trade union United Nations, I say; it has got the same basis, the same general principles, the same ideas as the United Nations. So it would be a copy of the United Nations where instead of nations being represented trade unions of nations are represented. So it is a United Nations of labor unions throughout the world.

Q. When was it formed?

A. 1945 right here in San Francisco, and it was celebrated here [5700] by a big mass meeting at the time, and I had a little to do with it.

Q. What nations originally belonged to the World Federation of Trade Unions?

A. All the nations that at that time were attending the setting up of the United Nations in our city.

Q. Now, since the formation of the World Federation of Trade Unions have any nations withdrawn from that organization?

A. Any nations?

Q. Yes.

A. You mean the unions of some nations?

Q. Unions representing some nations.

A. Oh, I would say that that has happened in some cases. I would put it two ways: No. 1, in some cases the national labor movements of some countries have withdrawn, and in some cases the leaders of some national labor movements have withdrawn their movements despite the feeling of the rank and file.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Now, it is true, is it not, that the British Trade Union Council, which was an original member of the WFTU, has withdrawn?

A. Not to my knowledge. It is true that the leaders of the TUC have announced their withdrawal. I think the executives of the Trade Union Council—TUC means British Trade Union Council—it is my understanding that the executives of the British TUC announced their withdrawal. It is not my [5701] information that the action or the approval of withdrawal has been voted by the rank and file of the British labor movement. That is not my understanding.

Q. Do you know whether the Dutch unions which were a member of the WFTU have withdrawn?

A. Which part? The Dutch union movement is split into three parts.

Q. What part belonged to the WFTU?

A. All of them.

Q. Do you know whether any of the three parts have withdrawn?

A. My information is that the majority of the workers in Holland is still affiliated.

Q. Have their unions withdrawn, Mr. Bridges?

A. Some of them have and some of them haven't.

Q. Can you tell us which have and which have not?

A. I think the left-wing unions in Holland are still affiliated, and some other unions. After all, the trade union movement in Holland—and my information again is secondhand, according to communications and reports received—is divided into three parts. There are three different union movements there. It is my information that the majority of the union workers of Holland through their movements are still affiliated with the WFTU. However, I can be wrong, because my information is secondhand.

Q. What is the situation in the United States with respect to [5702] the WFTU?

A. Well, the CIO has withdrawn and the AFL was never affiliated, so I would say that the bulk of the trade union movement officially has withdrawn as far as the leaders are concerned. Of course, you know that is one of the troubles we have, that some of these decisions are seldom made by the rank and file, the workers who after all do the hard work and pay the freight. That is one of the things I have a grievance with the upper brass.

Q. Mr. Bridges, you believe in democracy with your union?

A. We have got the most democratic trade union in the United States.

Q. That statement has been challenged by other labor leaders who think likewise, has it not?

A. They can challenge it, but they can't prove it. I can prove it.

Q. It was challenged as recently as the recent national CIO convention?

A. Challenged by whom?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Was it challenged in the—who is the head of the NMU? A. Old Joe Curran.

Q. Joe Curran?

A. When I first came across Joe Curran he was down in the forecastle; I done a lot of good hard work building the union. He wouldn't have had a union if it wasn't for us. Don't worry [5703] about him.

Q. He challenged your suggestion, didn't he?

A. Joe will challenge anybody. Like it is now, he can't have a union meeting without 400 policemen keeping order. Joe stands up on the rostrum, a motion is put, and no matter what way she goes, Joe rules she is carried in favor of Joe Curry. If someone gets up and says, "That isn't right, that motion didn't carry," wham! there is two hundred policemen to club him down. Joe Curran needs from two to four hundred policemen to hold a meeting. If Bridges ever showed up at a union meeting in the company of one cop, they would throw me right out of my job.

Q. Isn't the reason for that because after he threw the Communists out of the union, the gangsters have moved in, and they have had to call the police to put them out?

A. No, Mr. Donohue. After Joe whipped from the membership every known Communist, which only amounted to one-quarter or one-half of one per cent of the membership, Joe got after the alleged Communists, and after he cleaned them out, he got after those that were classed as being alleged

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Communists, and after he got through with them, he got after the ex-Communists, and the ex-Communists would be practically everybody that supported Cowan in the past. So all Joe has got with him left is a bunch of Yes-men and stooges that gather around him, and they are darn few. [5704]

Q. He doesn't have any Communists left in his union, does he?

A. I don't know; I don't know whether he has or not. He could have, but he has certainly made the welkin ring about getting rid of them, and what a great job he did getting rid of them, he got rid of everybody and wrecked the union.

Q. He got rid of the Communists?

A. He wrecked the union.

Q. Which would you rather do with your union, keep it Communist-dominated or get rid of the Communists?

A. My union is not Communist-dominated. It is impossible to have it dominated by anybody. If I have to have a choice between the two, the thing I want is a union, because in those days in San Francisco I and all the other people on the waterfront and the warehouses here were bums, we were no good, because we had no union and we had no self-respect because we were not organized, and I am never, never going to forget that, believe me.

Q. To come back to the World Federation of Trade Unions, Mr. Bridges, there was a time when the CIO was the American representative in that World Federation, was there not?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Yes, that is true, the CIO was affiliated, yes. [5705]

Q. When did the CIO withdraw from the WFTU?

A. I think it withdrew early in 1949, I think. The officers withdrew and the action was later on approved at the Cleveland convention.

Q. In November?

A. In November, yes.

Q. Were you present at any meeting of the national officers or Executive Committee at which the question of withdrawal by the CIO took place?

A. I was.

Q. What was your view on that subject?

A. I bitterly opposed it, Mr. Donohue. I don't understand that, you know. I don't like these people that, when they don't like the game, they pick up their marbles and run away. It is just like in the United States, if one State does not get along with the Federal state, it says, "We are getting out of the union," or it is like the United Nations. One country doesn't like it, they get out. The way I look at it, with all the world problems—and on a reduced scale it is that way with the labor union—you do not search out the areas of disagreement. You try to find the areas of agreement, and in that way there might be a possibility of getting along before it gets to a basis where you have to fight. That is the way we see it in the labor movement, because if it is true for the labor movement, then we ought to bust up the United Nations. [5706] In my opinion the United Nations is the one great hope of peace for the world. I do not think that the hydrogen bomb or the atom bomb is the hope of peace for the world, but I think the United Nations is the one hope for peace. That is not a Communist idea. Winston Churchill in England is saying that now. He is saying, "Sit down with the Soviet Union and find an area of agreement." That is what Roosevelt said. People who like the CIO, because they can't have their way, say, "We are getting out," they are picking up their marbles and scramming—well, they aren't my idea of good leadership. I just don't think it is a constructive program.

I admit all the time maybe we can be wrong the way our union sees it, but that is the way we see it. It would be the same, as I say, if one of the 48 States or one of the territories said—well, look here in the State of California we have a battle going on with our Federal Government as to who owns the oil fields that are just offshore here, the tidelands. The State says they belong to the State; the Federal Government, through the Department of the Interior, says they belong to the Federal Government. The State of California might say, "We are going to join the British Empire or the Dutch Empire," and that would be a fine state of affairs. We do not believe in doing things that way. It is that simple to us. I think the CIO is all wrong. It should have stayed in the international family of labor. It should have stayed in the international United [5707] Nations of labor. I tried to utilize the machinery in there to try to work out the problems, not to get out and join the reactionary clique. It is too darn popular these days to try to force people to go along with the reactionary trend of things, to try to judge people by what you are against and not what you are for. We have a simple program in our union. We want to be judged for what we are for without being constantly asked as a test of our patriortism and Americanism, "What are you against?" I can't thing of a more ridiculous situation, because I remember it from the first World War when I was in Australia. People came along. They want to find where you stand on the United States of America. They don't ask you where you stand on the United States of America. They say, "Where do you stand on Russia? Where do you stand on Greece? Where do you stand on China?" And you say the same thing to me. Here is where I live, right here, in the United States. The way my union sees it and the way I see it, we would like to be judged on where we stand as to our position here in the United States and not on other things.

Q. I take it you did oppose the action within the Executive Committee in the national CIO to withdraw from the WFTU?

A. For the reasons I stated, they should have stayed in the United Nations.

Q. When the matter came up for ratification——

A. You forget, Mr. Donohue, I meant to tell you,

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

when the [5708] United Nations was set up, the WFTU had a kind of affiliation to the WFTU, something like the united labor organizations, the WFLA. There is a connection between the WFTU and the United Nations. When you withdraw from the WFTU it is the same in effect as withdrawing from the United Nations. And we have a situation similar to the United States withdrawing from the United Nations. That is the way I see the withdrawal from the WFTU.

Q. And you have the same thing as Molotov exercising his right of veto, is that what you mean?

A. You know, I spent a few hours over here when the United Nations was being set up. I knew a few of the people there. As I remember it—it occurred here in San Francisco—wasn't it the United States who insisted on the veto, Mr. Donohue?

Q. I think you are quite right, and the United States has exercised the veto least of all United Nations members.

A. You see, I don't know about Molotov or anyone else. I don't know the principle, but I know this much, that it takes two to make a fight, and the veto idea might not be such a bad thing. Never mind Russia. Let us use it right here in the United States, and if we handle it correctly, maybe the veto principle is a good principle, because it is merely an inverted principle of taking two to make a fight. And I look upon the veto principle as a preservation of our sovereignty, our autonomy. I have already explained, as a trade union we highly value [5709] our autonomy. When it comes to nations, it is a matter of sovereignty, and as I understand the veto as applied to the United Nations, each nation retains its sovereignty. I am for that; I am not opposed to that.

Q. How much autonomy did the CIO find it had as a member of the WFTU?

A. Quite a bit. They had a graduated scale of voting. They were in the majority. The way it stacks up in the arguments generally used is this: The Russian trade unions, together with the satellite trade unions, had the majority of the vote in the WFTU. The opposite is true, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Why did the CIO withdraw?

A. Do you want my opinion?

Q. No, I want what was stated at the Executive Committee meeting by the persons who voted to support the withdrawal.

A. That might not be the truth. Don't go by what they stated. I have the record. I will produce the record if you want what they stated. I will produce the official record. If you want my idea of what the truth is, I can give you that.

Q. I would like first, Mr. Bridges, your recollection of what was said by those members of the Executive Board of the CIO who favored the withdrawal of the CIO from the WFTU; then I would be glad to have your opinion of what they said.

A. The reasons advanced in the CIO was that

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

the WFTU would not endorse and support the Marshall Plan. [5710]

Q. That is all? A. Yes.

Q. Was there no statement made by anyone present that the WFTU was dominated by Communist Russia and its satellites?

A. Oh, I think that went along with it. Now, I have already explained that, that when they talk about "dominated," I couldn't understand it, because there is a graduated scale of voting in the WFTU, in order to prevent the countries with the most members in the trade unions dominating it. So the majority vote, or the main amount of power, rested in the anti-Communist unions. So I could never understand that.

Mr. Hallinan: Let him finish, please.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Are you finished, Mr. Bridges? A. All right.

Q. Mr. Bridges, don't you believe that the majority who voted at this meeting of the Executive Committee of the national CIO were just as intelligent and just as honest as you were in their views?

A. No, no, not by any means. And I know. You want—well, listen. I don't want to sit here—I am still a member of organized labor, Mr. Donohue, and I am not going to sit here and get out of what may be a tight spot and start attacking the individual members of the CIO Executive Board as to their honesty and integrity. The answer I have given you, however, is one I am well qualified to give. The answer is "No." [5711]

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. I take it, then, that you also opposed the approval of this action of the CIO Executive Board when it came on the floor of the convention in Cleveland in November?

A. Did I oppose it?

Q. Yes.

A. You bet you. I did with everything I had, and a lot of people agreed with me, too, and came around and told me, but said, "Don't tell anybody; I might get into trouble."

Q. Does your union still belong to the WFTU?

A. Yes, in a kind of indirect way. It is a kind of tenuous affiliation at the moment. I will admit that. We do not belong, incidentally, the way we used to belong because the CIO was affiliated with the WFTU, but we have taken this type of position, that the CIO never had any authority, was not empowered by a vote of our membership to pull our union away from the WFTU.

Q. Did they make some kind of special arrangement so your union could continue in the absence of the CIO to be affiliated?

A. Not as yet. We are still working on that, Mr. Donohue. We are trying to persuade the national CIO that our union, because of the type of union it is, needs to maintain its connection with unions in foreign countries in order to maintain, to protect the union, its life and its name.

Q. That was your argument on the floor of the convention, wasn't [5712] it?

A. One of them. The main one, yes, and it is still my argument, and that argument is supported by the hard facts of life. Every member of my union understands it.

Q. Subsequent to your arguments along that line the majority voted to confirm the action taken by the Executive Board, did it not?

A. The majority of the convention?

Q. Yes. A. Oh, yes, that is true.

Mr. Donohue: May we have a recess at this time?

The Court: Yes, we will take the afternoon recess, ladies and gentlemen, and the same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions or to form or express an opinion on it.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, your Honor?

The Court: Very well.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Bridges, what relationship is there, if any, between the World Federation of Trade Unions and the Maritime Federation of the World, sometimes referred to as the World Maritime Federation?

A. The Maritime Federation of the World is an international trade union department or division of the World Federation of Trade Unions. It corresponds to the old International [5713] Transport Federation, which was an international maritime department of the old Amsterdam International. When our organization was in the ILA, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, we were also affiliated on an international basis with the ITF, that is, the International Transport Federation. The International Transport Federation in turn was affiliated with what used to be known on an international basis as the Amsterdam International. That was a general International trade union setup.

Q. Is it therefore a fact that the membership of the Maritime Federation of the World would be composed of those maritime unions in those countries which are members of the World Federation of Trade Unions?

A. No, not to my knowledge.

Q. What are the components of the World Maritime Federation?

A. All maritime unions and unions of dock workers and longshoremen are eligible to membership in the Maritime Federation of the World, irrespective of their affiliation. That means that if they are affiliated with the WFTU indirectly or directly, or it also means that they are eligible even though they are not affiliated.

Q. What American maritime unions are members of this branch of the World Federation of Trade Unions?

A. Only two, I think, maybe three—two or three. I am not so sure as to how you would measure the degree of affiliation. [5714] The ILWU was one, but at the moment we are in a state of half in and half out. Our affiliation, such as it is, is still subject to a vote of our entire membership by referendum. Now, until that membership—until that referendum is taken and completed, it cannot be truly said that even the ILWU is affiliated. A couple of other organizations—I am not so sure as to whether steps—the complete affiliation has as yet taken place.

Q. What were those other organizations?

A. I think the Marine Cooks and Stewards was one and the Fishermen's Union. Now, I am not sure about either of those unions at the moment. I am pretty busy in these last two or three months in court, and I haven't had a chance to attend to a lot of routine duties that I should attend to.

Q. When the convention of this Maritime Federation of the World was held in Marseilles, France, in June of last year, the delegates from your union also represented the Marine Cooks and Stewards, did they not?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. That is true, that is right; our delegates carried credentials from that union.

Q. Do you know, Mr. Bridges, whether the withdrawal of the British TUC from the WFTU took out all the British maritime unions from this organization? A. No.

Q. What British maritime union now belongs to the Maritime [5715] Federation of the World?

A. I do not know at this moment. I really couldn't give you a correct answer on that. The British dock workers, incidentally, are divided into a couple of groups, and at the time the convention took place in Marseilles there was quite a big strike on in England, and that, I am informed, is what prevented those unions from sending official delegates to the meeting in Marseilles. Otherwise they would have been there.

Q. At this meeting of the Maritime Federation of the World held in Marseilles this past June you were unanimously elected to be president, were you not?

A. I was not there, Mr. Donohue, as you know. I tried to get your permission to go over there, but you said I would skip away and wouldn't come back to the United States. I was not able to make the trip, but I am informed by our delegates I was elected, even though I had to stay here to answer for my crime, so-called, in this court.

Q. With reference to your statement that I would not let you go, as a matter of fact you filed a petition through your then counsel, Messrs. Gladstein, Anderson, Resner & Sawyer, for permission to go to Marseilles, France, did you not?

A. Yes, and your answer was, "Why, the first thing you know he will be doing the same thing as Eisler done." Here we have a case where this Eisler jumped bail, and so forth. And you accused me of having a plot to jump bail. But I told [5716] you, I said I wouldn't miss it for the world. I knew what was going to happen in this courtroom. I knew some of those characters were coming up here, and we exposed them for what they were. I wouldn't miss it for the world.

Q. I hand you a transcript of the record of proceedings in this court in this matter on July 6, 1949, and ask you to examine it.

Mr. Hallinan: May I take a look at it first under the rule?

(Transcript handed to Mr. Hallinan.)

Mr. Donohue: Would you ask Mr. Bridges to look at this and to note, first, the appearance for the United States and, secondly, the marked portion of his affidavit.

A. Yes.

Q. Did you note, Mr. Bridges, that in this hearing on your application to go to Marseilles, France, that the appearance for the United States was entered and the matter was argued by Robert McMillan, Esq., assistant United States Attorney?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Yes.

Q. Does that refresh your recollection that I was not here at the time of this hearing?

A. I remember Mr. McMillan saying he had received orders from Washington to do thus and so, and "before we can let this man get out of the country, and he will never come back," and so forth—and I was put on the witness stand and Judge Roche [5717] asked me, "How about it?"

I told the Judge—I didn't read that there, but I am just going by what I remember now—I told Judge Roche, "Can't get rid of me that easy. I've got a lot to say about this case when I get a chance." And that is what I am doing now.

Q. You did not think I am so important in Washington that when Mr. McMillan said he had orders from Washington, he had orders from me, did you, Mr. Bridges?

Mr. Hallinan: If the Court will remember, when I came in the case just three weeks before the date set for trial and applied to your Honor for an order of extension so I could adequately prepare it, Mr. McMillan appeared here and said as far as he was concerned it was all right, but he had talked to Mr. Donohue on the telephone and Mr. Donohue told him to resist the motion for a continuance as hard as he could. [5718]

Now, I do not know if Mr. McMillan was misrepresenting the thing or if Mr. Donohue has again forgotten the matter, but Mr. McMillan has purported at all times to be doing only what Mr.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Donohue instructed him. I call Your Honor's attention to the fact that that is precisely what Mr. McMillan said at the time I asked for a continuance upon the ground that it was impossible to adequately prepare this case within three weeks.

Mr. Donohue: I assume that even Mr. Hallinan can distinguish between a motion for a continuance of a trial date and the application on the part of the defendant to leave the United States and go to Marseilles, France. May I proceed, if Your Honor please?

The Court: May the record show in that connection that Judge Roche, United States District Judge, made and entered an order denying the petition of Mr. Bridges; is that the fact?

Mr. Donohue: That is the fact.

The Court: After a full and complete hearing.

Mr. Donohue: Yes, Your Honor.

Q. Do you recall, Mr. Bridges, in your affidavit seeking permission to go to this meeting in Marseilles, France, stating as follows:

> "At the conference in Marseilles representatives of Chinese seamen and longshoremen's unions will be present. This Court is well aware of the fact that a complete change in the government of China has occurred. The new Chinese [5719] government is vitally concerned, according to information, with reopening its ports and renewing trade with the rest of the world, and it is particularly interested in renewing trade with the United States. The

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

> ILWU representatives at the Marselles conference propose to meet and discuss with the Chinese trade unionists the question of finding ways and means looking toward resumption of trade between the new regime in China and United States business and economic interests. This matter, of course, is of vital concern to all Americans, and if the ILWU can be of assistance in this regard, it is to the interest of our organization as well as the people of our country that we contribute what we can to this accomplishment."

Was that a part of your affidavit, sir?

A. That is right; in the reports that came from the WMTU, who sponsored and called the conference, we were so advised and we agreed and we set it forth in that statement. That is just what we said: No change in our position as of yet.

Q. Who in fact did go as representatives of your union?

A. Our international secretary-treasurer, Louis Goldblatt, and a member of our international executive board, John Maletta.

Q. Mr. Bridges, I take it you are familiar with certain resolutions which were adopted at the meeting held in Marseilles, France, of this Maritime Federation of the World, are you not?

A. Not directly. [5720]

Q. Then I hand you a copy of a release issued——

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Hallinan: If the Court please, we will object to any discussion of resolutions passed by a committee or an organization at which Mr. Bridges was not only not present, but was prevented by an order of this court from attending. He can't be bound by resolutions passed by that organization in his absence.

Mr. Donohue: The difficulty with that objection, if the Court please, is it was promulgated by the International Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, CIO, Morris Watson, Director of Information, 150 Golden Gate Avenue, San Francisco 2, California, and I ask Your Honor for permission at this time only to hand the witness the news release of the organization of which he is president.

Mr. Hallinan: Let me take a look at it and we might see what the purport is. [5721]

Mr. Hallinan: We will stipulate it may be introduced in evidence.

Mr. Donohue: Will you mark it U. S. in evidence next in order, please?

The Clerk: The exhibit is marked Government's 28 in evidence.

> (Whereupon document captioned "News," from International Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, CIO, dated 7/26/49 referred to above, was received in evidence and marked United States Exhibit No. 28.)

Mr. Donohue: I ask permission of Your Honor at this time to read it to the jury.

The Court: You may.

(Whereupon United States Exhibit No. 28 in evidence was read to the jury by Mr. Donohue.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): You are familiar with those resolutions, Mr. Bridges? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know whether or not your delegates to this conference advised the members of the conference that the inability of Mr. Bridges to attend this conference was as the result of an order after hearing upon your application by a judge of this court and not by action of the Attorney General, Tom Clark?

A. I don't know; I wasn't there. The apparently advised them that I couldn't make it. I guess they must have made some [5722] explanation, but I couldn't say exactly what happened.

Q. Well, you don't yourself contend, do you, Mr. Bridges, that the Attorney General of the United States, Tom Clark, prevented your going to Marseilles, France?

A. Well, let me see. Didn't the representative of the Attorney General Clark, here in the courtroom, oppose me making the trip?

Q: Do you think the decision was made by the representative of the Attorney General or by the Judge who sat on the bench, His Honor Judge Roche?

A. Oh, I think—I don't think that was made by the Judge, no. I think it was made by the Attorney General. I think the Judge asked the representative of the Attorney General, "Any objections?" and they said, "Yes, we have got plenty." I think—now, after all, I am not an attorney, Mr. Donohue. I think that if the representatives of the Attorney General had said that "we think it wouldn't hurt to make the trip. We expect he will come back," and so forth, I think the Judge would have agreed to it. Now, that is my opinion. I could be wrong, but the Attorney General didn't say that. They said, "Look, Your Honor, if this fellow ever gets out of the United States, we will never see him again. It will be all the same as Eisler. He will never come back," they said. And furthermore, they said, "Furthermore, we are instructed to say this much, that if the Judge overrules us or sees fit to overrule us, we want at [5723] least $100,000 bail." And it is my judgment that if the representatives of the Attorney General's office had offered no objection, I doubt if the Judge would have refused me permission to go.

Q. Have you finished, Mr. Bridges?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Bridges, these resolutions were adopted after your indictment and before your trial, correct? A. That's right, I think.

Q. Did you seek, Mr. Bridges, or did the organization of which your are president seek, to intimidate all persons from coming here and testifying under oath against you by adopting a resolution condemning every person who testified against you as a stool pigeon, and offering to boycott them and their ships in the ports of the world?

A. No, I didn't want to intimidate them. I wanted some of them to show up so as to be able to prove to my membership that what I was saying was the truth. I would have been a pretty disappointed person if you hadn't gotten some of these characters in here. I have gone around to some of my members and said, "You folks, you watch things closely. Watch what is going to happen. Donohue is going to come in and McMillan is going to come in here, and they are going to come in with a bunch of liars, rats and stool pigeons, and we will prove that's what they are," and that is exactly what happened, Mr. Donohue. Now, I [5724] can go back to my membership and say, "See, I told you so." And believe me, they are saying, "By golly, right again, right again."

Q. Mr. Bridges, let me ask you this question: Did you instruct your delegates to instruct their Russian colleagues that under the American system of jurisprudence it is for a jury of American citizens to determine the credibility that will be given to the testimony of a witness, and not some international labor organization?

A. I didn't instruct them, but I hope they told them that, and it is certainly a principle that I stand for, and support and uphold, and I am darned thankful for it, believe me.

Mr. Donohue: May we adjourn until tomorrow, Your Honor, please?

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, we will take the adjournment until tomorrow morning at 10:00 o'clock. The same admonition to you, not to discuss the case under any conditions nor to form nor express an opinion thereon.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to tomorrow, Thursday, February 16, 1950, at 10:00 o'clock a.m.) [5725]

February 16, 1950—10:00 A.M.

The Clerk: United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

The witness on the stand is Harry Renton Bridges, heretofore sworn.

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES

resumed.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Mr. Bridges, do you recall the 17th of September, 1945, the day on which you were naturalized? A. I do, Mr. Donohue.

Q. While you have not been asked about it, I take it that you were sworn in that proceeding?

A. Yes.

Q. And you did make the answer which has been read into the record? A. Yes.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Do you recall Mr. Schmidt and Mr. Robertson being in the courtroom with you?

A. I am not sure. I have no reason to doubt that they were.

Q. Do you have a recollection of their having given certain testimony? [5726]

A. They were in the courtroom. I thought you meant at the time I gave the answer.

Q. Yes.

A. They were in the courtroom at one period of time at least. I don't know whether they were there the particular moment I was sworn. I was like kind of in the jury box together with a lot of other applicants.

Q. Do you recall the incident of August 8 at the portion of the clerk's office in the City Hall used by the Immigration Service? A. I do.

Q. Do you remember Mr. Garner as the man who was there? A. I do, yes.

Q. Were you in the room when Mr. Schmidt and Mr. Robertson made the answers to the questions that were asked of them by him?

A. No, I was by myself with Mr. Garner in the room.

Q. Do you recall the time that Mr. Schmidt went into the room?

A. Yes, I recall him being called in. We were not examined together. I was examined by myself.

Q. When did it first come to your attention that the witness you had brought, Paul Schnurr, was not, at least momentarily, acceptable as a witness?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. That day, that morning. It was up in the City Hall. I remember—I forget what room it is; I could find it again—Schnurr came in, and then he went out along with Mr. Garner, [5727] and I kind of remember Mr. Garner standing at the door while Gladstein took up this question with the rest of us there, and Paul Schnurr explained what the difficulty was. And that is when Robertson was substituted. It could have been somebody else, incidentally. It was Robertson's hard luck. I kind of had a choice between Robertson and another young lady friend of mine who was there.

Q. Do you recall that was on the 8th of August?

A. I don't specifically remember of it being that date, but the records say that.

Q. You do recall it was some time prior to the day on which you went to the court?

A. It was not September 17. It was prior to that time, because that was when I and the witnesses were notified to be in court, September 17. We were very anxious to know how long the whole proceeding was going to take. What we were doing in the Superior Court in the first place was because the Federal calendar had a long waiting list. We would have had to wait approximately a year, as far as I could find out, before I could get my citizenship, and having been through the process a few times before, and after I had been through a trial and being called and the way was readied for citizenship, in between the time I was able to secure the final papers, that is, to make all the arrangements, why, so many things would happen and once again it would be delayed. So I had good reason to [5728] inquire right then and there and to remember that I would be coming up shortly thereafter for the final ceremony.

Q. Mr. Bridges, do you believe that when a contract is signed by two parties thereto that there are certain obligations and responsibilities on both parties to carry out the terms of that contract?

A. I certainly do.

Q. Would you say that over the years you have executed or signed a great many contracts?

A. I have.

Q. And would you also say that you have observed those contracts?

A. We have. I don't—I don't observe contracts. My union—I presume you mean union contracts?

Q. I mean contracts which you signed as an officer of the union, yes, and I assume for the union.

A. Of course. I don't sign for myself. But those type of contracts, I sign them, and we carry them out religiously.

Q. Do you believe in arbitration?

A. Just went through a big strike down in Hawaii fighting for arbitration, Mr. Donohue. We believe in arbitration and use it quite a bit. There is various forms of arbitration. Some forms I don't believe in. Well, I wouldn't say some forms

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

I don't believe in. There are some issues that I don't believe lend themselves to arbitration either by an employer group or [5729] by a union. I don't believe that an employer group, for example, should submit the question of whether they stay in business to arbitration. I don't believe the union should submit such a question to arbitration either.

Q. Do you recall the negotiations in the fall and winter of 1948 which culminated in the signing of a contract between your union and the Waterfront Employers Association? A. I do.

Q. Was there some trouble just prior to the execution of that contract, Mr. Bridges?

A. Do you mean the small matter of a strike?

Q. A small matter of a strike, yes, sir.

A. There was, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Was one of the demands which you for the union presented to the employers' group for the settlement of that strike a provision that your longshoremen would be under no obligation to serve any vessel or handle any cargo declared unfair by the World Federation of Trade Unions?

A. It was.

Q. Do you recall when the agreement was executed by the parties to that dispute?

A. I think around Thanksgiving—around Thanksgiving in November of 1948 or early in December. [5730]

Q. Now, was one of the——

A. Now, are you referring to the return to work agreement?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. That is—I think that was early December, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Was one of the stipulations which were made by the employers' group that the performance of the contract executed by you for your union be guaranteed by the national CIO?

A. In a form, yes, that was a provision that had been in the contract for nine years, eight years. Nothing new.

Q. What is its purpose, Mr. Bridges?

A. Oh, the leaders of the employers' association, as a part of their whole propaganda campaign, I would say, raised the question of the union not being responsible in so far as the contractual matters were concerned, that the union was irresponsible, that the union did not live up to its contracts, the union engaged in stoppages of work in violation of the contracts and so on. In so far as the main part of those allegations are concerned, Mr. Donohue, there was no truth to them. It is true that in some respects, over a period of time, the union had upon occasion, stopped work, at least in technical violation of the contract. It is also true that in the same period of time, although not on so many occasions, the employers had locked the union out in violation of the contract. And the only true way to measure that would be to go to the official records, which I can produce, and to go by the official decisions made by the [5731] arbitrator; that is, upon the occasions when he ruled either the union or the employers' association in violation of the contract. And if we go by that, we will find that over a period of some ten or twelve years, I think, there were thirty-odd occasions in that period of time where the union was ruled in violation of the contract. There was some twelve or fourteen occasions where the employers were ruled in violation of the contract. And when I am talking about violations of the contract in this case, I mean where the employers locked the union out in violation of the contract, and where the union ceased work in violation of the contract. That is what I had reference to.

Q. Would you say, Mr. Bridges, that the guarantee of the national office of the CIO on a contract, the parties thereto being the Waterfront Employers Association and the ILWU, was an indication of a lack of faith on the part of the Employers Association in their willingness, or in the willingness of the union to carry out the terms of its contract?

A. I would not. I would not. I would say that the guarantee given by the CIO isn't worth the paper it is written on. The only way that the contract can be carried out is by the union that I represent, and if there is no good faith on the part of that union or on the part of the officers, all the guarantees of the CIO could be written on cloth of gold and studded with diamonds, but they wouldn't be worth anything.

Q. Would you say, Mr. Bridges, that between 1934 and 1947 there [5732] had been as many as 1399 work stoppages by your union?

A. Be careful of that propaganda, Mr. Donohue. Believe me, that was the way we won the strike, because I crashed through the leaders of the Association, I started to go directly to the principals themselves with that type of stuff. And I asked them, I said, "Look, now, here's what your representatives are saying publicly. Here's what they are printing. They are putting it in paid ads. They put it before a government agency." Now, I went to certain companies and I said, "If you can find just one bit of truth, just one example of where your Association representatives are telling the truth, I will believe it necessary or proper for me to resign my position, recommend that the men call off the strike and return to work, and recommend that they come out and state publicly that they are all wrong and the shipowners are all right." I went to shipowner after shipowner with that challenge and some of them took me up and started to investigate it, and had to come back and say, "Well, by golly, that's right. We have searched our records and we can't find one instance in the records of our company extending back over a period of years where such a thing has taken place, notwithstanding what the Association, the representatives of the Association were saying." And 1300 stoppages of work, they became a big thing. The only thing that is wrong with them, you see, is that the bulk of those stoppages, our union had nothing to do with. They were [5733] stoppages of work by other unions, the Teamsters Union, the Sailors' Union and all those good, non-Communist or anti-Communist or anti-Bridges unions, Mr. Donohue. We had nothing to do with them.

Q. Didn't you say just a few minutes ago that there were at least thirty instances of violation of contracts by the union?

A. Oh, and they are all a matter of record. They are in the archives of our department and the shipowners' department. I am saying outside of those. We admit them. But, look, it wasn't all one way. And eventually that is how we settled it, the strike. We sat down and got our heads together and here's what we said, "Well, look, let's cut out the funny business here. Both sides are to blame in this, and without trying to assess now who is to blame the most, let's forget it—water over the dam. Let's sit down and negotiate a contract for a long period of time. Let's have a new look around here." And that is exactly what we did, and that is what we have got now. And our relationships on the waterfront between the new Association or the newly organized Association—it is the old one reorganized—are better now than ever before, than they ever were. Believe me, I want to see it stay that way. The union is putting everything into seeing that it stays that way. The ship operators are better off, our union is certainly no worse off, and finally, after all these years, the shipowners' association has decided that they will try operating a different way. They will try to let—to agree that the union is going to [5734] be around here for a while, it is going to live. And they have also decided that they will have to deal with the officers elected by the union, not the officers that they want to select. And I again can go back to the government records, Mr. Donohue, the record of the senate committee, to show where this shipowners' association met and drew up a program and then in addition to drawing up the program, financed it with large sums of money, to use every angle in the book—and it is spelled out there, and this is from the findings of the U. S. Senate—to use every angle in the book, including the Immigration Service to secure the support and the cooperation of the Immigration Service to select leaders of the union satisfactory to the shipowners, so that the shipowners could make nice little deals with them. That is a matter of record, as a result of the investigations conducted by the Senate of the United States. That is not what I am saying.

Now, they have agreed to cut that out and they are getting along better than they have ever gotten along before.

Q. You mean the new look guaranteed as to performance on your part by the national office of the CIO?

A. No. I mean the new look in so far as both sides carrying out their obligations under the contract, and in addition to that, both sides now pooling their resources and their energies, as well as a lot of the energy and money that formerly went into fighting each other, to do certain things that will react [5735] to our mutual interests.

Reviving the China trade and the trade to the East Indies is one, trying to get an adjustment of Panama Canal tolls in orders to revive intercoastal shipping is another. Trying to do something about the coastwise trade, so as to rebuild that trade, that suffered severely from competition, rail and truck competition.

Q. And from strikes?

A. Well, somewhat from strikes, but also mainly from the improvement in highways; the main reason coastwise shipping has suffered is from competition, truck and rail competition.

We are also working closely together with the farms of California, the cotton farms of California. The cotton farms here not only have their 1949 crop backed up and stored, they have got their 1948 cotton crop backed up. They want to get rid of it. There is a big market across the Pacific for that cotton. Our union, the shipowners, want to ship the cotton, the terminal operators as well as the cotton growers of California, are also working together, putting a lot of the energy that we formerly spent fighting each other, in the direction of trying to get that crop shipped. And, of course, on shipowners' ship, of course what goes on shipowners' ship over the terminals and through the warehouses, members of the ILWU handle it and they get darned good hours, wages and conditions for doing so. And therefore Bridges has got something to do and [5736] is president of the union, you see.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Getting back to this question——

A. They won't try to cut my wages.

Q. Getting back to this question of work stoppages, Mr. Bridges, do you remember an action taken by your union in November of 1945 deciding on a one-day coastwise work stoppage to take place on the 3rd of December for the express purpose of propagandizing the hasty return of our troops from overseas?

A. Yes, it worked, too. Now, get all the story in there, Mr. Donohue. If you recall, at that time the war was over, you had thousands of men squatting on islands in the Pacific. Christmas was coming on, there was nothing for them to do. They were being told, and they were being told incorrectly by the authorities in Washington, by the transportation authorities, that there were no vessels available to bring them home in time. It was true that they had nothing to do. They didn't need them any more. Thousands upon thousands of men. They were being told that there was no ships available to bring them home back here to the United States. Then they were being told there was no planes available. When, as a matter of fact, the American shipowners were already taking ships out of the troop transport trade and putting them back into the luxury trade, carrying passengers.

The Matson Line had a couple of big vessels. They were going to put them back into carrying passengers. The Matsonia, [5737] from here to Honolulu, from here to Australia. Another line called the Pacific-Argentine-Brazil Line, had already taken one of its big passenger vessels and had it booked full, and it actually sailed. To where? To Argentina. And here at the same time the troops in the Pacific were told, "Too bad, we would like to bring you home for Christmas, but we will do our best to ship you down some turkey for Christmas dinner."

I got thousands of telegrams, Mr. Donohue, from the G.I.'s in the Pacific asking me if I would act on their behalf to see if we could do something to bring to the attention of the public here in the United States, including their families, that they were being dished out a line and that they didn't like it. [5738]

So we did that, and the net result of it was the troop ships were taken back out of the luxury passenger trade and put to work hauling the troops in the Pacific, and all the airplanes that had been turned back to private companies—to the private companies for the purpose of the private companies making money—they were turned back to the business of carrying troops for a few extra months, and we here at home had to get along a little longer without taking pleasure cruises and without running around in airplanes.

Q. Of course, you knew at the time—you have talked about the Pacific—that the Russian government and its Communist Party affiliate in the United States were very anxious to get the American troops out of Germany, too, didn't you?

A. I didn't know it, didn't think about it, didn't care, don't care now. I have told you what we did and why we did it. We had no other objective in mind, and, somehow or other, all the troops agreed with us and I refuse to believe they had in mind what the Communist government was trying to do, the Russian government or any other government was trying to do. They wanted to get back to the hot dogs, and the milkshakes, and their girls. It is as simple as that.

Q. Don't you think you might well leave that matter to the joint chiefs of staff with respect to the disposition of military forces?

A. Not necessarily. We can help out. During the war, Mr. [573[illegible]] Donohue, I as well as other leaders were called in, not because we had any particular intelligence or anything, but because we were representatives of labor—we were called in by the joint chiefs of staff. Certain matters were discussed with us so that we might help out.

Q. Did they ask your advice?

Mr. Hallinan: Let him finish.

Mr. Donohue: I never know when he has finished, Mr. Hallinan.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

The Witness: They didn't ask our advice on anything, Mr. Donohue. That wasn't the point. But they did suggest certain ways of doing things and asked what we thought of them, and so forth. And we did discuss certain ways of stepping up supplies and other matters. However, the joint chiefs of staff—I guess they could be wrong once in a while. And you know, my experience with people in high military circles is they get an idea that they can't be wrong. So there is some reason for our Government putting the control of the Army and the Navy, the War Department, in the hands of civilians. I have heard some talk about it. They don't like to trust them with military men.

Q. Do you trust them? A. Who?

Q. Military men.

A. That depends. Some I do not. Oh, no. You know, during the [5740] war I found some military men running around here, organizations like America First, General Wood and others. They seemed to be trying to get lined up with the Nazis and Japanese.

Q. Mr. Bridges, do you include yourself among the many people who could be wrong?

A. I certainly do, Mr. Donohue, I certainly do. I have certainly been wrong so many times it isn't even funny. I just try to have enough brains and intelligence to change my mind when I am wrong.

Q. This work stoppage that you talked about a moment ago was a direct violation of your contract, wasn't it? A. Not necessarily.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Didn't the arbitrator Stuart Daggett render a decision saying it was a breach of contract?

A. That was not what that issue was. He decided in advance before the work stoppage took place, and we got into a battle with old Daggett over something entirely new in labor relations. Mr. Daggett started to inject into labor relations a very dangerous principle and that is the principle of injunctive power, of restraining a union from doing something before the union had tried to do it. Now, it is all very well in court of law and one thing and another, but in the field of industrial relations, Mr. Donohue, when you start anticipating what is going to happen, and when you start giving an arbitrator power, or when the arbitrator takes upon himself the power—and I [5741] being a member of organized labor for some time and that was the first time I had ever seen anything like that happen, when an arbitrator took it upon himself to say, "Now, I believe notwithstanding that I have no evidence before me that the union is going to do thus and so, I now rule that if the union does thus and so they will be violating the contract." That is a devil of a note. So I just took a delegation over to the University of California to Mr. Daggett and I said, "Mr. Daggett, as an arbitrator you are finished. You are fired." Of course he didn't like it. That was one of the prerogatives we had under the contract.

Q. And he was fired?

A. He stayed fired, too.

Q. So was Judge Sloss fired?

A. No, he was not. Wrong.

Q. What happened to Judge Sloss?

A. Judge Sloss resigned after serving as our arbitrator for some years and we got along very well together. We had a few arguments with him once in a while, but that is what an arbitrator is for, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Do you recall what Judge Sloss said when he resigned?

A. I think he said he worked very hard or something like that.

Q. Did he say, "Now, it seems perfectly plain that the action (work stoppage) that has been taken in this instance is a violation and it presents an objection to me. I am not willing to [5742] proceed as arbitrator unless the action is immediately remedied"?

A. When did he say that? October 1935?

Q. When he resigned.

A. Oh, no, you are wrong. I don't think he did.

Q. You do not have recollection of his having said that?

A. I definitely have a recollection of Judge Sloss when he left us and ceased to function, but I have another recollection that in 1935 he resigned or threatened to resign under some such circumstances. Now, let me tell you the circumstances. That was the time when the union was refusing to load the brass and copper here to Mussolini's Red Cross. We were very much disturbed. The Mayor of the city, Mayor Rossi, and a couple of supervisors—and a couple of our supervisors of the City of San Francisco—later on during the war, incidentally, they were removed from the Pacific Coast as dangerous enemy aliens—they put the city garbage wagons to work. Those garbage wagons paid for by the taxpayers! And they put on a kind of scrap iron drive around this city, and the purpose of the drive was to have people donate metals such as copper, zinc, brass, and all their brass and copper and zinc was hauled down and dumped on the docks at the expense of the people of this city and was consigned to the Italian Red Cross. And that was going to Italy, and that was going to be used as a part of the war against the Ethiopian people. It was not a question of what I liked or what I didn't like. The men on the waterfront said, [5743] "Look, we aren't so hard up that we need to earn money like that. There is blood on it and we don't want it. Let Mr. Rossi, let the shipowners, let them get someone else—let them go out on Skid Road and get men or somewhere else. We don't care who does it." It was just the question that we didn't want to do it. So Mr. Sloss took this position, that under our contract we were bound to handle that material. We took a different position, and said under our contract we were not bound to commit suicide, to kill ourselves off, and that is taking that contract too far. That is the way the fellows seen it. They said, "Look"—maybe they were wrong, but I am telling you the way they saw the picture, and as long as they seen it that way, that was good enough for me, because they elect me, they pay me, they hire me, I work for them, and that is the way it is going to be, right or wrong. However, they said, "If we engage in a project like this, one of these days we will be on the receiving end, too. Today it is the Ethiopians; tomorrow it might be us." And eventually it was us at Pearl Harbor.

Q. And Judge Sloss did resign?

A. I think he resigned at that time unless we worked that ship. So it was my duty as the president of the organization to go to the fellows and say, "Fellows, people don't understand these things. The Judge has whipped up a lot of public hysteria against you. The shipowners, backed by the Judge now or based [5744] on the Judge's opinion, are going to lock you out. Now, I advise you, until there is more public understanding of these matters, and until you get more public support in these matters, you had better work that stuff." And eventually reluctantly I got enough of them to work, so that after two or three of the ships had sailed we eventually got the stuff away in some fashion or other.

Q. Judge Sloss was a highly respected member of this community and of the bench of the State of California, was he not?

A. At one time I think he was on the bench. I think he had a little trouble. I think if you check in the record you might find he had a little trouble on the bench, Mr. Donohue.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Now, you have had two arbitrators resign. Let us come to a third.

A. Oh, it was a half dozen.

Q. How about United States Senator Wayne Morse? He was an arbitrator.

A. Yes, probably the best we ever had.

Q. Why did he resign?

A. He was elected to the United States Senate, with our support.

Q. Let me ask you if you remember Senator Wayne Morse saying this, "I certainly could not in the interest of my professional self-respect and professional pride sit in an arbitration hearing when a few blocks away an award which I know to be honest [5745] and impartial, an award which is based upon the record made by the parties before me, stands violated." And referring to you and your union.

A. Are you saying that Morse accused us of violating the award?

Q. I ask you if you recall Senator Morse having stated exactly as I have stated in the question here.

A. I do not, but Morse is a very forceful man and he was not at all backward, as I recall, about telling us his opinions, and when he thought we were wrong we knew all about it. He used to say it; he used to say it very forcefully. He was as forceful a man as Hallinan upon occasions the way he said things.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Now, you had an arbitrator by the name of Paul Eliel? A. No, never.

Q. He never was an arbitrator?

A. No—wouldn't have him.

Q. Did you have an arbitrator named Arthur Miller? A. Yes.

Q. He resigned, too, didn't he?

A. No, we fired him.

Q. You mean in this arbitration business that you said you believe in a little while ago that if you or your union is unhappy with the arbitrator you just fire him? A. Not necessarily. [5746]

Q. Well, you fired two, according to your testimony in the last few minutes.

A. With Mr. Miller the contract ended. "Mr. Miller was in our opinion a bad arbitrator, but we could be wrong about that, too. The contract ended, and as soon as the contract ended I personally wrote a letter to Mr. Miller and said, No. 1, "We don't want any more of you," and No. 2, "If we keep you on the payroll any longer the union will be broke. You are the most expensive man we ever had within a mile of the union as an arbitrator."

Q. You have not had very good success with arbitrators, have you, Mr. Bridges?

A. Oh, wrong. We have had good success with arbitrators.

Q. You mean there are some arbitrators who did not either resign or get fired?

A. No, I never said that at all. An arbitrator can't last forever. We have had excellent success with arbitrators, and we have had excellent success with arbitration. Don't look at me. I am a great supporter of arbitration. I believe in it. And, as I say, we have just lived through a strike for nearly six months down in Hawaii trying to fight for arbitration in Hawaii as a method of settling disputes instead of strikes, particularly Hawaii being an island community. But you know there was too many of those—too many Crouches and people down there hollering "Communism." So the employers took the [5747] position down there, particularly after the announcement made by the Attorney General at that time, that arbitration is a proposition imported directly from Moscow.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Don't you mean to tell us, Mr. Bridges, that you are for arbitration unless the arbitrator decides against you or your union?

A. No, no, no, not at all. All our contracts provide for the selection of arbitrators by the Government of the United States.

Q. They also provide that you should fire them?

A. No, they do not. But an arbitrator is no good, you see, an arbitrator serves no good purpose, Mr. Donohue, if one side with grounds can say, "Look, you may as well get out because we can't sell your decisions any more. We can't have our people understand them." I say "with grounds." Now, if there is no grounds you can't do those things. And we have had many battles with our arbitrator. Wayne Morse is a good example. Morse ruled against the union as many times as he ruled for the union, but at no time was there any question in the minds of the men when he ruled against them that he was not calling the shots as he saw them.

Q. Mr. Bridges, on this statement of yours that the union is a trade union and not a political organization, is it a fact that when you took a strike ballot in 1948 you also on the same ballot had the union vote on the question of the Marshall Plan?

A. No, not a fact. [5748]

Q. That is not a fact?

A. Not a fact. I will tell you the story there.

Q. Did you ever submit——

Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute. Permit him to finish his answer.

Mr. Donohue: I am sorry, Mr. Hallinan. I do not mean to cut Mr. Bridges off. I am sorry, Mr. Bridges; go ahead.

A. Our strike ballot, Mr. Donohue, was taken for all our longshore clerks, bosses in the locals the length and breadth of the Pacific Coast, and the ballot was put out by the national union. In other words, a national committee prepares the ballots, mails them to the local unions, and as the local unions conduct the actual voting, that is, the local unions set up a local balloting committee, and after a certain number of days allowed for the balloting, they count the ballots and mail—they certify the results and mail the results back to the national office, plus the ballots that have been used, plus any other unused ballots. All ballots must be accounted for. All ballots are numbered with the corner to be torn off. Well, inasmuch as conducting an election in our union or a ballot in our union costs money, particularly if it is a large local, the cost of taking the referendum vote can run, say, five or six thousand dollars, many of our locals take the opportunity when a ballot is being conducted by the national organization—they have to ballot anyhow—they save up a [5749] few little things to add on the ballot in order to save money, and one of our locals seized that opportunity to take a vote, referendum, secret ballot, as to whether the members were for or against the Marshall Plan, whether the members should endorse the third party, or whether the members should endorse or oppose Henry Wallace, and that was the San Francisco longshore local.

Q. That is your local?

A. I am a member of it. It is not my local, oh, no; it is not my local. You only have to go down there. Believe me, Mr. Donohue, you ought to come down and visit us. You would see whose local it is. I was down there last night until 10:30.

Q. You told us the other day, Mr. Bridges, that you just happened to run into Sam Darcy at a convention in Philadelphia in 1943?

A. That is right.

Q. That was the national convention of the CIO?

A. Yes, that is the national CIO. I ran into Darcy there.

Q. Where was it that you saw him, do you recall?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. No. I think around the convention hall.

Q. Do you know what business Darcy had at the convention? A. At the convention?

Q. Yes.

A. As far as I remember, he was just down there listening in as a member of the public, up in the galleries, something like [5750] that. I don't specifically recall. The thing I remember was I met Sam Darcy, went and had a cup of coffee, talked about certain things, one thing and another. I think he told me what he was doing or something. That was all.

Q. And you had not seen him, I take it, since he left California?

A. As far as I remember, that is true. That was the first time I had seen Darcy probably in many, many years.

Q. Do you recall when it was that Darcy left California? A. No, I don't really know.

Q. Do you recall when it was that you first met Darcy? A. Yes.

Q. When was that?

A. 1934, during the strike. I recall Darcy—at least I think I remember it that way—Darcy being a speaker on the waterfront in the early days of the depression or in the middle of the depression, around 1932. There used to be quite a few people come down there and speak from stairs or soapboxes, various political groups, working class groups, and so forth, and my first recollection of Darcy as being one of those speakers was then, because I was somewhat impressed by him at the time. [5751]

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Did you get to know him fairly well?

A. Fairly well, yes.

Q. And I take it you had some regard for his ability or integrity or both? A. Yes, I did.

Q. With respect, Mr. Bridges, to your statement on direct examination that the Communist Party in fact gave you or your union very little help during the 1934 strike, do I correctly summarize your position on that? A. Very little help?

Q. Yes.

A. I don't know how I could measure the amount of help. I would say it would be a more correct statement, what I meant, that they seemed to give us what help they could. Now, as to how much help that was, it is hard to figure out. But I know it didn't amount to so much, anywhere near as much as we received from the labor movement. The Communist Party added a certain amount of help, other parties of a similar character, the Workers Party, the Proletarian Party at the time, other groups of that nature, added a little bit here and there. But the bulk of our support at the time came from the official labor movement. Now, that is the only way I could describe that, Mr. Donohue.

Q. I think you told us also that you didn't need any advice on how to conduct the strike, because you had had plenty of experience yourself? [5752]

A. I didn't—no, I didn't say that. I didn't say I didn't need any advice on how to conduct a strike because we had plenty of experience. As a matter of fact, I might have had a little more experience than—which is true—most of the people down there, but we learned the hard way. We just went in there and probably pretty brash in some ways, but we certainly didn't need any advice, and we didn't take any advice.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. From the Communist Party I am talking about, and I assume you are, too?

A. Well, I think we fought against taking advice from practically anywhere at that time. The Labor Council here, the San Francisco Labor Council set up a committee called the "Strike Strategy Committee," and we opposed advice from them just as much as we opposed taking the advice of the Communist Party. And that is true today, Mr. Donohue, believe me. It is only recently I had to mail a pamphlet, and I did mail the pamphlet out to all our members and accompanied with a little note on the front, telling them to beware of any attempts from any outside agency to try to run their union or control their union or direct their union. There is only one way to run a trade union for my money, and that is by the members of it. Them and them exclusively. That is the way we operate.

Q. By the way, Mr. Bridges, while we are on the subject, just how extensive was your experience in the strike in New Orleans?

A. In New Orleans? [5753]

Q. Yes.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. At that time, my participation?

Q. Yes.

A. I was on the picket lines for a while, and later on I was picket captain of a picket squad, which consisted of anywhere from five to nine men.

Q. Now, this was in 1921? A. 1921, yes.

Q. You were about 20 years old then?

A. Right. Oh, I thought I knew a lot, you understand—you know, 20 years old, you get funny ideas. You think you know a lot, much more than you do.

Q. You haven't changed your mind, have you, Mr. Bridges?

A. Oh, yes, I have. No, there's a lot of ideas I had at 20 that I haven't got now, Mr. Donohue.

Q. I think you told us that when you got to New Orleans, the strike was in process?

A. I think I was at sea when the strike broke out.

Q. When, do you recall, was it that you got to New Orleans?

A. I don't know. I think you will find that in the trial before Judge Sears. The Immigration Department had all my records. They had every place I had been in, every time I had turned around. It is a matter of record. I think if you will read the record there, it was read off to me and I didn't object to it because it was probably correct, and I have no distinct [5754] recollection. But they had all the records, all the dates, when I left the port, when I came back, what ship I was on and so forth.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

And I think if you refer to that record, you will get the correct dates.

Q. I appreciate the suggestion, but I am interested in your recollection at this time, Mr. Bridges, as to when you got to New Orleans during the '21 strike.

A. It is my—as far as I remember, I was at sea and I think I came back two or three weeks, probably, after the strike started. The last run home was from Havana, running to New Orleans.

Q. And how long, in your judgment, did the strike last after you reached New Orleans?

A. Why, there is no way of knowing that. I could get the date it was called off. The way it was called off was very—very, very funny, very bad. I can recall, I was a picket captain. I was on the picket line with a squad, and one morning I remember I showed up on the picket line with my squad, and I suddenly looked aboard the ships, and I see a lot of my fellow strikers at work on the ships. So, of course, wanted to know what is doing here, how come, see? Well, they said the strike is off, and then I noticed something very peculiar about those people on the ships. They were all the close friends of the union officers, you see. So the word had been quietly passed down, "Now get down and get aboard the ships, and after you have all gotten aboard and after you are all back to work,—"—there was [5755] some kind of an inside deal, and then the ordinary rank and file, like myself, the word kind of seeped out that the strike was off, so far as the East Coast was concerned. The West Coast remained on strike for a while, at least.

Q. You didn't ship out until the strike was over?

A. Until the strike was over?

Q. Yes.

A. No, Mr. Donohue. Do you want to see the union book with the strike clearance in it? That has become, that has come up before, too.

Q. No, I am trying to fix the termination of the strike, Mr. Bridges, through your recollection.

A. I can't help you, Mr. Donohue. The strike ended in that fashion and as for trying to fix a certain date, I don't think it ended as of a definite time at all.

Q. I asked you if you shipped out after the strike for the purpose of trying to fix the date on which you shipped out.

A. I shipped out some time after the strike. I wandered around a bit. Ships were hard to get, and I eventually shipped out, as I told you, as a member of the IWW.

Q. And you can't remember when it was that you did ship out?

A. Oh, I think it was in the fall of the year. I think that I remember that. Around maybe September or so—August or so, I think.

Q. Mr. Bridges, are you familiar with the rather lengthy article [5756] captioned "The San Francisco Bay Area General Strike," written by Sam Darcy in the October, 1934, issue of The Communist?

A. I am not familiar with it now, but I think that I have heard of that before. Let me see. That is the—I think that one came up in the Landis trial, it came up in the Sears trial again, and I don't recall everything that is in it, but I know it was used to some great extent in both those trials, and I was examined on it and asked what part I had in writing it and things like that. I remember it to that degree.

Q. I don't expect to ask you if you wrote it, Mr. Bridges; I take it that Sam Darcy was the author.

A. Well, now, then, that was a little difference because in the Landis trial, the line was this, that I had wrote it and Sam Darcy signed his name to it. So I think that——

Q. You use that word "line" with facility, don't you, Mr. Bridges?

A. I am an old sailor, Mr. Donohue; every sailor has got to be very familiar with line and lines.

Q. But all persons who are familiar with the word——

A. If you mean—do you mean the party line? Is that the angle?

Q. Well, I am asking you, Mr. Bridges, because all persons who with equal facility use the word "line" are not sailors, like you and Mr. Roy Hudson.

A. No, longshoremen and sailors, they've got to be very familiar with lines. But look again, Mr. Donohue. I am telling [5757] you, I am a trained unionist. My "line" is the trade union line, and I try to be as good at that line as I can, and I have no apologies to make. At any time that line crosses the line of some other political party or anything else, that is just too bad. If it is good for the union, I am going to do it. Now, I am not trying to back away from anything here or take a position in this courtroom that might be different to a position I have taken in the past. My line is a trade union line and I am a trade unionist, believe me. I would like to be a better one if I could. But that is my line, and I am going to continue carrying it out.

Q. With respect, Mr. Bridges, to your statement that if it is good for the union, you are going to do it, would that even extend to joining the Communist Party if you thought it was good for the union?

A. Well, I couldn't figure that one. That is pretty hypothetical. So far I haven't found it necessary to join the Communist Party in order to be a good unionist. That is my position. I haven't found—I haven't as yet seen where it is necessary, and—look, believe me, I have got troubles enough, Mr. Donohue. My troubles in the union, first of all, go to trying to answer a lot of the questions of the people down below who are not getting enough work; they are struggling to make a living, and I have got a few troubles in this courtroom. And in addition to those troubles, I don't want to take on the job, all the [5758] problems that go along with being a member of the Communist Party, if I can believe one-tenth of what I have heard, or one-tenth of what you say. And that is enough trouble. I am not getting any younger. I have had a little trouble with my stomach, and I have developed a nice crop of stomach ulcers, and incidentally on that, you won't find anything on my expense accounts when they come in here about them paying for my hospital bills for getting my ulcers treated and cleaned up. And ulcers are an industrial disease, whereas civilization is coming around to recognizing that. So with all my present troubles, I have got enough without taking on the troubles that I think go along with being a member of the Communist Party, being a disciplined Communist as Mr. McMillan said—disciplined, where I have to follow every twist and turn and flop-flip or flip-flop, and all those things, carry out the "line." Doesn't work that way. I am a trade unionist. Pure and simple. And there is no mystery about it. And everything I have done as a trade unionist, as a matter of record, you name it and I will bring it into court and if you can show in anything I have done as a trade unionist anything connection with following the Communist Party, well, then, I will be a very surprised person, Mr. Donohue. I will be almost willing to stake the outcome of this case on that.

Q. Mr. Bridges, has it ever occurred to you that all these troubles that you have been talking about may well stem from the fact that you are a member of the Communist Party? [5759]

A. No, no. Why should they?

Q. I am asking you, sir.

A. Well, I couldn't—wouldn't know.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. They are your troubles, not mine.

A. Well, all the troubles I have got have not come about because I am a member of the Communist Party. Again, don't take my word for it. You have got a decision there of the United States Supreme Court, Mr. Donohue. They will tell you what the reason for my troubles are. You have got the result of the investigation by the Senate Civil Liberties Committee. You have got the decision by the Board of Immigration Appeals. You have got the decision by Dean Landis, you have got a statement, you have got a decision by—an opinion by the District Court, the Federal District Court of Appeals. Now, all those things spell out in better language than I can use the cause of my troubles.

Now, I am not complaining, I am not sitting up here crying. I have got some troubles, and the way I figure you meet troubles, you try to put the best face on it that you can. But at the same time they have a little effect. They have a little effect—ten or fifteen years ago, I could handle them much better than I can now. And at the same time, I wouldn't—I don't want to go to jail. I am not up here having a lot of fun. I recognize that if there is a guilty verdict in this trial, I go to jail, I get deported. My wife and family—well, I don't know what will happen to them. So this is not funny to me, and [5760] I am not following any "line" except the trade union line. I know the cause of my troubles, not because of anything I know myself, but—not only because of that, but because of numerous decisions by the highest authorities in the United States. Now, you can't deny that. They are here; except I know they are taboo. But I just wanted to mention them.

Q. Mr. Bridges, did Mr. Justice Landis, or "Judge" Landis, as you call him, did Judge Sears, did the Attorney General of the United States, did the Board of Immigration Appeals, did the Immigration examiner in New York in 1937, or the Supreme Court of the United States, hear a single word of testimony from a single witness who has testified in this proceeding? [5761]

A. I don't know.

Q. You do know, do you not, Mr. Bridges,——

A. No, I don't know.

Q. You were at all these hearings, weren't you?

A. Yes.

Q. Did any one of these witnesses who appeared here testify?

A. Well, now, you included in there the Attorney General of the United States.

Q. And the Attorney General of the United States, in reviewing the decision of Judge Landis and in reviewing the decision of Judge Sears?

A. How do I know who was in contact with him, who he heard? You are talking about Mr. Biddle now?

Q. Oh, it is your understanding at that time that the——

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me, Mr. Bridges has not finished his answer.

Mr. Donohue: Excuse me, Mr. Bridges. Go right ahead.

A. (Continuing) You are talking about Attorney General Biddle?

Q. I am talking about the Attorney General of the United States at any time, who discussed the case of yours.

A. Then I—then the answer is, "I don't know." I don't know who they spoke to. I can have a lot of deep suspicions, but suspicions, I don't want to deal with them here. You ask me what I know. I don't know. But I have got a very, very healthy suspicion that a lot of characters talked to some of those [5762] people..

Q. Then it is your opinion that the Attorney General of the United States would consider evidence which was not in the record of your proceedings? A. Mr. Donohue,——

Q. Is it?

A. Why, he taps wires, he puts stool pigeons in my union—well, not stool pigeons, but spies, to report to him. They are running around now, agents of the Immigration Department. My own members come up to me and tell me, "Look, Harry, I am with you, but don't tell anyone, will you? I am trying to get my citizenship papers. If I am heard, if the Immigration Department finds out that I am supporting you, even as a brother union member, I wouldn't get my papers."

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Look at the Herman Mann incident. Why, Mr. Donohue, I am a pretty old, cynical character. But unless I knew it myself, I would never have believed a branch of our government would have stooped to that level, where they went to a man's boys and the man himself and said, "Look, your wife is dying in the hospital of cancer. We have got influence with the cancer fund. Testify against Bridges, and we will save your mother's life." And when the man—when one of our longshoremen,—and they are a pretty hard-boiled bunch, too—stood up in the union meeting and told that story, he broke into tears. I have seen things, I would never have believed it. And—what I have always [5763] —I have got a habit of saying, "Look, what will shock me will make a crowbar sweat." But from what these government agencies—Agent Jack Myers and Kessler, the two agents. They went to that woman in the hospital. She died July 1st. Mrs. Herman Mann.

Q. And who told——

A. And you know that.

Q. Who told you all these things?

A. Mr. Herman Mann. Do you want him up here? Do your want his boys up here?

Q. You bring them here.

A. I will not. They have got enough trouble. I won't inflict any more trouble on that poor family, if I go to jail for fifteen years.

Q. Well, he is a fellow Communist, isn't he?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. He is not, to my knowledge; he is a fellow unionist.

Q. Then you bring him here.

A. Well, I am telling you what I said, that that family has got enough trouble.

Q. Let him come here and state that under oath.

Mr. Hallinan: You bring him in, Donohue; you have more power than Mr. Bridges has.

Mr. Donohue: No, he is Mr. Bridges' friend.

Mr. Hallinan: Why, you protected your own Mr. Kessler when he was up here. We tried to bring up some of this for the defense when you brought him up here, and to get the exact [5764] facts, and you could hear Mr. Donohue hollering all over the place. We put in an affidavit and made an offer of proof, and he wouldn't let it be heard.

Mr. Donohue: You know and I know that the only way you can get that in is to get him here and bring it up through him.

Mr. Hallinan: The only way we can get it in here is to sneak it in; anything you see that favors the defense here, you try to shut it up. If it is in favor of the prosecution, it goes in; if it favors the defense, it goes out, if it is the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. What are you talking about!

Mr. Donohue: To that I have no answer, if Your Honor pleases.

The Court: We will take the recess, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you, not to discuss the case under any conditions, nor to form an opinion thereon.

(Recess.) [5765]

Mr. Donohue: Shall I proceed, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Referring now to the——

Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute, if the Court please. The question that was last asked was interrupted by a statement of counsel's, a statement of counsel's criticizing the defendant for not bringing persons here when, as I suggested, it is up to him himself. The rule is if it favors the defendant, it stays out. He doesn't bring it in. I suggest that the witness be permitted to finish the answer. There was an interruption by counsel in the midst of it. And I also at this time, if the Court please, assign as misconduct and ask that the jury be instructed to ignore the suggestion to Mr. Bridges that he bring in witnesses here. The rule is he can bring in the witnesses himself and cannot charge the defendant upon the stand with some obligation of supplying evidence that is just as available to him or more so. I ask that the jury be instructed to ignore that statement.

Mr. Donohue: Of course, that is not the law, if your Honor please. This witness has sought to introduce here a statement of someone who, as far as I know, has not testified under oath with respect to a matter which he has just discussed.

Mr. Hallinan: There is an affidavit of Mr. Mann in the clerk's record under oath.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Donohue: Let Mr. Mann come here at the request or [5766] subpoena of Mr. Bridges and submit himself to cross-examination and the process of this court is as open to Mr. Bridges as it is to the United States.

Mr. Hallinan: I renew the motion, your Honor. I think the jury should be instructed to ignore that colloquy between counsel and Mr. Bridges. He had no right to make it.

The Court: The motion is denied.

Q. (By M.. Donohue): Mr. Bridges, referring to the article by Mr. Sam Darcy with respect to which you say you had some prior information——

A. Are you talking now about what we were discussing before the recess?

Q. Yes, I am talking about the article written in the October 1934 issue of the Communist on the San Francisco Bay Area general strike, Sam Darcy.

A. It is true, Mr. Donohue, you asked me a question before and I was trying to answer it.

Q. I am sorry, Mr. Bridges. Will you continue or complete your answer?

A. You recall, as I remember, you asked me, in the form of making a statement, wasn't it a fact that my troubles were due to being a Communist? That was the question I was answering, and I had not finished the answer.

Q. I am sorry, Mr. Bridges. Would you complete your answer?

A. Of course, I feel pretty strongly about the matter and my [5767] union feels pretty strongly about the matter for this reason: that at least if it is true, if there is any truth to the fact that my trouble or the troubles of my union came about because I am a Communist or allegedly a Communist, well, then, that is a situation that should be corrected. The fact of the matter is there is no truth, and all I was trying to do was point out a situation, and apart from any knowledge or testimony in the matter that I might have or might give there are records and, as I say, the records of the United States Government, the courts, the courts of appeal, Landis—they actually point out that for fifteen years certain employer interests, powerful political interests, have used the Government of the United States, particularly the Immigration Department, to constantly raise these charges, to bring people along, professional witnesses along to make these accusations, and the purpose of such accusations are not to cause me trouble, but in order to attack the union. I might not have all the experience in the world, and I am not swell-headed enough to believe that any one person can be so important. The Government of the United States is a very powerful organization, tremendously powerful, and I am not so stupid as to think that the Government as such puts that power to work trying to set aside or get rid of me and a couple of other individuals. But I do have good reason to believe, and my reasons are supported by the official decisions of high agencies of the government, to understand the fact that government agencies have been used in this matter, and it is not [5768] a question of Communism. Schrimpf—so Schrimpf is a Communist.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

In 1941 when I was on trial here and the charges against me was being a member of or affiliated with the Communist Party, right in this courtroom—that was in 1941, and if these charges had been proved I would have been deported—yet Mr. Schrimpf got his citizenship papers in 1943 after admittedly being a Communist. That is point No. 1. So on that point alone I know Communism is not the issue, or whether I am a Communist. There have been other cases where these people came up. I notice that every witness here has had something to do with the Immigration Department.

Mrs. Harris—her husband is a member of my union and until she got up in this room I didn't even know he was an alien, that is, that he had to get his citizenship papers. Krolek, another foreign-born person. All these people—there is a lot of them, there is a lot of them, and I know from my own experience for what it is worth as a trade unionist that my troubles do not come from Communism.

The concurring opinion of the Supreme Court, Justice Frank Murphy, his language says that this case will stand forever as a monument of man's intolerance to man. For fifteen years agents of the United States Government as well as police forces, as well as political interests and employer interests, powerful interests, have watched me, my movements, tapped my phone, [5769] used labor spies, and so forth, all in an effort to attack my union, because it is an effective organization that not only fights and fights hard for the rights and advantages of its own members, but we fight for a lot of other things. We fight for the rights of other people, security of all citizens, old age pensions, hospitalization plans, prepaid medical plans. We fight against discrimination of citizens because of their race, creed or color, and things like that. And we stand up and we talk back to an agency like the Immigration Department. That agency does not like our union, Mr. Donohue, because in the trial I went through at Angel Island that was the first time in the history of the United States that immigration trials were open to the public. We forced that issue on these people. They didn't like it. They preferred to railroad people in secrecy and silence, and they have never forgiven my union for it, or me, for that matter. I know they have never forgiven me for the little fun we had with them in their tapping my room in New York City. Things like that.

I know, and it is a matter, I say, not a question of what I think but what I know. Here on the one hand I am accused of having no faith, placing no reliance upon our Government and its institutions, and on the other, when I try to rely on what the Government says, what it finds as a result of investigations, what the highest court in our country determines, when I try to rely on those things again you come in and say, "Your [5770] troubles are all not because of what the Supreme Court says, the Board of Immigration Appeals says, the Circuit Court of Appeals, Dean Landis say and what a lot of other people outstanding in stature say, it is something else." Will Schneidermann—Schneidermann is an official of the Communist Party. Schneidermann got his citizenship, and it was returned to him after there was an attempt to take it away. He is a known official Communist. So that is beside the point. And if I wanted any more proof, when the Smith Act was amended in 1940—and this is a matter of record—Congressman Hobbs of Alabama said, "The purpose of this amendment to this Act, this will allow the Government to do what we have been unable to do so far and that is to deport Bridges." And that amendment to the Smith Act was put in there, and the Congressman who proposed that amendment made that statement, and that is a matter of record.

So when you put all these things together it is wrong to say my troubles come about or my union's troubles come about because I am a Communist, because if that was the case, Mr. Donohue, I would do something about it. I would not dare—I might be—I am no great moral character, but I wouldn't dare have the gall to go to my union members and ask that their energies and their monies be expended to defend me in a proceeding of this kind, the fourth and fifth proceeding—the fourth proceeding. [5771]

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

And, look, just the other night you know at the University of San Francisco, Mr. Donohue, you spoke and you told the law students at that time, "Now, if you are all good boys, if you work hard, if you study your law, you might represent the United States Government in the sixth Bridges case." And you told the students at the University of San Francisco a couple of Friday nights just that thing yourself, and you represent the Government of the United States. And furthermore, when we was engaged in a strike in Hawaii, and that was a bitterly fought strike, the employer interests in Hawaii are feudal interests—as a matter of fact, there was a decision made in the case of those employer interests by the United States court, and the language of the court actually says, and his Honor Judge Harris participated, says that the law and the conditions in Hawaii are worse than the conditions that George III tried to impose on the original colonies. That is the language of the court in Hawaii, and while the union that I represent is in a struggle down there for increased wages, the Attorney General of the United States speaks to an organization in Milwaukee and says that as a result of these indictments we hope to bust that strike in Hawaii. That was the Attorney General of the United States that appointed you, Mr. Donohue, talking.

Q. You heard him say that?

A. In Milwaukee in the German Club. [5772]

Q. You heard him say that?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. I have people who heard, see? Now, you can bring them if you want them. We will give you the names and you can bring them in, too. They have nothing to gain. They have never met me in their life. They were just somewhat shocked that a high Government Cabinet officer would say such a thing. When all that was said, around here was this indictment. All the Government was concerned with here was a violation of the law. They are only concerned with me now. The picture has changed. I understood when this case started out the Government said, "There is no labor matters involved in this case. The Government has found out where a person has been violating our law, and it is just the same as any other case with us. We are not concerned with labor policy or anything like that. Here is a man who got up and swore falsely under oath. We are only treating him the same as any other citizen."

Of course, I have done a little research work. There are thousands and thousands of citizens who have been given their citizenship since I appeared up there and not one of them has been investigated to find out whether they told the truth. I'm not being kidded, Mr. Donohue. And when you say—and let's be fair about this—all my troubles stem from the fact that I am a member of the Communist Party, that is not the truth. My troubles stem from the fact that I am a member and happen to be an officer of a trade union that makes a [5773] pretty effective fight for its existence, for its programs not only on behalf of its own members but on behalf of members of other unions and on behalf of all citizens, because we believe—and there is nothing wrong with that—if everybody had a good job, better wages, security for our old aged people, hospitalization for all the people, even those who can't afford it, we will have a better country, and we would like to see that all over the world. And we believe in working with workers all over the country, over the world, in bringing that, too.

There are those things where many, many people are scared to raise the issue and fight the issue. It is not a question that I as an officer of a trade union have any more courage than anyone else. I am a little better off because I have an organization backing me, and if I am standing up there and I take a couple of raps on the chin, as it were, and get anything back into the arms of my union, they push me back and tell me to get back there and pitch, "We are still with you." I am in a lot better position than a lot of other people who have to stand alone in doing that. That is the point. I think it should be understood in all due fairness, that it isn't any affiliation I have or ever have had with the Communist Party or any other party that is the cause of my troubles, but as a matter of record, Government record, Government decisions, exhaustive hearings, and so forth, it is because this union is [5774] in the picture. And this is the last gasp. This is the last kick in this case. We have our problems pretty well straightened out with our employers. Some of them came up and told you that, some of them where many, many years ago they were working just as hard for my deportation; they are up here now saying they don't agree with me; they want to prevent wage increases and things like that. That is their business. We respect them for that. No harm done. But we are getting along. But all these things grow out of the old past strikes, and our union hasn't changed. We are plodding along trying to do a job. My problem is as long as I am going to hold on to my job, I am going to to try to carry out the orders of the members, and these charges will be brought. And I know as well as I sit here you were telling the truth the other night, that probably there might still be the sixth Bridges case; there might still be. This is the fourth one. There might be a fifth and sixth. If that is not what you think, I don't know what you were doing out there telling a bunch of college students things like that. You can accuse me of a lot of things, but I have never done anything like that. However, again I am not suggesting that you go by what I say. I am under oath trying to tell the whole story. But the records of the United States is what I am going by, and as I understand, it is a situation where on the one hand I rely on those records, rely on those decisions and try to follow them out, when they [5775] are to be ignored, and at the same time I am accused of having no respect for the institutions of the Government, no respect for Government agencies, trying to overthrow the Government by force or violence or a lot of other things. Those accusations have been made. They are not in the charges here. The charge here really is not perjury. If the charge here was perjury we would be talking about it. The charge here is I am accused of being a Communist, and, as you say, that is why I am up here. You just got through saying I am up here—"the troubles I got in this courtroom, aren't they because I am a Communist?" The answer is No, because if that was the case Mr. Schrimpf would have troubles too. If the agency was on the up and up, the Immigration Department would start deporting Henry Schrimpf, because he is an admitted Communist. He is a proven Communist. But he is staying in this country. He has his citizenship. And let me tell you something else. If you were the one who had to go down to the waterfront and tell the longshoremen, "Fellows, work with him, don't walk off the job because it is all rigged; if you fellows walk off the job because you don't like to work for the man, it is all rigged for you; I have been so informed, that you will lose the Army and Navy work"—and I was the one who had to do that—but every man down there knows the score, and if there was anything to this Communist angle, Henry Schrimpf could not have got his citizen's papers, because it is a violation [5776] of the law, and you would be seeking to deport him, and that is the way it is. Communism has nothing to do with it.

Mr. Donohue, let me tell you this: Some of the questions you have asked me in this courtroom indicate to me that what you know about unionism is very little, believe me. I am not sure what kind of an expert you are on Communism. I am willing to believe you are a darn good lawyer. But, believe me, what you know about unionism, democratic, left-wing unionism, is very, very little. I would be willing to say this: that if you knew more you would understand this problem much more than you do, and I don't think you would have any ideas about my troubles being because of Communism.

Thank you. [5777]

Q. By the way, talking about Henry Schrimpf and asking the men not to leave the job, do you know as a matter of fact whether he has had a job since he testified on this stand?

A. I don't. I am telling you, he is a member of my union and I warned my boys, I said, "Look, as long as I am president of the union, why, I have the obligation, I am duty-bound to protect every member of my union. I know the lousy spot we are in, we are having to protect the interest of that character who came up here and did his best to destroy that union that brought him dignity and respect and high wages, the highest in the world, and all he does is to try to come up and try to destroy our union, because these people here, you have got him where you want him, you say to him, 'Play ball, perjure yourself, or we take your papers away and put you out of the country.' That is the score.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Mr. Bridges, do you think an administration which has sought the repeal of the Taft-Hartley law and which has done as much for organized labor since 1933 as this administration, would go to all that trouble you have indicted to get your union?

A. You are talking about another administration, Mr. Donohue, and how well I know it. Don't get this administration mixed up with the past Democratic administration. I know something about those things, and what I think about it is, I go by the record. I know what the present administration has done for labor. Thank goodness, we have still got our union, no thanks [5778] to the administration. I know why they were trying to get our union. I sat in this courtroom and heard the administration up here trying to get out an injunction against the union I represent. I know what they have tried to do. We have gone through a five months' strike. Schmidt was handling the five months' strike down in Hawaii, and I know what the administration done there. Don't let's get into an argument here about the present administration. If we want to talk about the administration when it was headed by Franklin D. Roosevelt, I will talk about it. Don't get the two things mixed up. There is a vast big difference—a big difference. And I don't know —I don't know what the administration has done to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act; I don't know anything about it. I know a few things the other way, so does my union.

Q. Have you finished, Mr. Bridges?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Yes.

Q. Talking about Mr. Roosevelt, you and your union supported Wendell Willkie, didn't you, sir?

A. No, that is not quite true, Mr. Donohue.

Q. What is the truth?

A. I supported Mr. Willkie. I thought, and still think that Mr. Willkie was a great American and I think he proved it before he died, proved it far more than he did in the first place. I went and said that to my union. I can't—I can't recall anyone now that agreed with me in the union. Almost unanimously, [5779] they repudiated me, told me I was wrong, they didn't see it that way. And we have got a democratic union. I was an officer of the CIO at the time, and I had spoken to Mr. Lewis. He had told me what he knew about Mr. Willkie. I had spoken to other people. Mr. Willkie's campaign manager here was Paul Smith, managing editor of the San Francisco Chronicle.

Then there was another little item that made me make up my mind. Mr. Willkie was touring the country, if you recall, as a candidate for the presidency of the United States. You may remember people started to throw rotten eggs and tomatoes. If I wasn't for Willkie, then, I was for him after that, because it is just too bad here in the United States when a candidate for the presidency can tour and speak out in defense of his program, whatever it may be, without organized mobs stoning him with rotten eggs and tomatoes, that is getting toward a pretty bad state. And that was one of the reasons that at least convinced me, although I couldn't convince my union. I am willing to admit that when I went before my union and recommended support of Willkie in keeping with the advice I got from John L. Lewis of the CIO, almost unanimously, every local voted me down. It didn't do any harm. I had the right to do what I was doing. What I did was the right thing, and I did it less to destroy Mr. Roosevelt than to support a person I thought was a good man. Willkie, I thought —I thought that Mr. Willkie was somewhat of a rank and file candidate in the Republican Party, if such was [5780] the case. I thought he had come up from below and he burst through the old reactionary, ironclad machine of the Republican Party. And later on—later on I think that he proved to almost everybody in the country that he was a great man, a great American. No apologies at all.

Q. Mr. Bridges, didn't you state not too long ago that you did not consider yourself indispensable, that if anything happened to you your union would continue?

A. That's right. But don't take to mean I am not worried about the possibility of going to jail. You just can't flip that off. I don't like the prospect. But all I am saying is this: There is just too many people in the labor movement consider themselves indispensable. I wish they would learn how well the workers can get along without them—in most cases how well the workers would be better off without them. I don't want to fall into that category where I have got any funny idea that if I am not president of the union there will be no union. I am the first one to tell my own membership that at all times.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Your union would survive your absence, Mr. Bridges?

A. If anything else was true, it would be a bad state of affairs. If that happened, I would consider I'd have done a lousy job organizing a trade union if because I wasn't around the union would collapse.

Q. In what way do you assign this prosecution of yourself, Mr. Schmidt and Mr. Robertson as prosecution of your union? [5781]

A. It is one method of attack, Mr. Donohue. As long as I am up here—the three leading officers of the union are up here wasting our energy, our funds and everything, at the same time the Immigration people have got these characters running around in my union trying to sabotage things down below. All kinds of employer interests are at work, and rival unions are raiding our organization; we are being attacked right and left. It is not because I am a Communist, as I have told you. We are an effective union that packs a certain amount of economic and political weight. We get in people's way. We stop people from putting over their phoney and crooked deals. Maybe we get into a lot of trouble because we put our nose into other people's business. We regard the trade union movement as our property. We are part of the trade union movement of the United States. What another union does is our business, and what we do we consider is someone else's business. On this whole question, as long as we are up here having to pay out tens of thousands of dollars to defend the officers of the union and we have to be in the courtroom, that cripples our union, that uses its funds, it ties up its energies, and it makes it more vulnerable to attack.

You have got another case. If this jury finds us not guilty in this case, you people know you have another civil suit pending against me; I have to go through another trial to defend my citizenship papers, notwithstanding what happens in this [5782] trial. You know that. And that means more money, more time spent, more months spent in court.

Now, I think this: Maybe the union would be better off without me—maybe the time will come when I will tell my union, or say to the union, "Maybe you would be better off without me." Maybe that is what the whole scheme is. If and when that time comes, believe me, there will be no hesitation on my part, I will do it, too.

Again speaking from all the experiences I have had as a trade unionist, I know the drain it is upon a union when three of its leading officers that are badly needed—we are not overstaffed; we are understaffed—have to sit in a courtroom for months on end and the membership themselves are without their services, as well as having to spend a lot of energy and money to defend them.

Q. Have you finished, Mr. Bridges?

A. Yes.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. The day you became naturalized and under oath made certain answers to certain questions, you did so as Harry Renton Bridges, not as Harry Renton Bridges, president of the ILWU, did you not? [5783] A. I did so as both.

Q. Beg pardon?

A. I did so as both. If I hadn't been the president of the union, I would have had those papers years ago.

Q. Do you think that you bound your union by your statement made before Judge Foley?

A. No, I could not bind my union, but the fact of the matter is, if I had not been president of the organization, I would have had my papers years ago. If I had not been president of the organization, no one would have worried about what I thought or did, Mr. Donohue. When I worked on this waterfront down here as a longshoreman, no one worried about what my political beliefs were, and no one worried, no one cared whether I starved to death or not. The Immigration Department didn't worry about whether I was eating or working, whether my wife and children were eating or living. No one cared what I thought or did until a union was formed and I became a spokesman or an officer of that union, a spokesman for it, for my fellow workers on the job. And then things began to happen, and they have been happening ever since.

Q. Mr. Bridges, let me ask you, do you agree or disagree with the statement of Sam Darcy.——

Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. If the Court please, object to this method of trying to slide in statements of Sam Darcy. If he wants to ask him something to refresh his recollection, [5784] if he wrote it himself or is familiar with it, that is one thing; but to read off statements alleged to have been made by a man and then ask him if he agrees with it is a highly improper way of conducting a cross-examination.

The Court: Is this contained in the article to which reference was made?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, if Your Honor pleases, it is offered for this purpose. This witness has testified, and at some length, that while he knew Sam Darcy, that neither Sam Darcy nor the Communist Party gave any except token acceptance in the conduct of the 1934 strike. Now, I want to ask Mr. Bridges if he agrees or disagrees with what Mr. Darcy has said the Communist Party did with respect to the '34 strike.

Mr. Hallinan: Bring Mr. Sam Darcy in. You gave us his address the other day, you have it. I understand you have him under subpoena. You so stated in one of your newspaper releases.

Mr. Donohue: I gave the address so you could bring him in. I wouldn't vouch for him.

Mr. Hallinan: Bring him in here and put him on the stand. But to try to put in, Your Honor, hearsay of what this gentleman says Sam Darcy wrote is an entirely different thing. Now, here's what he purports to do, apparently—to take some document and say somebody said so and so, "Do you agree with it?" Now, if Mr. Darcy is a witness, let him put him on the stand. But to offer a document by saying, "Do you agree with what Mr. Sam Darcy said?",——

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

The Court: The purpose of the prosecution is not to offer it in evidence?

Mr. Donohue: No, Your Honor.

The Court: It is merely to take a segmented portion and ask the witness concerning his views, whether or not he agrees or disagrees?

Mr. Donohue: That is my only purpose.

Mr. Hallinan: But here is the vice of it, if Your Honor please. Now, if he asks him if he agrees or disagrees with a certain principle or purpose, let him go ahead and do it. But affixing to it the statement of what Sam Darcy says, means that counsel by indirection can get the testimony of his pal, Sam Darcy, in—because Mr. Darcy is probably one of his stooges, too,—without subjecting Mr. Darcy to the ordeal that he had to submit his stooge, Mr. Ross, to. That is what he wants to do. Now, what a fine position he would have been in if he could have brought in Mr. Ross' statement or Mr. Crouch or Mr. Manning Johnson's statement and ask Bridges; "Do you agree with these things?" That is what he is afraid of. He can't risk putting any more of these rascals up on the stand, and we are coaxing him to put one or two on. There's going to be a Roman holiday if he does it in the rebuttal. So we want him now, if he is going to bring in things Mr. Sam Darcy says, to trot him up into court here. Let's take a look at him. Let's [5786] ask him a few questions. But to bring in an article here now and read it off to the jury and say to the witness, "Do you agree with that?" is not only improper legal procedure, it is about as unfair as any person can devise, about as unfair a scheme as he could well devise, to put the matter in.

Mr. Bridges has been flattering Mr. Donohue with statements that "You don't know what this is about, Mr. Donohue," and "You are being misled." But it is inconceivable that Mr. Donohue could be misled so far along such a perfidious road without having some place observed where his feet were taking him. So that is the trouble with this, Your Honor. That would be identically the same thing as if he had brought in a statement by his pal, Mr. Ross, and got it into evidence and read it off to the jury without the opportunity that we are entitled to, and were afforded, to show exactly what Mr. Ross was, what he had to say and what manner of man they were producing.

The Court: Are you familiar with this article?

Mr. Hallinan: I have never seen it, never heard of it.

The Court: Show it to counsel.

Mr. Hallinan: I never heard Mr. Darcy's name until I strolled into this courtroom.

(Document handed to Mr. Hallinan by Mr. Donohue.)

Mr. Donohue: Shall we take the recess? Mr. Hallinan may keep that over the recess if he wishes.

The Court: We will take the noon recess, ladies and [5787] gentlemen. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case, nor to form nor express an opinion thereon until it is finally submitted to you.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to 2:00 o'clock p.m.) [5787-A]

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES

resumed.

Cross-Examination

Mr. Hallinan: If the Court please, with regard to the matter that was under discussion at the time that court recessed, counsel has given me a photostatic copy of the document there on which he proposes to question the witness. Now, if anything could illustrate more than this what I said about one rule under which they proceed in the matter is this: If it is in favor of the defendant, it goes out; if it is against the defendant, it goes in.

Here is what they have done in that connection: When Mr. MacInnis attempted to cross-examine Michener about speeches that Michener had made on the floor of conventions, counsel objected most strenuously to them. When he also attempted to cross-examine on articles appearing in the newspaper of which Ross was the editor, counsel objected to them very vociferously; Ross said that he had no personal knowledge or recollection of them, and the Court sustained the objection. Now, we are not questioning the Court's ruling in that behalf, as Ross, whether truthfully or untruthfully, disclaimed any connection with them, any personal connection, the ruling of the Court was probably correct, or at least it was arguable.

But here they bring in a document which they say, ex parte, [5788] without any proof, is written by a man named Sam Darcy and published some years ago in a magazine. No connection is shown between it and Mr. Bridges. He is not shown to have been familiar with it, to have authorized it, to have conveyed to Darcy any of the information contained in it. Now they want to read off these things as being a statement, an ex parte statement, of things that Darcy would perhaps not be willing to testify to under oath, put it in evidence before the jury on the pretense that it constitutes some cross-examination of the defendant. And I say, your Honor, that a stop should be put to that procedure by counsel, and that they have no right to ask him any questions about this document at all; it would be misconduct for counsel to ask the witness anything on it, especially after he has identified it as having been written by some person whom other witnesses of his have already claimed had something to do with the 1934 strike.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor pleases, without interruption and without objection, this witness has been permitted to express a wide variety of opinion on a wide range of subjects and personalities. I think it is wholly proper, in the light of the fact, first, that the witness has indicated his already familiarity with this publication, and secondly, on the ground, as stated to your Honor before the recess, that this witness as testified that the amount of help which the Communist Party gave him and his union during the 1934 strike was modest or moderate—I think I have a perfect right to ask him now whether [5789] he agrees or disagrees with Mr. Sam Darcy, whom this witness knows and whom he knew during the time of the strike, with what Mr. Darcy says was the amount of help which the Communist Party gave Mr. Bridges and his union during the 1934 strike.

Mr. Hallinan: I assign the making of that statement as a pretended argument as misconduct and ask that the jury be instructed to ignore it. The most that counsel is contending is this: that Sam Darcy, or at least he says Sam Darcy—I don't know who wrote the article or what it is—that Sam Darcy claims to have given more help to the strikers than he actually gave or that the witness says he gave. Counsel now wants to put in an ex parte unsworn statement alleged by him to have been made by Sam Darcy out of court and published in some document as evidence in the case with which to contradict the witness.

Mr. Donohue: You did not object when your witness this morning testified to something that someone else told him the Attorney General of the United States said.

Mr. Hallinan: And every answer the witness gave was a direct response to a question put by Mr. Donohue. That is a different thing. If Mr. Donohue wants to elicit from the witness statements made by Sam Darcy or anybody else, he may do so; but it is a different thing from counsel putting this in himself, getting up here and reading off a document and [5790] saying that his friend Sam Darcy said so-and-so.

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Bridges' friend.

Mr. Hallinan: No, he is your friend. You are the man who vouched for him to Bridges; you are the man who put Crouch and Johnson and all these people on the stand. We never heard of them until they appeared here. You have had them out here, you knew all about them. You had been dickering with them, you and Mr. Kaiser slept with them, and Boyd, and all the rest—bedfellows of them.

The Court: I think, Mr. Donohue, if a foundation is established with respect to the familiarity, if any, on the part of the witness, Mr. Bridges, with respect to the article in question, that reference might be made to the subject matter that you have under discussion.

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, I suggest that mere familiarity with it certainly is not enough. Suppose a person reads an article. That makes him familiar with it. Then is he to be questioned, "Well, now, do you agree with this and do you agree with that?"

That is just getting in hearsay testimony twice removed by indirection. We have no objection to them bringing in Mr. Darcy or anyone else, putting him on the witness stand and asking him what he did in that strike or what contributions were made by anyone else. But to put them in in this fashion, by indirection, it is cheating the witness. He is defrauding the defendant.

The Court: It is difficult for me to read the article in the short space of time allotted to me, and——

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor may remember this also: Do you remember that the copy of the newspaper that we showed to Schrimpf, in which a letter that he had sent around was published, and that Schrimpf said he was familiar with the paper but he had nothing to do with its editorial policy. While he had read it and knew about it, knew about things that were in it, he was not responsible for anything except the letter that was published. [5792] Upon that showing counsel objected very vociferously to us asking any questions on it, and I think properly the Court sustained the objection. Now, all we ask is the same thing, that the same rule be made, that counsel be forced to observe the same rule.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor pleases, in the light of Mr. Hallinan's advice to Mr. Bridges, I still would like permission from the Court to ask Mr. Bridges to look at this document, tell us whether or not he knows that Mr. Sam Darcy did or did not write that article.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, I don't think that Mr. Bridges would have any familiarity with that, or what difference does it make if he knows whether or not Mr. Sam Darcy wrote it? The question is, did Mr. Bridges write it or did Mr. Bridges authorize it?

The Court: Mr. Donohue, I will afford you an opportunity to lay a foundation with respect to the subject matter of this article. In the light of that foundation, then, I will rule on your objection.

Mr. Hallinan: Very well, your Honor.

Mr. Donohue (To the Clerk): Will you ask Mr. Bridges to look at that? (Document handed to witness by the Clerk.)

The Witness: What is the question, Mr.——?

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Will you look at the cover and see if it refreshes your recollection as to when the article was written?

A. No, when I mentioned that I thought I had seen this [5793] publication before, this article, I had another article in mind. Sam Darcy—well, I don't really know if he wrote it, but I was asked in the 1939 trial about an article written by Sam Darcy in the July issue of this magazine, and I was questioned on that. This is the first time I have ever read this, as far as I can see, as far as I know.

Q. You knew Mr. Darcy in October of 1934, did you not, Mr. Bridges? A. Yes.

Q. And for how long a period thereafter did you know Mr. Darcy?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Oh, when you say "know him," what do you mean?

Q. Did you ever see him?

A. After October, '34?

Q. Yes.

A. Well, I don't know. I might have—I can't recall specifically at this time. Why, I think I did. But he left San Francisco, so I have heard testified to here, and I have some recollection he left there some time after October, '37. I can't recall if I actually seen him—I mean, October, '34. I can't recall if I seen him after October, '34, but I might well have. I can't recall when he left.

Q. Now, you were still interested in the matter of the San Francisco general strike in October of 1934, were you not, Mr. Bridges?

A. No. [5794]

Q. Is that because the strike had ended and you had lost interest in it?

A. Yes, I would say so. I was interested in it while it was on and what interest I had in the strike after it was over was to maybe discuss the strike with people, point out the lessons of the strike or something like that, to discuss whether it was a good thing or a bad thing, what it had achieved, what it did not achieve, the purpose of it and matters like that. In that sense I was interested in it and no other way.

Q. There was a great deal of comment in the press and magazines before, during and after the strike, was there not, Mr. Bridges?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. No, not that I recall. During—I don't think it was too much before: I don't know if there was any—I don't recall much after. Quite a lot during.

Q. Did you ever discuss with Mr. Darcy any statement that he may have written about any participation he may have had in the 1934 strike?

A. Not that I can specifically recall at the moment, but it is quite possible. I would discuss it with anyone. If Darcy wrote an article on the '34 strike, it might in some way have been called to my attention by him or by someone else.

Q. And that is the question I asked you, Mr. Bridges. Was that article which purports to be written by Mr. Sam Darcy on the 1934 strike ever called to your attention by anyone, and did you ever [5795] discuss it with Mr. Darcy?

A. Not that I can specifically recall at the moment. However, it could be. I might have. I can't remember that well, Mr. Donohue. It might well be. I had in mind this morning when you asked me this question, another article, as I say, on the strike; it was in the July issue of The Communist. Because I was asked about that at the time, and I can remember the general nature of the questions and the general nature of my answers, I think.

Q. Also by Sam Darcy?

A. The article was supposed to be by him, and the article was somewhat the same as—somewhat along the line as Schomaker's testimony. And I notice a similar statement in here, that if it hadn't been for Sam Darcy, there wouldn't have been a strike, a general strike. Well, I don't think Sam Darcy, incidentally is a rascal or a stooge. My recollection of the man, he might have had a good opinion of himself. I thought he was a pretty smart person. But I wouldn't agree with any statement that if it hadn't been for Sam Darcy, there wouldn't have been a general strike or the strike would have been lost or anything else. I wouldn't agree with those things. At the same time I can understand a man like Sam Darcy kind of exaggerating, taking a little more credit than might be due him. And that is not new in politics. Every day you run into politicians around the town here—they take credit for anything. One of the troubles, [5796] we have the Republican Party politicians, they claim credit for this and that, and the Democrats claim credit for the same things. And so that is nothing new. We accept it as a matter of fact. And people in political life, or looking for political office, they claim credit for a lot of things. So they exaggerate, particularly around election time. So you kind of, you know, weigh one against the other and do the best you can.

Now, Darcy, of course, was bitten by the same bug, I guess, where he was liable to exaggerate, in my opinion. But at the same time I wouldn't classsify him as a rascal or a stooge, frankly. My recollection of the man, I haven't seen him since, as I say, in 1943, and I haven't seen him for some years prior to that time.

Q. What is your best recollection at this minute,

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Bridges, as to whether or not you discussed the subject matter of that article with Mr. Darcy?

A. I just don't recall, Mr.—. This specific point, I can't recall having discussed this specific article with Mr. Darcy. It is quite possible I might have, and if it was, if there was some way that I could referesh my memory on it, I would have no hesitation in telling you that I did and what was the discussion was all about.

Q. Well, will you be good enough to take that with you this evening and read it and see if it may refresh you recollection as to whether you did or not? [5797] A. Sure will.

Mr. Donohue: And until that is done, I will not proceed with this matter any further, if your Honor pleases.

Q. Mr. Bridges, you recall the testimony of a man named George Wilson with respect to a meeting which took place in the Governor Hotel in this city? A. I do.

Q. When did you first meet Mr. Wilson?

A. 1936, I think. I can recall my first meeting with him; that is the first time I recall meeting him. I can recall the circumstances and that is how I recall the meeting.

Q. And what were the circumstances under which you met Mr. Wilson?

A. Our union was locked out on the waterfront. The shipowners' association had locked the San Francisco union, trying to separate that union from the rest of the union, the rest of the longshore locals on the Coast. The reason given for the lockout by the shipowners was that they wouldn't allow the union members to work any longer unless they got rid of its Communist leadership, meaning Bridges and others. The shipowners' association's demand. George Wilson at that time was a reporter for the San Francisco News and he came down to interview me on the matter. That was the spring of '36, I think March, February or March, I believe. That is the first time I recall meeting him.

Q. Did you see him frequently or infrequently after your first [5798] meeting with him?

A. Well, not—I didn't see him too frequently. As far as I recall, not in the next two or three years. But later on, in 1941 or thereabouts, 1940, he became an officer of the local CIO Council here, or some time around there—don't exactly recall when—and I saw him pretty often. And later, when he got connected with certain other duties, I saw him more frequently.

Q. What was Mr. Wilson's position with the San Francisco CIO Council?

A. President, I think, president of the Council.

Q. At one time Mr. Schmidt was president, too, wasn't he? A. I think that is true.

Q. And was Mr. Wilson for some time secretary of the San Francisco CIO Council?

A. I think he was for a while. I can't recall how long. It is a matter of record. Those things could be checked from the records.

Q. Now, there came a time when he became associated with you, did there not, Mr. Bridges?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. He was associated with me indirectly all along.

Q. What do you mean, indirectly all along, Mr. Bridges?

A. Well, while he was an officer of the CIO Council, I was regional director of the CIO, so we was associated all in the same organization. He was a member of the Newspaper Guild, the [5799] Newspaper Guild was the union of the newspaper men here. George Wilson was a working newspaper man. So in that way he was associated with me. So he was associated with me from the year 1936.

Q. Now, when did he become secretary of the Bridges Defense Committee? A. 1941.

Q. And over what period of time did he continue as secretary of the Bridges Defense Committee?

A. I think until the latter part of 1945, the fall of 1945—until, I think, shortly before the committee was disbanded.

Q. What was he doing?

A. That was the local committee?

Q. Yes, the local Bridges.

A. Not the national committee.

Q. Well, you had a State CIO Bridges Defense Committee, did you not?

A. No, I had a State Council.

Q. State Council?

A. Had a local committee. The national committee was established by the national CIO, and Wilson was not—they had another secretary. There was a national chairman, a national secretary.

Q. Who was the state chairman?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Maybe Wilson. I am not sure. I think it may be Wilson. [5800]

Q. What was Mr. Wilson doing just prior to the time that he became associated with the Bridges Defense Committee?

A. Dealing in terms of what? What was his job?

Q. Work—yes, what was his job?

A. He was either working for the newspaper at that time or he was an officer of the Council. I forget. He might have been both.

Q. Your relations had always been friendly with him? A. Yes.

Q. Now, directing your attention to the incident which he testified, about a meeting held at the Governor Hotel, do you have any recollection of such a meeting? A. No; he hasn't either.

Q. Mr. Wilson testified that present at that meeting, over and above himself and you, Mr. Bridges, that Slim Connally was there.

A. I heard him.

Q. And I think you told us the other day that you knew Slim Connally quite well? A. I do.

Q. And you have been to his home in Los Angeles?

A. Yes. He has been to mine here in San Francisco.

Q. But I think you also said that you never knew at any time that Mr. Connally was a member of the Communist Party?

A. After discussing with you what you meant by the question, I [5801] gave you that answer.

Q. Did he ever discuss with you the circumstances surrounding his resignation as secretary-treasurer of the Los Angeles CIO Council?

A. Connally?

Q. Yes.

A. I think he did. I wouldn't say he discussed with me, and I think it was the other way around; I think I discussed it with him.

Q. Was there some suggestion in your discussion with him that it was because of his alleged Communist activity that he was asked to resign?

A. No, no, I discussed the whole question of the CIO Council with the national officers of the national CIO, and Connally resigned along with all the other officers of the Council, effective as of a certain date, so the Council could be reorganized. And that was done.

Q. And that had nothing to do with the question of Communism?

A. You mean as far as I was concerned?

Q. The resignation of the officers in a body and its reorganization.

A. Not that I know of. There was a lot of accusations made, but I know the reasons that they resigned and I know what was wrong with the Council and so did everybody affiliated with the Council now. There is no more freedom and democracy left in [5802] that council. It is a stooge council.

Q. No more Communism left in it either, is there, Mr. Bridges?

A. Oh, if you mean that the delegates to the Council that were always accused of being Communists are still delegates to the Council, the answer is "yes." They are still there.

Q. No, what I asked you, Mr. Bridges, was whether or not there was any suggestion of Communism at or about the time that the members of the Los Angeles CIO Council resigned. Now, was there or wasn't there?

A. Well, the suggestion of Communism is a broad term.

Q. Well, was it discussed at any time?

A. With me?

Q. With you, yes. A. By whom?

Q. By anybody who was a member of the Council, Mr. Bridges.

A. Oh, there was all kinds of accusations hurled against the Council. That is just the same as the accusations hurled against my union and myself. The same thing. I didn't know you were referring to that. Certainly, the people that wanted to grab off that Council and control it and use it for their own purposes, as well as the funds and the property of the union; in order to achieve that objective, they said, "All we are trying to do is to take the funds away from the control of the Communists which have it now." Which included Connally and others. So my advice to Connally and the others was [5803] to resign and call in all the unions and let the unions vote on what they wanted to do. So at a special convention of the Council that was arranged, all of the officers resigned, the membership voted and they set up a new organization and that is the organization that is going now. I wouldn't give you five cents for it, but it is an organization, [5803-A] so-called.

Q. Mr. Bridges, Mr. Wilson said that Mr. Goldblatt was also at this meeting. You know Mr. Goldblatt? A. Very well.

Q. He is an officer of your union?

A. A very good one.

Q. He is the same Mr. Goldblatt who substituted for you at the international conference of the WFTU?

A. He did a better job—he was very effective. He did a better job than I could do.

Q. Do you know Mr. Goldblatt to be a member of the Communist Party? A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear him use the name Louis Miller? A. No. Why?

Q. I asked you, Mr. Bridges. Did you?

A. No. The only time, the only name I have ever heard him use or know about is his name, Goldblatt. I never heard any other name. This is the first time I have even heard it mentioned that he had another name.

Q. Mr. Wilson also said that Mr. Schneidermann was at this meeting and, of course, you know Mr. Schneidermann? A. I do.

Q. When Wilson indicated that the subject matter of this meeting was a dispute between Mr. Mervyn Rathborne and Mr. Lou Goldblatt; you heard him say that? [5804] A. Right.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. When did you first meet Mr. Mervyn Rathborne?

A. Oh, I think that was pretty early in the game, probably around '35 or '36—'35, '34 maybe.

Q. At any time to your knowledge did Mr. Rathborne hold any position in a labor organization? A. Yes.

Q. What position?

A. I first recall him—my first recollection of Rathborne holding an official position, I think, was secretary—secretary of District Council No. 2 of the Federation. Later on he went back East and became president of the radio operators' national organization, and he returned here to San Francisco and became secretary of the San Francisco Council, and later secretary of the State Council. And then he finally wound up where we have seen him, an unfortunate case.

Q. Where did you see him, Mr. Bridges?

A. Up here trying to do his little piece. Too bad about Rathborne. The boos and other things finally got him. I told him for many, many years that they would.

Q. Is this, Mr. Bridges, the same allegation that you have made against every other person who has testified against you?

A. No, I divide them up, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Just how do you divide them?

A. Well, I know Rathborne. One of the difficulties I had with [5805] Rathborne, while he was serving in the labor movement he used to drink too much. He had a hankering for getting into big poker games. He used to play down on the Peninsula with a lot of people who was very wealthy. I have been down at the horse races with Rathborne and have saw him lose four or five hundred dollars. I knew what he was making. I would say, "How are you doing that, Merve?"

On two or three occasions I received complaints, although it was truly none of my business, about Rathborne making out checks of the State Council's money to pay gambling debts.

He was a very, very heavy drinker, and time after time I tried to help him out and did help him out in trying to get him straightened out. I said, "Look, you can't do these things and carry out an honest program in the labor movement," and eventually—I saw the way Rathborne was going, and I did my best to save him. And when I told you the other day I know, Mr. Donohue, he has been getting a payoff for the past many, many months, and what I told you the other day, you didn't have to pay him $25. I mean, you could get him for less. After all, I am still a taxpayer. It is still part of my money you are spending, and you shouldn't throw it away. And when you have a person like Rathborne, give him enough money to do a few items like that, but you can save money. Don't pay $25. $5 or $10 is enough, and he will do it for as much. I know the history of Rathborne. I know Rathborne's background. [5806] Him and I were close friends. Time after time when he was beginning to slip by the wayside I tried to give him a helping hand. I know what happens to people, and I know in my opinion what motivated him. And I remember when he resigned from the State Council I made a big speech for him and I took up a collection amongst my own union people to help him out, he and his wife and family. His wife came around, talked to me, asked me to give him a helping hand, to bear with him and not to join with the rest of the people who were trying to cut his throat. And those things I did. And it was truly no surprise to me to hear that Rathborne had finally gotten down to the level that he did get. Another tragedy, another casualty in the labor movement, because people can become corrupted. I put Rathborne, incidentally, in a different spot than I put a man like Wilson.

Why, just a couple of weeks ago, or I think after Wilson had testified—no, before Wilson had testified –I went down to Los Angeles and called him up. I spoke to him, I spoke to his wife. His wife put his little boy on the phone, see? So I know these people. I know what the score is on Wilson. Wilson told me, he said, "Give me a break. I've got to do it. They've got me. If I don't do it I am through, I am finished, my job is gone." He said, "I'm not going to say anything that is going to hurt you." You know the rest of the story. He came up here and almost passed out. They really had the squeeze on him. Those things [5807] happen. We understand them. I just want to draw a little bit of a distinction between a person like Rathborne, who's got certain weaknesses, and a person like Wilson.

Then you have the other type of Schomakers and the Schrimpfs. I put them all maybe in a different category. I don't generally all lump them together, and I am trying to be charitable towards them, too.

Q. Are you finished? When you said you talked to Mr. Wilson before he testified, you mean after he had testified before the Grand Jury and before he testified here in court, correct?

A. Right. Right.

Q. You talked with him more than once, didn't you, Mr. Bridges?

A. You mean at that time?

Q. At any time between the time he testified before the Grand Jury and before he testified in this court.

A. Oh, yes. I talked to him once in Los Angeles personally, that is, he was there present after he had testified before the Grand Jury, and then I talked to him, as I say, in the Christmas holidays over the telephone, he and his wife and his baby, his little boy. Those are the two occasions.

Q. The time you talked with him in person down in Los Angeles you were not alone, were you, Mr. Bridges? A. No.

Q. Who was with you?

A. Herb Resner. [5808]

Q. Of the law firm of Gladstein,——

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Andersen, Resner & Sawyer.

Q. And associate Norman Leonard?

A. Right, and a darn good law firm, too. The law firm does a good job. They are the best set of labor lawyers in the United States.

Q. What was your purpose in talking to Mr. Wilson when you talked with him down in Los Angeles in person with Mr. Resner?

A. I don't know if we saw him especially because of the fact that he testified before the Grand Jury, but I know that that was mostly what we talked about.

Q. And what was your purpose in talking to him the second time on the telephone just prior to his testifying before this court and jury?

A. Let me see. I think I wanted to ask him was he going to testify, going to be a witness.

Q. Didn't you know that he was, Mr. Bridges?

A. No. He told me he was not. When I first called him he said, "Give me a buzz the next time you come down this way." He said he wasn't going to be a witness. He said he didn't know anything about me. He told you he didn't know anything about me, couldn't testify to anything about me, and he was trying to avoid the squeeze; he was trying to hold onto his job. He was working for the Los Angeles Daily News. The Los Angeles Daily News is owned by a man named Bodie, who [5809] is more or less of a big shot in the Democratic Party. The squeeze is on the guy. He had been out of work eighteen months. It is pretty tough.

He said, "I have been trying to get by." The last time I seen him, I called up his wife—I have known his wife for quite a while, very friendly. She said, "I want to put so-and-so on the telephone to say hello to you." A little boy was put on the telephone. I talked to him a few minutes. I said, "He has grown. The last time I saw him he was only an infant." His wife Dorothy said, "He is sleeping right now. Call back later." So I called back later and talked to George. And George said, "I'm not going to be a witness. I am under subpoena, but that is only to stop you people from subpoenaing me." He said, "No, no, I know nothing about you and I won't be a witness. I can't tell them anything." But he said, "I want to watch my step because I am dundee if I don't do as they tell me, and it is pretty tough going."

Q. Mr. Bridges, do you think I called George Wilson under subpoena because I knew he knew nothing about you and your membership in the Communist Party?

A. No, you called him because you made him testify to things you wanted him to say.

Q. George Wilson is not an alien, is he, Mr. Bridges?

A. No, no, no; what you have on him you know, Mr. Donohue, as well as I do.

Q. He is not one of those men who, as you said before, we [5810] have called to testify because as aliens they fear we might deport them, Mr. Bridges?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. He is one of those just as I described to you, Mr. Donohue, and it was my request of the attorneys that he be asked no questions. The man was in such obvious distress here, suffering so much—listen. You can put people up on the rack here like Wilson and turn the screws on him, and I didn't want to see myself, either myself or through my lawyers, getting up there taking an extra turn out of that screw.

Q. Pretty difficult for George Wilson to sit here and tell the truth about an old friend, wasn't it, Mr. Bridges?

A. No, I wouldn't think so.

Q. You wouldn't think so?

A. No, I wouldn't think so. I told George, I said, "George, get in there and tell the truth. I can take it better than you can. Go right ahead. I am satisfied with what you are telling me, and I can battle it through. Now, don't get yourself caught. I know what they've got on you. I've an idea." So that is all we said.

I said, "Get up there," and he did, and I didn't think his testimony was any harm one way or the other; in addition to the fact that I figured we had records enough to prove that his testimony, No. 1, was not true, and, No. 2, would not amount to anything. And now I refer to the fact that there was no reason for the meeting at the Governor Hotel and the incident [5811] he testified to about the battle between Rathborne and Goldblatt. That is a matter of record. I've got the records, the minutes.

There is no need to have any meetings in the Governor Hotel on that. That issue was a matter of public and open knowledge amongst all the members of the Executive Board of the State Council. I can bring the records in here and show you.

It was my opinion as long as the poor guy could wiggle through by saying a little bit, you had the squeeze on him—you were going to take his job away from him as well as do other things, and probably prosecute him for perjury because of the oath that he took when he was working for the Government, I didn't push him around, even try to, and he wasn't pushed around here either.

Q. Mr. Bridges, you have known George Wilson for a long time, haven't you? A. Yes.

Q. What has George Wilson ever done wrong that anyone might threaten him?

A. What is that?

Q. What has George Wilson done wrong that anyone might threaten him?

A. Oh, I don't want to say. I don't want to go into that, as a matter of my own knowledge under oath.

Q. You would just rather speculate and tell the jury that the [5812] Government of the United States coerced and threatened George Wilson, which caused him to testify against you, is that so?

A. No, that is not speculation on my part, Mr. Donohue. Again I will go to the records where it is a matter of record. It is a matter of a decision by the United States Supreme Court, by the Board of Immigration Appeals, a proceeding before Judge Landis, a proceeding before the courts—District Court of Appeals. That is a matter of official Government record about the intimidation of witnesses and the pushing around of people in order to get them to testify against me. That is not speculation; that is knowledge. That is something I can prove.

Q. I am talking about George Wilson, Mr. Bridges.

A. Well, in so far as George Wilson is concerned, I can bring you statements here where George Wilson says the same thing about the Government. If you want me to do that——

Q. And that is your opinion as to why he testified here and that is the pressure we have on him; is that your statement?

A. Well, he didn't look like a person who was up here having a picnic, you know. He didn't look like anyone enjoying himself. Anybody with half an eye could see he was up here and someone had a gun pointing at him somehow, somewhere, from some direction, and that was a loaded gun, too; it was not an empty gun.

Q. Didn't he look to you like a man who was telling the truth, [5813] Mr. Bridges?

A. No, siree. He looked to me like a guy who was about to croak, because he was telling a lie, and that lie might put me in jail. That is the way it looked to me.

Q. Now we have gone through everybody who I think Mr. Wilson said was present at this meeting at the Governor Hotel. Is it not a fact, Mr. Bridges, that there was a dispute between Mr. Rathborne and Mr. Goldblatt?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Sure. [5813-A]

Q. Isn't it a further fact that at one time Mr. Goldblatt was the secretary-treasurer of the California CIO Council? A. Right.

Q. And he was succeeded by Mr. Rathborne?

A. Right.

Q. And there came a time subsequently when Mr. Goldblatt was sent to Washington to represent his union? A. Goldblatt?

Q. Yes. Didn't he go to Washington for a short time to represent his union and then return to San Francisco?

A. He might have. He might have taken a trip back there like any other officer took a trip, some special assignment.

Q. When he returned to San Francisco, assuming that he was away for a short time, what was his occupation?

A. Secretary—I think that he was part of the leadership of the international union; I don't know—he was acting secretary at the time. He became acting secretary when our secretary joined the army.

Q. That is, Mr. Goldblatt had a full time job with the union and Mr. Rathborne had Mr. Goldblatt's old job with the California CIO Council, correct?

A. Right. I made the decision—as a matter of fact, I decided that we had let the services of probably our best officers of the State Council long enough. We wanted him in our international union, and after giving them sufficient notice, Goldblatt was [5814] let out of the State Council and went to work for the international union. We needed his services too badly. Rathborne took his place.

Q. You say you decided it. How is it that you didn't submit it to the rank and file?

A. Shortly afterward it was submitted to the rank and file. The only way Goldblatt could be secretary was by the rank and file, and in so far as Goldblatt going to work for our union, I made that decision.

Q. Mr. Bridges, a man who has developed the forensic art to the degree you have has no difficulty in swaying his union?

A. I am not quite sure what that word means.

Q. I wasn't when I heard it first. I enjoyed it. I understand it is to speak well.

A. Nobody ever accused me of that. They accused me of speaking too much.

Mr. Hallinan: So you don't misguide Mr. Bridges, the word "forensic" doesn't mean that.

Mr. Donohue: Would you be good enough to tell us what it means?

Mr. Hallinan: It comes from the Latin word "forum" and it means to speak in court.

Mr. Donohue: We will accept Mr. Hallinan's definition.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

The Witness: He scares me, too, sometimes, Mr. Donohue.

Mr. Donohue: Don't misunderstand; he doesn't scare me. [5815]

The Witness: I know that.

Mr. Hallinan: Mr. Bridges, we will have Mr. Donohue telling us how he charged bravely up San Juan Hill as he tried to before.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Do you recall there came a time, Mr. Bridges, when, in consequence of a dispute between Mr. Goldblatt and Mr. Rathborne, that Mr. Rathborne wrote Mr. Goldblatt a letter in essence telling Mr. Goldblatt to mind his own business?

A. I sure do. He wrote a dilly of a letter, and I think he circulated it amongst the other officers of the State Council. He either circulated the original letter or a letter that he cleaned up a bit after I discussed the matter with him. I said, "Listen here; you are too strong; you shouldn't do that to Louie."

Q. You were pretty familiar and friendly with Mr. Rathborne in those days, weren't you?

A. Sure, certainly that is true.

Q. Yes, but you only changed after you saw in the press that he had testified against you before the grand jury; isn't that so?

A. To a degree that is true, to a degree. I knew that—here is the way I would describe it. I knew he hit the bottom then. I knew prior to that he was on the way down, and I tried to help him put on the brakes, and I wasn't successful. I and other people tried to slow him up. You know, you get a combination [5816] of drink, big poker games, playing the horses and those things, well, certain things happen to you.

Q. That all spells and adds up to a man who is a perjurer if he dares to testify against Harry Bridges, doesn't it?

A. No; I think that there can be another test. I don't think anyone who testifies against me is a perjurer. I think the people that testify against me for the purpose of hurting my union and stoop to testify against me and don't tell the truth, they are, number one, perjurers, and number two, they are union busters. They are not hurting me. They are hurting the people I represent, because it isn't a question of hurting me.

Q. Mr. Bridges, you did know that just prior to the time he was called to testify before the grand jury that Mr. Rathborne was sailing as a radio officer on board a ship, do you not?

A. Oh, sure; he made a full round trip, and an Immigration officer made the trip with him.

Q. You also——

A. And gave him a thousand dollars, I understand—give him a thousand dollars to go back East and talk to some people back East in order to get up enough courage to do a job.

Q. You know that of your own personal knowledge, I take it, or you certainly wouldn't testify to it?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Am I bound, sir, by things I know of my own knowledge?

Q. It is generally supposed when we testify to things that we are testifying to things we know of our own personal knowledge. [5817]

A. I am not using that test. I am using a double test, things I know of my own personal knowledge and things too I am satisfied in my own mind.

Q. Was it Mr. Rathborne sailing, as you know he did as a radio officer on board a ship, which led you to get Mr. Goldblatt to have this international appendage of the WFTU to pass the resolution which made it impossible for him to sail on another ship?

A. I didn't know he was sailing, Mr. Donohue. My understanding was that he quit sailing and had gone into the real estate business down in Half Moon Bay and he had a big political deal on. He had invested in a lot of land down there and he is trying to get some politicians in the Democratic Party to build a breakwater down at Half Moon Bay so as to increase the value of his land, and he had certain guarantees along that line, I am pretty sure you know about them.

Q. You know that of your own personal knowledge, I take it?

A. Uh-huh (affirmative).

Q. You do?

A. Uh-huh. I went out and had a little checkup; I asked Congressman Havenner. He will give you the dope to start with.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. I am sure that you have, Mr. Bridges.

A. Now, look, I am not asleep; I am on trial here for something that will put me in jail, Mr. Donohue, if I am found guilty. I am working at trying to disprove all the things—a [5818] lot of things you said, not because maybe you know them of your own knowledge, but because somebody tells you or you believe something that some of those crooks you bring around tell you. If those things are believed, I go to jail. Don't worry, I am not kissing that off.

Q. I suppose you are prepared to prove that an immigration officer sailed with Rathborne on the last trip he made?

A. We hope to; when you bring Rathborne in here, we hope to.

Q. Mr. Bridges, what happened as a result of the dispute between Mr. Rathborne and Mr. Goldblatt?

A. I don't know. It wasn't that serious. I think the dispute was over the State Council collecting funds for political action as against the international union. We settled the dispute.

Q. Isn't it a fact, Mr. Bridges, that it became necessary to settle the dispute in a top fraction Communist Party meeting of the CIO at the Governor Hotel here in San Francisco?

A. You know, sometimes I wonder, Mr. Donohue, if you actually believe those things. That is pretty ridiculous and nonsensical. Look, let's put it this way: Here is Goldblatt and myself and the other officers of my union and the State Council. We are here; we are elected officers of the union; we have the authority, the responsibility, the power, as well as the knowhow, as well as something else—the confidence and the loyalty and the support of the majority of the rank and file down [5819] below. Now, what in blazes do we need a top fraction so-called meeting for to decide anything for? We decide those things. If we don't, our rank and file will find it out and fire us. That is what they elect us and pay us for. Who is going to make those decisions? And how and why? We make the decisions, as I have told you. Believe me, if you go out and listen to some of those people that have come in and told you these things in order to get onto the payroll of the Immigration Department for a few bucks a day, you will give them——

Q. Isn't that why Schneidermann was there, Mr. Bridges, because you couldn't agree?

A. No, I can't agree with you on that. I can't agree with you about the meeting. There was no such meeting, and I know nothing of Schneidermann being there, and I can't see what he would have added to the matter even if he was. The truth is what I told you, Mr. Donohue. We made the decisions; we were the people who—you know, I am beginning to think you kind of put me in the position of being a stooge. Now, I am not a swell-head type of person, but I am the president of a national organization. That organization—it isn't the biggest organization in the United States, but when it comes to quantity, maybe we prefer quality. There is bigger organizations, but the people that have got them can keep them. I will take my organization. So I am the president of a national organization. It knows its way around; it can take care of the advice, and we [5820] don't need any advice from anyone or any decision from anyone. The way this thing is going, I am being made to look like a stooge, if someone pulls a string, I jump—things like that. It just doesn't happen that way. As president of that organization, I have certain responsibilities, certain authority and certain powers. Those powers have been given me by the people I represent. I represent them and no one else. I am responsible to them and no one else. They and they alone tell me what to do, and they and they alone are the people that I serve. Now, that is the truth, Mr. Donohue. And no one—no one interferes with that setup.

Q. Then I take it that you thought Mr. George Wilson perjured himself when he said this meeting took place?

A. To the best [illegible] his recollection, he said that. The reasons he said it are what I am telling you. I am not going to go into the question whether he perjured himself or not. I have got my information and my opinion on the matter. I am going by what he told me here during the Christmas holidays. I know what he told me then. I think he was telling me the truth.

Q. Did you see him during the Christmas holidays or did you call him on the telephone?

A. Called him on the telephone, and I called him also—I had—I was with Vincent Hallinan; I called him with the distirict realization that you, Mr. Donohue, or one of your agents was listening in on the telephone, too. I don't have to be [5821] afraid of what I said. I don't know if he had to be afraid of what he said. I related to you what he said, what his wife said and what his little baby said.

Q. Did you see Mr. Schneidermann while you were down at Los Angeles over the Christmas holidays? A. No, no.

Mr. Donohue: May me ~~take~~ a recess at this time, your Honor?

The Court: We will take the afternoon recess, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case.

(Recess.) [5822]

Mr. Hallinan: If the Court please, if I might interrupt Mr. Donohue?

Mr. Donohue: Certainly.

Mr. Hallinan: During the recess, your Honor, some of the gentlemen of the press addressed some inquiry to me that raises the thought that possibly some misinterpretation was put upon what I said about counsel putting in evidence and excluding evidence. It was asked me whether I was making a charge that the Court was observing a rule of leaving in what was unfavorable to the defense and barring what was favorable to the defense. I thought I made it perfectly clear that I addressed that criticism only to counsel for the prosecution. I know you won't have any such interpretation, and I am afraid the jurors might get the impression, if anybody else did, and I want to assure both the Court and the jury that no such thought was intended. I thought I had made it clear enough, but in case there is any doubt, my statement was that the prosecution acted upon one rule, to keep out what was favorable to the defendant and to keep in what was unfavorable, and that was all.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Bridges, you recall the witness Charles Krolek? [5823]

A. Krolek?

Q. Yes, sir. A. John Krolek?

Q. Charles Krolek, Kermit Charles Krolek.

A. Right.

Q. You have known him a long time, too, haven't you, Mr. Bridges?

A. Quite a while.

Q. And did I understand you to say at some earlier stage in the proceedings today that he was another one of those aliens that the Bureau of Immigration had something over about his naturalization?

A. No, I didn't mean that. I did point out the fact that nearly every witness here was an alien, and would necessarily have to have dealings with the Immigration Department. And it is strange, to say the least. I have my own opinions on that, buttressed, as I say, by what has gone on before. But Krolek is a Canadian, or was, according to his testimony here. It was the first time I knew it.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Well, you are not suggesting that a Canadian, or one born in Canada, isn't capable of telling the truth?

A. No, no, I am not suggesting that. There's a lot of difference between people who are born in Canada and people who show up here, kind of ushered in by the Immigration Department. [5824]

Q. Don't you know, Mr. Bridges, that having come here with his parents as a child, that he obtained his citizenship by the naturalization of his parents, and that he had no contact with the Immigration Service?

A. When I mentioned Krolek earlier in the day, Mr. Donohue, I didn't have in mind—it wasn't my intention to reflect upon his citizenship as such. What I meant was, he was showing up here as a witness, and Krolek's story speaks for itself, that, if I recall his testimony, back in 1939 he gave a statement to the FBI because it was expedient to do so. He joined the Communist Party because it was expedient to do so. He left because it was expedient to do so. Everything, apparently, Mr. Krolek has done is because it was expedient for Mr. Krolek to do so; it meant something to Mr. Krolek. And when he come up here, it was because it was expedient for Mr. Krolek to do so. There was something in it for him. When he took that trip down to Los Angeles to that apartment with the wrought iron railing, that was expedient for Mr. Krolek to do so. So——

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Can you give us some reason, Mr. Bridges, why Mr. Krolek, now employed as he told you by a national organization, would have to come here in this court and publicly concede that he was a former member of the Communist Party?

A. Only based on what has gone before and what has happened to certain people in connection with the present case, the immigration agents work this way, whether you know it or not, Mr. [5825] Donohue: They go around and they start in like this to people, "Now, you want to be a good American, don't you?" "Yes, sure. Everybody wants to be a good American." "You want to be a good, patriotic American citizen, don't you?" If you are not, incidentally, parenthetically, if you are not an American citizen, they say, "You would like to be a citizen, wouldn't you?" And of course the average person who is not a citizen says, "Yes, I am trying to be a citizen." And the Immigration Service, without coming out and saying in so many words, they make their meaning plain. And then they say to the person, if he happens to be working for a corporation, "Well, now, look, I have just got through talking to your employer, and your employer would like to see you a good American citizen too. You understand that, don't you?" And the person says, "Yes." And, "Your employer has informed me that they think any cooperation you can give the Government in this case is something that you ought to do. You understand that, don't you?" And the person says, generally says, "Yes." And, you know, they kind of get the point along the way. So I presume that the same thing could easily have happened in the case of Mr. Krolek. I guess the makers of radio and television, that company he works for, they are probably—they have probably been approached. That has happened in other cases, so that is the way it works out.

Q. How do you suppose or why do you suppose that anybody [5826] would contact Mr. Krolek unless they knew that as a member of the Communist Party he could identify you as such a member?

A. Well, I mean, what is the good of bringing up someone here that you can't get to say, for one reason or another, because you have got the heat on him or the pressure on him, or because you hold a threat of losing his job,—you have first of all got to get someone up here to say, "Yes, I was a Communist, and while I was a Communist I told lies and ~~I did~~ everything rotten then. Not that I am doing them now, of course." Now they are telling the truth, supposedly, since they were a Communist at one time and are no longer a Communist. That is the kind of character you have to get. You won't get a decent person, because decent persons don't lie. So you have got to get a person that was an ex or, like Krolek, that did everything because it was a matter of expediency, because Krolek had something to gain, and he was up here because he had something to gain. It is pretty obvious, at least it would be to me, whether I was involved in this case or not. That is the way it would appear to me, Mr. Donohue.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. You mean to say that decent people don't join the Communist Party, Mr. Bridges?

A. No, I haven't said that. But some of the characters that drop out of it don't seem to be too decent.

Q. Didn't you say just a few minutes ago, about George Wilson, that he was afraid he would lose his job if he did testify, [5827] and now Krolek is afraid he will lose his job if he won't testify? Isn't that right?

A. No, I said the same thing about both; Wilson told me he would lose his job if he didn't testify.

Q. If he didn't testify? A. Yes.

Q. Oh.

A. He is working for the Los Angeles Daily News. He told me that. He told me he had been out of work for a year and a half, and he had just got this job. He went down to work for the Los Angeles Daily News. His wife and family were living up here. It was months and months before he could get a chance to move them there. He says, "Now after being out of work, I didn't do a tap of work for a year and a half." He says, "So they asked me, come up to the Grand Jury." He says,

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

"What was I to do? If I didn't go up, no job." So I said, "Well, did they tell you that?" He says, "Well, they didn't say so in so many words, but I know what they meant." I said, "For crying out loud, George, why didn't you come out, come out and tell the truth? Put it in the form of a statement," I said, "Sit down; tell the truth about it. We will get in there and fight them together. Let's expose this rotten mess as to what they are trying to do to you. What is a job?" He said, "Well, I've had enough."

Q. And that is when you—— [5828]

A. That is what he told me.

Q. And that is when you told him, "Go ahead and tell the truth," that you could take it better than he could, right?

A. I said, "Listen, go and do the best you can. If you've got to maneuver around to try and save your skin," I says, "well, I guess I will make out without you losing out, George." That is what I told him, George. I wasn't so much thinking of him. I know his wife, I know his kids, and the truth of the matter is I am better able to battle through than Wilson. It is as simple as that. Now, maybe you don't understand, Mr. Donohue, but again let me get back to what I have told you. Wilson is always—was always a unionist, at least he was—for all I know is still. And some of these things you learn in the trade union movement. You learn to stick together—at least I try to carry it out. Now, that is, as soon as I thought—as far as

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

I could figure out in my own mind that Wilson wasn't trying to testify because he was getting paid off, he was on a per diem, he was no Crouch, Johnson or anything like that—they are paid professional liars, those people. They travel around the country and make a good thing out of it. As soon as I found out or was satisfied in my own mind that Wilson wasn't trying to do that, I tried to help him. Now, that is how simple it is.

Q. Mr. Bridges, did you go down to Los Angeles to see George Wilson to help George Wilson or to help Harry Bridges? [5829]

A. No, I went down on some other business, I think. But now I am not trying to kid you, Mr. Donohue. Along with helping George Wilson, I knew indirectly it might help me, certainly.

Q. Why didn't you tell Mr. Wilson, "George, you know I am not a member of the Communist Party. Get on that stand and tell the truth, because if you tell the truth you can't hurt me"?

A. I told him that.

Q. Oh, when did you tell him that?

A. I told him that very thing. He says, "That is what I told the Grand Jury." He said, "I told the Department of Immigration about that." I said, "Well, listen, George, now what good are you to them?" And, "If you told the Grand Jury the truth, what harm can you do me and what good are you to the Immigration Department?" He says, "I don't know. They are not going to use me anyway. They have given me a subpoena to stop you from subpoenaing me." That is what he told me.

Q. Mr. Bridges, I can ask you, do you think the United States Government would have subpoenaed George Wilson and called him as a witness if he hadn't given us testimony against you, Mr. Bridges?

A. I don't know. Now, in order to prove that, why don't you come in with the transcript of what he said before the Grand Jury, and then we can find it out? Now, why conceal this thing? I am going by what he told me, Mr. Donohue. Now, the way to find out whether he told me the truth and what he [5830] said before the Grand Jury was something other than what he told me, would be to come in with the transcript of what he told the Grand Jury. That is what—I am telling you what he told me. And his wife told me the same thing.

Q. His wife wasn't before the Grand Jury, was she?

A. No, but she told me over the phone, both of them said, "We know George knows nothing about you, Harry; he couldn't say anything about you even if he wanted to." And they told the officers of the Immigration Service that. That is what they told me. [5831]

Q. Mr. Bridges, you went down to see George Wilson to try to find out what he did tell the Grand Jury, didn't you?

A. No, the meeting I had with him was for that purpose, at least in main part, but as far as going down to Los Angeles for that purpose, that is not true. I was down there for some other business, as far as I recall.

Q. And the reason you sent Morris Watson and several others down to Half Moon Bay to talk to Mervyn Rathborne after he testified before the grand jury was to find out what he had told the grand jury, isn't that right?

A. That is more or less true—more things than that. Not only what he had told the grand jury but just to find out what was wrong with Mervyn.

Q. And the reason you sent B. B. Jones and several others down to Menlo Park to talk to John Schomaker was to find out what John Schomaker told the grand jury?

A. I didn't send B. B. Jones. I didn't know until he had gone. I didn't know until after B. B. Jones had gone and came back and told me the results of his conversation. He had gone down unbeknownest to me. Jones and I hadn't been very friendly over a period of years. Jones was friendly with Schomaker and he went down there with several other people, and after he had been down there, that is when he came and told me.

"Gee," I said, "that is pretty important. Go and tell the lawyers about it." That is all that happened with Jones. [5832]

Q. You heard Krolek testify about a meeting in the Venetian Square Apartments? A. Yes.

Q. You were down in that section for the double conventions in May and June, 1936, were you not?

A. I was down in San Pedro.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Did I understand you to say it was a long way down there from Long Beach; it was too far for you to have gone to any meeting?

A. No. I said it was not too far, but it isn't exactly right alongside of San Pedro. It seems to me quite a long ways to go to a meeting during a convention. There is no need for that.

Q. You remember Mr. Krolek said, "The following persons were present: Mr. A. T. Pringle, Mr. R. A. Pyle, Mr. T. J. Van Ermen, Mr. Harry Bridges, Mr. Henry Schmidt, Mr. Harry Jackson, Mr. Walter Lambert, his wife Hazel Wood, and Mr. Mervyn Rathborne"? A. Right.

Q. Do you recall testifying, reading from Volume 51 of the record of this proceeding at page 4526, reading the full question and answer beginning at page 5425——

Mr. Hallinan: You said 4526. What page?

Mr. Donohue: I am sorry. 5425 and carrying over to 5426, Volume 51:

> "Q. Would it be ordinary that you might solicit the help [5833] of other delegates, whether they happened to be members of the Communist Party or not, in putting across a program or slate of candidates at a convention (question by Mr. Hallinan)——.
>
> "A. Sure, those delegates were all part of our general caucus. They were all supporting the same program. We were all supporting the same program together. I can't see why there would be a meeting of just those three particular people. If we are to believe that story, you have got Harry Jackson, Walter Lambert and two or three other people. You have five officers of the Communist Party allegedly instructing about four of us what to do. Why, that is so ridiculous to the average person in our trade union movement on this Coast that it is funny. That is so ridiculous that the average rank and file member of my own union would dismiss it with a horse laugh, it is so stupid."

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Who were the five officers of the Communist Party?

A. According to what you read off, that is what I was going by. Read the list again and I will explain what I mean.

Q. Reading now from page 54—I had better read——

A. Read the list there, the list.

Q. The list is contained in the question of Mr. Hallinan.

A. That is what I have reference to. That is what I mean.

Q. He named the persons as Pyle, Pringle, Van Ermen, yourself, Henry Schmidt, Harry Jackson, Hazel Wood, Walter Lambert and [5834] Mervyn Rathborne.

A. All right. I had in mind——

Q. Who were the five officers of the Communist Party?

A. I had in mind the people other than the radio operators there and myself and Schmidt, of course. Jackson, Wood, Lambert—is it Jackson, Wood, Lambert and Rathborne? Isn't that the four?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Jackson, Wood, Lambert, Rathborne.

A. Anybody else?

Q. Pyle, Van Ermen, Pringle, yourself and Schmidt.

A. Then that is four officers of the Communist Party, not five.

Q. What office did Mr. Harry Jackson have in the Communist Party?

A. I don't know at that time.

Q. What office did Hazel Wood have in the Communist Party? A. I don't know.

Q. What office did Walter Lambert have in the Communist Party? A. I don't know.

Q. What office did Mervyn Rathborne have in the Communist Party? A. I don't know.

Q. How do you know they were officers?

A. That was just a term used. I knew by the testimony here, Rathborne testified he was a Communist. I knew Lambert had some official position in the Communist Party. As far as I [5835] recall, I think that Harry Jackson had some official position of some type or other. I might be a little mixed up there on his being an organizer for the MWIU. And my understanding, as I explained here, Hazel Wood had some official position. I was going by the testimony that has been given here in the courtroom. I didn't know that that was the particular import of the question. The point I was making here is you have got, as I thought, five of one giving orders to four of the other, and we were all officers of the trade union movement, and you have five officers or five members, I really meant, of the Communist Party giving orders to four trade unionists, when as a matter of fact the only difference is you have four alleged Communists there giving orders to six members of the trade union movement, and it is just as ridiculous.

Q. Have you finished, Mr. Bridges?

A. That is the only import of that. You asked me what I meant. There it is. If I had been asked to explain at that time, I would have given the same explanation. I did not think it was of any great importance at the time.

Q. Reading still from page 5425:

> "Q. He named the persons ("he" referring to Krolek) as Pyle, Pringle, Van Ermen, yourself, Henry Schmidt, Harry Jackson, Hazel Wood, Walter Lambert and Mervyn Rathborne. Now, except for yourself, Henry Schmidt and Hazel Wood, do you recognize the other names? [5836]
>
> "A. All radio operators."

Is Walter Lambert a radio operator?

A. No.

Q. Was Hazel Wood a radio operator?

A. No. My answer didn't mean that. My answer meant the radio operators. I know Lambert was never a radio operator. I didn't mean to infer that or say Hazel Wood was a radio operator. I know Jackson was not a radio operator. Gee, if you have to stretch things around, Mr. Donohue, to try to get that out of the question——

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. I am not trying to stretch anything, Mr. Bridges.

A. If you want to stand there and throw trick questions at me, I guess I can struggle along, but I think we ought to get down to business.

Q. I only wanted to find out who the five officers of the Communist Party were at this meeting and how you knew they were officers?

A. I did not. I was going by the testimony here. I used the term "officers" when I really had in mind members of the Communist Party, because they were down there in that capacity. The purpose of the meeting, the way it was testified to here, here were representatives, officials or officers of some type, people of importance or authority in the Communist Party. As I heard the testimony, the purpose of that meeting was to tell us what to do. That is the way I understood the testimony at [5837] that time, and I was only pointing out it was pretty ridiculous, whether it was four or five telling us what to do. It wasn't true then, not true now. The rest is inconsequential. I didn't place any importance, I didn't worry about being correct in each detail on that point.

Q. You do not give it serious consideration, Mr. Bridges?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. No, I don't have to. Why should I? Little points like that, little things like that? If you believe they warrant serious consideration, I will give them great consideration before I start answering those questions.

Q. Reading from page 5476 of the same volume, 51, question by Mr. Hallinan:

> "Some of these people that have been presented in here you would expect to find on Park Street feeding the squirrels. How about 121 Haight Street? He said two weeks after the Long Beach meeting in May, 1936, while he and two other men waited in the corridor, he could look in the door and see you and Henry Schmidt in the office of Mr. Schneidermann. Did anything like that take place that you know of? Have you ever been up to 121 Haight Street with Mr. Schmidt and to meet Mr. Schneidermann?
> "A. No, I have been in 121 Haight Street twice, and both of those times were in 1934. I was not in the building after that. I was never in 121 Haight Street since 1934 for any reason at any time, any purpose whatsoever. [5838] Anybody that says otherwise, they are making a mistake or they have a reason."

Do you recall the question and the answer?

A. Right. That still stands.

Q. Excuse me. Did I cut you off?

A. I said it still stands, the same answer.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. What significance does the address 121 Haight Street have to you, Mr. Bridges?

A. I remember it as a building in 1934, and I remember the reasons I went out there, and the strange part of it is I don't remember it being the headquarters of the Communist Party. But I remember the two occasions I went up there. They were both in 1934. I haven't been there since.

Q. Since you don't recall it being the headquarters of the Communist Party, tell us why you went there.

A. The first time I went up, I went up to discuss with some people who were there at that time the question of legal defense, that is, here is the way I recall the occasion. The International Labor Defense, I think, had offices in that building. A delegation from that organization had appeared before our strike committee or something like that, and the strike committee had designated a subcommittee or myself to go up and investigate their proposal of help, that is, the offer of the help of the International Labor Defense during the strike, and I went up there on an occasion, I think, in company [5839] with some other members of the strike committee and in connection with that matter. That is the first time that I recall. That was in 1934, I think, shortly after the strike took place. The next time was the occasion I have told you about here, when after the battle of July 5th some of our people were taken up there, shot, wounded and spread out on the floor, and I paid a visit up there then to look them over and try to pick out the ones that belonged to us and see what could be done with them. That is the two times that I recall, both in 1934, both during the strike period of 1934 that I was in 121 Haight Street. I have never been there since. [5840]

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Do you recall telling us at the time you talked about bringing the wounded up there, that they were brought up to Communist Party headquarters? A. I might have.

Q. Is it your present impression that when you went to 121 Haight Street the two times that you have releated in 1934 that it was the Communist Party headquarters?

A. Yes, I have heard it discussed here. All that I meant by that was—the funny thing in my impression was that I couldn't reconcile in my own mind the impression that I had that in 1934 at the time I am talking about, that the Communist Party headquarters was somewhere else.

Q. That is just the point, Mr. Bridges. It was somewhere else, wasn't it?

A. Then I am right.

Q. Yes.

A. Thanks for the help, Mr. Donohue. I thought I was off the beam. See, that is what I mean; that is all I had in mind. I thought I was wrong. I thought that I had had a wrong impression, that I had made a mistake after hearing some of the testimony, because there is no need to argue about it, I was up to 121 Haight Street. Whether it was Communist headquarters or anything else doesn't make much difference to me, but I couldn't quite recall. I know it was in connection—I knew 121 Haight Street had some connection with some Communist [5841] Party organization, but at the same time I kind of—had an idea that Communist Party headquarters was somewhere else.

Q. Can you tell us where Communist Party headquarters was during the period of the strike?

A. No, I forget. I forget. I have got an idea where it was, but for the moment I forget. I could probably do a little research work and come up with the answer.

Q. Then are you certain when you went to talk about the International Labor Defense that you went to 121 Haight Street?

A. Yes, I am certain of that. I am certain of that because I remember the big building.

Q. Do you know when 121 Haight Street became the headquarters of the Communist Party?

A. No, I thought it was—I thought it was the headquarters maybe at that time. I am a little hazy on that. There is no particular reason why I should know, you know.

Q. Where is the Communist Party headquarters today? A. I don't know.

Q. Mr. Bridges, as well as you know Mr. Schneidermann, you don't know where his office is?

A. No.

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me.

A. If I want——

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me for interrupting the examination and asking, Where were the Communist Party headquarters in [5842] 1934?

Mr. Donohue: I just asked Mr. Bridges.

Mr. Hallinan: I mean, is it something that you want him to produce, or would you mind telling us if you have it?

Mr. Donohue: I do not have it. I know it was not at 121 Haight Street.

Mr. Hallinan: Because I remember Mr. Schomaker relating how he and Mr. Jones walked up to 121 Haight Street with Mr. Bridges' application. So I would like to know where that place was. If the information is within your reach, would you get it for us?

Mr. Donohue: If you will agree with me, otherwise I will prove it for you, Mr. Hallinan, that 121 Haight Street became the headquarters of the Communist Party from June 6, 1935, to sometime in September, 1934.

Mr. Hallinan: Could you tell where were the headquarters in December, 1933?

Mr. Donohue: 37 Grove Street.

The Witness: That is right; now I remember. That is what I had in mind.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, now, I am not sure; I don't want to create a misimpression. It may be that that was the address that Schomaker gave. I know it was in that neighborhood.

The Witness: On the present address, Mr. Donohue, I don't know where Mr. Schneidermann's office is, but if I wanted [5843] to call him I can look in the telephone book for Communist Party headquarters and find him. That is how I knew—that is how I could get in touch with him if I wanted to.

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me; I have the notation on it. It was 37 Grove that Schomaker testified to.

Mr. Donohue: Thank you.

Q. Mr. Bridges, referring now to the testimony of John Schomaker and Henry Schrimpf concerning the meeting at Herman Mann's house concerning the subject matter of Norma Perry, which is alleged to have occurred sometime late in December of '34 or January of 1935, I understand you to say that you attended no such meeting at Mr. Mann's house for any such purpose?

A. That's right. I remember having a couple of sessions on the issue of Norma Perry as I have stated, but I certainly don't recall being at Herman Mann's house for such a purpose. I see no reason why I should be there, and I don't think it is possible that I am mistaken on that point.

Q. In other words, the question of Norma Perry was purely a labor matter and had nothing to do with the Communist Party; is that your understanding?

A. That's right. That is what I was concerned with. What she wanted to be was her own business. She was working for the union, she wasn't a member of the union. She was working for the union. You don't know our union. Our union takes a position on those things that people that work for us, what [5844] they do in their spare time is their own business. I am president, and as such the union takes care that I don't go fooling around and changing any of those rules. We have a rule about people that work for our employers. We are the employers, and we can't take one position with regard to our own employers and do another thing with our employees. People that work for us, when they leave the job, what they do is their business. We can't follow them.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Did you know at the time Norma Perry worked for you that she was a member of the Communist Party?

A. I don't—I heard some such thing later. I don't know whether I heard it at the time or knew it at the time or not. I am not so sure. It would be hard for me to be sure even now, but as to whether I knew at the time, that is pretty hard to put my finger on a particular year.

Q. Did you ever learn that she had been expelled from the Communist Party?

A. I have heard that at some time, I forget when, but that seems to more or less ring a bell, as you might say.

Mr. Donohue: Would you ask the witness to look at the Western Worker dated Thursday, November 28, 1935, and call his attention to this article (showing document to counsel).

The Witness: Uh-huh (affirmative).

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Does that refresh your

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

recollection, Mr. Bridges, as to the fact that Norma Perry was expelled from the [5845] Communist Party?

A. Well, my recollection before I read the article was to that effect. That doesn't help me to say—well, I didn't look at the date.

Q. I am sorry, I forgot to ask the clerk to ask you to look at the heading.

A. I wouldn't argue with the date; that probably happened around there. I have no independent recollection, but I wouldn't argue with the date or with the article. It seems to me that article has a statement in it to the effect that she has been expelled from the Communist Party; it occurred around there.

Q. That was November, 1935—November 28, 1935?

A. Yes. Now, I would say that somewhat shortly after that time or sometime after that date the matter possibly came to my knowledge.

Q. You recognize the Western Worker as having been at that time the Western organ of the Communist Party of the United States?

A. Yes, I know the Western Worker.

Q. This time, Mr. Bridges, November 28, 1935, appears about the time that Mr. Schrimpf and Mr. Schomaker said these meetings were held, that one at Herman Mann's house, and then at 121 Haight Street, for the purpose of disciplining and finally removing Norma Perry, is it not?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Hallinan: I submit, if the Court please, that that is [5846] argumentative. It is very reasonable that both Mr. Schrimpf and Mr. Schomaker based their alleged recollection upon the article. So that is an argumentative question.

The Court: Overruled.

A. I don't know. That was what they testified to here; is that what you mean?

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Yes. Does that newspaper article in any way refresh your recollection about the fact that you did attend a meeting either at Herman Mann's house or at 121 Haight Street or at both such places, the purpose of which meeting was to discipline Norma Perry as a member of the Communist Party? [5847]

A. The only meetings I attended were the ones I told you about, Mr. Donohue, and neither of those meetings took place at the places you mentioned. Now, as to when they took place, I can't exactly say. The meetings were for the purposes that I stated, and my recollection is they took place at the union headquarters, as far as I recall.

Q. Now, your testimony, Mr. Bridges, I am sure you will recall, was that Schomaker and Schrimpf and some other people came to the union headquarters to discuss the question of Norma Perry's reliability?

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me, Mr. Donohue. Inadvertently, I think, the question has misstated the evidence. The testimony of John H. Schomaker was that the meeting concerning Norma Perry was in December of 1934 or in January of 1935. That is at page 1069 of the transcript. December, 1934, or January, 1935.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Donohue: Correct.

Mr. Hallinan: Whereas the paper that you have says November, 1935.

Mr. Donohue: If you will recall, Mr. Hallinan, there were two meetings. The first one held at the time you have just stated, at Herman Mann's house, and the second one at 121 Haight Street.

Q. Now, Mr. Bridges, you testified, did you not, that Henry Schrimpf and John Schomaker and some other people came to the union headquarters and discussed this question of Norma Perry's unreliability with you? [5848] A. Right.

Q. And that at that time you thought it was a personal matter and took no action in the matter, correct?

A. Yes, I told you what I recall, of what I found out when I looked into the matter.

Q. How many persons can you now tell us were there in this group other than Mr. Schrimpf and Mr. Schomaker?

A. You mean when the matter was brought to my attention?

Q. Yes, yes.

A. Well, now, a delegation didn't come to see me, you know. I forget exactly how the thing was communicated to me in the first place, but when I sat down with Schomaker or Schrimpf, and my recollection is it was Schrimpf, and I don't even know about Schomaker, but I have in mind there was someone else. But I can't remember if that well. After it was brought to my attention, then I had a session with them. I don't just remember who was there. Not only—as a matter of fact, I didn't even remember Schomaker or Schrimpf being there until they testified to it here. But I don't see why I should argue over it.

Q. Well, then, you had a session with a number of people, Mr. Bridges?

A. My impression is it wasn't a number of people. I would say maybe two, three, four.

Q. And that was in your office?

A. That is my recollection. [5849]

Q. Did you keep any minutes or records——

A. And Perry was there, Norma Perry was there.

Q. Did you keep any minutes or records of that meeting?

A. No, not that I know of. Not that I remember.

Q. Now, at that time, after this conference, you dismissed the charges as being personal and retained Norma Perry?

A. Hm-mm (affirmative). I told you why.

Q. And some later time you testified somebody told you that she was giving information to the shipowners? A. That's right.

Q. Is there anything unusual in your accepting the word of that somebody as against the word of a group of members of your own union on the prior occasion? A. Yes.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. What was the reason for that, Mr. Bridges?

A. I would say it is unusual to accept the word, at that time at least, under those circumstances, very unusual for me to accept the word of a shipowner.

Q. But you did?

A. Is that what you meant?

Q. Yes. But you did, did you not? You accepted the word of some shipowner with respect to Norma Perry, though you did not accept the word of a group of your own union members who made a like complaint to you some time prior to that?

A. No, that is not true. [5850]

Q. What is true?

A. First of all, I would have to go into all the circumstances under which the information was conveyed to me, and I would like to avoid that if I could. I don't want to start telling about a lot of people. But after this particular—he wasn't a shipowner, he was a stevedoring contractor, a waterfront employer. After he passed the information on to me, I conducted a little investigation all my own, and independently of what the shipowner told me, I satisfied myself that the tip that he gave me had a lot to it. In other words, I made up my own mind, following the tip that he knew what he was talking about.

Q. Just what did you do, Mr. Bridges, in that investigation of your own?

A. Kept an eye on Norma.

Q. Yes? A. That was enough.

Q. You mean you could tell by looking at her?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. No, no, no; you see, she had a little habit of sneaking out during the daytime, disappearing up the street, going into a saloon, having a few drinks. And always there used to be certain other people around there that she used to talk to, and it used to occur with frequency. And all I had to do was keep an eye open and watch her, and then have someone else watch around the people that she was doing business with. I got enough information to satisfy me that we didn't need her any more. [5851]

Q. Did you keep any minutes of any of these meetings that you had with any person or persons with respect to dismissing Norma Perry?

A. No, not—there was no need for that. But the matter became official in the union, because some time later I was required to file charges against Ivan F. Cox, who at that time had got himself tangled up with the Immigration Department, where they were using him also as a spy in the union. And I eventually filed charges against Ivan F. Cox, and had him removed from the office and removed from the union. And in the course of that trial, and a transcript was kept of the trial, the whole matter of Norma Perry was discussed, too, before the union trial committee, in the matter of Ivan F. Cox. And Ivan F. Cox was removed from his office and expelled from the union because of playing around with enemies of labor, such as certain labor spies and agents of the Immigration Department, working in connection with labor spies in the union and union-busters.

Q. Prior to that time,——

A. Names, Mr. Bonham and Mr. Boyd and others.

Q. Prior to that time, Mr. Bridges, had you ever consulted the rank and file and got their permission to fire Norma Perry? A. No.

Q. Did you ever give her a trial?

A. No. You must remember what I told you, she was—she would slip out of the office during working hours, go up the street a [5852] few doors into a saloon. And while standing at the saloon and imbibing a drink or two, of course no complaints about that, there was always someone around there handy to talk to her and discuss a few matters. They weren't any friends of our union.

Q. But you didn't give the union a chance to determine whether she should be expelled or fired, did you, Mr. Bridges?

A. She was working—she was my stenographer, my secretary, Mr. Donohue, and I didn't have to take such matters to the union. Maybe the union don't think a great deal of me, but they put enough trust in my judgment to allow me to hire and fire a stenographer without any explanations.

Q. Either to them or to her, correct?

A. Well, we tried to do the right thing. We don't like to victimize people. She had a far better deal from our union and me than I would ever expect to get from your end of this case or any other case.

Mr. Donohue: May we take the adjournment at this time, if Your Honor please?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

The Court: We will take the adjournment until tomorrow morning at 10:00 o'clock. The same admonition to you, ladies and gentlemen, not to discuss the case under any conditions, nor to form or express an opinion until it is finally submitted to you.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to tomorrow, Friday, February 17, 1950 at 10:00 o'clock a.m.) [5853]

February 17, 1950—10:00 A.M.

The Clerk: The United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial. The witness on the stand is Harry Renton Bridges, heretofore sworn.

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES

resumed.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Mr. Bridges, returning to your testimony of yesterday for a moment, and reading to you from page 5811, beginning at line 20, were you correctly reported as having said:

> "I said, 'Get up there' (talking about George Wilson) and he did, and I didn't think his testimony was any harm one way or the other; in addition to the fact that I figured we had > records enough to prove that his testimony, No. 1, was not true, and, No. 2, would not amount to anything. And now I refer to the fact that there was no reason for the meeting at the Governor Hotel and the incident he testified to about the battle between Rathborne and Goldblatt. That is a matter of record. I've got the records, the minutes. There is no need to have any meetings in the Governor Hotel on that. That issue was a [5854] matter of public and open knowledge amongst all the members of the Executive Board of the State Council. I can bring the records in here and show you."

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

You recall saying that yesterday?

A. Yes. I have got the record here, too.

Q. Now, when you said that yesterday, Mr. Bridges, did you mean that at the time you talked to George Wilson in Los Angeles, you knew the things that you were talking about or you learned about them later?

A. No, I am talking about the first conversation that I had with him. He said, "I can't tell them anything about you. I have told them that. I don't think they will use me." And he says, "All I can tell about is some matters, union meetings and one thing and another."

And I said, "Well, that won't hurt."

He said, "I've told them about some meetings with some other people." I think he mentioned Henry Schmidt or something.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

And I said, "What kind of meetings?"

"Well," he said, "they claim that they are Communist meetings or something."

I said, "Well, what do you think?"

I am relating the conversation as best I can recall it.

And he said, "Well, you know how those people are; they—every meeting is a Communist meeting to those people."

So, what was—I wasn't going to argue with him. I [5855] said, "Well, if that is all there is to it, what are you worried about? That kind of testimony won't hurt me. Go in there and tell them about it. If that is all you are worried about or are bothered about."

And he mentioned—that was the first meeting, I think. Later on, however, was when he ~~mentioned~~ something in a little more detail, that is, about being subpoenaed. As far as the meeting is concerned, that is, the specific meeting in the Governor Hotel, that was never discussed by us in detail. We just discussed the meetings generally, where he had said that he—he told me that he had spoken about the "God's Committee." He said, "I told them about the God's Committee." That used to be the name that was thrown at us, somewhat in a derogatory fashion, by the CIO representatives in Southern California. He said, "All I told them about was the meeting of the Guards Committee."

And I said, "Well, that was just our own meetings, our own CIO meetings."

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

He said, "Yes, but you know, those fellows—the meetings, those people, the Immigration Service, almost every meeting is a Communist meeting."

So in general that was the situation.

Now, when he came up here and testified as to the meeting that actually took place in the Governor Hotel, that was what I had reference to when I said, —well, nothing in that [5856] testimony. I told the attorneys, that is practically what he told me. That is, in a general sense, that he had nothing to testify to. And I said, "As far as that meeting he is testifying to, I can tell you right now there is nothing to it. I have got records to prove that meeting was held, that is, on that incident." I was going by the incident, the battle between Goldblatt and Rathborne at that time. That meeting was held right in headquarters of the CIO. Letters were sent out to quite a few people as to the meeting and what it was all about, and everybody knew about it. And I have got the letters here, Mr. Donohue (showing), saying where the meeting took place. It is calling the people to the meeting, and it says the meeting is at 150 Golden Gate Avenue. That is what I had in mind.

Q. There is no dispute about the fact that there was a dispute between Mr. Goldblatt and Mr. Rathborne, is there, Mr. Bridges?

A. No, I wouldn't call it a dispute. I think that it wasn't a question of a dispute between those two people, it was a question of—a matter of certain policies that required a meeting to straighten out, that was all.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. But you state now that the dispute was settled among the CIO people? A. Yes.

Q. And you disagree that there was a top fraction meeting of [5857] the Communist Party at the Governor Hotel with Mr. Schneidermann and yourself and Mr. Rathborne and Mr. Wilson and Mr. Goldblatt and others, in order to settle that dispute, don't you?

A. Certainly. All that has happened is that you have taken a meeting that actually occurred, that is a matter of record,—you have moved it a couple of blocks away from 150 Golden Gate Avenue down to the Governor Hotel. You have shoved in a couple of extra people; that's all Wilson has done. And as against him having to do that and getting bumped out of his job, particularly when I have got the records to show what the meeting was about, where it took place, I don't think it was worth worrying about.

Q. Mr. Bridges, you said yesterday that Mr. Wilson told you that if he didn't testify here and state publicly that he was a member of the Communist Party, that he would lose his job on the newspaper, didn't you?

A. That is what he told me.

Q. Isn't it a fact that Mr. Wilson told you that if he did testify before this trial, or at this trial, and state publicly that he had been a member of the Communist Party, that he was afraid that he would lose his job? A. No, no, no.

Q. You heard Hancock testify?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. You are talking about Wilson.

Q. You heard Mr. Hancock testify, Mr. Bridges? [5858] A. Yes.

Q. You heard Mr. Hancock say he worked for a newspaper in Erie, Pennsylvania, didn't you?

A. So what does that mean to me? You don't expect me to believe Hancock, do you?

Q. I don't expect you to—May I strike that, please?

Mr. Bridges, you heard Mr. Hancock testify that before he left his newspaper and came here to give his testimony that he submitted his resignation to the newspaper, did you not?

A. Maybe, maybe. Maybe the $25 a day he was getting from you people was more than he was making. I don't know. [5859]

Q. Do you think that Mr. Wilson's value to his newspaper is enhanced by the fact that he has publicly testified that he had been for some time a member of the Communist Party?

A. Oh, no, I don't think so. It all depends on how the owner of that newspaper looks at it.

Q. You seemed to know yesterday how he looked at it.

A. I have a general idea about how working people look at such matters, and I think Wilson is probably one of the most uncomfortable men in the United States today. He is a working newspaper man. I have no love of newspapers. I know who owns and runs the newspapers. But I have had to work for people who were no good, too. So do working newspaper men. It is a living. I understand that. But I think you would have to stretch a point to figure out how that newspaper down there, how its value is enhanced by him coming up here and doing what he did.

Q. Mr. Bridges, was it your intention yesterday to tell us you were more concerned with George Wilson's state of mind on the witness stand than you were with your own personal security, and that is why you told your counsel not to cross-examine Mr. Wilson?

A. No, I think I said yesterday I was concerned with both matters. After all, Wilson came up here. What I had to look at, was he up here like the other people because he wanted to be up here? He was trying to make money out of it? No. Wilson was under compulsion. Wilson told me he came up before the [5860] grand jury under compulsion. He was not subpoenaed before the grand jury. I ask him, "Why did you go, George?"

He said, "They came up. They went in to see the boss. If I hadn't gone—I went up over a weekend. If I hadn't gone up, no more job."

I said, "Did they tell you that?"

He said, "No, they did not." He said, "You know what the score is. They didn't say it in so many words, but you know."

And, of course, I don't say the agents go around and are that blunt about it. They don't do it. I explained how they did it. That is what Wilson told me. And when I see the way he acted and the way he spoke to me, and knowing a little about his background, judging his whole demeanor when he spoke to me, and when I see the way he acted on the witness stand, I believe what he said when he spoke to me, and I don't believe what he said on this witness stand.

Q. On both occasions when you talked to Mr. Wilson down in Los Angeles your counsel was with you?

A. No—oh, wait a while. Yes, on the first occasion we were sitting in the bar of the Alexandria Hotel—the Alexandria Hotel in Los Angeles, and Herbert Resner was with me, if not all the time, part of the time. But what happened was that Resner left. He sat around for a while and then he left, and George and I stayed on and chatted for quite some time. The last time I was down there I only talked to him on the telephone, and counsel [5861] wasn't with me.

Q. And counsel was in Los Angeles, wasn't he?

A. Los Angeles is a big city, Mr. Donohue.

Q. You were in his company down there?

A. No, I was not. He had his wife.

Q. Didn't you attend a meeting on the night of December 28th which you both made a speech?

A. Right.

Q. Then you were in company at some time in Los Angeles?

A. Oh, yes, we traveled down together. I don't deny that. I thought you meant was he in my company at the time I telephoned.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. No. After you talked to Mr. Wilson on the first occasion, did you discuss what Mr. Wilson had said with your then counsel, Mr. Resner?

A. I think I did later. Let me see. I think Resner wrote it down later.

Q. After you talked with Mr. Wilson the second time, did you discuss it with your counsel, Mr. Hallinan, as to what he said?

A. Sure. But, as I recall it, Wilson wouldn't discuss the matter with me while Resner was present.

Q. But in any event, in both instances you communicated to your counsel the substance of your conversation that you had with Mr. Wilson?

A. Sure, sure. I asked George—I have told you I asked him, "What did you tell the grand jury? What are you going to do? [5862] What are you mixed up in this thing for? What have they got on you?"

Q. You said yesterday or made some reference yesterday to turning the screws on cross-examination; do you recall? A. Yes.

Q. You do not think anyone has turned the screws on you, do you, Mr. Bridges?

A. You mean yourself?

Q. Yes, myself.

A. I am bearing up under it.

Q. You do not think you have been asked any unfair question, do you, Mr. Bridges?

A. I think the whole procedure is unfair right from the start, Mr. Donohue. What am I doing here in the first place?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. You are being tried, as I understand it, Mr. Bridges, on an indictment returned by a United States grand jury.

A. Yes, yes. I am being singled out, too. There are thousands of other people who had their citizenship papers. There is Henry Schrimpf, and there were three people up here, clearly as a whistle, lying like nobody's business: Crouch, Johnson and the Kentucky colonel, lying like hell.

Q. Mr. Bridges, you saw a number of witnesses called by the United States subjected to pretty severe cross-examination, didn't you?

A. Yes. You mean by Mr. Hallinan and [5863] MacInnis?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, that is, as long as we could keep them here, as long as you didn't get them away out of the city like you tried to get Ross away.

Q. They were subjected to pretty complete cross-examination, weren't they, Mr. Bridges?

A. That is right. If you are saying I have good attorneys, I am not going to argue with you, Mr. Donohue. I think I have.

Q. It is now your position that you are so concerned about the physical and mental welfare of George Wilson that you advised your counsel not to submit Mr. Wilson to cross-examination, correct?

A. Well, let us put it this way: I think I had quite a lot to do with it. I think if I had insisted that he be cross-examined and everything gone into what we knew about him, thought we knew about him at least, I think they would have done it.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Weren't you afraid of what he might say, Mr. Bridges, if you did cross-examine him?

A. No, mm-mm.

Q. That was not the reason?

A. No, not at all, Mr. Donohue. The reasons are what I have told you. The man was up here. He looked like someone who was in a bad way to me.

Q. And yet you did not think it was advisable to call to the attention of the jury by cross-examination of Mr. Wilson rather [5864] than some self-serving declaration on your own part the fact as to whether or not George Wilson was under any pressure from anyone, did you?

Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute. I want to get a definition, so we know that these gentlemen are talking about the same thing. Is that your conception of a fair question?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, I think so.

Mr. Hallinan: Just so we get you established by your own standards.

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Bridges has had an opportunity to think about the question. but in any event will you read it, Mr. Reporter?

(Question read.)

A. I merely expressed an opinion to the attorneys as to what I thought about it. After all, my attorneys, they are the experts on the trial procedure in the courtroom. I expressed an opinion as to what

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

I thought. I succeeded in convincing them. That is all I had in mind at the time.

Q. Mr. Bridges, do you recall George Wilson testifying that Mr. J. R. Robertson belonged to the same Communist Party group as he did?

A. Yes.

Q. You told us just a minute ago that when you talked with George Wilson in Los Angeles your first conversation with him after your indictment that he made some reference to the guards [5865] committee? A. Right.

Q. They are the same organization, aren't they, Mr. Bridges? A. What is that?

Q. The guards committee and the particular Communist Party group to which George Wilson said both he and J. R. Robertson belonged?

A. No, the term "God's committee," if I remember it correctly, was one invented by William Connally and it referred to myself and Rathborne and others, officers of the CIO, and representatives of the CIO here in Northern California, operating at 150 Golden Gate Avenue, that laid down policy that on many occasions Connally thought was haywire and Connally used to storm around and attack us by saying we set ourselves up as guards committee, that is all. Could do no wrong, Or knew the answers to all the questions. On the other hand, there were certain occasions when we thought Connally did not know what he was doing. It is as simple as that. That is what I mean by guards committee. And when Wilson told me about what he told the grand jury or told the people, he said, "I told them about the meetings of the guards committee." And that is when I said, "What have you got to be afraid of? There is nothing wrong with those meetings, George." He said, "Well, you know, they see one under every bed; every meeting is a Communist meeting to them." [5866]

Q. Mr. Rathborne was a member of the God's committee, wasn't he, Mr. Bridges?

A. Yes, in the sense that Connally referred to it.

Q. Mr. Bridges was a member of the guards committee?

A. In the same sense, sure. I was the regional director of the CIO, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Correct, and William Connally at that time was—— A. Not a member of the committee.

Q. Pardon?

A. Not a member of the committee. Connally always thought he was a victim.

Q. He was the president of the CIO Council, was he?

A. He was up to the time when you made that switch in Philadelphia that you insisted was dictated by the Communist Party and which I told you I figured out my own self.

Q. Who else belonged to the guards committee?

A. I think the officers of the—there was no formal or official committee. It was a combination office that was referred to by Connally, as I say. The brains—I think the officers of the San Francisco Council were Rathborne, who was secretary to the State Council, myself as regional director—that is about all.

Q. It was a combination of Communists, was it not, Mr. Bridges, which was known, as a matter of fact, as the top fraction of the Communist Party in the California CIO?

A. No, Mr. Donohue. It was what I am telling you. It was a [5867] group of CIO people that used to get together upon occasion to determine matters of policy or try to determine them as things came up from day to day, and Connally was one of those that always believed that there was more organizational activity going on in the southern part of the state and, for example, maybe it would be better to move the office of the State Council down to Los Angeles. See? And Connally used to resent, as I say, three or four of us. It was too easy to gather in Rathborne's office or my office up here and talk matters over, grab the telephone and say, "Here, Slim, here is what we think."

Connally said what? "So the committee has been at work again?" He was kind of popping off on the issue.

Q. You made reference a minute ago to that Philadelphia meeting. That was in '43, was it, Mr. Bridges?

A. The Philadelphia convention of 1943, that is right.

Q. You were a member of the California CIO Council at the time? A. No.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Your union was a member of the California CIO Council?

A. Part of it was. The California locals, that is, the locals located in California, I think, were affiliated; not all, some of them were.

Q. What was your position with the California CIO in California just prior to the 1943 convention in Philadelphia?

A. I don't know. I was still regional director for the whole [5868] state or the northern part of the state. I was one or the other.

Q. You were one or the other? A. Yes.

Q. And you were also a member of the national executive board of the CIO? A. And still am.

Q. By that unanimous election?

A. That is right, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Mr. Bridges, at any time during the period prior to the 1943 CIO national convention in Philadelphia, did it come to your attention that there was any difference of opinion within the California CIO on the question of whether or not the California CIO was dominated and controlled by members of the Communist Party?

A. Oh, there was a lot of argument about the wrong people in control, meaning largely the unions of the ILWU, and those unions that went along with the ILWU—quite a few arguments over that, not arguments about protests and one thing and another.

Q. Were there any protests that came to your attention? A. Oh, quite a few.

Q. From any of the so-called right wing or center

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

unions about the question as to whether or not, in fact, the California CIO Council was dominated by Communists? [5869]

A. What would you call a right wing union?

Q. You are more familiar with that than I am, Mr. Bridges.

A. I am more familiar with the left wing.

Q. You certainly know who the right wing unions are? A. The opposite of the left wing.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. The opposite of the left wing.

Q. The officers of the left wing——

A. The opposite of the left wing.

Q. Just enumerate again some of those unions.

A. What?

Q. That were opposite the left wing.

A. I couldn't do that. I forget. I know most about my own union, the ILWU.

Q. You do not know anything about the opposition?

A. I know a few things. I don't want to go into it here. I don't think this is the place. I don't want to sit up here and start criticizing to pieces other unions. I might have my differences of opinion with them, but the principle of our union, we try to keep internal labor problems out of courts if we can.

Q. Was it ever called to your attention just prior to the 1943 national CIO convention in Philadelphia that the Communist officers who dominated and controlled the California CIO Council included its president, Mr. Slim Connally, its secretary-treasurer, [5870] Mr. Mervyn Rathborne, and such executive board members as James Doherty of the Utility Workers, Sam Markel of the United Electrical Workers, Louisa Marino of the Food, Tobacco and Agricultural Workers, Richard Linden of the ILWU; among others?

A. Yes. You mean have I heard it said——

Q. Yes. A. That——

Q. ——within the circles of the California CIO was it said that those persons as officers and members of the executive board of the California CIO were the Communists who with others tended to dominate and control the California CIO?

A. I have heard it said that they were Communists or allegedly Communists and I think I heard it said, and more so, that the ILWU dominated the California CIO. The ILWU is the biggest union in the State Council, and most of the accusations have been directed against the ILWU controlling the State Council, more so than the question of Communists controlling or dominating [5871] them.

Q. In your position at the same time as also being a member of the national Executive Board of the CIO, did it come to your attention at any time that there were protests made by other unions in California which were members of the CIO about the domination within the California CIO of the Communist Party?

A. Oh, such allegations were made, certainly.

Q. And were those made——

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. And they came to my attention too. I mean, anybody can make an allegation. You just asked me was such allegations made. Sure.

Q. Was there a discussion among the members of the national Executive Board of the CIO of protests made by California unions that the California CIO was dominated and controlled by the Communist Party? A. Not that I recall.

Q. Well, you stated that there was some protest that you heard made while a member of the national Executive Board of the CIO.

A. Oh, that is a different thing. Here is what those protests were about.

Q. What were they, Mr. Bridges?

A. As an officer of one of the unions, I was connected with one of the unions affiliated with the California State Council, which was the largest union in the Council. It was the [5872] moving force that built the Council, organized the Council in the first place. It was the force that mainly financed the Council in its earlier days. I am talking about the ILWU. And when the State Council was established, I was chairman of the first convention that established the Council. The unions affiliated with that Council had certain guarantees, and I thought those guarantees were given in good faith by the national officers of the CIO. Amongst the guarantees that the unions that are situated here in the State of California were given was the guarantee that on all political matters they would have autonomy. The voters—the workers who are voters and members of the CIO here in the State of California reside here and pay their taxes and do the voting here. It was my understanding right from the start that they and only they would be the people to make up their own minds as to who they wished to support for political office, that is, in a presidential election or a State election or municipal election. And that is the way it was for many years, until some people in Washington as well as some of them stooges and carpet-baggers that they imported into our State here made up their minds that they wanted to do a little political dealing, and they decided that the CIO rank and file here in the State of California can't make a move even to endorse and support a person in a local city election without having the decision made for them by some high officials of the CIO in the State [5873] of Washington. And I got up on the Executive Board and I cried loud and long about it, and told them there wasn't enough power in that board to make the workers in the CIO in California accept a deal like that. And there certainly wasn't enough in the whole CIO to even get started with the ILWU in this State. That is just the way it has gone. There isn't much of a State Council left these days. And that is one of the things that has helped wreck it. But that is what the battle has been over, Mr. Donodue, and the matter is being fought out now in another court in our city, and possibly it will be gone into pretty exhaustively and all the details and all the evidence submitted, and so forth.

Q. Then despite the fact, Mr. Bridges, that there was some discussion within the California CIO unions about the question of the domination of the California CIO Council by Communists, there was no discussion of that subject matter by the members of the national Executive Committee of the CIO?

A. Not that I recall. Now, there was some meetings I missed. It might have taken place when I wasn't there, Mr. Donohue. I am talking about meetings of the CIO Executive Committee when I was present; I can't recall any. And that is one of the difficulties: the CIO doesn't allow anyone to have any minutes of the board meetings,—the only organization I know of that doesn't do that as a labor organization. I know the NAM meets and some of those organizations meet and keep their [5874] doings and actions secret. There is no need for a labor organization to do that.

Q. Mr. Bridges, you have been unhappy with the CIO ever since the time you joined it?

A. No, no. Now, listen, it isn't a question of my being unhappy, Mr. Donohue. Again, you just don't understand the labor movement. I merely operate along these lines: I think that a labor organization belongs to the membership of that organization. I don't think any officer has got a right to come along and to start regarding a labor organization as his personal property or try to use it for his own political advancement. I don't think he has got a right to dip in the funds or steal them or embezzle them or do away with them. I don't think he has got the right to pad his expense account and things like that. I don't think he has got a right without consultation with the membership to call strikes and sign agreements. I don't think he has got a right without the approval and support of the membership to endorse candidates for political office, and things like that. Now, that is all we are concerned with, and a lot of squabbles occur over those things inside the labor movement, and the fights are generally between those who think along the lines I have just indicated and those people who are in the labor movement to get out of the labor movement what they can for themselves, and that causes trouble.

Q. Are those the reasons why you have been at loggerheads with [5875] the majority of the national CIO Executive Board, the reasons you have just stated?

A. Some of them in recent months, yes. There is a few other things. I don't like the idea of Joseph Curran as vice president of the CIO, who holds meetings in New York City, as I have told you, and needs 200 to 400 policemen to help him run the meeting, so that the rank and file of that union cannot express itself. I do not agree on things like that. I think a vice president of a national organization, like I say, ought to be a person who conducts himself in a proper fashion, someone that the workers will respect, someone with dignity, someone with integrity. I don't think that Curran has any of those things at the moment.

Q. Mr. Bridges, why haven't you and your union withdrawn from the CIO?

A. Give us time, Mr. Donohue. I mean, that we invested seven or eight hundred thousand dollars into building the CIO, and maybe if the CIO comes along and makes us a proposition that I can pass on to our membership, they will give us back the money that we put into the organization right from the start, less of course anything that they feel ought to be deducted for what assistance or what help they might have given us over the years, that might be an entirely different proposition.

Q. Isn't it a fact, Mr. Bridges, or is it a fact, that you [5876] stayed in the CIO for the same reason that you went into the CIO, and that is because the national policy of the Communist Party has told you to do so?

A. No. No, not at all. The policies of the union I represent are made by that union and no one else—the Communist Party and no other party; and the policies of the union I represent are not made by the national CIO. That is what causes the trouble. If I was willing to agree and if the members would accept the idea that the national officers of the CIO make the policy for them, there would be no trouble. That is what the battle is about. And I can't sell it to my membership. They tell me if I want to play that kind of a game, they will get themselves another president, but as long as I want to stick around and carry out the policies that they decide on, they figure that they may as well keep me around, too, as president for the time being.

Q. Do you know, Mr. Bridges, as a matter of fact that before the 1943 national CIO convention in Philadelphia that the top fraction of the Communist Party in the CIO in California were instructed by Mr. Schneidermann on this question of Phil Connolly's resignation?

A. Resignation from where? From the State Council?

Q. From the presidency of the State Council, to which he had been elected only 30 days before the convention.

A. No, nothing of the kind. I have told you how Connolly [5877] happened to resign. I have told you whose idea it was, I have told you the reasons for it. Schneidermann had nothing to do with it. The Communist Party had nothing to do with it—it was a trade union decision made by myself and recommended to the rest of the leaders of the national CIO as well as the State ~~CIO,~~ general agreement reached, final result Connolly resigned and was replaced by Thimmes.

Q. Connolly had just defeated a man named Pollard, had he not?

A. Walter Pollard, I think, at the Fresno convention.

Q. Wasn't Thimmes suggested and approved at this Communist Party fraction meeting because he belonged to Phil Murray's own union?

A. Well, the reasons that I thought Thimmes would be the best man was, at least in part, because he was a member of the Steel Workers; you know, he was an officer of the Steel Workers Union. And furthermore, I had other reasons. At least Thimmes was a steel worker. I think he is about the only national officer of the Steel Workers that ever saw a hunk of steel the hard way. So I had that in mind, too. Thimmes was a member of the Steel Workers Union, the Steel Workers and Tin Workers Union in Chicago. So I had that in mind, that he had some claim to know something about the steel industry. And I have already told you that quite a number of the steel workers' unions were not affiliated with the State Council. We thought that by getting Thimmes to be president that they would move [5878] in, and apparently some of them did, but most of them still stayed out. But another excuse for them not joining, many of the unions raised the question they wouldn't join the State Council because Connolly was president. When Connolly wasn't president, when their own man was president, they still stayed out.

These things happen, and they are just a part of the strain and the tear and so forth of a labor organization where expression is allowed and freedom of action is allowed. And those things just happen, but I know how they happen. And such things don't flow from any dictates or influences outside the labor movement; not as far as I know.

Q. Then to the best of your knowledge and belief, the Communist Party through Mr. Schneidermann or Mr. Roy Hudson had nothing to do with the substitution of Mr. Thimmes for Mr. Connolly?

A. Absolutely and positively, Mr. Donohue. Believe me, you are wrong on that. If you knew more about the internal workings of labor unions you would know how—it is really stupid, it is nonsensical.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. We will pass to another subject, Mr. Bridges. Do you remember the witness Mr. Michener?

A. Yes.

Q. How long have you known him?

A. I don't know; quite a long time. Probably maybe '37 or '38. [5879] It was after the auto workers were organized. They were organized around '36 or '37. I think it was probably sometime in '38 I first met Michener. Maybe I might be wrong there, but that is the best I can remember.

Q. Was he connected with or associated with the California CIO Council in any capacity?

A. I think he was at some time; I think he was a vice president and member of the Executive Board or something like that.

Q. Did you ever know him to be a member of the Communist Party? A. No.

Q. You heard him testify about a meeting that occurred in August of 1940 in a private home in the Sunset District of San Francisco? A. Yes.

Q. You heard him say that at that meeting the following persons were present: Mr. Walter Lambert, Mr. William Schneiderman, Mr. Lou Goldblatt, Mr. Phil Connolly, Mr. Paul Klein, Mr. Lewis Michener and Mr. Harry Bridges?

A. I heard that testimony. [5880]

Q. And you recall that he said that one of the subjects of discussion was the distribution of funds deposited to the credit of Labor's Non-Partisan League? A. That's right.

Q. Did you attend that meeting?

A. No, had nothing to do with the funds of Labor's Non-Partisan League, had little to do with the Labor's Non-Partisan League, for that matter. You heard Mr. Gaynor's testimony—he was an officer of the League. And you heard what he said about the funds. I never had anything to do with any funds at all.

Q. Yes. You recall Mr. Gaylor?

A. Gaynor.

Q. Gaynor. A. Yes.

Q. You remember him testifying that all the money was spent in 1938? Do you recall him saying that?

A. I don't remember. He might have said that. I can't remember his testimony in that much detail. I remember the testimony about the funds and who had the authority to divide them, and it didn't seem to me that the authority belonged to anybody meeting out in the Sunset District.

Q. May I call to your attention just for the purpose of refreshing your recollection, reading from page 4616 of the [5881] record, when Mr. Gaynor was on the stand, this question:

> "Q. Would there have been in late 1940, in the language of one of the witnesses who testified here, any funds in existence at all belonging to Labor's Non-Partisan League?

> "A. As far as I know, the only money we ever had was the $125,000 we got from John L. Lewis.
> "Q. Was that disbursed in the calendar year of 1938?
> "A. It was all spent in 1938, yes.
> "Q. What happened to Labor's Non-Partisan League thereafter?
>
> "A. To the best of my knowledge, the League went out of existence."

Do you recall Mr. Gaynor so testifying?

A. I think that that is what he said.

Q. Do you remember, Mr. Bridges, attending a meeting of the Labor's Non-Partisan League held on October 23, 1941, at 593 Market Street, San Francisco, a meeting called for the purpose of giving candidates for various public office an opportunity to speak; and that after their presentation of their platforms that a committee was formed to make recommendations as to the candidates who had spoken, the members of that committee being Mr. Henry Schmidt, Mr. E. E. Reite, Mr. Dick Linden, Mr. C. W. Shangle, Mr. Louis Goldblatt, Mr. Mervyn Rathborne and Mr. Harry Bridges? [5882]

A. No, I do not, Mr. Donohue. 593 Market Street—I am just trying to think where you would hold such a meeting. We used to have some offices there. We had a small conference room, and the way I remembered, the way you read it off, it would seem to me that that committee was present, plus various candidates for political office—well, all the available space we ever had at 593 Market Street, we would have been pretty crowded to have had to go through an operation like that. I don't recall such a meeting. There were quite a few meetings. I certainly don't recall one of that description. There's nothing wrong with it if there was such a meeting, but I just don't recall it.

Q. Oh, there is no suggestion that there was anything wrong with it, Mr. Bridges. I am simply trying to determine, if I can, through your recollection, that as late as 1941 there was a meeting of the Labor's Non-Partisan League in the city of San Francisco which you attended.

A. I don't recall such a meeting, Mr. Donohue. If Labor's Non-Partisan League was still going at that time, I was—I held no office in Labor's Non-Partisan League. I was a member. The way you join Labor's Non-Partisan League, you took out a card, you paid a dollar, a dollar a year. That is all. Outside of any contributions you might make at a rally. So I was never an officer of Labor's Non-Partisan League, and as far as I know, never participated in any committee, as far as I know.

Q. Since Mr. Gaynor has testified on January 30th, have you [5883] examined the accounts of the Anglo-California National Bank of California, Seaboard Branch at 101 Market Street, to determine whether or not as late as 1942 Labor's Non-Partisan League maintained an account in that bank and that there were funds on deposit? A. No.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. As of that day?

A. We haven't—I haven't. I never thought of it.

Q. Now, your recollection is not refreshed in any way as to whether or not, in fact, in August of 1940, you attended any meeting anywhere for the purpose of discussing the division of funds of Labor's Non-Partisan League as between the north and south of California?

A. That's right. I didn't. Not—you are referring to the meeting you described before the Sunset meeting?

Q. Yes.

A. No, I know of no such meeting, attended no such meeting, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Now, had you had any trouble, Mr. Bridges, with Norma Perry drinking in the light of your statement yesterday that you followed her into a saloon or saloons at lunch hour and saw her take a drink?

A. No, not that I recall, not that I recall. If I had, it would only have been the question of taking a little time out and going to have a drink while she was supposed to be working. [5884] We frown on that practice. I know what happened. People don't have to do those things. But I don't recall any particular trouble over that point.

Q. Did Mr. Bruce B. Jones ever make any complaint to you about Norma Perry?

A. I think he did. I think that Jones was one at that time that complained—I have a more or less faint recollection in my mind connecting Jones up with the happenings at that time in connection with Norma Perry. I don't recall him making any complaints about her drinking.

Q. Well, was it in fact B. B. Jones who told you that Norma Perry was unreliable?

A. I don't remember that. I don't think so. I recall, the main complaint being made by Schrimpf, and I related what I remember of that and how I remembered it.

Q. But you didn't fire Norma Perry on the complaint made by Mr. Schrimpf?

A. That's right. Schrimpf was a pretty ragged character himself, you know.

Q. I beg pardon?

A. He was a pretty ragged character himself. I just got through firing Schrimpf for, off the committee, you know, for not attending to business.

Q. Not because he disagreed with your Communist practices?

A. According to his testimony here, he was a Communist. [5885]

Q. Until when? A. I forget.

Mr. Hallinan: If I can supply the information, according to Schrimpf, '35; according to Ross, '37.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): When did you fire him?

A. Well, he was elected to the Labor Relations Committee right after the award of the Longshore Board at that time. The National Longshoremen's Board handed down an award October 12, 1934, according to the minutes that I looked over recently. That committee was elected around October 17th,

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges:)

Schrimpf attended three or four meetings, then he got on a drunk and I wouldn't sign his check. We had a rule in the local at that time, and still have—I wrote it in there myself as a part of the constitution, or at least I fought to have it put in the constitution—that each check required three signatures. I just refused to sign Schrimpf's check at the time. Instead of being on the job, he was out getting drunk. So of course he didn't like it, and as I say, I gave him a choice. I said, "Get off or otherwise I will take the matter to the membership and I will throw you off." So he resigned. And he went ahead, and I remember he made some explanation, that the reason he was getting off the committee, he didn't like to set up there across the table from a bunch of shipowners that had been such nasty people during the recent strike. That was the excuse he gave. But the real reason was, he was drinking. [5886]

Q. Is drunkenness a common failing among the people who testify against you, Mr. Bridges?

A. Well, let me check them off now and see. Starting with Schomaker, no, I never knew Schomaker to drink a great deal. Schrimpf, well, Schrimpf likes his tea, consumes quite a lot. Hancock and those other people, I don't remember Hancock, so I know nothing about him. Krolek I didn't know well enough to know whether he drinks a lot or not. Johnson, Crouch and Ross—well, I can't say. Crouch and Johnson I have never seen before in my life, and what I remember of Ross, that is, I don't remember how much he drank. He doesn't remember much of anything himself, so I can't do much about that. So Wilson is a pretty heavy drinker. George is a fairly heavy drinker. I am not saying that he doesn't get his work done—somehow or other those newspaper men seem to be able to do both, or many of them do, anyway. They can push a pencil and get away with their share. And all the witnesses that have come along so far, why, I would say the worst would be Schrimpf himself, and Wilson can handle his share. Now, I know you have got one staked out here that is a dilly, though. I mean Jim O'Neal is staked out over at the hotel, and you've got a couple of agents watching him to make sure he doesn't get within a mile of a bottle, because if Jim ever gets his hands on a pint, why, his testimony here will be mixed up with pink elephants and some of those other things. [5887]

Q. He wasn't too much of a drunkard when he served your purpose well, was he?

A. He was, Mr. Donohue. That was one of the things that was too bad about the man. I first ran into him by giving him $75 to take the cure. He was a man, he is a good craftsman. I tried to help him get straightened out. But he used to slip every once in a while, drank too much, see? And as you know, you know, you have got him staked out here. You have been hauling him around for quite a while, down in Los Angeles. So Jim O'Neil, he says, "Well, I'll only testify to what I have testified to before. I was found guilty of perjury for testifying to it before, served time, nobody will believe me—and besides, it is $10.00 a day." And he is—he is on the edge of Skid Road, and if your agents don't keep their eyes open, he will get his hands on a pint of whisky and his imagination will run riot, and he will have you in the Communist Party.

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me, Mr. Bridges. Just so long as there is no error in this matter, the testimony given by O'Neil was on behalf of the Government against you, isn't that correct? O'Neil was a witness for the Government in the Sears deportation.

The Witness: Against me, right.

Mr. Hallinan: Sure.

Mr. Donohue: And who——

Mr. Hallinan: So what you mean by "served his term," the thing is they got O'Neil drunk and worked an "oral" statement, [5888] out of him. Then they put him on the stand and tried to make him confirm or conform to that oral statement and when he wouldn't do it, they had him indicted for perjury and sent him to the federal penitentiary. So when you are talking about holds on people, that is what we mean. But to say that O'Neil was doing something for Mr. Bridges is to show that you completely misunderstand the thing.

Now, here is your trouble. You've got Schrimpf, Schomaker and O'Neil, paying them a large amount of money, working eight hours a day, with Kaiser and some of these other gentlemen who fall into somewhat the same category, I think, that Crouch falls into. And they are giving you all these questions and you are just being deceived and misled.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

You don't have the proper conception of the thing. You will be seeing pink elephants yourself in a few more days. But this statement about O'Neil doing something for Mr. Bridges just completely is reversing the picture.

Mr. Donohue: If Your Honor pleases, in the light of the fact that what Mr. Hallinan has just said is neither true nor proper, I ask Your Honor, because I can't engage in an impropriety myself by making answer, I ask Your Honor to strike his remarks from the record and instruct the jury to disregard it.

Mr. Hallinan: Suppose we do this, Your Honor. Suppose we wait until they produce the witnesses and then see how much of it is true. [5889]

Mr. Donohue: An impropriety, if Your Honor pleases——

Mr. Hallinan: Let's see how much of it is true.

Mr. Donohue: ——must be met when it occurs.

Mr. Hallinan: What part do you say is untrue, that the three of them have been working with the agents preparing the questions that you are asking?

Mr. Donohue: If I were capable, Mr. Hallinan, of engaging in the same kind of impropriety, I would answer that.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, we haven't gotten one admission out of this gentleman. He wouldn't even admit that Harry Bridges was at Stockton on June 27, 1936, so I suppose it is futile asking him to make any concessions. Well, still following that same rule, if it is bad for the defense, he will get it in, if he can; and if it is to their favor, he won't admit it. He will keep it out.

Mr. Donohue: I ask Your Honor again to strike from the record the untrue and improper remarks of Mr. Hallinan and to ask the jury to disregard them.

The Court: With respect to O'Neil, that matter has crept in on the cross-examination of Mr. Bridges. I do not have O'Neil's record before me. I do recall certain phases of the matters that are not altogether vivid in my recollection, but I say——

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor will remember that Schrimpf testified to O'Neil being convicted for that matter. [5890]

The Court: I think the record will be served by an instruction and admonition to the jury to disregard the remarks of Mr. Hallinan in this connection, and in particular, the constant and repeated assertions that Mr. Donohue, the prosecutor, is attempting to avoid or divert evidence from the jury.

The province of Mr. Donohue, as well as the province of Mr. Hallinan and Mr. MacInnis, is separate, and they are separate, from the province of the Court. The province of the Court is to rule upon matters of law. As I admonished you at the threshold of the case, as I admonish you now and as I will admonish you when I finally instruct you, when the full burden and impact of this case rests in your hands, I will then instruct you that as to the law and my findings thereon, that you are finally and conclusively bound. The reference to Mr. Donohue with respect to an attempt to block out evidence might be regarded, impliedly or inferentially, as some reflection on the Court—although I do believe that as a result of yesterday's proceedings, that Mr. Hallinan did not undertake to make a direct reflection upon the Court. At least in the late stages of the afternoon he so undertook to tell the jury. For the purpose of the records, yesterday afternoon, I will accept his statement. The statement, apparently made, was the result of discussions had with the newspaper men. What the Court may have believed at that time concerning the reference to Mr. Donohue is not a matter of immediate concern. As I said before, [5891] I accept Mr. Hallinan's statement made, that the reference was to Mr. Donohue and not to the Court. For, if the statement were not directed to Mr. Donohue, and to the Court, and in the light of my rulings which are made—and I stand upon the record—I would regard it as contemptuous and contemptible.

Now, Mr. Donohue's province is to present the evidence, Mr. Hallinan's province is to present the evidence, to the best of their ability. And they are entitled to exhaust themselves in that respect. My province is to rule thereon. And if there be any matter of blocking out evidence, I suppose, again inferentially, it would rest with this Court. I have tried to rule in the best possible way I know how, under the law and under the facts.

With respect to the Supreme Court decision to which reference has been made persistently during the trial of this case, I say to you that prior to the trial, after lengthy discussions and argument in court by able counsel, and after consideration of many, many hours, I concluded that the Supreme Court decision was not applicable as a matter of law or as a matter of fact. Now, that decision on my part is binding upon you. If I am wrong and if occasion arises hereafter, that will be the subject of a review. That is exclusively my province.

Now, I think that explains the matter. I admonish you to disregard the last assertion made by Mr. Hallinan, and we will now take the morning recess. The same admonition to you.

(Recess.) [5892]

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): For the purpose of fixing a date, Mr. Bridges, do you remember when it was that you first met Tommy Raye, or perhaps for the purpose of refreshing your recollection may I ask you to take a look at page 5765 of the proceedings in your second deportation and read a few lines (handing transcript to witness).

A. I see.

Q. Does that refresh your recollection as to when it was that you first met Tommy Raye?

A. No, but my memory in 1939 was much better than it is now, eleven years later, and I wouldn't quarrel with that. That says I met him later in 1937.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. In the month of June?

A. Does it say June, 1937?

Q. Let me read it to you:

> "Q. Now, can you say what fixes the date 1937 in your mind as meeting Roy Hudson, was it? A. No, Tommy Raye.
> "Q. Tommy Raye. What was it that occurred at that time that fixes the date so definitely in your mind?
>
> "A. A conference of longshoremen and seamen in New York in June, 1937, that Tommy Raye attended."

A. I have no recollection of the incident now, but I say that [5893] was much closer. That was only a couple of years after the incident, and I wouldn't quarrel with that record, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Do you recall what the conference of longshoremen and seamen in New York was at that time?

A. At the moment offhand I do not. I could do a little research in our records, and if there was such a conference I could probably find it. Here is what I mean: There were quite a few conferences maybe around that time.

Q. I understand that.

A. That was around June—what puzzles me is that the Maritime Federation convention was in June, 1937.

Q. Yes. When was that, Mr. Bridges? That was in Portland? A. Yes.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Do you recall when that was?

A. June, I think.

Q. 1937?

A. Yes. I am not sure. I would have to check the record. I think it was June, and now you say a conference in New York. Now, it might be, because we finally worked out a program in conjunction with the national CIO, and I went East shortly thereafter. There could have been a conference in New York in June or July.

Q. When you met Tommy Raye did you know at that time that he was in the top echelon of the Communist Party? [5894]

A. I can't recall that. I have no recollection of that, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Did you ever learn or know that that was a fact?

A. Maybe I did. I can't remember that particular point. I know who Tommy Raye is, incidentally. I have seen him in recent years. I didn't pay enough attention to it to worry about it one way or the other.

Q. Do you recall that it was in 1937, that the national CIO Maritime Committee was formed?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you recall that you attended a meeting of that committee in Washington, in July of 1937?

A. It could be. I don't recall, but it could be. I attended quite a few meetings. If there was a meeting in July of 1937, I might have attended and probably did.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Can you relate the three incidents now, Mr. Bridges, as to time: Your recollection in 1939, that you met Tommy Raye in New York, in June, 1937; your recollection that you attended a meeting of the national CIO Maritime Commission in Washington, in July of 1937; and your attendance at the Maritime Federation of the Pacific convention in Portland, which you think was in June, 1937?

A. I remember the Maritime Federation of the Pacific convention in Portland. I don't remember the other items. I don't remember them at this time, but I wouldn't say they couldn't [5895] have happened. As far as meeting Tommy Raye, I was going by what that record says. I have no recollection of when I first met Tommy Raye. I have seen him very infrequently. There is a record there showing I testified I met him in June, 1937, and I was testifying in September, 1939, and I was testifying to something that happened only a couple of years before. So I assume I can go by that record on that point, and as far as any meeting of the Maritime Committee in New York or Washington in 1937, I have no specific recollection at the moment. I could search the records and probably come up with a better answer.

Q. Do you remember when it was you first met John L. Lewis? A. Yes.

Q. When was that? A. '36.

Q. In 1936?

A. I went back East in 1936, September. I think I met him in Washington or New York, one of the two. I discussed with him the possibility of a West Coast maritime strike and he took the matter up with the President at the time to try to get the situation straightened out.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Could you tell us whether or not you went to New York at the time in June of '37, when you met Tommy Raye before or after the Maritime Federation of the Pacific convention in Portland? [5896]

A. I don't think I was in New York until after the Maritime Federation convention, not any time in 1937. That is, the first part of 1937 I don't think I was in New York. I think I went to New York for the first time in 1937, after the Maritime Federation convention, which would be at the earliest in June or later.

Q. If you attended the national Maritime Committee of the CIO meeting in July in Washington of 1937, do you recall now whether you remained East or came back and returned to the meeting in Washington?

Mr. Hallinan: Well, he has not said he attended a meeting in Washington, if the Court please. That is an argumentative question, assuming things not in evidence.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): What is your present recollection, Mr. Bridges, as to whether or not you did attend?

A. I don't recall such a meeting, Mr. Donohue, but at the same time I have attended quite a few meetings. I wouldn't want to deny it at the moment. The best thing for me to do maybe would be to look up the record. I have a calendar, as I say. I can tell you where I was in June of 1937, practically every day.

Q. Would you do that for me, Mr. Bridges?

A. Sure will. Any particular date?

Q. What I would like to know is, No. 1, when it was in June of 1937, as you stated, that you saw Tommy Raye, whether it was [5897] before or after the national Maritime—or the Maritime Federation of the Pacific convention in Portland; if you did attend the meeting in July of 1937, in Washington, at the formation of the national Maritime Committee of the CIO, and if so, whether you returned from New York to California and then returned in July to Washington, or whether you stayed East.

A. I will see what I can do on that. I have a record of my movements.

Mr. Hallinan: Can you give us any closer dates in June that you want?

Mr. Donohue: I do not know, except that Mr. Bridges said, that he met Mr. Tommy Raye——

Mr. Hallinan: He probably would not have a record of when he met a particular person. You would have to do it by some meeting or some convention. The thing is we do not want to spend several hours now rambling through a lot of records to find something of no consequence. If you will tell us what you want to get, we will get to work on it. But to ramble through our records to find out when he met Tommy Raye or whoever else it may be, we do not want to spend time on that.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Do you understand what I want you to find out for me, Mr. Bridges?

A. If I attended a meeting of the CIO Maritime Committee——

Q. In July, 1937, in Washington. [5898]

A. Yes, and whether I came back to California after attending that meeting or did I go to New York.

Q. No, whether or not prior to that meeting you were in New York, as you stated in the record, in June of 1937, and met Mr. Tommy Raye, having in mind that at some time about that time the Maritime Federation of the Pacific convention occurred in Portland, and I understand you were present at that convention.

A. Right—well, it might be. I might have some records that would indicate I met Tommy Raye at that time. Possibly all I could find out is if I was in New York at the times you mentioned and in Washington and what was I doing there.

Q. No, whether you were in Washington.

A. Yes.

Q. In July, 1937.

A. Yes, I can find that, I am pretty sure.

Q. And in New York in June, 1937.

A. Yes. I think our records will reveal that. They might not reveal as to whether I met Tommy Raye.

Q. Thank you, Mr. Bridges. When was the 1936 strike?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. October—it commenced October 28, 1936, and finished on February 4, 1937.

Q. October 26, 1936? A. October 28, 1936.

Q. To when, sir? [5899]

A. February 4, 1937.

Q. Did you receive any help from the Communist Party in the second strike, Mr. Bridges?

A. By golly, I can't recall whether we did or not. Certainly what help we received on the second strike doesn't stand out in my mind as much as the help we received from them on the 1934 strike. The second strike was a pretty peaceful affair, an entirely different type of strike, and was mainly a seamen's strike more than it was a longshoremen's strike. We were kind of going along for the ride, a supporting position.

Q. Do you recall a meeting in Seattle, in 1935, for the purpose of promoting a convention of the Pacific Coast Maritime unions? A. In 1935?

Q. Yes.

A. Sure, the convention held in March, 1935, following a conference held in San Francisco in February, 1935.

Q. Did that idea originate in what was known as the Waterfront Bureau of the Communist Party here in San Francisco?

A. You mean the idea of the convention?

Q. Yes.

A. To find the Maritime Federation of the Pacific?

Q. To call the meeting in Seattle out of which the Maritime Federation of the Pacific was in fact formed.

A. No, Mr. Donohue, no. Let me tell you again, the idea of [5900] a waterfront or city front federation is an old thing. There was a city front federation around here many, many years ago, 1901, and later in 1916, and that idea did not originate there. We passed a resolution in our convention in February, 1934, supporting the idea of a maritime federation. That was passed unanimously by all the delegates, and then as I know myself, during the 1934 strike the Northwest Joint Strike Committee—that was the committee that handled the strike strategy for the entire Northwest—they set aside money, and I have already told you that early in 1933 there had been established on the Pacific Coast here the Council of Marine Crafts, and that was a going organization before the San Francisco longshore local was chartered. So you had the makings right then and there of the Maritime Federation a long time before any convention of March, 1935, and as far as I know, possibly a long time before the establishment of any bureau of the Communist Party or any other party; that had no connection with the whole thing whatsoever.

Q. Mr. Bridges, did you, together with Dave Saunders of the Sailors Union of the Pacific, Redels Cayton of the Marine Cooks and Stewards Union, and Mervyn Rathborne of the ARTA, constitute the District Bureau of the waterfront section of the Communist Party in California, in 1935?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Rathborne and I and who? Saunders?

Q. Dave Saunders and Redels Cayton. [5901]

A. What do you call the district bureau, Mr. Donohue? What do you mean by that?

Q. A top fraction of the waterfront section of the Communist Party. A. No, no.

Q. After the 1934 strike and before the 1936 strike, did you ever attend a meeting the attendance at which was restricted to persons who were members of the Communist Party, at which Mervyn Rathborne was present? A. No.

Q. Mr. Bridges, there came a time when after the Seattle meeting of 1935, the Maritime Federation of the Pacific came into being; correct?

A. Right.

Q. And here in San Francisco was District Council No. 2? A. That is right.

Q. Who was the first president?

A. The first president?

Q. Yourself?

A. I think I was. I am not sure, but I think I was.

Q. And who was the first secretary-treasurer?

A. Rathborne, I think. I am not sure, but the records will reveal that.

Q. Is it or is it not a fact that you as president and Rathborne as secretary were picked by the waterfront section [5902] of the Communist Party?

A. No, of course not. I was the logical person to be president, I would say. I was the president of the longshore union here in San Francisco. The longshore union in San Francisco is more or less the anchor union. That is the backbone union of the maritime unions. All the rest of them put together do not amount to much without being tied in with the longshoremen or supported by the longshoremen. So I was the logical choice, being president of the longshore union, to be president of the council. [5903]

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Was Rathborne as equally a logical choice for the first secretary-treasurer?

A. At one time the secretaries of all the Councils—we had four Councils, Portland, Seattle, Los Angeles and San Francisco. I think at one time the secretaries of those Councils were all radio operators, possibly because they were handy with the pen and pencil or typewriter. Most all radio operators can type. So they were selected, I guess, because maybe they could write and talk better language than the rest of us; keep books, such as they are, write minutes, and things like that.

Q. Then he was just as equally a logical selection for secretary-treasurer?

A. Oh, yes, for the reason I state. It wasn't because—it wasn't the economic power that he possessed in his union so much as maybe other abilities that I have referred to.

Q. He never was rich? A. What?

Q. You mean he never was rich, is that what you mean?

A. He is working hard at it now. He is going to be a big real estate operator, he thinks, if he gets that breakwater in down at Half Moon Bay.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Mr. Bridges, when the 1936 strike occurred was there appointed here locally or named in some method here a joint strike committee?

A. Yes. [5904]

Q. Who comprised the joint strike committee?

A. The representatives of all unions that were affiliated with the Maritime Federation; I think they were around 11 or 12 in number, and each union elected certain representatives that represented that union on a coastwise basis, and they were here in San Francisco, and those representatives put together comprised the Joint Maritime Strike Committee.

Q. Was there a joint strike committee locally here in San Francisco?

A. I think so. That is generally the way things went; you would have a coastwise joint strike committee; you would have an area or local joint strike committee.

Q. And is it a fact that the officers of San Francisco District Council No. 2 of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific were designated as the joint strike committee for the 1936 strike here in San Francisco?

A. You mean the local joint strike committee?

Q. Yes.

A. I don't know; I could check on it. It would be the logical thing to do, the officers of the District Council would be the local strike committee—local joint strike committee. You just change the thing around; they would operate in both capacities; they would operate as district council and they would operate as the joint strike committee.

Q. Do you recall that in consequence thereof you became president [5905] of the joint strike committee and Rathborne was secretary?

A. Locally here?

Q. Yes. A. That would be the case, yes.

Q. Was that decision made by the Waterfront Section of the Communist Party?

A. Of course not. You are wrong on those things, Mr. Donohue. You run away with the idea that the Communist Party can wield a lot of power in these unions. Take it from me, it isn't so. It isn't so.

Q. Mr. Bridges, did you know Walter Lambert during the period of the 1936 strike?

A. I think so. I have known Walter Lambert for some time. I think I have known Walter Lambert since '33 or '34.

Q. At any time during the period of the '36 strike, were you advised by Mr. Lambert that you were under surveillance and to be careful of what meetings you attended and to attend only meetings to which he personally invited you to go?

A. No, not that I recall. I wouldn't have to be told by Walter Lambert that I was under surveillance; I knew that.

Q. Did you and Mr. Rathborne ever discuss the same instructions from Mr. Lambert?

A. No, no.

Q. Isn't it a fact that in consequence of that instruction that you and Mr. Rathborne sometimes went in a single automobile to [5906] certain meetings designated by Walter Lambert?

A. No, Mr. Donohue. Believe me, you are getting too mysterious there. The thing that has always protected me was that I have operated out in the open. I knew that. If I had been operating the way you talk about, Mr. Donohue, instead of having these characters that you have hauled up here as witnesses, you would have had secret agents of the Immigration Service or the FBI up here giving testimony, plants in the ranks. The fact that you can't produce any speaks for itself. No, I haven't operated that way. My position is clear; it is known to everyone. I don't have to sneak around to go to meetings. My office is open. If I want to go to a meeting in my office or outside my office, I play safe by making sure that some people know about it so that it cannot be said, you see, that I am attending any kind of a Q.T. meeting or anything like that. It is true on more than one occasion it might be necessary under the circumstances not to broadcast what I am doing to the whole wide world or to the press, but I learned over a period of years the best way to play safe is if at any time I am going to a meeting to make sure that other persons in the union know about it—my secretary and others know about it, so that no one can say that I was poking around without a lot of people knowing exactly what I was doing, where I was going and why. And in that way I am safe. And that is why, for some of these so-called meetings you are talking about, if you produced the date [5907] and the time, I will probably be able to prove that I was somewhere else, like the Stockton meeting. That is the way we do it.

Q. Mr. Bridges, is it or is it not a fact that on innumerable occasions during the 1936 strike you and Mervyn Rathborne and Walter Lambert met at the place designated by Walter Lambert at which you discussed two things: Strike strategy and Communist Party instructions with respect to the strike?

A. No; I didn't have to discuss strike strategy with other people. I have discussed strike strategy with Rathborne many, many times and I have—I know Lambert: He is a member of a union, as far as I know, around here, and possibly I would regard him as a good trade unionist possibly that might know quite a bit about strike strategy. But in so far as strike strategy on the waterfront, Mr. Donohue, we think we are just about as good as you can find; we don't need any advice from other people. Help was one thing; you understand, during the strike, help was one thing. That is a different thing to advice. But advice as to strategy, we don't need it; we get along very, very fine as it is without any help from Walter Lambert, or other people.

Then there is another part of this point that you have got to remember. You know, you give the impression that there is loads of Communists operating in these unions. I would have a hard time to name twenty Communists, I believe, that I know in [5908] a union. And the way it really works is the Communists in trade unions, they speak their piece as union people; if they are going to get any steps at times against individual Communists in the support, they get it as union people, not as Communists. And I have been very critical and taken steps at times against individual Communists in the ranks, again not as Communists, but because I thought that the policies they were advocating were bad union policy. I even have gone so far upon occasion as to go directly to the heads or officers of the Communist Party and say, "Look, how about this? Are you people responsible for these individuals doing these things?" Generally, I will have to admit they say, "Listen; we have got no responsibility for that type of policy; it doesn't represent any policies we stand for and those people are wrong." I have taken steps like that. So what you talk about, this question of Communists in the ranks of the union, that is something that is being fed to you, it has got no relation to the facts, just like the infiltration angle. A lot of people get them mixed up. I have seen Communists operate in a union in such a way that I thought was bad for a trade union, and I had no hesitation in saying, "That is no good," but I did not regard that as infiltration. That wasn't my understanding. All I seen was some people there that were doing wrong things. Whether they were doing it as a result of orders or instructions from their political party, I mightn't know it; I didn't care. The fact that they were doing certain things was enough for me, and I [5909] did my best to stop it by going to the individual or by going to what might have been their superiors.

I can give you a concrete example. I will show you what I mean. In around November or December, 1947, the Waterfront Division of the ILWU held a caucus in the city of Seattle, a coastwise conference — we hold them periodically. In the course of doing business with the conference, we were looking ahead, knowing our contract was going to expire in June of 1948. We expected trouble with our employers—that is, our waterfront employers at that time, and our fears were borne out in that direction. So we were discussing in November or December of 1947, how best to draw the union together to eliminate any dissension or difference of opinion, and so forth. The president of my local union who is, believe me, not a Communist, I don't think, his name is Kearney, he got up as the president of the San Francisco longshore local and he said, "Now, look here, Bridges, I wish you would, in the interests of unity—I agree with what you have just said, and I would like to add a little—" —I should explain what I just said was this: "Look, we have got a big battle on our hands ahead. Let's cut out all this arguing and fighting and criticizing people for their religion" —I didn't say "religion"; I said, "their political beliefs," and after we get over the hump and get our contracts signed I am working out, we will set aside a special time where everybody can go after everybody else and then we will [5916] have a free-for-all for a whole month; we can afford the luxury, if the people want to talk about the Communists and scream about them, fine and dandy, and vice versa and so on.

Kearney got up and said, "I agree with that proposition; I am all for it. I would like to add one thing. I have noticed that the fellows in the union listen to you, Harry. I wish you would do something about members of the union, who, I claim, some of them are Communists, saying that if I am elected to the presidency of the union, certain things will happen." [5911]

Kearney is an official of an organization called the A.C.T.U., the Association of Catholic Trade Unionists. "I see there's people running around, and I think some of them are Communists, saying that if I am elected to the presidency of the union, the Pope will run the union. They are also saying that I am anti-Negro." So he said, "Now, maybe you can take steps to clear that situation up." And I agreed with him. I says, "I will get busy on it right away." I came back to San Francisco and I started, first thing I did, I put a phone call through to the headquarters of the Communist Party. I said, "Look, if there's any individual members of yours or any members of yours doing things like that, I just want you to know you had better cut it out because there will be trouble. And when I say there will be trouble, I mean I am talking as far as I am concerned, I will make the trouble." They disclaimed any such program and knowledge. They said, "If you can catch any people parading as Communists that are saying things like that, we wish you would bring it to our attention. They will be expelled from our party forthwith." That was their position.

Then the very first chance I had down at the union meeting here, I took the matter up in the union meeting and spoke on the platform, and I pointed out that people that were saying things like that were just as much union wreckers and union busters as the people that came around and criticized Communists because they were Communists, even if they didn't agree with [5912] them.

Now, there's an example of what I mean. So we have to always watch—at least that's the way I look at it. I watch what the individual in the union is doing. And, notwithstanding who that individual was, what political beliefs he has or political party he follows. We judge him by his activities and his program within the union movement. There's no question about it. Now, that is the way things work in the union movement, Mr. Donohue. And again, believe me, one way you could find out, you could come down to one of our union meetings. You will be treated courteously, you will get all due respect. Don't worry about it, there will—it will all be off the record, you can get up and talk to the fellows there, you can give them your views on how bad Communism or anything else is. The overwhelming majority of them are all anti-Communists. They are all anti-Communists. But they are anti-Nazi, too, and I think you fall into a common error that a lot of people make. You know, there's all kinds of people. I have met all kinds of people, they are anti-Nazi and they are anti-Communist. I have met all kinds of people that are anti-Nazi and anti-Fascists and are just non-Communist. I have met all kinds of people who are anti-Fascist and anti-Nazi and pro-Communist. I have met all kinds of people who are anti-Fascist and anti-Nazi and pro-American. But there's one thing I have never met, one thing—it is a very simple test: I have yet to meet in all—and I get [5913] around quite a bit, Mr. Donohue—I have yet to meet one single person who was pro-Nazi and pro-Communist. I have never met anybody like that.

Now, what happens is that people have a habit of putting these two things together; that is, like the loyalty oaths that we run up against these days, people breaking their necks to have loyalty oaths written, where anybody who is a member of a Nazi or Communist organization or Fascist organization, by lumping all these things together, there's a slur or an attack directed upon that particular group. And I have found in my work in trade unions, I have got to learn to separate. I can't approach a person on the basis that he is a pro-Nazi or a pro-Fascist or a pro-Communist because I can tell you, I have never yet met a single person. I would like to meet one. Never yet met a single person. I meet a lot of people the way that I have told you, and we operate in the trade unions as individuals, and any time I find any person in the trade union movement, whether they be Communist or anything else, if they are not following the program of the union, if their allegiance is not first to the union, as far as I am concerned, they are in trouble and they all know that, and we play no favorites. I have attacked the members of the Communist Party in my own union—maybe not as much as I have attacked other people. They generally handle things pretty well as trade unionists, and that is all we ask of them. And if they do a good job as members [5914] of the union, follow the rules, we don't care what they are and what they think. Now, that is how simple it is, and you are off the track on these things. And if you attend one of our union meetings, Mr. Donohue, believe me, you would be able to frame your questions to me and be able to give me a much tougher time on some of those questions. And I can guarantee you, you will get all the proper respect and courtesy from the fellows, and they will be glad to see you and if you have time, to answer a few questions. Off the record—it won't hurt the case here, it would be completely off the record. And believe me, you'd learn a lot about how those unions run, and how absolutely impossible it is, impossible, for anybody outside, like the Communist Party, to do anything to the membership of the ILWU or to run them or dictate to them, give them instructions or anything like that. Absolutely impossible.

Mr. Donohue: May we take the noon recess, Your Honor?

The Court: We will take the noon recess and resume at 2:00 o'clock, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you, not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to 2:00 o'clock p.m.) [5015]

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES

resumed.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Mr. Bridges, do you remember yesterday reading to the jury a statement of yours in the People's World in which you were praising that publication?

A. I remember the statement, yes.

Q. And do you remember testifying that you were at this time a subscriber to the People's World.

A. Amongst other publications, that's right. Quite a few other publications I subscribe to.

Q. May I ask you, Mr. Bridges, to look at an article termed "Portrait of a Stool Pigeon" in today's issue of the People's World.

Mr. Hallinan: Let me see it first.

Mr. Donohue: I thought you had possibly seen it.

Mr. Hallinan: No, you haven't given us the courtesy of handing it to us yet. (Examining document).

This seems a little bit long. I will look at it afterwards.

(Document handed to witness by clerk.)

A. You want me to look at the picture or the article?

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Both, if you will, Mr. Bridges.

A. Well, I glanced through it. I haven't—what—— [5916]

Q. Did you discuss the subject matter of that article with anyone, Mr. Bridges, before its publication?

A. The first time I have seen it, the first time I knew anything about it. I know nothing about it, Mr. Donohue. This is the first time I have seen it. I might subscribe to a paper, but it doesn't necessarily mean that I endorse its views or approve of all the material in it. My statement with respect to the People's World was what I said yesterday, that as compared to some other commercial papers that are largely, I would say, owned and controlled by anti-labor interests, I would say that there is a better chance of labor unions getting their points of view put forth or set forth in this paper than those papers. I think that is about the extent of my remarks.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Will you look at it enough, Mr. Bridges, to gain an idea as to the nature and purpose of that article?

A. Well, it would seem to me that the article in effect makes this point: That at one time——

Mr. Hallinan: Well, now, just a moment. I think he shouldn't be examined about some document that isn't his composition or asked to read part of it or any of it in the record.

The Court: You have another question to address to the witness?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, when he has read enough of it to [5917] familiarize himself with its general purpose.

The Witness: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Do you subscribe, Mr. Bridges, to the principle of attempting to deny a jury the right to determine the credibility to which a witness who may testify in this court is entitled?

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me just a moment. Your Honor will remember that you made an order which I have no doubt the jury has subscribed to, that they are not to read the newspapers. Now, if this document, I think the gentlemen said came out today—is that when you said it came out?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, today.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, I don't assume that the jury has either read it or is going to read it, and if it bears upon the credibility of one of Mr. Donohue's witnesses, it is not likely that the jury is going to be swayed by it. So I submit that the questions are improper at any rate.

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Hallinan has wholly and completely misunderstood the purport of the question. It is not my thought for a moment that the jury would read any publication, not to say the People's World, because I know that the jury will conform to the suggestion of your Honor. I have asked this witness only the question as to whether or not he felt the publication of such an article, in the light of his endorsement of this newspaper, is in keeping with the American tradition [5918] that the credibility of a witness is to be determined by a jury and not by the People's World.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, I think, your Honor, that counsel wants to unduly interfere with the freedom of the press now, that Mr. Bridges has no control over the People's World or any other paper, and if he had, I suppose he wouldn't try to curtail the paper's activities in printing whatever it wants to say. Now, if the People's World considers that some of Mr. Donohue's friends or witnesses, or whatever they may be, are unworthy of credence, I think they have a right to say so, and I don't think that is taking away from the jury the jury's right to pass upon that issue. The papers may be right or they may be wrong, but we have no control over them, and I don't think Mr. Bridges can be reprimanded if the People's World publishes an article that reflects upon certain people that Mr. Donohue brings in here.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Donohue: I am not interested, if your Honor pleases——

Mr. Hallinan: I think there has been a great deal of reflection in the public press upon many such witnesses in one way or another. I don't think that it is any part of this trial.

Mr. Donohue: I am not concerned, if your Honor pleases, No. 1, with the People's World or what it may say, nor am I concerned, No. 2, with a witness who has appeared and who has given his testimony on the stand. I am only concerned at [5919] the moment with whether or not this witness, who has testified under oath that he endorses this newspaper, endorses also an article in this newspaper referring to a person who has never been called as a witness in this proceeding.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, if the Court please, we have a further objection to that, that one of the ways that Mr. Donohue has been trying this case since its very inception is to issue press releases, and when a couple of young ladies went down and interviewed one of his prospective witnesses, he caused them to be indicted by the Grand Jury on the uncorroborated testimony of that witness as against what the two young ladies had to say—affording them no opportunity to appear before the Grand Jury to testify themselves at all. He is the very last one that should talk about assassinating witnesses in advance or impeaching in advance. Now, the whole inquiry is improper. He has no right to do it. He has set a notable example himself. We have been hearing all kinds of things about "Sunday punches" and "surprise witnesses" and "we would go crazy if we knew who they were," witnesses that were going to be called in, all that sort of whipped-up hysteria. And certainly Mr. Bridges isn't responsible for the publication of the People's World.

Mr. Donohue: I may say, if your Honor pleases, on one further basis, that yesterday Mr. Bridges also said that he was the international president of an international federation [5920] of maritime employees, an arm of the World Federation of Trade Unionists, which at a convention in Marseilles, France, at which two American delegates were present, adopted a resolution prior to the date of this trial characterizing any person who testified against Mr. Bridges, as a stool pigeon.

The Court: Well, in that instance, Mr. Donohue, there was some exercise, at least to the extent that Mr. Bridges assertedly had some control over the preparation of the resolution, or at least——

Mr. Hallinan: We made no objection to it.

The Court: Or at least suggested control over it, and for that reason it had some legal or logical relevancy to the cause at bar. But I cannot see, under Mr. Bridge's own testimony, wherein he stated that he has nothing to do with the policy or nothing to do with the writing of the article, how or in what manner he would be bound by any matter therein contained.

Mr. Donohue: I shall not pursue it any further, if your Honor pleases.

Mr. Hallinan: I will tell you, if we read the article we might agree to stipulate to have it put in evidence and read to the jury. But we should be afforded an opportunity to do so.

The Court: I will sustain the objection.

Mr. Hallinan: Let us have the paper and read it over, [5921] and after we read it over, if we so desire, we may stipulate that you may put it in evidence.

Mr. Donohue: Fine. [5921-A]

Q. Mr. Bridges, you did write a column called "On the Beam" at least at one time you did, in The Dispatcher, which is a publication issued by your union?

A. Yes, I used to. The editor of the paper gave up trying to hound me to write it. I was too lazy. Just caused him too much trouble. He finally quit in disgust in forcing me to meet the deadline. Besides, I am no writer.

Q. In the light of all the things you have said about your own union, Mr. Bridges, have you ever said that a country that has a totalitarian government operates like your union?

A. I don't know. I can't recall—I remember one article that I wrote at one time where I pointed out that you had to be careful the way you juggle this word "totalitarian" around. I mentioned it here in my testimony. You have to first of all find out what it meant. Otherwise we would find what people are saying about other countries would apply to our union, and I didn't want to see that happen. That is the only time I recall making any mention about the word in connection with our union.

Mr. Donohue: After handing to your counsel for examination, a copy of The Dispatcher dated April 18, 1947, I will ask you to look at it. (A paper was handed to Mr. Hallinan.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Would you note the two places marked? First, you may read the whole article if you wish.

Mr. Hallinan: First, note, too, the article is not written [5922] or purported to be written by Mr. Bridges. There is a note at the top that says he has not written it.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Bridges, as you perhaps have noted, this column, which otherwise is written by you, purports to be by the editor of The Dispatcher, a condensed version of the speech made by you before the Seventh Biennial Convention of the ILWU in support of a resolution which denounced red-baiting and government witch-hunting. Were you correctly quoted, Mr Bridges?

Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute. I object to this method of cross-examination. If there is a speech that Mr. Bridges made, the speech would be admissible in its original form, but I do not thing anybody has a right to make what he calls a condensation, publish it and make that binding upon Mr. Bridges. Now, they undoubtedly have all the speeches made in these various conventions and they can bring in the original one and we will stipulate that it go in evidence.

The Court: If Mr. Bridges recalls the subject matter as a direct quote here, something he may have said on that occasion, he may say so. If he does not, he may deny it.

The Witness: I don't know, Your Honor, but we have the record. I notice the note at the top where it says, "inasmuch as Bridges hasn't got time to write his column this week, I will write it for him, and therefore I offer a condensation of a speech that he made at a convention." Now, we have a complete [5923] transcript of everything said there and that would be better than my memory of it. I will find it and bring it in.

Q. Will you provide us with a transcript of your speech at that convention?

A. Sure. I have those dates that you asked me about, Mr. Donohue. All during the month of June, I was in the city of San Francisco and on the Pacific Coast and in Portland. I have every date here and what I did. June 1st to the 4th in San Francisco, and where I was; 7th and 8th, and so on—I have it up to June 30th. I have every date here.

Q. What year?

A. 1947—1937; June, 1937. And then July 2nd, 3rd and 4th I was in the Maritime Federation convention in Portland, and I left—July 7th I was at the CIO Maritime Committee in Washington, D.C., Tower Building, 11:00 a.m., 21 people present, and the people are named. I have the minutes of the meeting. July 8th and 9th, meeting of CIO Maritime Convention which was formed, CIO offices, and who was present. July 10th, went to New York City; subcommittee, Rathborne and Bridges, delegates to meet Joseph P. Ryan. On Saturday, couldn't get a meeting. Finally got a meeting July 12th, late in the afternoon. I've got a report of that meeting. Left for San Francisco after the meeting that night. That is the night of July 12th, I left for San Francisco. July 14th, Wednesday, in San Francisco. July 18th in Seattle for a one-day meeting of the District executive [5924] board to discuss CIO affiliation. I have the minutes of that meeting. So that brings me from June 1st, 1937, up to July 18, 1947, in Seattle, and apparently I went to Washington direct from Portland, arriving in Washington July 7th. Apparently, according to the records I have checked, that is where I first met Tommy Raye.

Q. Where did you first meet Tommy Raye?

A. I first met Tommy Raye. Now, I notice in reading from the transcript of the Sears hearing—not the Landis hearing—I first said I met Tommy Raye in June, 1937. The question was not pressed at the time and I was not asked to search the records, but now, searching my records, I would say I first met him at this meeting, in Washington, D.C., in July, 1937, because I was not in Washington, D.C., all during the month of June, 1937. I was in Portland. I can account for my whereabouts every day during the month of June, 1937.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Hallinan: I have the documents here, if you want to use them. I will use them on redirect if you do not. We have minutes and telegrams substantiating what he said.

Mr. Donohue: I only wanted to know if he was in error when he testified heretofore that he first met Tommy Raye in New York, in June, 1937.

Q. And it is your testimony now from refreshing your recollection from the records that you first met Tommy Raye in Washington, D.C., in July?

A. I would [5925] say so, Mr. Donohue. I say again the question was not gone into in the hearing before Sears. I was asked the question, "Where did you first meet Tommy Raye?" and I said, "June of 1937." And apparently, according to my records, it was in July, 1937, at Washington, D.C., at this meeting. If I had checked up on it then I would have caught the error of one month at that time.

Q. You hadn't refreshed your recollection before the question was asked until the question arose here?

A. No, I didn't refresh my recollection here until you asked me the question.

Q. I say until now when the question was raised.

A. That is right.

Q. Mr. Bridges, going back to the question we were on just prior to the last answer this morning, you indicated that you may have talked with Walter Lambert during the 1936 strike because of his experience as a trade unionist. What experience did Walter Lambert have as a trade unionist other than the fact that he was the California Trade Union Director for the Communist Party?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. I don't think I testified to that, Mr. Donohue, and I notice now—I discussed it in the noon recess with my attorneys, those trick questions. Now, I haven't been watching out for concealed questions within a question. I have just been accepting your questions at face value, thinking you were asking me [5926] a question to get the answer to the obvious question. You know, you can stand there and say, "Do you think Mr. Donohue wearing a blue tie is no good?" and I will say, "No, I don't think Mr. Donohue is no good." And you will say, "No, I am wearing a green tie." I am not looking out for trick questions. I notice you are putting questions together to quote me or misquote me, and I didn't give any such testimony. I didn't testify I had consulted with Walter Lambert during the 1936 strike, because he had experience as a Communist trade unionist, because I have no such recollection. I think I said I recall Walter Lambert as having been a trade unionist. I remember distinctly the first time I ever saw Lambert, he marched into the San Francisco Labor Council—I think it was in 1933—and his head was all bandaged up. I think he was a member of the Cigar Makers Union. He had been beaten up on the picket line. We had an anti-picketing ordinance at that time. He was in trouble, and I can remember he was up there seeking the support from the A. F. of L. Council, and I think the Council voted support. He was up there with a delegation.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me, Mr. Bridges. I want to interrupt at this moment, if the Court please. I think there should be a correction in the record based upon what Mr. Bridges has just said. He was asked by counsel this morning, "Mr. Bridges, do you recall George Wilson testifying that Mr. J. R. Robertson belonged to the same Communist Party group as he did?" [5927]

"A. Yes."

Whereas the only testimony of Mr. Wilson in that behalf, occurring on page 4409 (21), was:

> "The Court: You might answer that, Mr. Wilson, as to a particular unit, if any, to which Mr. Robertson was attached, if he was attached to a particular unit.
> "A. (By Mr. Wilson): Well, it was my understanding he was attached to the same unit I was. It was my understanding."

And another matter that we suggested to counsel yesterday, on the Norma Perry matter, counsel showed Mr. Bridges a copy of a paper called The Western Worker, that showed Norma Perry was expelled from the Communist Party in 1935, and asked if it wasn't a fact that the meeting that he had concerning her spying upon him in union matters occurred around that time, and I called to Mr. Donohue's attention the fact that Schrimpf had testified that that happened in December of 1934, or January of 1935, almost a year before that date. Mr. Donohue then said that there was a second meeting at a later date.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Now, I find in Schomaker's testimony on page 1165-69:

> "A. We will get to that later. It must have been three or four months later, I would estimate, Bridges brought charges against Norma."

So I think Mr. Bridges is justified in saying counsel, I know inadvertently—I know inadvertently—has been asking that [5928] type of question that, if they were purposely asked, could be considered trick questions.

Oh, another thing. He told Mr. Bridges today that Mr. Michener had said Klein attended a meeting in the Sunset District and Michener said no such thing. He said Klein came up there and then they separated and then he named the persons at the Sunset meeting, and Klein was not there. I warned Mr. Bridges today at noontime that he will have to watch the questions. He is taking, as he says, the questions being asked in good faith.

The Court: Mr. Bridges denies the meeting in its entirety, apart from the individual members.

Mr. Hallinan: But still it puts into the record a statement that is not justified by the record because, you may remember, Michener said Klein separated and went away from him because then he had some confusion afterwards as to how Klein happened to be sleeping in the same room under a different name.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, there are two observations I think I should make: Number one, I think I should know whether or not this latest statement by Mr. Hallinan is an objection to a specific question which is now before this witness——

Mr. Hallinan: Not a specific question, but the general principle of asking questions of that kind.

Mr. Donohue: And number two, I would like to ask Mr. [5929] Hallinan if he is not the same Mr. Hallinan who in this court on a prior occasion has said he thought the asking of a trick question was wholly justified.

Mr. Hallinan: Oh, yes, yes, you can ask trick questions. I don't mind your asking trick questions. I only advised Mr. Bridges not to be too innocent, you, see, that he watch you like a hawk. [5930]

The Witness: You asked me, I think, if I recalled meeting with Walter Lambert, the trade union director of the Communist Party, in New York, in order to get advice on the 1936 strike.

(Question read.)

A. As far as I know, as far as I can recall, Mr. Donohue, I recall Lambert on the first instance as a member of the Cigarmakers' Union. After that, later on, I think he was a delegate to the San Francisco Labor Council, and I know later on he was some—he had some—he did hold some official position in the Communist Party; whether it was trade union director or not, I don't know. It could well have been. I don't recall at any time meeting with Lambert to discuss the strategy of the 1936 strike. As a matter of fact, I am positive I didn't. Never mind the "don't recall" stuff; I am positive I didn't.

Q. Mr. Bridges, when you went to New York on any occasion after the 1936 strike was over, or—May I withdraw that question a minute?

May I ask you one further question with respect to this 1936 strike? Did you ever meet with Mervyn Rathborne and Walter Lambert during the period of the 1936 strike in an apartment on North Point Street, just opposite the chocolate works?

A. No, not that I can recall.

Q. Could you be mistaken, or are you certain of that, Mr. [5931] Bridges?

A. I am pretty certain. I mean, anybody can be mistaken. I am pretty certain. Here is why I—when I say I am pretty certain, here's why I say that, Mr. Donohue. An apartment on North Point Street, across from the chocolate works, did you say?

Q. Yes.

A. I don't know what I would be doing there. I get around quite a bit, but no connection with any chocolate works or North Point Street or apartments on North Point Street. I might get around to an apartment or two on occasion—I might at that time, but I can't recall any connection with Rathborne or Lambert or anybody like that, or on North Point Street either.

Q. Now, after the 1936 strike Rathborne went to New York, did he not?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. I don't know. Do you mean when he went back East to——

Q. Yes.

A. ——to become head of the Radio Operators Union?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. I think it was around that time.

Q. Did you ever see him in New York?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. On few or many occasions?

A. Quite a few occasions. I think—but I would date them [5932] from 1937. This meeting here, I think this meeting here (indicating), that in—that was in July of 1937; that would be about the first time I seen him.

Q. After you left Washington—Mr. Rathborne was in Washington with you, wasn't he?

A. Yes, at that time, sure.

Q. And did you return to New York with him, do you recall? A. Yes.

Q. And how long did you remain in New York?

A. July 10, went to New York.

Q. How long did you stay there?

A. July 12, left New York for San Francisco, after—left New York the night of July 12. I was in San Francisco Wednesday morning, July 14.

Q. Flew back?

A. Yes. Took that long, too.

Q. Pardon?

A. Took—well, it took quite a while then, you know.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Did you know when you got on the plane in New York and when you landed in San Francisco?

A. No, no. I remember those trips, particularly in the summertime. They used to be pretty rough.

Q. Mr. Bridges, while you were in New York, during the time you have just indicated, did you go with Mr. Rathborne to the ninth floor of Communist Party headquarters in New York? [5933]

A. No, I am sure of that. I have never been in the Communist Party headquarters in New York in my life. I have heard about Communist Party headquarters; I have heard about the ninth floor. I have been in New York and heard a lot of discussion about the ninth floor. It is one way that people kid each other, some people back there kid each other, and another way that they throw accusations around, and I have been in sessions back in New York in some of the unions where I have heard some members say to other members, "Well, how long has it been since you have been up to the ninth floor?" or "How about the orders from the ninth floor?" and things like that. So I know about the ninth floor. I have never been in Communist Party headquarters in New York in my life, Mr. Donohue.

Q. What was the significance of the ninth floor, Mr. Bridges, at Communist Party headquarters?

A. I don't know: I thought——

Mr. Hallinan: Probably it means it is between the eighth and the tenth. What is the question? I think the question is ambiguous.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): You testified just a moment ago that you knew all about the ninth floor, Mr. Bridges, and I take it that what you know, from what you said, was something other than the fact that it was probably between the eighth and tenth floors? Have you exhausted your recollection what you knew as to the significance of the ninth floor of the [5934] Comunist Party headquarters?

A. I didn't say I knew all about it. I said I had heard about it. I had heard about it on many occasions in New York, as I say, in the manner that I described. The ninth floor. Now, I always took it to be that that was the offices that they owned or rented, the ninth floor of a building, and that that is where their offices were. Now, I have never given it any more thought than that. The references I have made to the ninth floor are what I have told you, that in a union meeting or a conference some people, by way of, I guess, trying to kid, or on some occasions try to kid people, on other occasions trying to criticize or attack people, would mention the ninth floor as I have indicated. But as far as knowing any more about it than that, Mr. Donohue, I don't. I have never been there in my life. Anyone that says that I have is making it up.

Q. Isn't it a fact, Mr. Bridges, that you do know that the Communist Party has an entire building and that the ninth floor is the offices of the top hierarchy of the Community Party?

A. No, this is the first time I have ever known that, and I will take your word for it.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Not necessarily——

A. I don't see any reason why you should kid me on that point.

Q. Not necessarily, Mr. Bridges.

A. Well, the answer is I don't know; never knew it. [5935]

Q. In all of the talk you heard about the ninth floor, you never heard it suggested that was the floor on which the top hierarchy had their offices?

A. Well, not that I paid any attention to. The impression it created on my mind is the one I have given you, that the ninth floor meant a suite of offices on the ninth floor. That is the impression I had. Now, I never have given it any more thought, and I don't know whether they owned a building, believe me. The first time I have known it.

Q. Now, isn't it a fact, Mr. Bridges, that on at least two occasions you went to the ninth floor of Communist Party headquarters with Mervyn Rathborne and there discussed Communist matters with Earl Browder, Roy Hudson and Jack Stachel?

A. Wrong. Wrong. Never went there in my life with Rathborne or anyone else. Never went up there to meet those people, never discussed anything up there with those people. Wrong, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Now, you said earlier that the last time you saw Roy Hudson——

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me, Mr. Donohue. Have you any objection to giving us the dates upon which these alleged visits were said to have occurred, or something close around, so that over the week-end we can run them down, a la the Crouch, Johnson debacle? If you could give them some approximate time Mr. Rathborne is going to testify they went there, we [5936] might be prepared to point out to Mr. Rathborne he may be suffering from some slight confusion of memory. Can we have the time?

Mr. Donohue: I think you can get much more accurate information from Mr. Bridges.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, Mr. Bridges just gave very accurate information that no such thing occurred. What I would like to get now is what the pretense is as to when these visits occurred. Are you going to give them to us or no?

Mr. Donohue: You shall learn that in your own good term, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: All right.

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, if your Honor pleases?

The Court; Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): I began to ask you, before I was again interrupted by Mr. Hallinan, if you did not testify shortly ago that some few months ago you last saw Roy Hudson here in the city of San Francisco? A. That's right.

Q. That you just happened to meet him out in front of ILWU headquarters?

A. That's right, as far as I can recall.

Q. When was the first time you met Roy Hudson? A. On any occasion?

Q. On any occasion. [5937]

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Oh, back sometime, I think, I would say I met Hudson around 1936. I kind of recall meeting him when I had my office down on lower Market Street, and that would be in the latter part of '36. That seems to me the first time now. It is a long time ago, Mr.— And let me suggest, I was asked that question, I think, before Dean Landis, and that was only two or three years afterwards, and my memory on that occasion would be better than it is now. But my memory now, I kind of connect up my first meeting, as I remember, when I had my offices on lower Market Street, and that would be in the last six months of '36.

Q. When did you first learn that Roy Hudson was the national trade union director for the Communist Party?

A. I don't know if I ever learned that, and I can't recall, if I did learn it, when the first time was. I don't know.

Q. Well, as of now do you know whether he is or not the trade union director for the national Communist Party?

A. No, I really don't know. I don't know. I have got the idea in my mind, and I don't know if I got it during the course of this trial or knew it before—I am not just quite sure on that. It has been mentioned here that he is, and it might well be that I picked up the idea during the course of this trial, or it might be that I knew it before. I really couldn't separate the two things at the moment.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. At any time, Mr. Bridges, did you go with Mervyn Rathborne [5938] to the home of Roy Hudson? A. Where?

Q. On James Street in New York City.

A. No. Didn't even know where he lived in New York. I didn't even know he lived in New York City. I had an idea he lived in Pennsylvania now, as a matter of fact. And I have never been to his home in New York City or elsewhere, with Rathborne or anyone else. Postive of that, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Mr. Bridges, when did your union withdraw from the AFL and affiliate with the CIO?

A. About—our charter, I think, was granted July 11, 1937. I think we withdrew around the beginning of July, the first two weeks in July of 1937.

Q. At any time did you discuss the question of your union remaining in the AFL or joining the CIO with Roy Hudson?

A. Not that I recall, no.

Q. If you had discussed it with Roy Hudson, would you recall it, do you think, Mr. Bridges?

A. Well, I think so. Let me see. If I can go by what I think is in your mind, the answer is no. If, on the other hand, you mean did I ever have a conversation in which that matter came up, with Hudson, the answer is it could be. In other words, I mightn't recollect at the moment, but it could well have happened. But in so far—I take it your question is, what your question means, did I discuss the advisability [5939] of the move or making the move, or something like that, with Roy Hudson?

Q. Yes.

A. First of all, before it happened and with an idea as to whether we should do it or not, depending upon what advice he gave—now, I take your question to mean that?

Q. That is correct.

A. The answer is no.

Q. At any time, Mr. Bridges, were you aware of any opinion which the Communist Party had on the question as to whether or not your union should remain affiliated with the AFL or become associated with the CIO?

A. No, no, I knew what my position was, I knew what the position of my union was, and I know we carried it out. And when we decided to go into the CIO, it was only after certain things had happened, and after we couldn't get any satisfactory guarantees from Joseph P. Ryan. That is what that meeting in New York was about in 1937. We went to Washington—I read the minutes today—then we went to New York. We put a proposition up to Joe Ryan and said, "Now, if you will agree to these conditions," and they were pretty simple conditions, "we are going to stay in the AFL." That was my position.

Q. Now, is it a fact, Mr. Bridges, that your determination on the question of staying in the AFL or associating with the CIO was made subsequent to the trip that you made to Washington and [5940] New York in July of 1937?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. No, I can prove that to you.

Q. Did you just tell us a minute ago that because of some conversation you had with Mr. Joseph Ryan, you came to a position or a determination on that subject?

A. Partly. Here is the way the situation was: Joseph P. Ryan was the president of the organization at that time, the international president. We were unsatisfied, we were dissatisfied with the structure of the organization, because we thought it lacked certain basic democratic features. We asked Ryan if he would correct two or three of those things, and that if he did, we didn't see any reason why we should leave the American Federation of Labor. Joe Ryan refused to correct the issues or the problems that, the weaknesses that we raised, and that was the final point. From there on in, what was only an idea that was in the making, or a move that was in the making, became something that was definite.

Now, as a matter of fact, before I went back East to Washington or New York in 1937, the Maritime Federation of the Pacific had already gone on record to take a referendum vote of all the unions affiliated with the Federation as to whether the union should go into the CIO or not. That happened before I ever went back. And while I was back East the referendum vote was already under way.

Q. Now, I come back again, Mr. Bridges; had the decision been [5941] made by your union to withdraw from the AFL and affiliate with the CIO prior to the time you laid down in New York City certain conditions to Joe Ryan, and for your union remaining within the AFL?

A. Not completely. The referendum—I say, the vote was under way, so no one could lay down a decision until after that vote was completed. But the vote was under way when I was back in New York talking to Ryan, and our proposition to Ryan was this: that "if you can offer the membership something that will meet the requirements that they have raised, the matter can be resubmitted to another vote." That was the situation.

Q. Then the decision was not made until you returned to California?

A. The decision was made by a vote of the membership.

Q. When was the decision determined by the vote of the membership, Mr. Bridges?

A. Oh—I've got the calendar here. I think we had a meeting July 18 in the city of Seattle. The Coast Executive Board of the union met, and that was where the result of the referendum——

Q. What date, Mr. Bridges?

A. July 18, I think. Now I will do a little further checking on that to make sure, but I believe that that was the date, July 18. And that was when the referendum was to be considered. That was the outcome of the referendum. [5942]

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. When did you get back to California?

A. July 14.

Q. Now, isn't it a fact, Mr. Bridges, that before a final determination of the issue as to whether or not your union would withdraw from the AFL and associate itself with the CIO, that you went to Communist Party headquarters in New York and got instructions? A. Instructions?

Q. Yes.

A. No, Mr. Donohue. Absolutely not. I am telling you what happened. We had a meeting of the Maritime Federation in the city of Portland prior to going to that meeting; that convention of the Maritime Federation, I think that most of the locals affiliated to the ILA had already passed resolutions favoring affiliation with the CIO. The officers were really the ones, myself amongst others, that were saying to the membership, "Now take it easy. Before we jump out of the American Federation of Labor, let us see what can be worked out with the national officers of our national union." And that was one of the reasons that I left the convention in Portland before that convention was over. Went back to Washington to see John L. Lewis. John L. Lewis arranged a meeting with Joseph P. Ryan. We went up to try and discuss the matter with Ryan. We said, "Now, listen, if we can get a little democracy in the organization, we will stay in the AFL." I remember we wanted two or [5943] three things, such as all officers must be elected by secret ballot, no strikes to be called unless the membership had the right, had a chance to vote on going on strike, no agreements to be signed unless those agreements were subject to approval by the membership through secret ballot. Two or three items like that, as well as eliminate the gunmen from the payroll. There was a lot of gunmen on the international payroll at that time. Now, I can recall those three or four points that were proposed. And we said, "Now, look, Ryan, if you will agree to these things there will be no move, as far as we are concerned. We won't agree to go along with any proposal to leave the organization and go into the CIO."

Ryan wouldn't even meet with us. Ryan wouldn't even talk to us. He sat in another room and sent two or three plug-uglies to pass backwards and forwards, and we sat down around—well, there was a bunch of people around us watching us, and got the messages that way.

Q. If you had come to terms with Mr. Ryan, you were prepared to resubmit the issue to the membership, were you not? A. Sure.

Q. Were you equally prepared to resubmit the issue in the event that the membership voted to remain affiliated with the American Federation of Labor? A. Sure, could have been.

Q. It was an important determination by and for your union [5944] at that time, was it not, whether you should remain in the AFL or become associated with the new CIO? A. Yes.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. And you were in New York in July of 1937, before the results of the plebiscite had been determined, were you not? A. That's right.

Q. And you didn't talk to Roy Hudson, the national trade union director of the Communist Party, about this decision?

A. No. I was back there under instructions. As a matter of fact, before—and my sheet shows it—before we went back East, we had a coastwise caucus, as it is called, of our union at that time. And at that caucus, that caucus instructed me what I should do back there, so I was operating under tight instructions before I ever went East, and those instructions were along the line that I told you. I was instructed to see if we could work out some type of a program with Joseph P. Ryan, and if there could be, if we could, the officers would get together and say, "Let's stay in the American Federation of Labor." If it couldn't be worked out, then, depending upon the outcome of the vote, that would decide the issue. That was before we ever left the Pacific Coast.

Q. Was there any fraction meeting of the Communist Party on that subject over and above a caucus before you went to New York?

A. You mean in Portland? [5945]

Q. In Portland, yes. A. Oregon?

Q. Yes.

A. No, no, my notes show that we had an ILA

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

caucus; that is, a caucus of all the delegates from our union on a coastwise basis, to decide the matter.

Mr. Donohue: May we take the recess at this time?

The Court: Yes. We will take the afternoon recess, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Recess.) [5946]

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Bridges, in the references that you have heard made about the ninth floor of the Communist Party headquarters, did you ever hear it called the American Kremlin?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever meet a man by the name of Al Lanham? A. Yes.

Q. What position did he occupy at the time you met him? A. I forget.

Q. Did you meet him more than once?

A. I met Al Lanham quite a few times here and there.

Q. Did you ever know him to be a waterfront organizer for the Communist Party nationally?

A. I think at least subsequent to the first time I ever run across him he held some kind of position. As to whether that would be it, I don't know.

Q. Did you ever meet with him at Roy Hudson's house? A. No.

Q. Mr. Bridges, do you recall the first constitutional convention of the CIO held at Pittsburgh?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Yes.

Q. When was it? 1938?

A. I know it was 1938. I was trying to nail down the month and the day. I think it was November, 1938. I think it began [5947] a day or two before Thanksgiving and went a day or two after.

Q. At that time were you a member of the CIO executive board?

A. They didn't have an executive board. The executive board was formally and officially created in that convention with the adoption of the CIO convention. What used to be conferences called by the national CIO from time to time, representatives of these various unions, part of the Committee for Industrial Organization at that time.

Q. Were you a member of any such committee or committees? A. Yes.

Q. At that time the CIO was in its infancy?

A. Yes, a pretty lusty infant, but still in its infancy.

Q. At such conferences on a national level which you may have held prior to the CIO convention in Pittsburgh in November of 1938 was there any talk at that time that came to your attention about Communism and its relation to the CIO?

A. Not that I recall, nothing specific, outside of maybe some general discussions. I don't recall anything specific, if I can grasp what you mean.

Q. Did you know that at that time there was a top fraction Communist Party unit operating within the upper structure of the CIO? A. No.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. At some time during the 1938 CIO convention in Pittsburgh, and prior to the date of the election of officers thereof, did [5948] you attend a meeting in the William Penn Hotel at which, other than yourself, the following persons were present: Mr. Roy Hudson, Mr. Julius Comspack, Mr. Irving Potash, Mr. Ben Gould, Mr. Louis Merrill, Mr. Abraham Flaxa, Mr. Mervyn Rathborne?

A. Well, I could well have met with everybody in that group of names except Hudson in the William Penn Hotel. I was staying in the William Penn Hotel at the time of that convention. All the people you have named there, with the exception of Hudson are officers of the CIO or various unions of the CIO and we had two or three sessions at that convention. I can recall what those sessions were about and why. The only sessions I recall were meetings amongst ourselves in order to discuss certain aspects of the convention, the adoption of the constitution, certain things we wanted in the constitution. We had a session there once where we elected a delegation to go and see John L. Lewis over the question of having John Brophy elected secretary of the CIO, and we sent the delegation. We lost out. Brophy was not elected secretary. Carey was, and we have regretted it ever since.

Q. Do you recall a meeting in the William Penn Hotel at which the persons I have named were present, in which there was an original discussion between or among Mr. Mervyn Rathborne, Mr. Roy Hudson and Mr. Harry Bridges on the subject matter of a resolution which Mr. Rathborne had introduced in the floor of the convention on the preceding day? [5949]

A. No, I don't recall any such meeting. I don't recall Rathborne in a resolution. I will do a little more checking up for you. I will read the minutes of that convention. I do not think you will find that one. Not that I recall. I remember we got into a squabble about the adoption of the constitution.

Q. Was there any resolution which you can now recall introduced at that CIO convention on the question as to whether or not there should be permitted any discrimination for political affiliation as to CIO membership? A. A resolution?

Q. Yes.

A. I don't specifically recall. But again, I say the minutes would be the best source on that, Mr. Donohue. I don't recall any specific resolution along those lines, but it could be. I could look at the minutes and find out.

Q. If there had been such a resolution, do you think you may have remembered it or that you might remember it? A. I would think so.

Q. Would you have been interested in that kind of a resolution had it been adopted or had it been presented on the floor?

A. Well, it would depend on what was in the resolution. I have got your description. I am not quite sure what you mean. Your idea of what union is and what a Communist is and what a lot of other things are, are funny ideas. I am not quite sure. I am getting careful, you know. I am wondering what you mean. [5950] If you will tell me what you mean, I will do my best to recall and check up.

Q. It might be eaesier had I been there, Mr. Bridges, but you were there. I am simply trying to find your recollection as to what happened at that convention, if you have a recollection.

A. I am just reluctant to try to pit my memory against an official record that is in existence on everything that was said and done at that convention. That is a convention that took place twelve years ago. I have a complete—I mean, I have a record of everything that happened, everything that was said, the resolutions that were introduced, who said what on what question, that is far better than my memory is.

Q. But you are certain of one thing, Mr. Bridges, and that is that you met at no time at that convention with Roy Hudson?

A. That is about as certain as I can be. You asked me a while ago did I have a session with Rathborne and Hudson on the subject of some resolution Rathborne introduced.

Q. Correct.

A. No. You asked me also if I had a session with a group of people including Hudson.

Q. Correct? A. No.

Q. Do you recall whether Roy Hudson was at the convention in 1938 in Pittsburgh?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. I don't recall. He might have been. That would be a different [5951] thing. He could be there. There was quite a few people in attendance. Hundreds, thousands of them sitting around, in addition to the delegates and attendants. It was in a big convention hall. In addition to the people who attended the convention themselves, the observers. That is true at all conventions.

Q. If Roy Hudson had been there, he would not have been there as a delegate, would he, Mr. Bridges?

A. I don't know. He might well have. At least he could have been there as a delegeate. I don't know now. At CIO conventions quite a few people show up as delegates. I sometimes wonder how come, but I am not in charge.

Q. Did you ever know at any CIO convention which you have attended Roy Hudson to be there as a delegate?

A. Oh, no, I don't recall any such thing.

Q. Do you recall the national CIO convention of 1939 held here in San Francisco? A. Yes.

Q. At that time you were a member of the executive committee or board of the national CIO?

A. Yes.

Q. At that time were you conscious of the fact that there was within the executive board, national executive board of the CIO, a top fraction of Communist Party members? A. No. [5952]

Q. At that time, Mr. Bridges, were you a member of the top fraction of the Communist Party operating within the national executive board of the CIO?

A. I just said I have no knowledge of the top fraction then or at any other time.

Mr. Hallinan: I wonder if we could not get some kind of distinction as to just what denomination a top fraction takes. Lower fractions might be halves, sixteenths, thirty-secondths, and so forth. I think we should have some kind of designation here as to just what a top fraction is. It is kind of puzzling question. I think Mr. Donohue ought to clear the atmosphere a bit by telling us exactly what he means. He has used the term repeatedly. The witness has said ad nauseam he is not and never has been a member of the Communist Party, never a member of any portion of it, fraction, denominator, quotient, dividend, least common denominator or any other mathematical term. Counsel keeps repeating the things and repeating the matter, and one of his witnesses had it a top faction meeting. Counsel seems to take the side of the fractioners rather than the factioners, and I think we ought to have some sort of ground now upon which we finally come to rest to determine exactly what it means. I might point out to your Honor that Mr. Michener suggested at certain geographical locations the portion or quotient or whatever it may be that counsel refers to is known as a faction, and then in the more northerly latitudes like the ones [5953] we inhabit, it is apparently called a fraction. But then just what proportion of this thing constitutes a top fraction, a middle fraction or a lower fraction is something I think counsel ought to clear up for us, because the witness obviously is not in a position to pass upon such matters of expert opinion. I think the questions are all unintelligible in view of the confusion that counsel's witnesses have created around that subject.

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, if your Honor please?

The Court: Well, that question has arisen in two or three instances, and the same observations you made then you make now. So there may be no confusion in terms, if there be any, I suppose we might have some definition. But Mr. Bridges says he can not make a definition.

Mr. Hallinan: That is what I say. He has no knowledge on it at all.

The Court: I suppose in the final analysis we sort of beg the question because we might assume there are no degrees in Communists. A Communist is a Communist, I suppose.

Mr. Hallinan: I don't know. I doubt that very much from what I have seen here, your Honor. The ones that have been presented here seem to be what you call a descending scale. Communists such as Mr. Crouch, Mr. Ross or Mr. Johnson are in the same category with people like Hancock and Krolek and I would put Mr. Schomaker even down below them. So I wouldn't [5954] assume they all occupy the same position, morally, socially or even as witnesses. I do not know enough about it, but, as I say, only from what I have observed here.

The Court: Mr. Bridges has said there are certain categories of witnesses; there may be some definition you have with respect to Communists. Do you have any definition?

Mr. Donohue: I might say, if your Honor please, it has been defined here by a half dozen or more former members of the Communist Party in this respect, that a fraction meeting is a meeting of members of the Communist Party who belong to a particular organization, such as the ILWU, and is designated as a fraction meeting, because of the presence at that meeting of a functionary of the Communist Party who is not a member of a trade union or other organization to which they belong, and the distinction as termed here by a number of former members of the Communist Party between a fraction meeting and a top fraction meeting is a distinction dependent upon the degree of proximation to the top eschelon of the Communist Party which is occupied in the Communist Party.

Mr. Hallinan: What is an eschelon? That is a new one to me. An eschelon of the Communist Party? I have heard in recent times the use of that term in French military maneuvers, but I have not heard it yet in this. Could we find out what is a fraction meeting? What is that? Something else again? Mr. Michener was describing fraction meetings. Mr. Bridges having [5955] thoroughly and conclusively, I think, disclaimed any connection with the Communist Party or with any, as I say, such mathematical divisions of it as counsel likes to play with, why, further inquiries of that kind seem to me to be assuming things not in evidence, transgressing upon everybody's patience, bringing the frost back on the punkin and all that sort of thing, and I think we might have an end of it. If counsel can do no more than he has done, I think we should not have any more inquiry about those quotients.

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, your Honor?

Mr. Hallinan: I object to further questions on those subjects.

The Court: If Mr. Hallinan has any particular objection as far as Mr. Bridges is concerned with respect to the definitions, I suggest that you ask Mr. Bridges, so he may not be confused, with respect to a meeting. Call it a meeting.

Q. Is there any confusion concerning these terms, Mr. Bridges?

A. I asked Mr. Donohue this morning, your Honor, what he meant by a fraction meeting. He explained to me that it was a closed Communist meeting. That is what I thought he said earlier in the day.

The Court: So there may be no confusion in terms and so the answers may be eatgorical denials or affirmations, whatever it may be, I suggest you now ask him concerning them. [5956]

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Are you now at ease, Mr. Bridges? A. At ease?

Q. Yes.

Mr. Hallinan: Is he giving any indications of some disturbance to his ulcers? If he is, I don't blame him. He has been on the witness stand for several days. I hadn't noticed any indications of distress. I think it is kindly of counsel to inquire. Is there anything about him that you have noticed?

Mr. Donohue: I thought perhaps you had seen some outward signs.

Mr. Hallinan: No, I haven't. As a matter of fact, the only one I have noted any lack of ease in is Mr. Kaiser out there. He jumps and chortles and chuckles and threatens to fall through the ceiling. He is the only one I have observed. That is so congenital and fixed and has lasted so long and has occupied the entire time we have been on the case, that I have even paid no further attention to him.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Bridges, during the period of the national CIO convention in San Francisco in 1939 did you attend a meeting in the Whitcomb Hotel at which the following persons were present: Mr. Abraham Plaxa, Mr. Louis Merrill, Mr. Joseph P. Selli, Mr. William Schneidermann, Mr. Harry Bridges and Mr. Mervyn Rathborne?

A. A meeting? I presume you mean a meeting in some formal [5957] or semi-official sense, don't you, Mr. Donohue?

Q. Yes.

A. The answer is no. I have in mind this: that during conventions there is quite a few things happen, and in that 1939 convention preceding the national CIO convention we had a State convention. Well, you know, little groups get together in various rooms; they may throw a little party, and things like that, and you wander around. You don't question everybody that is there. You don't even ask to see their credentials. They might even be outfitted with a badge, that could be a delegate's badge or a visitor's badge or an observer's badge. So I wouldn't want to go so far as to say in some of these conventions I might wander into the wrong room or someone else's room where people are sitting around having a little social time. I am answering your questions with the idea in mind that you have—that you refer to some kind of a formal gathering, official gathering, semi-official gathering.

Q. Correct, assembled for a specific purpose.

A. That's right. The answer is no.

Q. Was it at this 1939 convention of the national CIO, Mr. Bridges, that Mr. John L. Lewis for the first time denounced Communism?

A. No, I don't think so. Not in that sense. I can recall the Executive Board meeting following the convention, and I recall Lewis' remarks on that matter or in connection with that [5958] matter. Here is what he said: The Dies Committee at that time was very active, and the Dies Committee, along with certain other people in political office here and there, certain big corporations that the CIO was trying to organize, were loosing some pretty vicious attacks upon the CIO, particularly upon Lewis himself, the general nature of the attack being, as far as I can recall, that it was—the CIO was an organization imported directly from Moscow, John L. Lewis was a stooge of Moscow, and a lot of things like that. And Lewis in the confines of the board meeting discussed this matter and his remarks were, as near as I can recall, to the effect that the CIO was an organization dedicated to certain purposes, and those purposes alone; the CIO was going to be operated by the membership and officers of the CIO and operated in the interests of those purposes; if the CIO decided to take certain steps or take certain actions, or to espouse certain programs, that it, the CIO, thought were for the benefit of the working people and the people of the country generally, as well as people of other countries, the CIO was going to do just that thing, and, as Mr. Lewis put it, he didn't care how many Dies Committees or peanut politicians didn't like it, we were going to continue doing just as we had been doing. We were taking certain actions at that time, if you recall. That was 1939. We have discussed some of them here, saying that they were actions that grew out of the WFTU, and is wasn't so. I have in mind [5959] for example, that the CIO at that time—Lewis spoke along these lines—supported such things as boycotts of war materials to Japan; spoke out or came out flatly against Nazi Germany and the regime, Hitler regime. I am not so sure that these things—some of these things happened prior to the 1939 convention, the '37 convention or the '38 convention. And all these matters were discussed generally, as I recall, in Mr. Lewis' talk to the Executive Board, and he in effect said what I have been saying here: that because we do these things as a trade union movement, and because some people that don't know any better or don't seem to have enough brains to know any better try to find through association of ideas that the program we are following is a Communist program, that the organization we belong to is Communist-dominated or controlled, we just can't stop in a labor movement that is trying to do a job here in the United States in the interests of the working people of our own country as well as all other countries because of such critics. That was the tone of the discussion, as I recall it, and all those matters—I remember Mr. Lewis was pretty eloquent on the thing. Amongst other things he pointed to some of the things that our union and other unions had stood for in the past, that is, with relationship to these boycotts and so forth. And in that way the issue of Communism was discussed. However, it was tied into another issue, and that is the possibility of the coming war. This [5960] was in October or November '39. In September '39—September '39, the war had started over in Europe, or the beginnings of it had started, and naturally the question of the United States being involved in a new World War occupied some part of the convention's time and the discussions of the Executive Board, and that was discussed and was pretty well understood that we took with respect to that matter, would be a position taken as an organization of labor unions and would be taken because of our own ideas and no others. However, it was made clear, I think by resolutions and speeches in the convention itself, that although we took these positions, that they in no way affected the loyalty of the organizations, the loyalty of the members or officers of the organization towards the United States and a proper program of security the defense of the United States.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Do you have any recollection at any time during the convention that John L. Lewis denounced Communism?

A. During the convention, no, I haven't. Again, the records would be the best place to find that out, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Was it at this convention, Mr. Bridges, that John ~~L. Lewis~~ removed you as West Coast director of the CIO?

A. No, he didn't remove me. He thought I had too much to do. I was West Coast Director of the eleven Western States, and that is too much for one man, he said, "even as good a man as you are. From here on the job is abolished; from here on you [5961] are California director of the CIO."

I said, "Thanks, John; about time."

Q. When were you originally appointed West Coast Director for the CIO? A. When?

Q. When?

A. About the time we got our charter from the

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

CIO, the ILWU. August—I said before we got our charter in July. It was in August, I think around the 1st of August.

Q. '37? A. '37, yes.

Q. When you were West Coast Director for the CIO, what territory did you encompass?

A. The eleven Western States.

Q. And in the 1939 convention that office was abolished and you were made what?

A. California Director. [5962]

Q. And how long did you remain as California director?

A. Oh, I forget—'42, '43, I think. Some time two or three years ago. No, a little later than that. I think maybe around '46, maybe—somewhere around there. I was reduced to Northern California director and then a couple of years ago, why, they decided that I wasn't a good director any more.

Q. In other words, you began as West Coast Director, then became California State Director, then Director for Northern California and now no director? A. That's right.

Q. Now, do you recall——

A. But don't read anything wrong into it, Mr. Donohue.

Q. I am not. I am just asking questions, Mr. Bridges.

A. No. Here today, gone tomorrow. You are a special prosecutor today.

Q. Correct, sir. Mr. Bridges, at the meeting of the persons I have just listed in the Whitcomb Hotel, did you make any statement concerning your removal as West Coast director for the CIO?

Mr. Hallinan: Now, of course, that is assuming something that the witness hasn't said, something that he has denied. He said there was no meeting, then counsel says, "At this meeting was something said"?

Mr. Donohue: I withdraw the question, if your Honor pleases. [5963]

Q. Mr. Bridges, is your recollection refreshed as to whether or not you attended such a meeting by my asking you whether or not you made a statement concerning your removal as West Coast director of the CIO?

A. I made a—first of all, that is one of those fancy questions you have. Which part do you want me to answer, both parts?

Q. Well, in turn, both parts, yes.

A. All right. First of all, there was no meeting; second, there not having been any meeting, there was no statement made. Thirdly, I make statements but not at such meetings.

Q. Did you ever attend a meeting at the Whitcomb Hotel during the 1939 convention, a meeting the membership of which was restricted to members of the Communist Party, at which there was a discussion and a determination of policy on the relationship of the Communist Party to the national CIO? A. No.

Q. Did you attend any meeting during the 1939 national CIO convention at which Mr. William Schneidermann was present?

A. During the 1939 convention?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. No, not that I certainly recall. I have been at meetings with, when Schneidermann was present, of different types, but I don't recall any at that particular time. Outside of what I have already described, during a convention. Quite a few little sessions [5964] get going, and a lot of people drift in and out.

Q. But you have no recollection of talking to Mr. Schneidermann during the 1939 CIO convention and about the CIO convention business?

A. Well, now, that—no, because, listen. Here's what you are saying now. Now it is ridiculous, it is getting pretty ridiculous. Schneidermann, even if he is given all the authority that it is claimed he is supposed to have in these, what I have heard in this courtroom, at best represented the Communist Party in the State of California. And now, that would be a question of him deciding policy for the national CIO or deciding what policy some of us in the national CIO should follow in a national CIO convention. It didn't happen, Mr. Donohue, believe me; it didn't happen.

Q. Are you indicating that it couldn't happen, Mr. Bridges?

A. I don't—well, you are asking me as far as I am concerned?

Q. Yes.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. No, I don't know what could happen or what couldn't happen.

Q. Well, you make some point about the fact that Schneidermann was only the top Communist in California.

A. Yes, that is the way—frankly, that is how ridiculous it appears to me, that being at a meeting with Schneidermann who at most according to the testimony here, was in charge of the Communist Party affairs in the State of California, and purely because [5965] of the fact that the CIO convention was being held in California or in San Francisco, Schneidermann was going to lay down policy for that convention. You just don't know John L. Lewis, Mr. Donohue, believe me. I could draw myself a picture of that one.

Q. Mr. Bridges, in the many conversations or conferences which you have had with Mr. Schneidermann, did you ever ask him how, as state director of the Communist Party in California, he received his instructions from the New York office and how he passed those instructions on to his members?

A. No. Never asked, don't know. Not particularly concerned.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor pleases, I have finished this phase. I have some more questions of Mr. Bridges. May we go over until another day?

The Witness: May I say, your Honor, I have those expense accounts. I have got this magazine. I never read it, that I can recall, Mr. Donohue. I have got my expense accounts which you asked for and I have got the letters that Rathborne sent around, and it mentions the meeting place on that squabble we had between Rathborne and Goldblatt that I mentioned.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Will you bring them with you on Monday?

Mr. Donohue: I may say, your Honor, with respect to that article by Sam Darcy in the Communist magazine, if Mr. Bridges states, as he does now, that he has never read it, I withdraw any question concerning it. [5966]

The Witness: I have a copy of the Milwaukee Journal. You asked me if I was at that meeting, where Mr. Attorney General Clark attended, and I wasn't able——

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Did Mr. Hallinan ask you to take that up on the stand and make some comment about it, Mr. Bridges?

A. It was my idea.

Q. Your idea? A. Yes.

Mr. Hallinan: He is entitled to do that, isn't he? Isn't he supposed to answer your question?

Mr. Donohue: I have asked him no question, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: You asked him if he were present at the meeting and raised the implication that it hadn't been said. He has the article right there in which he says the precise thing.

Mr. Donohue: You and I might disagree on the propriety, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: I don't think we could; we both want to tell the jury everything, don't we? Here's an article published in a paper that we had no control over, in May, 1949, the time Mr. Bridges was indicted, stating precisely what Mr. Bridges said Mr. Clark said. You raised the implication that it hadn't been done. You said to Mr. Bridges, he wasn't there.

Mr. Donohue: If you haven't practiced law long enough to know you can't prove a fact by a newspaper article, Mr. Hallinan, there's nothing else I can say. [5967]

Mr. Hallinan: You won't have to prove a fact; in other words, if it is a fact, let's tell the jury about it. Why do we have this squabbling about technicalities on it? If it happened, let's tell the jury so.

Mr. Donohue: I will submit the question as to the propriety to the Court, Mr. Hallinan, and not to you.

Mr. Hallinan: Let me ask you this: Do you deny that Mr. Clark did make the statement that Mr. Bridges is attributing to him?

Mr. Donohue: I don't know.

Mr. Hallinan: That the indictment of Mr. Bridges would break the Hawaiian strike?

Mr. Donohue: I deny that he said that.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, read it in the paper there. He has it right there, with Clark's picture on it.

Mr. Donohue: Don't you know yet that a newspaper is hearsay, Mr. Hallinan?

Mr. Hallinan: Some newspapers apparently—not the newspapers—what are you trying to produce here with the People's World, asking Mr. Bridges about some article written on your friend, Mr. Rathborne?

Mr. Donohue: The newspaper that Mr. Bridges so loudly endorsed and so apparently frequently reads as subscriber.

Mr. Hallinan: All right, I will endorse the Milwaukee Sentinel and that will get it in. Let's endorse that. [5968]

Mr. Donohue: While you are talking about articles, why do you object to Mr. Darcy?

Mr. Hallinan: We don't know Mr. Darcy; he is your man, you are going to bring him out here. You have been talking to him. You had him before the grand jury.

Mr. Donohue: I gave you that one.

Mr. Hallinan: That's your man.

The Court: Well, we will adjourn, then, unless other matters appear. Mr. Bridges, you will return with that article?

The Witness: I was just trying to turn it back before we recessed for the weekend, your Honor.

The Court: Well, we will resume, unless we have other matters, at 10:00 o'clock Monday morning. And may I again admonish you not to discuss the case under any conditions, nor to suffer any person to converse with you on any subject of the trial. You are not to form nor express an opinion thereon until it is submitted to you.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to Monday, February 20, 1950, at 10:00 o'clock a.m.) [5969]

Monday, February 20, 1950—10:00 A.M.

The Clerk: United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

The witness on the stand is Harry Renton Bridges, heretofore sworn.

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES

resumed.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Mr. Bridges, have you referred to the original speech in order to determine whether you were correctly quoted in your column, "On the Beam," in the issue of April 18, 1947?

A. In part it is correct. I forget now whether I brought those minutes with me this morning. If I didn't it was an oversight, Mr. Donohue. I had them there.

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. The minutes of what?

The Witness: That was the 1947 convention of the ILWU.

Q: (By Mr. Donohue): Did you refresh your recollection from reading that speech to determine whether you were correctly quoted as saying, "A country that has a totalitarian government operates like our union"?

A. I didn't believe you wanted me to do that, Mr. Donohue. [5970] It was my impression that I said I could bring the entire speech here and the minutes, and you asked me to do that. I didn't do it that way. I didn't look it over. I am sorry if you meant that; it was my mistake. When the matter came up I thought I said, "I've got the whole speech. I can bring the minutes here and that would be better," And I thought you said, "Would you please do that?" and I agreed to do it. I had the book there this morning, and between myself and the attorneys I guess we forgot it. I will have it at noon, at the recess.

Q. Have you read the article in the People's World entitled "Story of a Stool Pigeon," which you said you would read over the week-end?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you determined from reading that article whether in any way you gave any of that information to anyone for the purpose of its publication?

A. They didn't get it from me. As a matter of fact, I learned a few things from the article I didn't know.

Q. Then you in no way were responsible for the publication of that article?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. No, I wouldn't agree with the article in this sense: I wouldn't agree with the article. I wouldn't agree that Rathborne is a stool pigeon. A stool pigeon is someone, as I understand it at least, who knows something and tells it. [5971]

Q. And you do not think Rathborne knows anything?

A. Oh, he knows something, but I am talking about truthful things. My idea of a stool pigeon is someone that tells the truth in some respects about certain things he knows, that he was there. Now, it is my idea Rathborne is fabricating with a purpose about things that he knows nothing about.

Q. Mr. Bridges, were you correctly quoted in the issue of the Labor Herald of November 25, 1947——

Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute, if the Court please. I object to this manner of cross-examining. In other words, it is the same procedure of reading evidence and then asking the witness if he was correctly quoted on that. Now, if he wants to show the witness the document to refresh his recollection, that is all right.

Mr. Donohue: I have no objection, if the clerk will ask Mr. Bridges to read the article indicated.

Mr. Hallinan: Let us see it first.

(The document was handed to Mr. [5972] Hallinan.)

(Document was thereupon examined by Mr. Hallinan, then handed to the witness by the Clerk.)

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Was I correctly quoted?

Q. Yes.

A. As far as I recall, yes.

Q. Then is it a fact that about November 25th, 1947, you state that under the six-year leadership of Rathborne, the California CIO Council has expanded and earned the loyalty and respect and the support of local unions, correct?

A. I said that. I thought it was true at the time. I didn't know until later, until after Rathborne left the Council, he had been syphoning off the money, stealing it, and a few things like that. I said that in all good faith. I thought that the fellow was honest at the time. I knew he had certain weaknesses; he told me he was resigning because he couldn't—the pressure of the work was so great that he couldn't take it any more. It was driving him to drink, and he was having trouble with his wife, and a lot of other things. It was only afterwards I knew he was lying and found out he was lying, and he was really getting out because he had been doing away with the funds of the State Council and padding his expense account and things like that. Now, he told me at the time, and when I made the speech I took up a collection for him, $250 among the membership of my own union. I said, "Look, here's a fellow that's in a bad way. He is ill, needs a rest." And I was just [5973] fooled. I thought that—and when I made the statement, I thought that that was the fact, and, you know, you learn these things later, Mr. Donohue.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Isn't it a fact, Mr. Bridges, that you changed your mind about Mr. Rathborne after you saw in the paper that he had testified against you before the grand jury?

A. I changed my mind when I heard a couple of things: first, when some of the people in the State Council, one way or another, told me—and I am not talking about supporters of mine, I am talking about people who more times than they do otherwise, take an opposite viewpoint—told me that he had been using Council funds to gamble with. I changed my mind when I found out that he left the Council funds short. I changed my mind when I found out a few other things. That is when I changed my mind, and that is a couple of years ago.

Q. When did you first give any public manifestation of your change in heart about Mr. Rathborne since you publicly expressed praise and approbation of him, in November of 1947?

A. I don't know, but I didn't go out of my way to rush it into print. He was out of the Council, I didn't know where he was. The first I knew about it, I heard he was roaming about the streets of Los Angeles, and very, very drunk, and in a pretty bad way. And I was a little concerned. I thought, "That's too bad." I thought the fellow was going to kind of get straightened out. He was going back to sea and try and get [5974] straightened out. I forget who brought her a report. She said, "Gee, too bad about Merve; he is roaming around the streets of Los Angeles. He is talking very funny for a decent person." And so forth. "He is talking about what he is going to do to you and a lot of other people." And this was all over a year ago.

Q. Mr. Bridges, do you just advisedly associate yourself with drunkards like Schrimpf and George Wilson and Mervyn Rathborne, or do you drive them to drink?

A. Well, I guess people want a drink for certain reasons—now, I am not the type of person, I have got nothing against a person who drinks. I realize, too, that people that become real alcoholics are not drunks, they are sick people. There is something inside them, something inside their head, something wrong with them. They have got a complex, and this complex seeks a way out, manifests itself by their taking a drink. Rathborne is that type of a person. He is a pretty weak person. This is not the first time. Rathborne resigned as vice president of the American Communications Association. Now, I was back in New York at the time. He gave me the same song and dance, and I thought the guy was really ill. So it is just a peculiar type of person, and it is not a question of whom I associate with or do I associate with people who drink. I associate with a lot of people that drink. That is neither here nor there. I have got nothing exactly against people that drink, but I wasn't referring to [5975] that.

However, when you start drinking as a cover-up, when you start using drinking as an excuse for some pretty evil things, when you start drinking at the expense of your fellow workers, financially and otherwise, and when you start parading as a decent person when in reality you are something else, nothing but a hypocrite, and when you start betraying people that you have worked with—and I don't mean me, I mean the average rank and file worker in the unions. Rathborne knows what he is doing, working with you people. It is not a question of being after me; he is after the trade unions. Then, of course, that is a different thing. And drink has got nothing to do with it, but because he has got such a rotten, guilty conscience, he needs plenty of drinks to salve it. That is the situation. Now, I am no psychiatrist but I have to work with people all the time, and I have to get along with them, and that is my analysis of the person—purely my own, nothing expert about it. It doesn't get strengthened from my being a psychiatrist or any medical knowledge, but that is how it looks to me.

Q. Isn't it a fact, Mr. Bridges, that the first word of personal criticism you have ever uttered against Mervyn Rathborne was made subsequent to the time when you read in the public press that he had labeled you as a Communist before the grand jury?

A. No, that is not a fact, Mr. Donohue. I am saying it is all of eighteen months ago that I discussed the situation about [5976] Rathborne with certain members of my union, certain people, and the state he was in. And members of my union, officers of my own union said, "Well, we don't know anything about these things." Well, I said, "I would like to. I want to give the guy every benefit of the doubt." But that is what happens. The so-called right wing member of the organization came into my office and he had a couple of checks with him, I think, for $100 apiece. He said, "Look, this is pretty bad stuff. Now, I was sitting in a poker game with Merve, and I paid the money out of my own pocket to pick up these checks, because they are State Council checks." He said, "This is pretty bad, Merve gambling with the state funds in this fashion."

Now, this was while he was still in office. So it even goes back that far, Mr. Donohue. And after he got out of office, after he got out of office, why, I got these reports. Now, when he got out of office—this is nothing unusual when a person leaves, maybe all the good things you say about them may be slightly exaggerated. That is neither here nor there. But what I said about Rathborne when he quit office, I meant. I thought the man was a sick man. I thought what he told me was the truth. He was lying.

Q. You mean that you let Mr. Rathborne resign from the national or from the secretary-treasurership of the California CIO Council with your words of praise ringing in his ears, Mr. Bridges, if you knew that he had been gambling with funds [5977] of the State CIO?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. I knew he had been doing it; some people can make mistakes. I knew he had been doing it. And that, his explanation to me was that he just used the checks of the Council upon his own account, because he had run out of checks himself. So I have got a checking account and if my checkbook happens to be empty, why, I can get another check and scratch out the name and write a check on my own account. That is what Rathborne explained to me, and I accepted his word. I find out later that it wasn't so. Now, after all, the State Council wasn't exactly my business. It wasn't under my direct authority or anything like that. I accepted the person's word. [5978]

Q. And when did you find out the contrary?

A. I don't know; some time later.

Q. How much later?

A. I know there is a judgment—I understand there is a warrant; the Council is trying to get a warrant for his arrest to try to get their money back. That is my understanding. The State Council isn't under my direct control or jurisdiction, Mr. Donohue, understand me.

Q. You seem to know a great deal about it.

A. Well, in a general sense; in a general sense. I know a lot about you in a general sense.

Q. You mean reports of your investigators, Mr. Bridges?

A. Yes, Mr. Donohue. Now, I don't like to go around investigating people, but when they start to go around investigating me on every fact of my life, personal and otherwise, what is good for the goose is good for the gander.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Have I asked you a single personal question about your personal life, Mr. Bridges?

A. Have you?

Q. Yes.

A. No, Mr. Donohue. You have been very nice about that.

Q. I shan't either, Mr. Bridges.

A. Look, Mr. Donohue, believe me, there is no good of my hiring what is considered good lawyers and me being the doctor, just like going to a doctor, I go to a doctor, and he says, "Here's [5979] what needs to be done." He is an expert. I am not going to tell him, "You don't know your business." In the courtroom my attorneys handle the matter, I take orders, by and large. Sometimes I try to put in a word edgewise, but it doesn't always work, even here.

Q. This warrant that you are talking about is a matter that was discussed only subsequent to Mr. Rathborne's testimony before the Grand Jury, isn't it, Mr. Bridges?

A. I don't know, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Did you ever hear any discussion of it before?

A. I didn't. I didn't. All I knew was that when the Council books were checked after Rathborne's leaving—and it isn't unusual in a labor organization, because there is just too many enemies of labor that every chance they get they seize upon an item and magnify it. They don't care about the honesty of a person. Every once in a while—every once in a while an officer embezzles funds.

Q. When did Mr. Rathborne leave the California CIO Council?

A. Oh, a couple of years ago; two or three years ago; November, '47. It was in Santa Cruz. I just want to explain, Mr. Donohue, the purpose of this: that every time a labor officer is dishonest enough, or in a moment of weakness—both things happen—to steal the funds of the union, it isn't always good policy for the labor union to step out and raise a big public fuss about it, for the reason that there are too [5980] many enemies of labor seize upon it. They say, "See, all labor officers are crooks," and the follow-through is they tell the workers, "Keep out of labor unions. The labor unions and the officers will steal your money." That is the reason it is done; it isn't necessarily done for the protection of the individual. That is why it is done.

Q. Mr. Rathborne left in November, 1947. Was any action taken by anyone concerning any allegation that Mr. Rathborne owed or stole from the CIO anything until after you were indicted, Mr. Bridges?

A. I really don't know. My recollection is that it was before, certain actions were taken to try to recover that, and part of the monies were recovered. Now, I might be all wrong in this. I can check on it. I understand part of the monies were recovered from Rathborne. There was no—they didn't go to the courts; they didn't go to the courts to try and collect, I don't think, until after this started.

Q. They didn't file suit until after this trial, did they, Mr. Bridges?

A. Can I explain the reasons why? Labor unions try to keep these matters out of courts because it is a basic principle of a labor organization not to wash its dirty linen in the courts if it can be avoided. A lot of these questions you ask me about internal squabbles in the labor movement, the only reason I answered those was so the jury won't think I have got anything [5981] to hide. Believe me, I don't like to tell people—I am still a member of the organization; the labor movement might have disagreements with me and I might have some with them, but I don't want the enemies of labor to have the information directly or otherwise; I want to leave that to the Schomakers, the Rathbornes, and the like.

Q. Don't you know, Mr. Bridges, that the only internal squabble at the present time is whether or not you have been conscious of any degree of Communist infiltration into the CIO?

A. No, that is wrong, Mr. Donohue. I have told you before, and I can tell you again, we are having certain squabbles in the CIO at the moment and other unions. The only squabbles revolve around a demand by the boys of my union—and it is a good union of the CIO—they have ordered me to ask the CIO for a financial accounting. I mean by a financial accounting, they want a written accounting of the large amount of money that has been taken in, how much money has been taken in, how it has been spent, and they want it in their hands of the rank and file of the union. It is a very simple thing. There is an organization that collects millions of dollars, there is an organization that spends millions of dollars, and every member of my union, including myself, has still got to see a financial accounting of it.

Let me make this very clear: We are not making any accusations against any national officer of the CIO that anything [5982] wrong has been done with the money. That isn't the point. It is just one of those things, you go to your bank, you want a bank statement. Well, you want a bank statement; you are not accusing the bank of stealing your money. It is that simple. Working people are like that. They think they are correct. They would like to have an accounting, that is all it amounts to. That is one particular element.

I have told you about the members of my union all live and vote here in California. They want the right, and when they joined the union they were guaranteed that right, to make up their own minds by their own vote on what they will do with respect to political matters here in the State of California. There is a difference of opinion there. Whereas, the national officers of the CIO say, "You can't make up your mind until we make it up for you, and then when we decide what should be done in the State of California we will tell you to do it, and if you don't do it, you are in bad standing with us." There is two concrete examples, the latter example being the argument about autonomy, home rule. So we have those differences in the labor movement, and the merits of the issue bcome insignificant beside the principle of the issue. In other words, when you get into the question of the political issue, the merits of the political issue are secondary to the other thing; that is, the right to do certain things. So it all boils down to the autonomy issue. There the issue is the right of the fellows to do what they want. It boils down to something very peculiar. [5983] The fellows want the right to be wrong. I agree with them. Our members want the right to be wrong. It isn't a question of whether it is right or wrong; they want the right to be wrong and the right to be right. There is a little squabble occurring on that issue. They are the main issues, and that is, whether the national officers make the decision or we are going to make the decision.

Q. You mean they are the issues as far as you are concerned, but are they the main issues as far as the national officers are concerned?

A. They are not as far as the national officers are concerned, I will admit that, in that quite a few of the national CIO officers raise the issue about Communism. If you take this courtroom here, you know, at first glance, before you look deeply, that the main issue in this courtroom is the question: Have I committed perjury? But you know that isn't the main issue.

Q. You don't believe that, do you, Mr. Bridges?

A. No, I don't, and, believe me, I wouldn't be up here; the thing has been tried three or four different times before. This time it is perjury; the other three times it was something else. I am not up here because I allegedly committed perjury over here in another court. If you want to go after people for perjury, you have got your Schrimpfs and your Schomakers, you have got ten times more on them than you ever had on me.

Q. Along that line, you mentioned William Schneidermann. [5984] A. Yes.

Q. Do you know of any instance in which William Schneidermann has ever denied under oath that he is a member of the Communist Party?

A. No.

Q. Don't you know as a matter of fact that when he appeared before the grand jury, as reported in the public press, he refused to answer that question?

A. No. He refused to answer that question?

Q. Yes.

A. Oh, well, I don't know specifically, but I know that the official position of Communist officials these days, they refuse to answer because there is a case pending and answering the question might incriminate them. I understand they are taking that position. The only way I know that is talking to some of the attorneys on that legal point.

Q. Since you mentioned Mr. Schneidermann, you can't show me, can you, Mr. Bridges, any instance in which Mr. Schneidermann has ever under oath denied that he was a member of the Communist Party, as you did?

A. As far as I know, he never has. But when you say as I did, you mean I denied it?

Q. Yes.

A. I have always denied it, under oath and without being under oath. It is nothing new. I have been trying to deny it for [5985] fifteen years. The Immigration Department for fifteen years has been saying I had been. The only difference in this case is a new set of characters up here swearing otherwise. And the only additional thing that has been added was the convention in New York. That is the only new thing in this case. All the rest were brought out before.

Q. Did you ever hear John Schomaker testify before? A. In what way? Against me?

Q. About the incident, Mr. Bridges, when he met you in a restaurant with Mr. B. B. Jones and saw you sign an application for membership in the Communist Party and later saw your card.

A. No, I have never heard him testify that way before.

Q. Then there is something new that has been added, isn't there?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Well, that testimony, that is nothing new. The same thing, different time and different persons, that is all.

Q. Did you ever hear the secretary of your defense committee testify before that you attended a meeting the attendance at which was restricted to members of the Communist Party at which he too was present?

A. I didn't even take his testimony that way here when he said that; I didn't even get that at all out of what he said.

Q. That is something new, isn't it, Mr. Bridges?

A. Oh, yes, something new in that sense, but the same thing has happened. All you have got is a new person to put the [5986] screws on you.

Q. Mr. Bridges, referring to the record of Thursday, February 16, and reading from page 5853:

> "Q. But you didn't give the union a chance to determine whether she should be expelled or fired, did you, Mr. Bridges?
> "A. She was working—she was my stenographer, my secretary, Mr. Donohue, and I didn't have to take such matters to the union. Maybe the union don't think a great deal of me, but they put enough trust in my judgment to allow me to hire and fire a stenographer without any explanations."

Do you remember saying that?

A. Right.

Q. Have you referred, Mr. Bridges, to the minutes of the Executive Board meeting of the ILA of September 4, 1935, to determine that a motion was made and carried in lieu of accepting Norma Perry's resignation to grant her a two weeks' vacation?

A. It could be; I don't know; I haven't referred to them, but if the minutes do state——

Q. Would you refer to the minutes of the Executive Board meeting of September 4, 1935, and see if that is not the fact?

A. If you have the minutes there, if that is what the minutes say, I would say they are correct. I haven't looked it up. [5987]

Q. Then let me ask you this, Mr. Bridges, referring to the matter or incident to which you have already made reference, that is, a trial before your union of Ivan Cox—— A. Yes.

Q. In that case you acted as the prosecutor, did you not, sir? A. I think I did.

Q. Do you remember, reading from page 165 of the record, you as prosecutor making this statement——

A. What record? The record of that trial?

Q. The record of the trial of Ivan Cox.

A. I am glad to see it. I am glad to see you found it. We was wondering where that record went. We are glad to see that it has shown up in your possession, Mr. Donohue.

Q. On Sunday——

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Hallinan: May we take a look at it before you question him?

Mr. Donohue: Surely (handing record to Mr. Hallinan).

The Witness: We had lost it. It disappeared. That was the only copy of that record, and we was wondering where it went.

Mr. Hallinan: I guess Merve didn't only take money.

I think under the circumstances we might ask, if this document is the property of the union, until surprisingly it turns up in the prosecutor's hands, that it ought to be returned, or it could be marked for identification or put in evidence. [5988] Certainly if it were taken out of the records of the union by some unauthorized person, it should not continue so. There is a notation on the front that says that it is to be returned to the CIO records, or some such matter as that. [5988-A]

Mr. Hallinan: Might we ask the source from which this document came into your possession, Mr. Donohue?

Mr. Donohue: It would appear, Mr. Bridges, that this is a reporter's transcript, and I think you and I have both had experience to know that all you have to do is go to the reporter and get a copy.

Mr. Hallinan: I notice on the front there is some statement, "Return to CIO files." Is that so?

Mr. Donohue: No, that is not so.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Hallinan: What is the paper? What does it say on it?

Mr. Donohue: That is the file number of the Immigration service, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: Oh.

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, if Your Honor please?

The Court: Yes.

The Witness: Except in that case, a thing like that, the reporter does not give out transcripts, not if we get a bonded reporter. If we get a bonded reporter, Mr. Donohue, and we tell that reporter that no one gets a copy of that transcript, my understanding is that under his bond that even the United States Government can't get a copy of that transcript. That transcript there was the only copy in existence, and it disappeared from the files of the union. I am not saying the Immigration got it by any illegal methods, but that is the story. I was looking for it for quite a while. I am glad it turned up. [5989]

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Bridges, on the date of August 23rd, 1936, did you make this statement, reading from page 165:

> "Mr. Bridges: The question was brought up. I will try to confine my line of questioning to the things admissible to the trial. The charges were made that this girl had been fired. I have been attempting to prove the charges were not correct. Those charges were not made > by me. My line of questioning has been to prove that she was not fired, but she resigned."

Do you remember making that statement?

A. Right.

Q. Isn't it a fact that you did not fire Norma Perry for the reasons stated, that she was giving information to the shipowners?

A. You read my testimony, Mr. Donohue. I testified here when the issue first came up that I let her resign because I felt I had been such a damn fool, because she made such a fool out of me, and when the matter was first brought to my attention by, I think it was, Schrimpf, I didn't believe it. Later on when I discovered it myself, I think if you will read the testimony I gave at this trial, I gave her a chance to resign because I was so ashamed at being made such a fool of. I was supposed to be a smart person and know what was going on, and if I was fooled, my union was fooled. So just for the sake of the record, I let her resign. That is what I said and that is what [5990] I had reference to there. That is the situation. That is nothing new. It happens all the time. It even happens in the government.

Q. Mr. Bridges, do you remember as prosecutor in this case making the statement, "I do not think each question should be answered with a speech. My questions are direct and can be very easily answered yes or no, and what little I know about court procedure, the questions are answered yes and no and not qualified all the way around by a speech"?

A. If you are trying to accuse me of being a sea lawyer, Mr. Donohue, why, I guess you will probably find me guilty. My membership insists, I always insist I talk too much. There is nothing new about that.

Q. I was just suggesting as a one-time prosecutor you appreciate the problem which is mine here.

A. The difference there is the purpose of the prosecution. I was prosecuting Ivan F. Cox for working with the Immigration Department and labor spies to destroy the union. If you will read the transcript, you will find that out.

Q. Isn't it a fact, Mr. Bridges——

A. You read the charges and you will see who he was working with: Mr. Boyd, Mr. Bonham, Stanley Morton Doyle, down here in the hotel, dictaphones, dictagraphs all over the place. They filed a five and a half million dollar suit and took in every decent citizen in the state of [5991] California.

Q. To refresh your recollection, reading from page 5 of the record, may I read you the charges which you prepared against Ivan F. Cox?

A. No, you want——

Q. "Chairman Marlowe——"

A. Make sure I prepare the charges. Now, I might have prosecuted the charges in my capacity as president of the union. The question of presenting the charges—maybe someone like you, Mr. Donohue. I do not know whether you prepared the charges against me. You are prosecuting me.

(The document referred to was handed to Mr. Hallinan.)

Mr. Hallinan: Right.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Did you prosecute Mr. Ivan Cox under these charges:

"Chairman Marlowe: In the absence of the clerk, I will read the charges."

This is dated August 4, 1936.

"I hereby prefer charges against Secretary Ivan Cox for making statements at the regular business meeting of Local 38-79 held Monday, August 3, 1936, said charges being as follows:

"1. That Secretary Cox at the regular meeting of August 3rd made the statement that he was the victim of an attempted frameup designed to remove him from office.

"2. That Secretary Cox by direct inference implicated [5992] myself"—meaning you, Mr. Bridges—"as being part of said frameup, in that money he was responsible for had disappeared, was not due to his general inefficiency and incompetency, but was stolen or otherwise disappeared by persons placed there for that purpose.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

> "3. That Secretary Cox, in making these statements, has undoubtedly raised in the minds of members of Local 38-79 definite suspicions regarding my actions and conduct as president and business manager of the local.
> "Signed: H. R. Bridges."

Now, is there anything in that charge, Mr. Bridges, or in those charges to support the statement you have made twice, the last time just a minute ago, that Mr. Bridges—Mr. Cox was charged with having done business with Immigration agents?

A. Yes, that is the bare language of the charges. The best way to look at it is this: Later on Cox came in and admitted the truth of my charges in a signed sworn statement, how he was victimized, misled, intimidated and what not, and I can bring the sworn affidavit into the courtroom here. We will bring Cox into the courtroom if you wish. Of course, that is one thing that we might like to do, because later on Cox confessed the whole thing. I think he was telling the truth. I think he was misled. He was a religious kind of person, he was a kind of itinerant preacher. I think what he was doing, he was doing in all honesty and sincerity, and he eventually said when the United [5993] States Government came around and told him these things, he had no idea that the agents of the Government were misleading him and lying to him and he believed them. So the agents of the Government, working together with these labor spies and union-busters convinced Cox that the money that had disappeared—now, we do not know how the money disappeared—Cox is responsible. So it was not a question of the disappearance of the money, but here is what Cox fell for: He was convinced that the money had been stolen by Communists in the union in order to blame Cox for the missing funds and thereby have him removed from office in order to put in his place a so-called Communist. That is what the agents of the Immigration Service got hold of poor old Ivan Cox and convinced him of, and Cox's own sworn statement—we can probably find the man—we certainly have his sworn statement—he said, "Look, I didn't think the agents of the Government would lie to me like that." He said, "I didn't know I was dealing with a bunch of labor spies and stool pigeons, Stanley Morton Doyle and others, and they fooled me." Now, there is the facts of that case. So when I pressed the charges against him—if I hadn't done it, there was a terrific demand on behalf of the membership, I had to do it in my official capacity. The technical charge was he actually got up before the membership meeting and he read a long statement, and that statement said just what I am saying now, that certain people in the union—he inferred that I was one of them—had deliberately gotten away [5994] with some funds in order to make it appear that he was responsible for stealing money—I do not think the man stole any money—he was responsible, and the purpose of it was to furnish a basis for removing him from office, so that a Communist could take the job of secretary-treasurer. ~~And~~ that is what happened. And therefore I had to bring the thing before the membership and have him removed from office. I didn't know at the time—I didn't know at the time the fellow was being misled. Again, I thought he was doing it deliberately.

Q. As a matter of fact, Mr. Bridges, wasn't Ivan Cox found not guilty on this trial?

A. Oh, no—I forget.

Q. You say he was not?

A. I don't know. I don't remember. I don't believe that. Cox got out of the union, out of the job, and I don't know what happened to him. If that is the case, you only have part of the record, Mr. Donohue.

(Document was handed to Mr. Hallinan.)

Mr. Hallinan: That is all right.

Mr. Donohue: Would you ask Mr. Bridges to read the concluding paragraph?

Mr. Hallinan: Just read it off.

Mr. Donohue: Reading from page 198 of the record:

> "Chairman Marlowe: In answer to the first charge that 'Secretary Cox at the regular meeting of August 3rd made a [5995] statement that he was a victim of an attempted frame-up designed to remove him from office,' the jury > answers that by saying they find Brother Cox guilty of having made that statement. They believe that any testimony presented does not cast any reflection whatsoever upon Brother Bridges' character, and they find him not guilty of charge 2 and charge 3."

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

And you will remember, as I just read to you, that charge 2 was that "Secretary Cox, by direct inference, implicated myself—you, Mr. Bridges—as being part of said frameup, and that money he was responsible for had disappeared, was not due to his general inefficiency and incompetency, but was stolen or otherwise disappeared by persons placed there for that purpose," and that he was found not guilty of charge 3, which reads "that Secretary Cox in making these statements has undoubtedly raised in the minds of members of Local 38-79 definite suspicions regarding my actions"—meaning you, Mr. Bridges—"and conduct as president and business manager of the local."

A. It just shows you how fair a trial people get in our union. Now, where is all this Communist control of the union, Mr. Donohue? There is a rank and file committee. That shows you how we do business. Where is Bridges dictator in that setup? Why can't we throw people out of the union just like that? Or have them dumped by dumping squads, as the Government charges and complains, and some of these characters who come up [5996] here and testify. Something is wrong. There is the truth. The fellow was found guilty of the main thing, as far as I was concerned, that is, he got up before the membership meeting and admitted he had been playing around with labor spies and the union-busters. That is all I was concerned with. I wasn't worrying about the few dollars that might or might not disappear. I was never sure—I never did think the man had stolen the money. Cox wasn't that type of a person. He was very inefficient, even though he did his best. He was a victim of these other agents working on the outside, and that includes the Immigration Association—I mean the department, Boyd, Bonham and others. And Bonham and Boyd—I am not sure if Mr. Boyd was there at the time, but Bonham comes down from Seattle, brings Cox over to a hotel room here, and gets a long, sworn statement from him alleging all these things, and so forth, and the guy was dreaming. Later on he was only repeating what he had been told to say. We have that and we can prove that all those charges—I proved that in the charges, and that is all I was concerned with, to bring to the attention of the union membership just how labor spies operated in the union, just how stooges operated in the union, and just how the Immigration Department used labor spies in and outside the union to bust the union. And I proved that, and that is what the trial committee found [5997] was so.

Q. Mr. Bridges, you had had a little more power by 1950 with the union than you had in 1936, don't you?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. No, no more power in '50 than in '36. Probably a little less, Mr. Donohue, probably a little less.

Q. Now, Mr. Bridges, referring to page 5390 of the transcript, of Thursday, February 9th, do you recall being asked this question:

> "Q. Did that Maritime Federation of the Pacific continue along for some time? Is it still in existence?
> "A. No, it was disbanded in 1939, and we established in its stead a national CIO Maritime Committee. In other words, we tried—our idea was to make it a national organization, and at the suggestion of the ILWU, that is, the Longshoremen, myself joining with some other unions, we disbanded the Maritime Federation of the Pacific, or we merged it with the national CIO Maritime Committee."

A. Did I say 1939 there, Mr. Donohue? Because I think that is a mistake, if I did say that on the year. I think the Maritime Federation was going after that. I believe—because in the 1941 convention of our international union, I presented a recommendation on the Federation. Now, I am not saying that I didn't say '39, but if I did, believe me——

Q. You were mistaken?

A. I think I was mistaken as to the date. There is no need for me to say the Federation went out of business in '39 when it [5998] could have gone out in '40 or '41. That is a mistake. As far as I can recall. And the record is the best thing; the Federation was still going in '41.

Q. Do you recall that it was in '37 that the National Maritime Commission or the Maritime Commission of the National CIO was formed?

A. National Maritime?

Q. Yes. A. That's right.

Q. '37? A. Yes.

Q. And the Maritime Federation of the Pacific continued until '41, did it not? A. I think so.

Q. Do you know, Mr. Bridges, of your own knowledge, whether or not as a matter of fact the Communist Party was interested in the continuation of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific, at least until the time when the National Maritime Committee of the CIO became effective?

A. I don't know that I was. We were; the union was. And although the Maritime Committee was established in 1937, my recommendation at our '41 convention was that the ILWU at that time lead, to have the Maritime Federation of the Pacific, as such, disbanded and to become a sort of a western division of the CIO Maritime Committee. That was the recommendation. So as to [5999] whether the Communist Party was for it or against it, I don't know. If it was for it, it had good sense. If it was against it, they were crazy.

Q. What was the reason, then, for its ultimate disbandment?

A. Ultimate disbandment of what?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Maritime Federation of the Pacific. If it was good in '37 to continue it, why wasn't it good in '41?

A. I don't know. A lot of things were good in '37 and no good in '41, Mr. Donohue. A lot of things were, you know—times change. Progress sets in. There was a good solid organization, did a very good job, and effective job. But it eventually had served its purpose. Expansion was needed. The thing had to grow. It was no longer, the Maritime Federation of the Pacific, was no longer suitable, in my opinion, or capable of serving the needs of the membership of the organization. It needed to broaden, needed to take on additional duties. It needed to become national and even somewhat international in scope. So it no longer served, as at least I seen it, the best interests of the membership. We could do a better job with a broader organization, and that was the only reason.

Q. Mr. Bridges, do you remember on the 14th of May, 1937, having made a speech at the University of Washington Luncheon Club?

A. Oh, I remember that one; that is an old chestnut, Mr. Donohue.

Q. You remember that one? [6000]

A. Yes. Do you want me to tell you about it?

Q. I want you to tell me, Mr. Bridges, whether or not you were correctly quoted in the press——

A. No, I don't know what happened in the press, but the press at that time, there was one paper in Seattle, there was—this was at the University of Washington, Seattle. There was one paper we had a strike against, the Newspaper Guild was on strike against the paper at the time, and we were not correctly quoted in that paper. Now, I may be wrong as to that, but there was one particular paper that quoted what I said, that was—they had it all wrong.

Q. Suppose I ask you, after Mr. Hallinan looks at it, to look at the account of your speech in the Seattle Daily Times.

The Court: Is this a convenient time to recess?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, Your Honor.

The Court: Ladies and getnlemen, we will take the morning recess at this time. The same admonition not to suffer any person to converse with you on any subject of this trial, nor to form or express an opinion thereon until it is finally submitted to you.

(Recess.) [6001]

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, Your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Bridges, would you look at the article in the Seattle Daily Times of the 14th of May, 1937, and read the quote from your speech before the University of Washington Luncheon Club and tell me if you are correctly quoted?

(Document handed to witness by the Clerk.)

A. No, that is not a correct quote, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Can you tell us what you did say?

A. I was speaking before a meeting of the students of the University of Washington in that year, by invitation. And after I had spoken on the various labor problems, I think that fundamentally the issue being discussed was the question of various forms of trade unionism; that is, such as craft unionism versus industrial unionism. It was the time when there was switching over of many unions from the American Federation of Labor to the CIO. And after I had spoken on this matter, there was a question period, an open forum. And various students asked questions. Eventually one little girl gets up, I guess she was a girl about 14 or 15, and she presents me with this kind of a question: Now, Mr. Bridges, isn't it true that if you succeed, if you want to, as you seemingly want to succeed, in organizing all the workers into unions, and if all these workers through their organization get good wages and certain other things, and if the union movement succeeds in having all the old age pensions [6002] —liberal old age pensions for elderly citizens, health plans and things like that, and if in great part such matters have to be paid for by taxes, heavy taxes on corporations, businesses and what with high wages, employers can't stay in business, then all the employers will go out of business, won't they, and all the workers in the United States, not having any work to do will starve to death? Well, I said, "That is a hypothetical question, but it would seem to me that as far as the American people are concerned, if they have got a choice between starving to death and having the employers in business, they will keep on working, whether the employers are in business or not. They can produce the clothes and the shoes and the other things. They will produce the food and they will eat. And if the employers can't make any money doing those things, then there won't be any employers, I presume. But I don't think the people will stand idly by and starve to death for that reason."

So it was a hypothetical question, that type of answer was given, and the report appeared in the press; it was the result—I checked on it and issued a statement of denial at the time. The next morning when the statement appeared. We had a convention on, the matter came up, it was discussed in my own convention, and an official press release was issued from the convention saying it was a complete distortion. And then we checked up, got in touch with the newspaper, and they said, "Well; we quoted one of the students on the campus that was acting as a [6003] reporter that day and sent in the story," and that was their story. Now, that is the whole question.

Q. Then the article in the Seattle Daily Times does not accurately quote you?

A. That's right. And again let me point out that the denial in effect stating what I have said here today was issued at the time, or the next day, or the day the statement appeared, I think.

Q. Would you look at the article in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer and see if you are correctly quoted in that article concerning the same speech?

(Document handed to witness.)

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. This is the same statement.

Q. In a different newspaper?

A. Yes, that's right. Same statement, same story.

Q. Then would you look at an article——

A. This part down here (indicating) might have been exact wording, but it looks like a statement I had made, but that is a different matter.

Q. Would you take a look at the Associated Press dispatch to the San Francisco Examiner and see if you were also misquoted in that newspaper?

(Document handed to the witness.) [6004]

A. Yes, this is the same statement, and the Associated Press lifted it. The story originally only appeared—I don't know, I didn't look at the date of that Seattle P. I. Is it the same date?

Q. The following day, Mr. Bridges.

A. The Seattle P. I. picked it up and the Associated Press picked it up and the Seattle Times. The Seattle Times originally got it from a student on the campus that was practicing to be a reporter. The explanation is what I am telling you. It was denied at the time.

Q. Do you believe, Mr. Bridges, that there will come a time when there will be no employer class in the United States?

A. I will never decide that question. I don't know. Your guess is as good as mine, Mr. Donohue. It might depend more on the employers than it does upon anything I believe in. I would say that it is not a question of what I do about it. There are certain countries in the world where the people of that country have seen fit to, in some respects at least, do away with the employer class as a whole. In some other countries they did away with certain sections of them. That is neither here nor there. What has that got to do with me? I am not responsible for it. The people of England—the people of England want to nationalize their banks. Well, I guess a lot of explanations can be found, but the fact of the matter is it is an accomplished fact, and I presume—I don't know how the [6005] new election is going to come out in England, but I understand the labor movement is running on a program of more of the same.

Q. Would you favor the abolition of the employer class in the United States, Mr. Bridges?

A. It depends. If they start favoring my abolition I will favor their abolition.

Q. Have you publicly stated, as was testified by one of your witnesses, that there is no middle ground in your mind between the employer and the employee?

A. I don't know what we are doing with these shipowners and other employers around here, trying to reduce Panama Canal tolls, working with the California cotton growers to get their cotton stored and shipped away, instead of shipping Texas cotton or Brazilian cotton to the Far East, working to reestablish trade with China, working to settle various disputes. It is a funny way to go about the abolition of the employing class. In fact, I have been accused in my union of strengthening them too much. I am having a hard time explaining some of the things we are doing. However, in the way we operate as a union, we can't help the fact that as a group of union people on one side of the bargaining table we are after more wages and other things that are costing employers more money. The employer is in business to make a profit. The way he makes a profit is he sells goods for a profit, and the more wages he has [6006] to pay the less profit. That is what he is doing in business. No hard feelings because of that. When we sit across the table from an employer we know he is not in business to give us jobs. Some employers try to tell us that. Some of them actually believe it, but we just don't believe it, because we haven't yet seen any employer in business to give anybody jobs. When it is unprofitable to stay in business they shut down, and generally speaking—maybe they don't like to do it. I don't say that all employers like to do it. They don't deliberately shut down in order to throw people out of work. But the fact of the matter is we had a big depression ten or fifteen years with many million people out of work and a lot of employers went out of business. A lot of small businessmen went broke and busted. A lot of banks failed. But the fact of the matter is we representing the trade union, as I have to, sit across the table from an employer or a group of employers, and I know as a matter of simple economic fact that if they pay more wages their profits are less. They are in business for greater profit. So there is a clash of interests there. Now, what are we going to do about it? There are two or three ways to settle it. You can settle it under the law and the system of society that exists, and try to compromise the issue, which is the way we do it. Or you can pick up guns and start shooting each other. Now, that is the way the thing operates. We use the compromise method; collective bargaining, organization of labor unions, [6007] arbitration and other things, and upon occasion the collective bargaining process results in a strike. But our union never uses a strike except as a last resort. We never strike until the workers who have to do the striking have had a chance to vote, sometimes on two or three occasions—not only once, two or three times by secret ballot. We have a rule in our union that unless the ballot carries by 85 or 90 per cent we won't risk strike, and every time we go on strike all the officers go off the payroll, including me. That is a rule in our union. No strikes in our union where the workers are on strike and the officers are getting paid; none of that business. Off the payroll we go, too. So we got a few rules about strikes in our union, because we realize, we believe at least, strikes are pretty horrible, dangerous things. The people who really and truly suffer in a strike are the workers. But some classes or groups of employers, sometimes there is no other way to handle the situation, and no one regrets more than the officers of our union, believe me, when a situation develops to a strike situation.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Mr. Bridges, I ask you again, were you correctly quoted by your witness as having said that there is no middle ground between the employer and the employee?

A. You mean Jaworski of Stockton?

Q. Yes.

A. At that time I was correctly quoted. I think he correctly [6008] quoted just about what I said and what I felt at that time. And, believe me, there was no middle ground. But the reason is the employers were saying that at the time, they were sending people all over the State here, the State of California; they were sending out letters; they were on the radio; they were moving through the chambers of commerce and various other types of employer organizations, and it was an employers' slogan: There is no middle ground. We must stop the march inland. They were referring to the fact that our union was spreading, organizing away from the waterfront. At that time there was very little organization, and up in Stockton there was no middle ground. One of the officers of our union in Stockton was shot dead on the street. His name was Morency, a friend of Mahaffey. He was shot dead on the streets of Stockton by an employer. The employer went to jail; pleaded guilty, I think, of manslaughter and went to jail for two or three years. But our own officer, Walter Mahaffey, was dead, and it was more than our life was worth to go in some of these areas in California because there was an organization operating called the Associated Farmers. It was financed by the big interests here in San Francisco. So when I made the statement at that time, "There is no middle ground," I was repeating or parroting the slogan of the employers." "There is no middle ground in this fight," they were saying. "It is destroy them or they will destroy us." So in that sense I was correctly quoted. [6009]

Q. And that is the same argument that you advanced to the students of the University of Washington?

A. Look now; let's get this straight. If someone is out to destroy me, Mr. Donohue, I thought I said that all along—what am I going to do? Stand around? Be pushed around? I do not mean to convey that impression. I don't mean we are looking for trouble, that our Union is looking for trouble with employers or anyone else, but we are not going to stand idly by and be destroyed. And we fight. It is that simple. I thought you had the same idea. I guess I was mistaken.

Q. Mr. Bridges, what is your attitude toward the opposition in your union?

A. Oh, I think it is a kind of healthy thing; as long as they keep them above the belt it is fine and dandy. We don't mind opposition. We do a lot to stir up opposition. All we ask is to keep the punches high, keep the thing fair, play according to the rules, lay off behind-the-scenes activity with the Immigration Department, Mr. Boyd. You don't understand, Mr. Donohue. Right now we are in a fight in our union with a group of people who want to support Dave Beck. You know, Mr. Dave Beck was instrumental in getting Mr. Boyd appointed to his job. Dave Beck is in effect getting paid off by some of the things that are going on here right now. Check it and you will find it is true. It dates back to a battle in 1937 we had with Dave Beck. You do a little checking up. We have a group [6010] of people in our union that have been paid off. They have been paid off by the Teamsters Union, a rich, powerful union. They are trying to swing the union over to the Teamsters Union run by a gangster like Beck. Gangsters' work. Those things happen, but they won't get to first base with the bulk of our membership. They will mislead a few, and once again these people become Communist experts. They say, No, we are not trying to wreck the union. They are trying to liberate the union from Communists. That is the argument always used. We are old hands in the game; we know those things are false and untrue. We know what the score is. The opposition in our union, as long as the opposition is honest opposition, as long as they say to our membership like, "Bridges and Bridges' supporters, maybe they are all right to a point, but we think if you elect us to office we can do a better job," they have more guarantees to protect their rights in our union than any other union in the United States. These same people who adve-

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

cate following the policies of other unions, if they were in those other unions they wouldn't have the right to talk back. There are plenty of unions in the CIO where the local officers or the members of the rank and file are not allowed to get up and talk back to two or three international officers, but no one hesitates in the union I represent to stand up and say what they think of me. You don't talk back in the Teamsters Union; no one talks back to Dave Beck and keeps his [6011] job or membership in the union. So on the question of what we think of the opposition in the union, I respect the opposition as long as they stay trade unionists. But when they start any phony business, working with forces outside the union that are anti-labor, union-busting forces, they don't become an opposition any more. They become a union-busting organization working within the organization to destroy the union, and therefore to depress wages and worsen working conditions of the members of the union. That is what we resent.

Q. Do you think the present opposition in your union is honest? A. Is honest?

Q. Yes. A. Some of it; not all of it.

Q. Or do you refer to all the opposition as being phonies and stool pigeons?

A. No, I don't. My position in the union is well known, Mr. Donohue. The fellows in the union know that I do not refer to the opposition that way. I make it a point on many, many occasions to say I believe the opposition, at least the bulk of them, are honest and sincere and truly believe that a change in a certain situation will be all to the good. And sometimes the opposition is right. Sometimes they are right, at least the membership thinks they are right, and when the membership makes a decision and puts the opposition in the leadership of a union, everybody knows my position, that is, look, you people [6012] have made the choice. My responsibility it to work with these people, and I do.

However, there are certain sections or individuals in the opposition that I classify openly before the membership as being phonies, and for good reason. Anybody I catch working with Mr. Boyd and Barber in order to intimidate, jail or deport members of my union, not because they are concerned with their political status or anything like that, but because they are outspoken in trade unions, I do not consider those people honest opposition. I consider them labor spies within the union. And I am not sitting here talking about something I don't know, Mr. Donohue. When I accuse certain—I don't accuse the whole Department of Immigration, but when I accuse certain agents of the Immigration Department of doing these things, I know what I am talking about and I can prove it.

Q. Mr. Bridges, you indicated that on at least two occasions you have discussed your present defense with Mr. Schneidermann?

A. That is right.

Q. Have you discussed it with him on more than two occasions?

A. I think that I said two or three.

Q. Or three?

A. Yes. I didn't mean, if I did do that, I didn't mean to limit it to two occasions. Now, let me see. Two, possibly three, occasions since the indictment. Maybe the first time was around the time of the indictment or shortly thereafter. [6013] Two, probably three times. I wouldn't like to limit it to two, because it could have been three.

Q. During the second deportation hearing to which we have made some reference, did you discuss your defense then with Mr. Schneidermann?

A. Yes—not the defense. I discussed another point with him and that is this point: The issue in the case was, Was I a member—or the charges was being a member of the Communist Party and the second charge was being affiliated with the Communist Party, and if either of those charges was sustained by evidence, I was subject to deportation. Now, then, in our case we refused to offer any defense of Communism throughout the entire case. We offered no defense of Communism, its policies, philosophy or any thing like that, and when the matter finally went to the court of appeals, the District Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court, the question came up, and the question was raised by us with the Communist Party as to whether we would consent to them trying to say something in a legal fashion through the proceedings in their own defense. The situation was this: All kinds of accusations and charges were made against what they stood for, and their philosophy, program, etc., etc. We more or less supported all the charges by keeping silent. This was their claim. So they wanted permission of myself and the attorneys in the case to enter some form of a brief, at least in the hearings in the upper [6014] courts, not in the lower courts here, in the upper courts, defending their position or disclaiming a lot of things they were accused of. I forget what happened. I left it up to the lawyers. I thought it was a legal question, and said, "Whatever the lawyers want to decide, that is good enough for me." So I remember that incident.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Then you did discuss the matter of your defense with Mr. Schneidermann at that time?

A. I wouldn't call it that. It was not a matter of our defense; it was a matter of the defense of the Communist Party in the proceedings, as I have stated. They had been attacked. We had more or less concurred with the attack by being silent. We offered no defense of the Communist Party in any form or manner whatsoever, and they merely came in to ask if we would have any objections if they filed a brief, got some legal form before—I think the United States Supreme Court—claiming the allegations against their Party were wrong, and, as I say, on that particular legal point I left the position up to the attorneys, but they were not consulted by our attorneys, as I recall—I, at least.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Isn't it a fact, Mr. Bridges, on many occasions during that period of time you have met with Mr. Shneidermann in Mr. Rathborne's office and discussed the question of your defense?

A. No, no, no.

Q. Mr. Rathborne was associated in your defense, was he not? [6015]

A. As secretary to the Council? At least in a way he would be as secretary of the Council, yes.

Q. As a matter of fact, more than being secretary of the CIO Council, was he not chairman of the State CIO Bridges Defense Committee?

A. He might be, Mr. Donohue. I don't recall at the moment, but it could be; it might well be. I woudn't want to deny it. [6015-A]

Q. Mr. Bridges, do you recall attending a meeting in Fresno, Caifornia, in the early summer of 1942 at the Hotel California, the meeting being a meeting of the Executive Committee of the CIO?

A. I don't recall, but it is possible I was there. If it was an executive committee meeting of the CIO at that time, it is entirely possible I attended in the capacity of regional director. I just don't recall, but I will check the record and let you know.

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. Could we get the exact date and we will go through the record and see what we can find?

Mr. Donohue: I don't have the exact date, but whenever it was that the executive committee of the CIO held their meeting, which I take it was held prior to the annual convention and it was held in the early summer of 1942 at the Hotel California.

Q. Do you recall, Mr. Bridges, that while you were at this meeting you received word of the action of Attorney General Biddle with respect to your deportation proceeding?

A. Well, I recall receiving word of Mr. Biddle's decision. I can tell you exactly where I was. It is something that I mightn't easily forget. If you will check the record, I was staying in the Piccadilly Hotel in New York City at the time, whenever it was.

Q. When——

A. We will check up the time that the decision came out, and [6016] I was registered at that hotel, the Piccadilly Hotel in New York City, I think it was around 1942.

Q. Can you tell us—— A. I think.

Q. ——whether or not, if you recall being at this CIO executive committee?

A. No, I am wrong, Mr. Donohue. Let me correct that. Now, I am wrong. I am a little mixed up there. I was in New York at the time of Judge Sears' decision, not Mr. Biddle's. I was in San Francisco at the time of Mr. Biddle's decision. I am wrong on that.

Q. Now, perhaps do you recall that you were at this meeting at Fresno when you were advised of the decision of the attorney general?

A. It is my recollection I was right here in San Francisco.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Would you recall having attended a meeting in the Hotel California at which other than yourself, the following persons were present: Mr. Mervyn Rathborne as secretary-treasurer of the CIO Council; Mr. Phil Connally, the then president; Mr. James Doherty, Mr. Revels Cayton; Miss Sandra Martin? Do you recall? A. No, I don't.

Q. Do you recall having a meeting with those persons? A. No, I don't recall.

Q. And do you remember whether or not —— [6017]

A. I have met with those persons as a group and along with others and individuals, many times, and I just don't recall this specific meeting.

Q. Well, would you recall that at this time this group, discussing the question of your defense, suggested the formation of a CIO Defense Committee and that Mr. Mervyn Rathborne be made chairman of that committee?

A. No, I don't recall, but I think that—those things are a matter of record, and instead of me trying to recall it, Mr. Donohue, I can certainly produce the record. I have a distinct recollection at the time Mr. Biddle made his decision I was here in San Francisco and I dispatched a telegram to Mr. Biddle, I think. I sent a telegram off that day on the matter. I received a call from Washington, I think the day I came out I received a call from Mr. Donald Nelson. Donald Nelson at the time was chairman of the War Production Board. He called me and he says, "I hope this decision won't make any difference in your attitude towards the whole production program." I had already discussed certain things with him; and also there was another development took place, that when the decision came down, some of our fellows began to walk off the job. They were pretty sore about it, pretty mad. So that was the occasion of the phone call from Mr. Donald Nelson. And I sent him a telegram at the time assuring him that the decision, although we felt disturbed about it, would not in any way change our attitude toward the whole [6018] production program. And I issued a public statement for the purpose of urging any of the members of my union that felt mad or disturbed and thereby wanted to quit their jobs, that that wasn't the way to handle it, and they shouldn't do so. So that is why I recall being in San Francisco. And I can check the record on that, too.

Q. Mr. Bridges, George Wilson was secretary to the National Bridges Defense Committee, was he not? A. I don't think he was.

Q. Will you please check your record on that also, too, please?

A. Mr. David MacDonald was.

Q. Would you check your record on that, Mr. Bridges? A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Bridges——

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. It might seem funny to you, Mr. Donohue, but some of these details of official positions I am not too clear on. There are so many of them that you can get them mixed up, you know. Some people hold a half dozen different titles, and it might seem that I worked very close to some of these people, but that is not quite the fact.

Q. Do you remember one year the CIO national convention was in Chicago? A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall what year that was, Mr. Bridges?

A. '44, Hotel Stevens. I think it was the '44 convention. [6019]

Q. And do you recall that you went to that convention in Chicago in company with Mr. Rathborne?

A. You bet. If that is the time, I think we both took the train together.

Q. Yes. Do you recall that you shared a compartment on the City of San Francisco at the time?

A. Yes, played gin rummy all the way through.

Q. Now—— A. I won.

Q. Now, in addition to playing gin rummy, Mr. Bridges——

A. Rathborne got the gin; I wasn't drinking.

Q. In addition, Mr. Rathborne—or Mr. Bridges, to your playing gin rummy with Mr. Rathborne, who got the gin, do you remember discussing with

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Rathborne the attitude of the Communist Party toward Phil Murray and the CIO?

A. I might well have.

Q. Do you remember discussing with Mr. Rathborne that you disagreed with the Communist Party policy of appeasement toward Phil Murray?

A. On more than one occasion I did that.

Q. And do you recall that at the same time you discussed with Mr. Rathborne the advisability of fighting Phil Murray on specific units?

A. I said on more than one occasion I did that; I didn't have any specific reference to that conversation. If you travel [6020] across country in a compartment with a person, you can talk about a lot of things over two or three days. But on the question of disagreeing on certain matters with respect to Phil Murray, I did that on more than one occasion. That is, I thought that sometimes the efforts to get along with Phil Murray were a little too strained. And on the question of disagreeing with him, well, that is a fact; I disagreed with him.

Q. Well, do you have any recollection of discussing it with Mr. Rathborne in 1944 on the train between here and Chicago?

A. I have no specific recollection but it is certainly entirely possible.

Q. Did you know at that time, Mr. Bridges, what the Communist Party policy was with respect to Mr. Murray and the CIO?

A. Apparently, if I did, according to what I have heard here, probably I got it from Rathborne.

Q. Do you know what the Communist Party was? A. No.

Q. Toward Phil Murray?

A. No, I can't specifically recall. I am answering your questions. But I have some recollection as to this question of trying to get along with Phil Murray, and it didn't sit well with me on many occasions.

Q. Did you know at that time that Mr. Rathborne was a member of the Communist Party?

A. I don't think I did, no. [6021]

Q. Did you ever know that he was a member of the Communist Party?

A. Well, I am a little mixed up on that. I have a tough time upon occasions trying to remember, whether it is a result of testimony I heard here or some impression I had prior to that time. Now, it is my recollection, my impression that I did not know that Rathborne was a member of the Communist Party.

Q. And it is your present impression that you didn't learn that until you read about Rathborne testifying against you in the public press?

A. More or less that's right. You remember I asked you that once before. Now, when you asked me again whether he was a Communist, I asked you, "What do you mean?" you told me and I am answering the question in that light. Of course I don't want to make any mistakes here.

Q. Do you recall a further conversation, Mr. Bridges, in that compartment while you were playing gin rummy about the relationship between Mr. Lou Goldblatt and Mr. Mervyn Rathborne?

A. I don't remember. Again, as I say, Mr. Donohue, I would be reluctant to try and say what we did or did not talk about. You talk about an awful lot of things in a couple of days traveling across country in the same compartment, with Rathborne or anyone else.

Q. Do you remember saying to Mr. Rathborne at that time that Goldblatt is a good party member and a hard worker? [6022] A. No.

Q. And do you remember that you criticized Mr. Rathborne for continuing the dispute which existed between him and Mr. Goldblatt?

A. Well, if he was doing that, that would probably be my attitude. If I thought that he was carrying on a vendetta against Lou Goldblatt, I would be opposed to that for two reasons, because Goldblatt is a good man, and secondly, I can't see how it would do the union any good. But of course that is the trouble in some of this testimony, Mr. Donohue. You see, it is partly true. Now, you say, "Do you remember Rathborne—." "Did I say that Goldblatt was a good, hard worker and a good party member?" Well, I have always said that Goldblatt is a hard worker. So all you have to do is add a little more and you have got something that is partly true, and of course some of it is partly untrue. And that is one of the things that characterizes a lot of the testimony I have heard up here. So Schomaker gets up, what he says is partly true. The important points are lies. Ross gets up. What he says is partly true, but the important point is lies. Manning Johnson and the rest. So these half-truths are hard to fight off.

Q. You mean that portions of the testimony of any witness which would attempt to place you in the Communist Party as a member is always a lie, Mr. Bridges?

A. Yes, as well as other things. I wasn't in Stockton—I wasn't [6023] in New York at that time; I was in Stockton, Mr. Donohue. Of course, conceivably people can be mistaken.

Q. Even you, Mr. Bridges?

A. I have been mistaken so many times it is not funny, Mr. Donohue. But I don't get mistaken to the point that I am on the witness stand taking an oath and trying to send people to jail. I don't get mistaken to that point.

Q. When I asked you the other day about a meeting in an apartment house at the chocolate plant, you said you had no such recollection of any such place, correct?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. That's right. The way you described it. But I was thinking it over later. The chocolate plant is what brought it to my mind. And we had a dispute with a place over there, it seems to me it wasn't the chocolate plant, but it was the plant right alongside. And we spent some time out there some years ago, and I got to thinking that over. Now, I believe one of our members or someone lived right across the street from that plant. Now, I don't know if that is North Point Street or anything like that. And I remember going over to the place at one time. I forget who he was. It was somebody—I got the impression he was a member of our union or some other union. He was sympathetic, and I remember spending about five or ten minutes there talking to him during that dispute. Now, I can check up as to when that dispute was.

Q. Mr. Bridges, isn't it a fact that frequently during the [6024] 1936-1937 strike, that you and Walter Lambert and Mervyn Rathborne met often in a second floor front apartment at 995 North Point Street? A. No. I mean, it is not a fact.

Q. Did you ever attend any meetings of any kind at the home of William Plunkert?

A. No. I used to visit Bill Plunkert. Now, I used to get down there.

Q. Prior to the time that Mr. Plunkert entered the Navy at some time during the war, did you meet at his home with Harry Bridges, with William Schneidermann, Walter Lambert and Archie Brown and Mervyn Rathborne?

Mr. Hallinan: The whole thing is explained now. The whole thing is explained. There are two Harry Bridges. One of them is in Stockton, one of them is in New York, the gentleman on the stand is obviously not the Harry Bridges who is referred to as the person with whom he met in some other place.

Now, counsel has said that a couple of times, asked him if he met with Harry Bridges. And it didn't occur to me until just this moment that that explains the entire thing. Now, I think that we ought to have some definition, description or idea of the Harry Bridges with whom this Harry Bridges on the stand is asked, "Did he meet in a certain place?" Now, is this the man, or is it a woman? What about him? Who is he? I think we ought to have that explained right now, and then that clears up [6025] everything. Then Johnson and Crouch and Ross weren't lying, people up at Stockton were all telling the truth, the "Harvey" that Crouch rode with in an automobile may now be the Harry Bridges that counsel brings in. And I think we ought to have this thing straightened out right now as to—I think that this clears up a great deal. It explains the manifest confusion that exists either in the minds of the witness or counsel—and my own; because I had assumed that there was only one Harry Bridges involved. Now, could we find out before we go any further who is the Harry Bridges that he is now asked if he met with in that particular apartment?

Mr. Donohue: Quite clever, Mr. Hallinan, and I take it by now Mr. Bridges——

Mr. Hallinan: I don't think it is clever.

Mr. Donohue: ——has resumed his composure.

Mr. Hallinan: I disclaim any cleverness. I don't think it requise any intellectual celerity at all for a person to finally come to the realization that if this Harry Bridges met another Harry Bridges, that there are two Harry Bridges, and to inquire who he may be.

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Hallinan, split personalities are not unknown in cases of this character; but we assume and allege and expect to prove that only one Harry Bridges was a member of the Communist Party—that is the Harry Bridges sitting on the witness stand. [6026]

Mr. Hallinan: Oh. Well, then, is it also alleged that he possesses the virtue of circumambiency for instance, that he can be in two places at the same time; for instance, Stockton and New York? That he meets himself at this place that you have been designating? If there is some mysterious circumstance, I am inclined to think that counsel is a little inclined to accept sort of the miraculous—bizarre and strange notions, and this may well be one of them. Now, if we can find out who is this other Harry Bridges, I think we will have gone far toward solving this proposition. Are there two or are there one? Is there another Harry Bridges? Not "Is there" but "Who is this other Harry Bridges?" Let's have it.

Mr. Donohue: May we take the noon recess?

Mr. Hallinan: Now, I think we should have an answer to that, Judge, before we go further. Counsel doesn't need two hours to think that out.

The Court: I think perhaps we will take the noon recess, Mr. Hallinan. We will take the noon recess, ladies and gentlemen. May I again admonish you not to discuss the case under any conditions, nor to form an opinion until it is submitted to you.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to 2:00 o'cock p.m.) [6027]

Monday, February 20, 1950, 2:00 P.M.

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Mr. Bridges, I don't think I got your answer to the last question I asked you this morning, as to whether or not you had attended a series of meetings in the early days of the war at the home of William Plunkert, with Mr. Schneidermann, Mr. Lambert, Mr. Archie Brown, Mr. Mervyn Rathborne.

A. The answer is "No." I said—I don't know if I said, but I had been in Mr. Plunkert's home many, many times. I was never there for a meeting. I was a friend of Plunkert's, used to visit him more or less frequently. Social visits, as I recall. Bill Plunkert is a very advanced thinker and we discussed quite a few matters.

Q. But you were never there with the parties whose nmes I have called to your attention?

A. In a meeting?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. No. By that I mean I might have been there upon social occasions. Now Plunkert used to have a house and every once in a while he might give a little party and I don't recall who, particularly, was at that party, but some of those people might have [6028] been there. I don't recall. That is what I recall.

Q. Mr. Schneidermann might have been there?

A. He might have been.

Q. Mr. Walter Lambert might have been there?

A. He might have been.

Q. Mr. Archie Brown might have been there?

A. He might have been. I am talking about social occasions. There might have been 30 or 40 other people there.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Mr. Rathborne might have been there?

A. Might have been.

Q. On this question that Mr. Hallinan raised as to identity, you have not always been known as Harry Renton Bridges, have you, Mr. Bridges?

A. Yes. What do you mean? Yes, I have. What do you mean by that?

Mr. Hallinan: I didn't raise any question as to his identity; it was you that raised the question as to identity. It was counsel that brought in the "doppelganger" or whatever it was, by the name of Harry Bridges, not I.

A. (Continuing): If you mean additional first names, that was what you meant, Mr. Donohue?

Q. Well, under what name was your birth registered, Mr. Bridges? May I hand you——

Mr. Donohue: Let him see it.

(Document handed to the witness by the Clerk.) [6029]

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): ——a certified copy of your birth certificate to refresh your recollection.

A. It is something I have never seen in my life before. I don't know——

Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment, Mr. Bridges. Might we see it before there is any discussion on it?

(Document handed to counsel.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Isn't it a fact, Mr.

Bridges, that your birth was registered under the name of Alfred Renton Bryant Bridges?

A. I think that's right. Which, incidentally, means nothing. I believe if you will look at my testimony in the Landis hearing the same question came up and I testified as to where the "Harry" came from and how. So that is a matter of record. I didn't know that is what you was asking me, Mr. Donohue. I haven't seen my birth certificate before. That was all.

Q. Mr. Bridges, referring again to the committee which you referred to as "God's" Committee, is it your recollection that membership therein was limited to the northern section of California?

A. Yes, that's right; except that was one of the complaints—that it wasn't a formal committee. It was an informal committee. One of the complaints that I think Connally used to make. Well, not that I think; Connally did make it—was that it was a Northern California committee, and that was the name he applied to [6030] it, God's Committee. The "Brain Trust," "Running the Works." Connally used to scream all over the place, "What is this?"

Q. Did you know Mr. Schneidermann to be a member of that committee?

A. No. I was talking about the CIO committee, CIO people. Schneidermann was never a member of it.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Isn't it a fact, Mr. Bridges, that you were never a member of God's Committee?

A. Well, if we are talking about the same thing —I have in mind what the people from Southern California used to complain about; that is, the fact that Rathborne and I and a few others got our heads together and used to work out matters of strategy and policy and pass them down to Southern California. Lots of times Connally and some of the others in Southern California used to object, less as a matter of merit, in so far as the policy was concerned, but because we had taken it upon ourselves to talk the matter over without calling him or consulting him in the first place. We were just trying to save a little time. We didn't see why we had to say, "Come on up here, Slim; take a trip up here to talk things over." We would talk a few things over and then get on the phone and say, "Here's how we feel about things. What do you think?"

Q. Do you have any recollection that "God's Committee" was reputed to be a CIO executive committee made up of members of the CIO executive committee who were members of the Communist Party? [6031]

A. No, I am telling you what it was.

Q. Do you have any recollection of the fact that Mr. Schneidermann and Mr. Rathborne used to brief you on what decisions or determinations or discussions were had by the members of God's Committee?

A. Well, in the first place, the other question there, you said, before I answered this question—I don't see how else it could be. An executive committee of the CIO composed of CIO members who were members of the Communist Party? I have said that as far as I know, it was a half a dozen people who were all officers of the CIO. That was my understanding of "God's Committee." So to that degree, it would be right. The rest of the tricky part of the thing, "And who were also members of the Communist Party," no knowledge of that. And Mr. Schneidermann never briefed me on any such matter, as I recall it. [6032]

Q. Mr. Bridges, at any time did you ever know any official of the California CIO Council who was a member of the Communist Party?

A. Have I?

Q. Yes.

A. Let me see. Positively that I could swear to I do not.

Q. Then you never knew there to be a time when the California CIO Council was wholly dominated by members thereof who were also members of the Communist Party?

A. Let me see. There was Thimmes, Connolly, Rathborne, Goldblatt—no, not that I know of.

Q. Mr. Bridges, during the period of the Nazi-Soviet pact, that is, roughly from August, 1939, to June, 1941, did you oppose conscription in the United States?

A. I think so. I think I opposed it before that time, too. The period of time of the pact has nothing to do with it. I am opposed to conscription, period, and that is not a personal idea. That is the position of my union; that is the position of the CIO. It has been. I didn't know it had changed. The CIO's position hasn't changed at any time, it seems to me, and at the period of time you are talking about, if I recall—well, don't single me out. Didn't the draft pass in Congress by one vote?

Q. I am asking your views at the minute, Mr. Bridges.

A. I have told you as far as I recall I am opposed to [6033] conscription. In the first World War it was put to a referendum three times and each time it was voted down, and the vote was so close it took the soldiers fighting overseas to vote it down. That is not news to me. I am opposed to conscription. I think if a country is worth while you will get enough volunteers to fight without making people go. On the other hand, I can recognize arguments can be made for conscription. But it is my personal belief, if you want it, any time any country or cause is worth fighting for, you will have no trouble recruiting people voluntarily to fight for that cause, and they will fight.

Q. Is it also a fact that during the same period, Mr. Bridges, that you bitterly stated that the draft bill was aimed at intimidating labor?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. I might well have. It would depend upon certain other circumstances. It might depend upon who sponsored the bill. It might depend upon what statements were made in connection with the bill. It seems to me there was a bill introduced at one time and it had—one of the sponsors of the bill, if I recall correctly, specifically claimed that this would put a kink in the labor unions and put them in their place, or something like that, and in that connection I positively would be opposed to it, would say so, and do everything I could to defeat it.

Q. Is it also a fact, Mr. Bridges, during the same period of time you publicly stated your opposition to Mr. Roosevelt's [6034] national defense policy? A. Never, not that I recall.

Mr. Hallinan: Might we see it?

Mr. Donohue: Surely.

(A document was handed to Mr. Hallinan, then to the witness.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Bridges, are you correctly quoted in the Voice of the Federation under date of November 9, 1940, as follows:——

Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute. Before it is read in, let us have an answer as to whether he is correctly quoted.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Are you correctly quoted here?

A. On that point, on the war policy?

Q. Yes.

A. That is the policy during the war?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Yes.

A. Essentially I think so. That was essentially the position I took. If you will notice, the article there refers to my report on a conference with John L. Lewis, right after John L. Lewis came out on the radio in support of Wendell Willkie. I was supporting that position. I was supporting Wendell Willkie. I thought your question with respect to Roosevelt was, Did I oppose Roosevelt's defense policy? The answer was no. The war policy, the policy of going to war, I was in opposition.

Q. You did say, "We are nuts if you think Roosevelt is not on [6035] the way to war. Every one of us acts, and the people who work with him look in that direction. Since when have we become so blind and foolish that we cannot see these things?"

A. You should read the preceding paragraph and you will see I am reporting on Mr. Lewis' position at the Council. I had just returned from Washington. I was the Regional Director of the CIO. I had had a conference with John L. Lewis. John L. Lewis had endorsed Wendell Willkie and I went back East to find out when and why. And I came back and reported to the delegates on Lewis' position. Incidentally, I concurred. I am not trying to say I didn't concur in it. And we were talking about a pro-war policy at that time, not a defense policy. We were supporting the defense policy, and the defense policy on the one hand was supposed to be a program of defense short of war and on the other hand there was a war program. The position of our union, the position of the national CIO at the time which I was following was a program of defense short of war, and therefore we resisted and criticized bitterly the steps towards war, instead of steps toward defense. That was our position.

Q. Do you recall, Mr. Bridges, the question I asked you a few minutes ago was, Did you oppose Roosevelt's national defense policy?

A. That is right, and the answer was no, and I have got the record to show how we supported that wholeheartedly not only [6036] in my own union, in the national CIO, and those resolutions speak for themselves. I have my report to the convention in April, 1941. I have the action of the CIO in September, 1940, and prior to that. So that is clearly spelled out, and I will bring you in the whole record on that.

We are not talking about that, Mr. Donohue. There was a national election on at that time. In November, 1940, there was a national election on, and the program of both major political parties was to stay out of war. Mr. Roosevelt on the one hand, Mr. Willkie on the other hand. What we were critical of there was what seemed to be on the one hand a statement to the effect that we were staying out of the war, and at the same time taking actions that were directed towards getting into the war. I was following a program of the national labor organization at the time as well as my own union.

Q. Then you considered Mr. Roosevelt's national defense program, at least on the 9th of November, 1940, as a war program?

A. I did consider it that. The labor movement I was attached to considered it that, too, and the vote was unanimous in the national CIO. I was a CIO officer and I was an officer in my union, too. The CIO and my union figured it that way, and I am not trying to separate myself from those things. That is exactly the way I stood. So I am quoted there correctly with respect to the steps toward war, when we were supposed to be supporting a program of all aid short of war. You must remember [6037] the Arsenal of Democracy, all aid short of war, and we revoked the Neutrality Act.

Q. Then in the light of your statement here of November 9, 1940, you still say you did not oppose Mr. Roosevelt's national defense program?

A. We opposed certain actions with respect to getting involved in war at that time. We didn't attack it, myself or my union or the national CIO; we didn't oppose any part of the national defense program. We cooperated with it in every way. The only argument on that is we were very, very critical of certain actions that we thought—we were positive—would lead to war. You see, we had had a little experience with this matter. We were concerned about the shipment of Japanese scrap iron which was going on then in full force. As a matter of fact, it reached its peak at that time, and that was still going on. We thought that would lead to war, and we were very bitter about that, too. It wasn't a question of opposition to Mr. Roosevelt as such. It was a question of opposition to the policy. We could never understand—I could never understand, at least—those shipments to Japan, when anyone that wanted to think twice about that matter knew that we were building up the war reserves over there that we were going to get back some day. That is how simple that is.

Q. Mr. Bridges, do you recall in April, 1941, a resolution adopted by the delegates of the ILWU as follows: [6038]

"Labor"——

Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute, before it is read in. I think we should be shown it and the witness should be shown it. Suppose I step over here and look at it.

(The document was handed to Mr. Hallinan and then to the witness.)

The Witness: I don't know, Mister. I would sooner go by our official record. I have the minutes of that convention. This might be right. I have no specific recollection of that exact language. But I certainly could come in with an official transcript of the convention showing just what was done and what was said by everybody with respect to that matter, instead of depending upon that paper. Although that was the official paper, "The Voice of the Federation," we had no direct control over it. I am not saying it was wrong, but I think the official transcript of the convention and the language of the resolution itself, the discussion and the action would be the best record, and I would sooner go by that.

Q. What is your independent recollection of the resolution which was adopted by the ILWU in 1941, in April, with respect to the nature of the war which was then being waged in Europe?

A. I think the action of the convention at that time was to fully concur in the recommendations of the officers, which were contained in the report that I made as president, which was full support and cooperation with the national defense [6039] program of President Roosevelt, and to do all we could to keep America out of war. That was the program.

Q. In any way did you describe the war as a war of oppression and an imperialistic war?

A. I don't recall. I don't recall. I don't think we invented any of those names. I recall a lot of talk at that time about the Sitzkrieg, the phony war, and as far as I know, those terms came from Europe and England. They were not invented by us and, of course, they were discussed by our members like they were discussed by other people, and there was quite a period there when the war was called the "phony war," the "Sitzkrieg," I think it was, on the Siegfried Line or the Maginot Line. The forces of two or three countries were sitting there throwing daisies at each other, and the war became known as the phony war during that period. So it is quite possible that members of our union, delegates to our convention, used those terms, thought of it, but as far as the official action of the convention was concerned, my distinct recollection is what I said: If you will look up the record you will see my report shows clear support of the defense program, but we are opposed to getting into the war. [6040]

Q. Mr. Bridges, there is no question in your mind but that during the period from August of '30 to July of '41 you were opposed to the United States getting into this war?

A. Opposed to the United States getting in a war now. I am opposed to war, Mr. Donohue. I am too old to do any fighting, but nevertheless I am still opposed to war. Now, again I say that doesn't mean that I believe in the "turn the other cheek" business. But I know, these days, it has gotten to be so that you are subversive if you are opposed to war. To a person like you, being opposed to war makes me a Communist. Why, that's haywire. I have been opposed to war since the first World War. I went overseas in the first World War as a kid. I wasn't a member of the armed forces or anything like that; I was merely going to sea in ships. And some of the things that I seen then made me opposed to war. It is not a new position. So if you can make something out of it, I am opposed to war. I am opposed to America getting into wars. But that doesn't mean that I go under the idea that under any and all circumstances wars can be avoided. I wasn't opposed to getting into the war after Pearl Harbor.

Q. As a matter of fact, you were in favor of getting into the war before Pearl Harbor, weren't you, Mr. Bridges? A. I don't think so.

Q. Well, we will come to that in a moment, Mr. Bridges. A. I don't think so. [6041]

Q. May I ask you at this time whether or not you read any Communist literature other than the People's World?

A. I don't even read the People's World as Communist literature. Now, as far as any other, I am not so sure. I read a lot of things. I read a lot of things. I don't always look to see if they are Communist literature. But I subscribe to many periodicals, magazines, in one form or another, personally, at home, at my office, through our research department, our library; and every chance I get, I do a little reading, if I can. So I have got—I subscribe to various types of official magazines, periodicals, newspapers, all over the world. And every chance I get, I read them. And I never worry about whether they are Communist, pro-Communist or anything like that. I also subscribe to the Daily Press here; I read that, too.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Mr. Bridges, as a well read man and a man who speaks often on international affairs, what was the attitude of the Communist Party in the United States between August of 1939 and July of 1941 on the nature of the war in Europe and the responsibilities of the United States with respect thereto?

A. I am not so sure that I know of my own knowledge. All I would know on that would be indirectly, what I might have read or heard. That is the only thing I would know, and I guess you are referring to what is commonly stated, that they said that the war was an "imperialistic" war and so forth.

Q. Yes. You know that, don't you, Mr. Bridges? [6042]

A. No. You are asking me what I know now. Now you ask me what was the position of the Communist Party. I am telling you, you had better go to another source.

Q. Did you ever read the Declaration——

A. To some of the parties who were in the Party at that time, you know—Schomakers and Rathbornes—they probably kept records. I will tell you the position of my union on any of those matters, and my position.

Q. I am interested in your position, Mr. Bridges, and—— A. All right, let's go.

Q. And I am also interested in whether you knew then and can tell us now what the position was of the Communist Party of the United States, at the same time as you express your position.

A. You are looking at a bum source for information, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Well, let's pass to the period, Mr. Bridges, after the Nazi attack on Russia in June of 1941.

A. Yes?

Q. What was your attitude then in July of 1941 and before Pearl Harbor on the question as to whether the United States could or should not enter the war?

A. We should keep out of it. That was my position, after June of '41. If you look at the minutes, if you will look in the minutes in the National Maritime Union convention, Rathborne and I both spoke there in July of '41. You will see what I said. It is in the minutes of the NMU convention held in [6043] Cleveland in July of '41. And I didn't make the speech with any idea that you would be using it on me one of these days, or the other way around.

Q. Mr. Bridges, isn't it a fact that in July of 1941 you then supported aid to Britain and the Soviet Union?

A. I don't think so. But I might have. I supported aid to Britain before then. What was I doing supporting Mr. Willkie? You remember Mr. Willkie took a trip to Britain.

Q. Isn't it a fact, Mr. Bridges, that as early as July of 1941, and before we even entered the war, because before Pearl Harbor you were advocating American expeditionary forces?

A. No, no, I told you what we was advocating—all aid short of war. That was the official national program of the Government, as I thought, or of the major political parties and of the labor movement; and it is a matter of record what my position was, and instead of—you want me to come in with the official records, the resolutions, the speeches, the verbatim transcripts? I can do it. Now, never mind depending on my memory—you can develop facts.

Q. Mr. Bridges, what was the Labor Herald?

A. Official organ of the State Council of the CIO.

Mr. Donohue: Would you call Mr. Bridges' attention to this article, with particular reference to that paragraph?

(Document handed to the witness by the Clerk.)

The Witness: So? Bridges asks himself a question and [6044] answers himself:

> " 'Should we go so far as to send an expeditionary force, in view of the fact that the Soviet Union is in the war?' "

he asked—and he replied to himself,

> " 'There are lots of things to do before we even contemplate this. We don't have to consider any American army going abroad until the issues are a lot clearer.' "

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Will you read the first paragraph, Mr. Bridges?

A. Oh. That is the one you had marked.

Q. I had two marked.

A. (Reading): "American labor, in backing aid to Britain and the Soviet Union, is taking a militant, anti-fascist position in support of the people's right to freedom and peace. This was the tenor of a speech given by CIO leader Harry Bridges before the National Maritime Union's convention here last week."

Q. It wasn't an imperialistic war then, was it, Mr. Bridges?

Mr. Hallinan: I don't think he said it was an imperialistic war before. You asked him if he had, and he said, "No." You haven't produced anything to show he said it was.

Mr. Donohue: I think Mr. Bridges knows what the question was.

Mr. Hallinan: And besides, which side was the imperialism on? On the Germans' or the Allies'? You asked him if he didn't advocate an expeditionary force, then the article shows [6045] he didn't. Now, what is the explanation on that?

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Hallinan——

Mr. Hallinan: You wouldn't try to mislead the witness, would you?

Mr. Donohue: Not by showing it to him, Mr. Hallinan. You heard Mr. Bridges read the article.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, you asked the wrong question, then.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Donohue: No, I didn't ask the wrong question because in the event you didn't hear it, let me repeat it to you. Quoting Mr. Bridges:

> "Should we go so far as to send an expeditionary force, in view of the fact that the Soviet Union is in the war?' " and he replied to himself:

> "There are lots of things to do before we even contemplate this. We don't have to consider any American army going abroad until the issues are a lot clearer."

And then he explained that:

> "We must first defeat the appeasers in America and England so we know that we are not off to a false and phony war. And in the meantime, all the materials for a fight against Fascism should be produced under CIO conditions."

Q. That was what you said, was it not, Mr. Bridges?

A. I have got no changes I wish to make in it at this time, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Now let me ask you to look—You were still opposed to war [6046] in October of 1941 and before Pearl Harbor, were you not, Mr. Bridges?

A. Well, I was opposed to war all that time. I mean, being opposed to something is one thing —having to do something about a situation is another thing. I was opposed to war at all times. Still am. But that is not the point here.

Q. Will you take a look at the article in the October 24, 1941, issue of the Labor Herald?

(Document handed to the witness by the Clerk.)

Did Local 110 of the ILWU, in October of 1941, adopt a resolution urging the United States to support the war against Germany?

A. I don't know. Can't tell by that.

Q. That is your union, isn't it, Mr. Bridges?

A. No, it is the union of the membership. I belong to it.

Q. It is the union of which you are a member?

A. Right. That is better.

Q. Now, do you agree or disagree with the article in the Labor Herald, stating that the adoption of the program was accompanied by a discussion participated in by the California CIO director, Harry Bridges, concerning the desirability of a CIO demand for an immediate declaration of war against Germany, and that "Bridges said that this question is of the highest importance and we must reckon with it in the immediate future."

A. Oh, I said that. [6047]

Q. Then you weren't opposed to war or the United States entering the war against Germany in October of 1941, were you, Mr. Bridges?

Mr. Hallinan: I submit that that doesn't follow, if the Court please. The fact that a discussion having come up, and other persons, other than Mr. Bridges, according to this, having made a motion that the United States should enter the war, Mr. Bridges said that it was a matter that had to be discussed and a matter of great importance. Now, that isn't saying that he was urging an entry into the war.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

The Court: He may answer it.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Did you support the resolution, Mr. Bridges?

A. I don't know what resolution you are talking about there, but as I read the article, there was a discussion about the immediate possibility or the desirability of a declaration of war by Congress, and the article says that I joined the discussion and said, "Yes, that is a very important question and sooner or later we will have to reckon with it."

Q. What was your position, Mr. Bridges, on the day in October when this article was written?

A. If you go by what I said there, I participated in the discussion and said, "Well, this is a very important question, as we all know, one we have to deal with, maybe, in the immediate future." And then I made some positive recommendations to adopt [6048] the CIO program there for all-out production in order to aid the countries in the war. It is in the paper there.

Q. Mr. Bridges, will you check the records of Local 110 for that period and see if a resolution was not adopted in October of 1941 urging the United States to join in the war against Germany, and tell us what your vote on that resolution was?

A. I will check. Now, when you say my vote, I will check to see if the local adopted a resolution. I'll have to check to see if I was present at the time, and I mightn't—the records mightn't reveal how I voted, because when I attend a meeting, I attend as a member. And unless there is some kind of a record showing how I voted—but I will look at the resolution, I will check and try to produce the resolution, the minutes and all the rest of it. But as far as I recall, my attitude in October '41 was against the war.

Q. Mr. Bridges——

(Whereupon document was handed first to Mr. Hallinan and then to the witness.)

Q. (Continuing): ——I ask you to look at the September 19, 1941, issue of the Labor Herald, and take a look at the article suggested. A. Yes.

Q. Does that refresh your recollection, Mr. Bridges, as to whether or not your union endorsed an anti-Nazi stand taken by the San Francisco Council in September of 1941? [6049]

A. You are off to a wrong start. It is not my union, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Well, do you mean—of which you are a member, Mr. Bridges.

A. That's right, that's it. I presume you have reference there to a mention that a certain resolution was endorsed by Local 110. I am a member of that union. I don't know; that union resolves in every direction. It is always passing resolutions and motions by the dozens. It resolves itself all over the place, and that is its privilege. Now, as to whether it passed a specific resolution on that matter at that time, I don't know. I can check up. But there's a couple of paragraphs there claiming to be the text of the resolution, and it is quite likely that the local did adopt such a resolution.

Q. Well, would you disagree with the statement in the Labor Herald that longshoremen of Local 110, ILWU, did support the resolution?

A. I won't agree or disagree. I don't know. But I am saying that the best thing to do is to check the records of the local and to find out. If the resolution was adopted, it will show in the minutes, and a copy of the resolution, the original copy of the resolution, would be preserved.

Q. Mr. Bridges, having read the stated foreign policy resolution, does it refresh your recollection as to whether or not that foreign policy resolution, in September of 1941, coincided with your own personal views on the subject? [6050]

A. Oh, I can't tell by that. There's only one paragraph there. There is nothing wrong with that paragraph. It could well have been.

Q. Well, do you subscribe to the paragraph quoted, "We believe the most important issue facing the people of the United States today is that of unity with and giving support to all freedom-loving people in the fight to defeat the menace of Nazi aggression in this and every other country."?

A. Nothing wrong with that statement. If my union made that statement, the union and I, the local union down here,—whether I liked it or not—that would be the policy I would be duty-bound to follow. But whether it—it sounds like a darned good statement to me.

Q. Did you have any such policy prior to June of 1941, Mr. Bridges?

A. That—First of all, that language there seems to me to be lifted directly out of the resolution that was passed by the national CIO; and second, the other part of the question was what? The other part of your question, Mr.....? The question that you just asked? [6051]

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Did you change your thinking on that subject between August, 1939, and July of 1941? A. No.

Q. Mr. Bridges, in your reading during the period following the Nazi invasion of Russia did you determine or learn whether or not the Communist Party of the United States changed its concept of the then war in Europe?

A. I might have. Again you are asking me if I had any direct knowledge. All I would have would be, as you say, reading about it or hearing about it, and I recall hearing or reading some such thing.

Q. To what effect, Mr. Bridges?

A. I forget. In other words, I think their position was something along the lines that the invasion of Russia by the forces at least had brought things to a decisive point of view where all the jockeying that was going on at that time between certain forces in Europe, as to whether they could get lined up with Germany against Russia or not; that put an end to that kind of speculation. I think there was something along those lines that I recall.

Q. Didn't the imperialist war become a people's war after the Nazi invasion of Soviet Russia?

A. I don't know in those terms. After all, "imperialist war" is purely a term. I don't know. You are asking me what my impressions were from what I heard, and I have told you. Now, [6052] as to what terms you put it in, I am not going to argue with that. I am telling you what I heard here, what my impressions were.

Q. Don't you know that after the Nazi invasion of Soviet Russia the Communist Party in the United States urged the support of the United States with Soviet Russia and against Nazi Germany? A. No.

Q. You did not know that to be a fact?

A. No. You are asking me—I am here under oath, Mr. Donohue. You are asking me what I can swear to. I take that as one thing. Then you ask me now did I hear this or read that. That is an entirely different question. Am I right?

Q. Yes. A. Correct.

Q. Did you know it? Did you learn it to be a fact?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. No, not in the way I have told you and with the understanding that I have as to these questions, no.

Q. Mr. Bridges, after Pearl Harbor do you recall that the ILWU Executive Board early in 1942 urged the opening of a second front?

A. Early in 1942?

Q. Yes.

A. Probably did, I think. I don't know if it was that early. It might have been later. But again check the record.

Mr. Hallinan: When did you say? [6053]

Mr. Donohue: I said early. I say now August of 1942, Mr. Bridges.

A. My recollection is our board did not act until after there had been—after the CIO had taken a position on that matter. That is what I think happened.

Q. I ask you to look at the Labor Herald for August 20 of 1942.

Mr. Hallinan: I do happen to have the proceedings of the fifth constitutional convention of the CIO in November, 1942. It is resolution No. 10 on the second front, if you prefer to have that than the newspaper article. I will stipulate to introduce it, because we are going to introduce all this afterwards anyhow, to show that those policies were policies of the national CIO.

Mr. Donohue: Suppose you introduce them in turn, Mr. Hallinan.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Hallinan: All right.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Bridges, isn't it a fact that in August, 1942, the ILWU called for an opening of the second front in Europe?

A. I think it did. That paper would indicate that it did. I think that is just about the facts.

Q. Did that coincide with your opinion, Mr. Bridges?

A. If it was the union's opinion, it was my opinion, so it would coincide. The answer is yes. [6054]

Q. Did you know that on May Day, 1942, the Communist Party of the United States called on the workers of America to insist on the second front?

A. No. But what is the connection?

Q. You did in August, didn't you, Mr. Bridges?

A. Yes. Oh, I get you. I am a little slow catching up. May, June, July, August.

Q. Mr. Bridges, is this one of the purely trade union matters which your union was considering in August, 1942?

A. That is what the resolution says. As a matter of fact, there is language in the resolution that refers to that, and the resolution says now these military leaders think a trade unionist has no brains, that it should concern itself with trade union matters only, and it considers such questions as to whether we should go into war or stay out of war, fight or not fight, or sit behind in a swivel chair as purely matters for the top brass of the military. The union says, "Nothing doing." The military wasn't so hot in their decisions as to the scrap iron going to Japan and other places. We might not think they are so hot on some of these matters. So we are going to speak our piece. Maybe we are wrong, but at least we are going to speak our piece. In essence that is what the resolution says. It didn't go along with this idea that there are certain matters we should not make our business.

I will admit our union is like that. It makes a lot of [6055] things its business. On many occasions it considers itself expert on matters it is not too expert on. But you can't hang people for that. They like to be heard and they like to express themselves on anything they think is to their advantage—welfare, and so forth—and that included the question of military tactics. And so the union spoke out and thought it was as good a judge of military tactics as the top brass. Maybe the union was wrong. That is the way it felt at that time, and that is the way I felt.

Q. Did you feel together with your union, Mr. Bridges, that after eight or nine months in the war in August, 1942, that your judgment was superior to that of the joint chiefs of staff as to whether we were ready to make an invasion of Europe and create a second front?

A. No, that is not the point. I think it is a very simple trade union point. Keep out of the battle if you can, but once you get into the battle, get it over quick, fast. That is simple.

Q. I take it your thinking along this line with respect to the second front was in no way influenced by the fact that the Communist Party of the United States took the same principle or the same tactics at the same time?

A. As far as I know—I didn't even know what their position was, had nothing at all to do with it. Our position would have been taken no matter what the Communist Party's position [6056] was. If the Communist Party's position had been against the second front, our position would have been the same, August, July or any other time.

Q. Mr. Bridges, what was your position in November, 1947, on the Marshall Plan?

A. November, 1947? In support of it.

Q. Will you look at the article, "On the Beam," by Harry Bridges, dated the 14th of November, 1947, with particular reference to that portion which is marked off in red?

(Document handed to witness.)

Mr. Donohue: Shall we take the recess at this time?

The Court: We will take the afternoon recess, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Recess.) [6057]

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, Your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Bridges, were you

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

supporting the Marshall Plan on the 14th of November, 1947, when you said: "Thus, stripped of all camouflage, the Marshall Plan is a scheme to use money and food of the American people to purchase and turn over to Wall Street at practically no cost to the private interests, the basic industries and raw materials of Germany and all western European nations."

A. The idea of that article there is to try and support the Marshall Plan as it was adopted by the CIO convention. I have here the minutes of Boston, Massachusetts, the convention that took place October 13th to the 17th, and I was just in the recess looking in this record. That was a CIO resolution on the Marshall Plan, and of the appearance of the Secretary of State at the time, George Marshall, a discussion of the plan by the delegates of the convention and by the president of the CIO, and the remarks and the resolution adopted at that time. I supported and voted for it.

Q. What is the date, Mr.——

A. October, 1947. Now, I was a little wrong, maybe, as to the date. Now, the article you are reading there is an article critical of what was becoming the Marshall Plan. We were a little afraid, a little fearful. After the Boston CIO convention in October of 1947, I went to work in the ILWU and [6058] I called regional conferences of the union. I had mimeographed the resolution that was adopted at the CIO convention on the Marshall Plan, as it was known at that time, as well as the full text of the remarks of President Murray, and I took steps to see that that resolution was presented and explained, together with Mr. Murray's interpretation and analysis of the resolution, to every one of our locals, and urged its adoption. And every one of our locals approved it. I have a record of those actions.

Now, then, here's what happened, Mr. Donohue: If you will recall, the Marshall Plan started with a speech by Secretary of State George Marshall at Harvard University in June of 1947. The speech said that we must send aid in the way of food, money, machinery and other things to the devastated countries, all devastated countries throughout the world. And that was our only purpose, that in sending such aid we would not interfere in any way with the internal affairs of the various countries throughout the world. George Marshall's specific remarks were that we seek no change in any government of any country, to seek to interfere and so forth and so on. That was where the Marshall Plan started. Then in the spring of, I think, '48—I am not sure, I may be a little mixed up on dates—but then I know I supported the plan. I was in sympathy with its humanitarian aims—still am. And I took it to be what it was supposed to be. I was also interested for another reason, and that is, if this aid was going to be shipped in concrete form, it meant [6059] work for the members of the union I represented, warehousemen and longshoremen, work for the seamen. We was particularly interested in California here, because we speedily found out that if the plan was going to go through as originally scheduled, a large amount of California produce would move through the ports here, particularly the dried fruit—that is, dried apricots, prunes, and so forth, which has a high food value, and at the same time is cheap.

Now, in between the time that George Marshall initiated the idea, the time he spoke to us at the CIO convention, and the time we supported that plan—and I voted for it—and the time that I took that plan and urged the membership to support it, then Congress got ahold of it, and it became a little different thing. Instead of the food and money going for good and things like that, the money started to be diverted into arms and munitions. So much so, as a matter of fact, that a lot of the produce farmers here in the state of California who had invested and borrowed money with the prospects of shipping their crops, such as dried fruit and other things to be shipped away to foreign countries, they went bankrupt. They went broke, because of the change in the plan from what it was originally supposed to be and what it finally wound up to be. So there was another aspect to it, too. The plan as it was explained to us by the Secretary of State at the time, and the way it was adopted by the CIO convention, according to my understanding, [6060] according to the remarks here of the president of the CIO, was a kind of a continuation of the United Nations food and rehabilitation fund, or agency. That is the way we envisaged it at the time. And when the nature of that plan changed, I changed my attitude, our union changed its attitude and opposed the plan. We are in opposition to the plan now. [6060-A]

And that is the explanation of that article, even though that article occurred shortly after this, I think. But there is no true significance of the article. I think we can go by the record here, and I can also produce the resolution and the minutes of the conferences where we acted on the plan, even after that article, even after the date of the article. I can produce the minutes of the conferences, and all that happened was this: We adopted the Marshall Plan based upon original principles and understanding as I heard it myself explained by George Marshall himself, and I have the record here the way he explained it, and we are still in agreement and in support of that original program and idea. But, of course, we must remember that ECA has changed it somewhat, and what we have finally come up against—and it has a very definite effect upon the union I represent—the Marshall Plan now has a boycott against—well, probably half the world—and instead of our ships leaving the docks here and the ports here and going to many of the countries of the world they formerly went to, there is a boycott on those countries and we are not shipping out various forms of American manufactured products, and therefore there isn't much shipping, ships are empty, and the men I represent—they are not entirely out of work, but they aren't making a great deal. They aren't doing much work. And there is some of the reasons that we changed our attitude on the Marshall Plan. We were for it wholeheartedly, [6061] honestly. When it became something else than we thought it was supposed to be, we thought we had been sold a bill of goods, in our union at least. I am not giving you now the position of the CIO; I am giving you the position of the ILWU. That is the story on that.

Q. Mr. Bridges, you were not supporting the Marshall Plan when you stated in this article, "We cannot allow ourselves to be part of a program that intends to use food as a weapon in a 'cold war' to start the march of European people to a better way of life any more than we would refuse to make a contribution to a striking union until it would first agree to switch its affiliation or change its structure."

A. The way we understood the original Marshall Plan, and I think if you will go to the record you will see food was supposed to be given to a country and there was supposed to be no strings attached to it. It wasn't supposed to change its form of government. It was supposed to remain in status quo. Its sovereignty was supposed to be unaffected. If a country wanted to go along with a certain plan for the nationalization of its basic industries, it was supposed to be allowed to do it, and certain things like that.

As a matter of fact—and it is a matter of knowledge—it hasn't worked out that way. You might recall—and we objected to it openly, officially—we sent arms to the Dutch Empire and they were used in Indonesia against the Indonesian [6062] people that were trying to free themselves from the colonial slavery of the Dutch. You might recall the incident. When the incident came up the Secretary of State—not at that time Mr. Marshall—I think at that time Mr. Byrnes—he said at that time, "That is all right, we will take the labels off the rifles and machine guns. Where it says 'Made in U.S.A.' we will take those labels off." That has happened in quite a few countries, right or wrong, and the union doesn't see it that way. The union doesn't see it that way. Right or wrong, our union is opposed to colonial slavery. It hits us now the hard way. As long as civil war goes on in Indonesia, our ships go out of this port and all other ports of the Pacific Coast empty, and they come back empty, and the men on the ships, the men in the warehouses and the men on the docks don't work. We have a selfish economic interest in the matter. This is not a question of whether I believe in it. I have been opposed to colonial oppression, Mr. Donohue, for a long time. I learned it in school. To go into that you would have to go into the background of Australia and how Australia came to be a colony and later on a commonwealth, and it fought an armed revolution like the United States. So it is nothing new for me to be opposed to colonial oppression. I always was, still am. If that makes me a Communist, then I am sorry, then, that is just too bad. But now I am talking about what I had to stand for because of my union, and as the president of the [6063] union I was advised to take that position, notwithstanding what my personal beliefs were. We are opposed to colonial slavery. We are opposed to food being used as a weapon, particularly food purchased with the money of the taxpayers of the United States, to be used as a weapon to keep countries in colonial slavery. We are opposed to arms and ammunition being purchased here in the United States, again with our money, and shipped on our ships to be used for those purposes. We were told different, and I was at the convention when the Secretary of State Marshall got up and explained the purposes of his plan and said, "It will never be used for those purposes." When the plan finally got through Congress, we found Congress had different ideas. So we changed our position and we changed our minds. Our union did and I did. There is the whole story.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Your change in position, Mr. Bridges, was not affected by the fact that the Communist Party in the United States and the Soviet Government of Russia did not oppose the Marshall Plan until after it had been passed by Congress, was it, Mr. Bridges?

A. I am going by the action taken by the convention. I am going by what we did in October and

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

November, 1947. I have told you that my position is one of support. I had in mind the CIO convention from October 13 to the 17th. So I was only a little bit off in the date. Instead of November it was October. I am going by my evidence that is recorded here in the official minutes of the CIO convention. [6064]

Q. Mr. Bridges, do you have in mind the CIO convention of 1948, and were you present on Monday, November 22, 1948, when Phil Murray said, "I do not say everyone who is opposed to the Marshall Plan is a Communist, but I do say that every Communist in the United States is opposed to the Marshall Plan"?

A. I was not at that convention, I am sorry to say. Phil is entitled to his position. I won't quarrel with him.

Q. But you were at the convention in 1949, were you not, Mr. Bridges?

A. Oh, yes, with bells on. You bet your sweet life I was there.

Q. And do you recall on Thursday, November 3, 1949, you made a long speech in opposition to the Marshall Plan?

A. No. If you can find that in the record there, Mr. Donohue, you are a better man than I am. You look twice.

Q. Mr. Bridges, what did you mean——

A. You got the record there.

Q. Yes. A. Now look at it.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. What did you mean on the 3rd of November, 1949, when you said, "As far as I and the organization I represent are concerned, we believe in the worldwide cause of humanity, and we believe in feeding and supplying all the things we can supply to the devastated countries throughout the world. On the question of the European recovery plan, it is not the so-called aims and objectives that are in question so much but the [6065] techniques and the tactics that are used in order to achieve those aims and objectives, the way the thing is working out and as worked out today."

Were you talking about the Marshall Plan?

A. Yes.

Q. And did you vote against the resolution?

A. Read on, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Did you vote against the resolution?

A. I made a motion to refer back to committee for specific purposes.

Q. Did you vote against the resolution?

A. I voted against the resolution because that was the only way I could vote for my motion to refer.

Q. And the resolution was carried overwhelmingly, wasn't it, Mr. Bridges?

A. Well, gee whiz, if you are going to get in a battle with me because I am in the minority on occasion, you will get in a lot of fights with me, Mr. Donohue. So what? I am telling you if you read the record of the convention here, here is what happened: I was a member of the resolutions committee. I asked in the resolutions committee that the CIO at least be as progressive as a chamber of commerce, Mr. Roger Ackerman and a few people like that, in drawing up that resolution. In the resolutions committee I couldn't persuade them along those lines. I pointed out the way the present Marshall Plan [6066] was working. The United States of America had a boycott against half the countries in the world. I represented a union of longshoremen and warehousemen. The livelihood of the people I represented depended upon goods and products moving over the docks here on the Pacific Coast, through the Port of San Francisco and through the warehouses. The way the present Marshall Plan was working with the boycott against many countries, so-called socialist, Communist, and other forms of government, those countries were boycotted, a strict boycott. None of our goods were moving to them, and therefore ships were empty, and therefore the people I represented were losing money and out of work. I couldn't see the necessity of it.

And then I referred to the devaluation of the British pound and the fact that other countries were following suit, and what that would do to our country and is doing to us right here on the Pacific Coast right now, lumber products, flour products and other things. They are moving through Canada down to the United States and being shipped around. They are moving from Canada. Canada has recognized China. All kinds of products are moving through Canada to China. The devaluation of the British pound—those countries have the edge on us. So all I was concerned with was a simple, selfish economic fact. The way the Marshall Plan was working, it was working a hardship on the people I represent and a lot of other workers in the United States likewise. With the devaluation of the [6067] franc, the pound, the guilder, and other types of currency, believe me, if something isn't done about it, in our opinion—and of course we can be wrong. We aren't infallible. We may not be great economic experts—we are heading for a depression. That is the way we see it. Again we can be wrong. I hope I am wrong. All I could do was point that out to the convention and urge the resolution be referred back to the committee in order that those matters may be studied and make some changes in the resolution in order to comport to the changed situation because of this boycott, the devaluation of currency in foreign countries, and the effect that it would have on the economy of the country. I voted against the resolution because I wanted to refer it back to the committee. That is the action taken. If you read it you would find that, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Mr. Bridges, is your estimation of the Marshall Plan in any way affected by the fact that Russia and its satellite countries did not see fit to participate in it? A. No.

Q. Are they the countries you are talking about as being boycotted? A. No.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. What countries do you mean are being boycotted?

A. There is quite a few. How about Indonesia? How about French Indo-China? A few places like that. As well as, of [6068] course, the so-called eastern European countries as well as the Soviet Union. Now, just a minute on this. If you are asking me do we have any objections to trading with the Soviet Union, generally speaking the answer is no. Let us not quibble about this thing. We have carried on trade with Russia over a period of years. And that is nothing new, Mr. Donohue. Don't go into that question. Why, as a matter of fact, maybe my mind on American history isn't any too good, but I know during the Civil War when the Northern States had the blockade of the Southern States and there was talk about using the British Navy to break the blockade and have the British actively intervene on behalf of the Southern States, two fleets of Russian warships were sent to the United States, one to New York and the other to San Francisco, and they let it be known that if Great Britain intervened on behalf of the Southern States, Russia would be in the war on the part of the Union. And the statement at that time of the Secretary of State was, "Misery makes strange bedfellows."

Don't blame this on me. It is an old story in the United States, before I was ever born, before I ever came here. Furthermore, that is nothing new: during the Civil War also, President Abraham Lincoln sent a letter, an official document, to the working men of Manchester in London, England because the workers over there boycotted—the blockade of the Southern ports had deprived those factories, not only England but Europe, of [6069] the cotton and the workers in the cotton mills were out of work. There was talk, bolstered of course by the manufacturers or owners of the cotton mills, about intervention on the part of the Southern States, and the workers made and passed a resolution and sent it to the President of the United States, Abraham Lincoln, saying, No. 1, "We are completely in sympathy with the blockade even though it is hurting us and forcing hardship on us," No. 2, "We are completely in sympathy with your aims in the war and your proclamation for the emancipation of the people in the Southern States, the Negro people"; and thirdly, "If our country tries to intervene in the war in behalf of the Southern States, we will fight our own government to put a stop to it."

So these things are not new. I am not going to worry about what you think of me, because I advocate trade with Russia and some of these other countries. I say the only way those countries will get themselves straightened out is through the people in those countries, not by us trying to poke our noses in here. In the meantime I would like to see the products of America carried through our warehouses, across our docks and on our ships so our people will have work, and so the seamen will have work. The majority of seamen in the United States are starving to death. Also, our longshoremen. There is a bigger number going on relief all the time. That is what I am interested in. I would like to see food from our country [6070] shipped to these countries overseas instead of guns and ammunition. And I would like to see these potatoes they are burning up and these dried eggs they are burning up and other things—I would like to see them distributed throughout the world instead of being destroyed in the United States to keep up prices. That is a simple fact. And when I say these things I am not only expressing my own belief, but that is where our union stands on this matter. Again, they are trade unions to us. They have nothing to do with Communists in Russia or any other place.

Q. Are you finished?

A. Yes. Thank you very much for the chance to explain.

Q. Mr. Bridges, have you heard of William Foster? A. Yes.

Q. Have you heard William Foster express the opinion that we here in the United States are nonsensical if we believe the propaganda that the United States is in danger of attack by Soviet Russia?

A. I don't know if he said that lately. Do you ask me do I know he said it?

Q. Yes. Do you know he said it?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. No, I don't know if he said it.

Q. Is that your view, Mr. Bridges?

A. That we are in danger of attack by Russia?

Q. That it is nonsensical for us to think of war? [6071]

A. Never mind the term. The question is, Do I think Russia is going to attack us?

Q. Yes.

A. You mean now or sometime in the future?

Q. At any time in the foreseeable future.

A. The answer is I don't know. I guess there is sometime in the future the danger, but if you ask me my personal opinion, I think we are in greater danger of being attacked by Great Britain or some other country. We have been attacked before by Great Britain, you know. The United States has never been in a war with Russia. From what little bit I know about the history of the relations of our country with that country, they have always been friendly. There are other countries that have not been so friendly. If you ask me to indulge in guesswork, I will guess all over the landscape.

Q. Do you think we are being propagandized in this country that there is such a thing as a Russian scare or a Red scare?

A. Oh, I certainly do. I certainly think we are being propagandized. We are told to look in that direction while somebody sneaks up behind us and delivers what you might call the Sunday punch and hang one on you when you are looking the other way.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Have you stated, "Right now in Washington the Government agencies, committees and spokesmen led by President Truman himself are hoopdedooing the Russian scare and the Red scare [6072] high, wide and handsome. Plenty of people are falling for it." [6072-A]

A. What's the date of that statement?

Q. "And plenty of people fall for it."

A. What is the date, and when is that?

Q. 19th of March, 1948.

A. 19th of March, '48. I don't know, I can't recall such a statement. May have made it.

Mr. Donohue: Will you ask him to look at that?

Mr. Hallinan: Let's take a peek at it first.

(Document handed to Mr. Hallinan.)

Mr. Hallinan: All right; on these documents I wish you would have them identified, marked for identification, so I could read the balance of the articles in.

Mr. Donohue: I will be glad to do so.

Mr. Hallinan: And the ones that have already been shown to the witness.

Mr. Donohue: Be glad to do it.

(Document handed to the witness by the Clerk.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Have you refreshed your recollection that you did so state on the 19th of March, 1948, Mr. Bridges?

A. You mean did I wrote that column? Yes, I wrote it. And I wrote what it says there. Now, in explanation of that, Mr. Donohue, you might have recalled, not so long ago, that it was revealed by—let me see. I think it was revealed as a result of Mr. Herbert Hoover, in that commission that was set up to [6073] reorganize the government, that by some bad intelligence or something from Europe in the spring of '48, the American people were led to believe that war was imminent, war was imminent, the United States was in danger of being immediately involved in war, and I think it was by means of an aggressive attack by Russia. And I think the person that came out and said that that was a lot of hogwash was former President Herbert Hoover, and that he discovered that in the course of his work in this commission to reorganize the government. Now, I'll check the records on that and bring it in and show you. So what I said there in March of '48 was eventually backed up later by former President Herbert Hoover. That is only half of the story you've got there.

Q. Mr. Bridges, I ask you to look at a copy of The Dispatcher of March 9, 1945 (handing document to Mr. Hallinan).

Mr. Hallinan: '45?

Mr. Donohue: Yes.

Mr. Hallinan: I suggest Mr. Bridges read the paragraph before the one you have marked, also.

Mr. Donohue: I don't mind him reading the whole thing, Mr. Hallinan.

(Document handed to the witness by the Clerk.)

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Are you correctly quoted there, Mr. Bridges?

A. In the column, right. [6074]

Q. Why, in March of 1945, were you opposed to the pressure in the press in the United States to require Russia to enter the war against Japan?

A. I think the article explains. I report there that I attended a meeting in Washington at which Mr. Joseph E. Davies spoke, and he explained, I think, the pact between Japan and Russia, that had a year to run. And that is what that article points out, that it is misleading, that unless that pact is broken, that it amounted to a breaking of the pact, and also the pact was broken, why, the information was misleading because the pact still had a year to run and the newspapers were giving the impression that Russia ought to declare war on Japan at once.

Q. You know, as a matter of fact, Mr. Bridges, this article having been written in March of 1945, that as a matter of fact on August the 10th or on August the 8th, 1945, and while the same pact was in operation, and six days after the end of the war, and two days after we dropped our second atom bomb on Japan, that Russia did attack Japan, do you not?

A. I don't know if I know all that. I know that eventually there was a war between Russia and Japan. That is not what the article is talking about.

Q. Well, don't you know that Russia came into the war only six days before Japan surrendered?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. I think that is true. But that is not what we were talking [6075] about there.

Q. Well, let me read to you, Mr. Bridges, what you stated; and would you be good enough to explain what you did mean? A. All right.

Q. (Reading) "If the American press wishes to do a service for the American people and aid in bringing greater unity and understanding between the two great nations of the United States of America and the United States of Soviet Russia, in the interest of the war and the peace to follow, the newspapers will cease their indirect demand that the Soviet Union violated its solemn word and pact, even when such is pledged to an enemy that knows neither honor nor decency. And these same sections of the American press would do far better to make it clear to the American people that even if there is a denouncement of the existing pact between the United States of Soviet Russia and Japan, on or before April 25th, 1945, there can be no war between these two nations until after a year from that day."

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. I think, in the first place, Mr. Bridges is not responsible for the foreign policy of either of those nations. And furthermore, I have heard now something like a second Harry Bridges—a coalition or confederation of some kind discussed by Mr. Donohue here that I do not know the existence of. Now, what is this "United States of Soviet Russia?" I [6076] have never heard of that term. I don't know of any collection of nations or of any nation or confederation that exists under that name. Now what are we talking about? What are the United States of Soviet Russia?

Mr. Donohue: Did you misunderstand me, Mr. Bridges?

Mr. Hallinan: Well, what is that country? Where is it located?

The Witness: Well, I didn't get——

Mr. Donohue: Is this an objection, Mr. Hallinan?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes. I would like to know what counsel means by the "United States of Soviet Russia." There is no such aggregation of nations or persons or of any country that I have ever heard of.

The Court: (To the Witness) Do you understand, Mr. ——

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Did you misunderstand me or did you understand the question?

A. I wasn't paying any attention to that particular part.

The Court: Are you reading it from the article?

Mr. Donohue: I am reading from his article.

Mr. Hallinan: No, there's no such word there. There is no such term there as "United States of Soviet Russia." There is no such country.

Mr. Donohue: Then let me call it as you wrote it, the U.S.S.R.

Mr. Hallinan: Oh, that's the Union of Socialist Soviet [6077] Republics.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Donohue: Thank you, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: You said twenty times, "United States of Soviet Russia." I didn't know what you meant.

Mr. Donohue: I just wanted you to show your familiarity——

Mr. Hallinan: Yes. Well, when you are trying a case involving such wide and sweeping matters as you have been discussing, and blaming Mr. Bridges because he can't control the foreign policies of those countries, the least you might do is to learn the names of the countries you are talking about.

Mr. Donohue: Well, with you as a tutor, I will do so, one by one.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, I'm glad; anyone can learn. You are proving that, if you learn that one thing.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Now, Mr. Bridges, will you tell me one by one, what was the interest of yourself and the interest of your union in the question as to whether or not the Russian Government should or should not enter the war against Japan?

A. I don't know. I can't recall at the moment. If you will read the article there, it might help out. I don't know. That article there deals with that particular point at the time, and mentions the fact—I remember the occasion well when I heard Mr. Davies speak at a meeting in, I think, the Washington Press Club. And it refers to a statement made by Mr. Davies on that particular point, I think. [6078]

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Mr. Bridges, you knew that in March of 1945 there were thousands of American boys being killed in the war against Japan, did you not?

A. Right.

Q. Well, what reason would you have at that time for defending the United—excuse me, Mr. Hallinan——

Mr. Hallinan: You see, you haven't learned it yet.

Mr. Donohue: No, I haven't.

Mr. Hallinan: I am wasting my time.

Mr. Donohue: I will keep trying.

Mr. Hallinan: Go ahead and call it the United States of Soviet Russia. We will agree to understand what you mean by it.

Mr. Donohue: Fine.

Q. Why was it then, Mr. Bridges, that you were so interested in March of 1945 in defending the failure of the Russian government to attack Japan?

A. I wasn't.

Q. What was your purpose in writing the article, Mr. Bridges?

A. If you will read from our official paper——

Q. I have just read it, Mr. Bridges.

A. I was concerned with keeping the record straight with our membership. Now, I don't think you can say that the article means or is intended to mean, or states that I am defending the Russian government or the Russian country itself.

Q. You said—— [6079]

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. And the article does not, nor did the article oppose the entry of Russia into the war on our side. Not by any means.

Q. You said, did you not, Mr. Bridges, that:

> "If the American press wishes to do a service for the American people and aid in bringing greater unity and understanding between the two great nations the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R. in the interest of the war and the peace to follow, the newspapers will cease their indirect demand that the Soviet Union violate its solemn word and pact, even when such is pledged to an enemy that knows neither honor nor decency"?

A. Well, I think the statement speaks for itself. Now, as I recall the session at that time, generally we had this: There was quite a demand for the concentration of the war in the Pacific. I think that was the situation. And there was two schools of thought. One school of thought was generally along the lines that we ought to concentrate, throw all our energy, forces, material and men into the Pacific, even though the war in Europe, in the European end was in the critical stage, more or less. And concurrently with that, or along with that general idea was the demand that Russia enter the war simultaneously. That was one school of thought. The other school of thought was, "Clean up the war in Europe and then jump in in the Pacific with Russia and all hands." That article merely supports the latter. [6080]

Q. Didn't you know——

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. The latter approach.

Q. That everybody knew, that all during the war in Europe, that the Russian government maintained in Manchuria a tremendous army which was available for the attack on Japan?

Mr. Hallinan: Well, we will object to that as containing this clause, "what everybody knew." Now——

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Did you know that, Mr. Bridges?

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. If I can get the objection in? Do you withdraw the question?

Mr. Donohue: No.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, if Mr. Donohue knew all these things, including the name of the country that he is talking about, why, he can testify to it himself. But putting in clauses like "what everybody knew"—as I remember, the difficulty was that people who were anti-Soviet at that time and anti-Russian were trying to involve the Russians in two fronts when the Russians thought they could only stand one; and were having a tough time doing that. And people who were more interested in knocking the Russians than winning the war were making that sort of complaint. Not as a means of winning the war but as rapping the Soviet Union.

The Court: You asked the question, Mr. Donohue, of Mr. Bridges?

Mr. Donohue: I asked it of Mr. Bridges, if Your Honor [6081] pleases.

The Court: That is what I thought.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, then, I think the answer is objectionable, or the question is objectionable in the form it is given, including the phrase, "as everybody knew."

Mr. Donohue: I will withdraw that and start again.

The Court: Delete "as everybody knows" and the question is proper.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Let me ask you this question, Mr. Bridges: Do you know, as a matter of fact, that there came a time when the Russian government did attack Japan?

A. Yes. I don't know if the word "attack"—I don't exactly know how it come about.

Q. And it was your recollection that it was just a few days before the end of the war?

A. Well, if it was in 1945, it certainly couldn't have been very long.

Q. Don't you know that it was only six days before the end of the war?

A. No, no. I think—listen, the record on those things is better than what I remember, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Do you know of any reason, Mr. Bridges, in the light of your familiarity with the existing pact between Russia and Japan~~, why~~ the same attack couldn't have been made in March rather [6082] than in August?

A. Outside of the matter of policy of those times—now, what is happening here is that it seems like anybody that even agreed or said a good word in support of Russia at the time that the United States and Russia were allies, it's going to come back to haunt you. Well, now, what I said at those times, like a lot of other people was said in view of the circumstances then. There was two schools of thought.

Q. What benefit, Mr. Bridges——

A. Two schools of thought. One was that it was better and there would be less loss of American lives, and it would be easier all around on the allies, the various allies in the war, to clean up the war in Europe, so that with that done, all forces could be swung to the Pacific. And later on it developed that there was an agreement to that effect, I understand, with, I think, the meeting that was—one of the international conferences that were held between Mr. Churchill, the President and Stalin. And there was another school of thought. We just went along: That article just goes along with the school of thought that the best policy to follow was to clean up the war in Europe. And of course that was the policy adopted at that time by Great Britain, the United States and the Soviet Union, as far as I recall. And the other policy was disregarded. The other policy was policy, generally demanded by the Chicago Tribune-New York Daily News-Hearst axis, it was known as. [6083]

Q. Mr. Bridges, you knew that we, the people of the United States, had two fronts to fight on, don't you? A. Oh, sure.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Then why shouldn't Russia have had two?

A. I don't know.

Mr. Hallinan: Now, Your Honor, I think that is going a little afield, holding Mr. Bridges liable for the policy of the Soviet Union.

Mr. Donohue: I will withdraw the question, if Your Honor pleases.

Q. I will ask you, Mr. Bridges, what legitimate trade union objective of the ILWU were you serving when you wrote this article about the failure of Russia to attack Japan?

A. If you will let me have the article, I will show you, Mr. Donohue.

(Document handed to the witness by the Clerk.)

Mr. Hallinan: Suppose you read the whole article. I have read it.

A. (Continuing) The article refers in general, without me reading the whole article, Mr. Donohue—I think it is very clearly stated that the article is an attack upon the American press for sowing confusion, and particularly sowing confusion at a time when we were approaching the establishment of the United Nations here in San Francisco. And this article is directed toward pointing out that seizing upon the fact that Russia wasn't [6084] actively in the war, because it had a pact with Japan, was therefore indirectly an attack upon the whole principle and idea of establishing the United Nations here in San Francisco, so that we could win the peace as well as win the war. And this article goes after the press, really, on that score. The question of military strategy and other things that are involved here was purely incidental and secondary to the whole article.

Now, a reading of the whole article will show you that, and it mentions the press I mean. It said the Chicago Tribune, other papers, and generally other papers—and generally speaking, we know what those papers more or less advocated as a policy during the war.

And it further goes on to say, one part here, about an address by Prime Minister Churchill reporting on the Crimean conference; that was the conference, I think, where it was agreed, and it came out later, I think the conference at Yalta, where it was agreed that as soon as the war was finished in Europe, within 90 days after the end of the war in Europe, Russia would enter the war against Japan on the part of the allies. And that was a decision made at the Yalta conference, and this article generally supports that. Now, it wasn't a question of where we stood. You only read one part of the article. We was generally in support of the whole foreign policy and military policy of the government, and the President, following the decisions made at Yalta at that year. And part of the article, [6085] as I say, deals with the press trying to confuse the issue, particularly on the eve of the United Nations convening here in San Francisco in April, 1945. And the matter of strategy, when Russia gets into the war, that is purely incidental. The article attacks the press. [6085-A]

Mr. Donohue: I offer the article in evidence, if your Honor pleases, and at this time I shall ask the clerk to mark the others to which reference has been made for identification, and after Mr. Hallinan has seen them, I would like to offer those in evidence, too.

This being the recess time, your Honor——

The Court: That may be marked. Mr. Hallinan, you haven't read all the articles, have you?

Mr. Hallinan: No, but I will want to read them all into evidence, I imagine, afterwards.

The Clerk: May the one be marked, if your Honor please, Government's 29.

The Court: That may be marked, and the others may be marked for identification.

> (Dispatcher, 3/9/45, article entitled "On the Beam," was marked U. S. Exhibit 29 in evidence.)

Mr. Hallinan: Of course, we are going to have an enormous amount of things to read into evidence, in view of the fact counsel has put in a sentence here and a sentence there. We will have to read in a great many of the proceedings of these conventions, and we will be prepared to do that, in addition to the articles.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor pleases, I think I should say that very shortly after we convene in the morning I will finish my examination of Mr. Bridges. [6086]

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Hallinan: Well, counsel is learning. I am glad to see that, your Honor. We have finally arrived at that little concession to courtesy.

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, we will take the afternoon adjournment until tomorrow morning at ten o'clock. The same admonition to you, not to discuss the case under any conditions or circumstances, nor to form or express an opinion until it is submitted to you.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken until Tuesday, February 21, 1950, at 10:00 [6087] a.m.)

Frebruary 21, 1950—10:00 A.M.

The Clerk: The United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

The witness on the stand is Harry Renton Bridges, heretofore sworn.

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES

resumed.

Cross-Examination
(Continued)

(Reporter's Note: The documents offered at the close of yesterday's session were marked as follows for identification: U. S. Exhibit 30, Dispatcher, issue of November 14, 1937; U. S. Exhibit 31, Dispatcher, March 19, 1948; U. S. Exhibit 32, Labor Herald, October 24, 1941; Exhibit 33, Labor Herald, August 21, 1942; Exhibit 34, Labor Herald, September 19, 1941.)

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Bridges, I would like to read from your column, "On the Beam," in the May 2, 1947, issue of the Dispatcher (showing document to counsel).

Mr. Hallinan: What date is that?

Mr. Donohue: May 2, 1947.

Q. I take it you are correctly quoted here, Mr. Bridges?

A. In the whole column, yes, sure. I wrote that column.

Q. Would you tell me what trade union purposes you were serving [6088] when you wrote as follows:

> "The most effective atmosphere for the brass to work in in peacetime, as it is in wartime, is one in which they constantly work to create a public feeling that war is imminent, and further that the war is not of their making but is inevitably due to come about because of the Greeks or the Chinese or the Koreans, or because of the alleged expansion of Communist Russia. It would be refreshing to hear some of the brass, including the Secretary of State, let go a blast over the radio against Franco Spain or Argentina, or the dictatorship of Turkey where unions are illegal."

Now, what trade union purposes were you serving when you were so quoted?

A. I think the whole column reveals that. The last sentence you just read reveals it. I think the general tone of the column and the theme of the column is that the Army makes a profession of war. The more war—and war means full employment for the Army. It is not so nice for maybe the lower ranks. And that column was generally an attack against the top brass and their ways of doing things, and it was generally a trade union approach; that we don't like it. I think what the column in effect says, or certainly what it means, too many people in the Army, their attitude towards civilians and certainly towards labor unions is not one that fools people, or [6089] is a good one. They like to get people in the military organization, slap a number on them, and from there on in you take orders and no back talk, notwithstanding the rights or the guarantees of the Constitution.

That might be O.K. when the country is actually at war like it was during the last war. As you know, there is quite a few people, at least in our union and the trade union point of view, there are quite a few people, military leaders who see it that way in peacetime too, and who would rather have the country under military control in times of war or in times of peace for many, many reasons. From a trade union point of view we do not think that is a good idea. We think that civilians are far more capable people, more able to run the nation, far more democratic, far more tolerant.

That is the view of many citizens, no matter what their station in life may be. In effect that is the purpose, that is the idea behind the column, and that is the thought that it is intended to express and that is the thought that it does express.

Q. When you say "because of the alleged expansion of Communist Russia," is that your concept of what has happened to Russia since the close of the war in 1945?

A. I don't think you can take one—now you are taking one word out of a whole column, and it isn't a matter of semantics; it is a question of taking the column as a whole. And I don't know; if we are going to get into an argument here over the [6090] expansion of any country—now, I don't want to join the reactionary clique that wants to attack any country. I think that if you start leveling attacks against any country, you start the beginnings of a war program. I have already said it is the way I feel and it is the way that the workers of the country generally feel. They don't like war. We don't regard that as apparently the only way we seem to be able to get full employment and to avoid depressions is by making war upon some other country. We realize there is a lot of things wrong with the world and a lot of things wrong with our country. This point of view is not confined to the union I belong to. It is the point of view of the unions throughout the world generally. We are not so sure that the problems of war can be met or the general evils of war can be cured by war. We know there is one thing that happens in war: A lot of people get killed, and the way wars are fought now, not only the military get killed but women and children and non-military people get hurt, and so forth.

So, when you start getting into this question of expansion—expansion by any nation—I don't know how far we can go on that. If you want a simple, brief answer, the union I represent and myself, we are against expansion of any nation, including Russia, if such expansion is going to trespass upon the rights of the citizens of any country. We are against expansion if it is going to mean war. And that goes not only for Russia or England, but even we have that belief towards our own country, the United States of America. [6091]

Q. Well, Mr. Bridges, do you think that the expansion of Communist Russia is a mere allegation of physical fact?

A. Well, you give me an idea of what you mean; point out some concrete examples and I will try my best to answer them. Now, I am certainly not—didn't try to blame the expansion of Communist Russia or capitalist England or the slave states of Arabia—don't try to blame them on me. I have got nothing to do with them. I might have an opinion on them, and if I have got an opinion on them, that opinion springs from where I believe such expansion will hurt me or hurt the members of my union, and the people of the United States generally. And I think that such expansion will have an effect, directly or indirectly. I thought it was my right to be able to say so. Am I on trial for that, too?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. I am simply trying to find out, Mr. Bridges, what you meant when you used the words I just quoted.

A. Well, why are you trying to find it out? What is wrong with it?

Mr. Donohue: Would you mark that for identification, please?

A. (Continuing) I have tried to point out exactly where I stand. Don't you worry about me, Mr. Donohue. Don't you be afraid about me telling you where I stand on anything. In the past or now. But what you are trying to do, at a time when the United States was at war with some other countries and we were [6092] all allies together, you are trying to lift out things that I said then as a leader of a trade union, that I meant then and don't want to back away from now. That is one of the things that is wrong; there are so many people today trying to back away, in my opinion, from every decent constructive thing they ever said, and to try and hunt a hole, especially if they work for the Government, because certain people, for their own political reasons—the Attorney General of the United States made a speech in San Francisco last night, and what was the nature of his speech? That the strength of the Communist Party in the United States is lower now than it ever was. It was highest that it ever was during the regime of Herbert Hoover. What a wonderful, constructive position for a cabinet officer to be taking! I thought he might come out here and talk about the growing unemployment here in California, or in the city or our state. We are one of the hardest hit areas in the United States. That is part of my job as a member of a trade union and an officer of a trade union. My own membership, members of other unions, come around, they are on relief. They go on relief by the hundreds. It is getting worse all the time. And all the help we can get from a high cabinet officer, your superior, is that the Communist Party was stronger during the days of Herbert Hoover than it is now, thanks to the wonderfully effective program of the present administration. Well, believe me, that is not the answer the people are looking for. [6093] They want to know what is going to be done about stopping the coming depression, the spreading unemployment, old age pensions. Why, there's an attempt here to indict a leader of an old age pension movement in the state of California—not because he has done anything wrong, but because he is leading a move for more pensions for our elderly citizens. And that is all the United States Attorney General can think of, to come out and boast of things like that. And I am not going to be backward about saying what I think. I thought that was the right I had, whether I was a citizen or not a citizen of the United States

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

As a trade union official, I am ordered to say such things by my membership, and if they think it is right, I am going to do it, and I don't know, I didn't know you could put anybody on trial for doing such things or saying them. I am not going to back away from anything I said during the war, for the reasons that I have stated; they are in writing there. We have got reams and reams of records. All I was trying to do at the time, along with a lot of other people, well, the leaders of various fighting nations, they had their positions and we were kind of going along in the same direction. Not just blindly and foolishly, but because we thought it was the thing that the majority of the people, the thing that they thought was the correct thing to do, and it was in the interest of the majority of people.

Now, you will find that that is true of all the articles you are reading there, and it is no good of you now only picking [6094] out one sentence—in fact, now you are picking out just one word and trying to make that one word stand alone. That won't work.

Q. Mr. Bridges, why are you so sensitive about the Attorney General of the United States' comforting suggestion that the Communist population of the United States is decreasing?

A. I am not so sensitive about it at all, Mr. Donohue. I am not so sensitive about it. He is the Attorney General of the United States. He was the one that gave the orders that myself and two other union officers be put on trial and indicted.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Don't you know——

A. (Continuing) He is the one that came into this courtroom. He is the same one that come into this courtroom not so many months ago, before the Judge here—no reflection, I don't intend any reflection on his Honor the Judge—and sought an injunction to force the members of the union I represent to stay on the job for another 80 days, under the same hours, wages and conditions. We tried to argue for arbitration and a lot of other things. Even His Honor here suggested that he couldn't see why arbitration couldn't be utilized. But it wasn't good enough for the Attorney General. He sought the injunction. The purpose of that injunction was to force the workers to stay on the job at the same hours, wages and conditions. There was nothing done about the profits of the employer, nothing done about what they were doing. So we have got our own opinions about the Attorney [6095] General of the United States. We think that he is supposed to serve the people, not the special interests. And we are going to keep on talking out against him and if he doesn't do the job he is supposed to do, we will do, in our own small way, all we can to get him, to find him another job. Let's not worry about those things. I notice Mr. J. Howard McGrath, you know, was appointed to the job from the United States Senate. I notice some of these people when they go to Congress and the Senate, notwithstanding what you think, Mr. Donohue, they are not backward about coming around looking for support. And in various forms. They don't worry about myself and others, notwithstanding our supposedly or allegedly political coloration. They don't worry about what it is, if we can deliver a few votes, a little help, a little endorsement and so forth. They are willing to take it. And they should, because they are not so worried about those things. They probably know the score more than you do. That is the point I am making.

Q. Mr. Bridges, is there anything about this country of ours that you do agree with or that you do like?

A. I agree with lots of things. I didn't know you were talking about that. Now, I wish you would start talking about the things in this country that I agree with. What you are doing, you are searching in every direction to try and pick out things that I mightn't agree with.

Now, that is exactly the way our union works in this [6096] country or any other country. We try to search out the areas of agreement. We try to find out what we agree with everybody on, and work with everybody on the basis of that agreement.

Your method seems to be to search out every little point where there can be disagreement and to try to develop that disagreement. That is one of the things that is wrong with the world today—too darned many people trying to search out the areas of disagreement, trying to search out everything that is bad, and make a point of it. We would be far, far better off if we tried to figure out ways to get along with people and not to try to figure out ways to fight them.

Q. Mr. Bridges, I want to call your attention to an article in a special supplement of the May 2nd, 1947, issue of the Dispatcher, called "The Road Ahead" by the officers of the International Longshoremen & Warehousemen's Union, report to the Seventh Biennial Convention, and draw your attention to a portion of it, and ask you if you endorse it.

(Document handed to Mr. Hallinan.)

The Witness: If it is something I said, I endorse it without even seeing it. If it is something I wrote, I don't even need to look at it.

The Clerk: If Your Honor please, for the record may the last exhibit which was marked for identification be noted as U. S. 35 for identification?

The Court: So ordered. [6097]

(Whereupon The Dispatcher dated May 2, 1947, referred to above, was marked United States Exhibit No. 35 for identification.)

(Document handed to the witness by the Clerk.)

A. I endorse it. I was correctly quoted, if that is what you mean. I didn't write that report; that was a report of the officers of the union. Myself, Robertson, Goldblatt and the vice president, Bulcke. So we all endorse it, we all wrote parts of it. But that is just by way of explanation. I mightn't have written that particular part, but I support it completely.

Q. Then on May 2nd, 1947, Mr. Bridges, you supported the view:

> "These are the objectives of the 80th Congress. Truman is doing his best to at least be credited with an assist when the ball game is tallied. There are other aspects of these programs, but they are subsidiary to the two principal objectives, the destruction of labor and the wrecking of the United Nations."

A. Seems to me that in the last presidential campaign the President went around the United States, and that his main platform was blasting the 80th Congress. That is all we heard in this city and other cities, and from the backs of trains and from the housetops and over the air. President Truman and the "do-nothing 80th Congress." He certainly run for re-election and got re-elected mainly on that platform. But that is not the [6098] reason we were criticizing the 80th Congress. The reasons are there. And what we said about the actions of the President at least being credited with an assist—nothing to take back on that either.

Q. Then you are of the opinion that the President of the United States, and through him the government of the United States, is seeking to wreck the United Nations?

A. We are talking about—you are talking about May of 1947?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. The language speaks for itself. It said, "an assist." It is not a question of motives, it is more a question of a negative approach.

Mr. Donohue: I ask Your Honor to have this marked for identification, if the Court please.

The Court: So ordered.

The Clerk: May it be marked Government's 36 for identification, The Dispatcher of May 2, 1947.

> (Whereupon May 2nd, 1947, issue of Dispatcher was marked United States Exhibit No. 36 for identification.)

A. (Continuing) You should understand, Mr. Donohue, in order to make that clear, that our union being a part of a national organization known as the CIO, is called upon to act on certain recommendations. The national CIO takes a certain position with respect to the presidential election, with respect to various Congressmen and the Congress as a whole and with respect to [6099] various issues before Congress. We are asked to endorse certain things, to oppose certain things, separate and apart from our own views may be. Of course, we do the same thing within the union itself. We act on those matters, and those matters include the endorsement or support of certain political candidates for election. So in addition to a president being a president of the United States, he is also the head of a political party. And when elections come around, we approach the thing from the point of view of what the party stands for and what the head of the party stands for. What is the problem of the people, including the trade unions, and what is it offering in the way of solving the problems—that is our approach. That has got nothing to do with the President of the United States and nothing to do with the Government; it is purely a political problem. [6100]

Q. Mr. Bridges, you have in your public utterances and in your public writings criticized the President of the United States. In any such form have you ever criticized the chief political officer of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics?

A. I don't know at this time, but that has got nothing to do with me. This is where I live and work here in the United States. I am not running around criticizing the leaders of other countries for the reasons I have stated. I don't want to join this clique. I have said nothing against Russia. I haven't said nothing against Albania. I have said nothing against quite a few other countries either, because when you start in a program like that, you start—inevitably you just join the war clique, and I just don't believe in hollering my head off unless there is some kind of follow-through, a kind of put-up-or-shut-up affair. And when you start out on this business of blasting the institutions or heads of other nations, unless you mean what you are saying, you should be prepared to follow it up with war.

I just think we have lived too much, and too much of our daily life is determined and dictated by what we do in a negative sense. That is not an original thought of mine. Quite a few real leaders in various walks of life here in the United States are beginning to point that out. We live less here in the United States by what we should do in a positive manner than we do by taking a position opposite what some other country does, [6101] particularly Russia. We are in this position: We do the opposite to what Russia says because we want to be sure that no one can in any way accuse us of being of the same type of thinking or doing the same kind of thing. So in this desperate, hysterical drive not to be connected with anything Russia or the Russian leaders or Stalin might do, we desperately go out of our way to do something else. And that is a pretty stupid way to do things, in my opinion.

I am reminded—and this is how far it has gone—Mark Twain wrote a book called "The Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court." Incidentally, that book in recent weeks—months—has been barred from the schools and libraries of the State of New York because it is just what you are pointing out. But in there there is the story of a Yankee in England at that time, and visiting a person of pretty humble character and occupation—I think he was a charcoal burner—he was told, "The man isn't home. He is out hanging his neighbors." And the Connecticut Yankee wanted to know, "What is he doing out hanging his neighbors?"

He said, "If I didn't get out and hang my neighbors—the lord's house has burned down, so we went out to hang some people for it, because if I didn't I might be suspected of doing the job."

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

The Connecticut Yankee said, "How about it? Are they guilty or not?" [6102]

"Well, that has nothing to do with the matter. I am just looking out for myself. If I don't get out and join the mob and hang my neighbors, they might think I done it."

The Yankee then said, "I think you are a damned scoundrel." That was his attitude.

On this business of asking me, "Do you ever say anything against Soviet Russia?" can you tell me why I should? Is that the sign of a good American, Mr. Donohue? I think people should be judged by what they do about the United States of America or any other country in which they live. Now, other countries might have their attitudes toward us. That is just too darned bad about them. But here is the country in which we live. Here is the country I know something about. What happens here in the United States, that determines what my future will be and the future of a lot of other people, it doesn't make any difference whether I think or whether I say anything against Soviet Russia, and I think it is just tragic. I notice every person running for political office, they seem to have to make up their minds, the first place they start off, they have to get up on the public platform and say, "Stalin is a bum," or something, or "Russia is no good." Then there are others that say England is no good or France is no good. All those things might or might not be true. But I would sooner see them start talking about what is good or bad here in the United States and try to do something about the bad things, and [6103] there is a lot of bad things, too. Why, here in this State of ours we have had children starving to death recently because they haven't had enough to eat. At least there is a political candidate coming along running for Governor of the State and he is pointing it out. I think that is a step in the right direction. He is saying, "Look, if you elect me Governor of the State, I will take steps to see children don't starve in this State." We are burning and destroying food in recent weeks and months and yet children have starved to death through lack of food out here in the areas. Finally we have a political candidate who is coming along and saying, "at least if you elect me governor I will try to see that no children starve to death." That is what I concentrate on, Mr. Donohue, and I don't give a darn what Russia thinks, what she does, what her policies are. Only when those policies clash with my well-being and my welfare and the welfare of the people I represent in the United States are we going to get too much disturbed about them, and we will have plenty to say about them or any other country either.

There, as briefly as I can make it, or somewhat lengthy, is where we stand on that, as to whether we have said anything about Stalin that I can recall in recent months.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Mr. Bridges, you have in your public speeches and writings criticized the Secretaries of State of the United States. Have you ever criticized the foreign policy of Mr. Molotov? [6104]

A. What is it?

Q. I am asking you, Mr. Bridges.

A. Well, you tell me. I know what the foreign policy is of the Secretary of State of the United States. I know what that is. Now, I don't know what Molotov's foreign policy is. That part of it that I know about we certainly endorsed. I attended a few sessions of the United Nations here in San Francisco when it was on. There was certainly one part of Molotov's policy I endorsed. I was in the chamber that day when Molotov made his speech against the admittance to the United Nations of Argentina. Well, I think everybody there endorsed what Molotov said. If that is a part of his foreign policy, I endorse that part, too.

I endorse the policy about disarmament. I see a proposal is made for disarmament. I am for that. My union supports that, the national CIO supports it. I think the world would be better off if there was some disarmament and the money being spent in building up armaments now was turned into other channels. It just happens to be my opinion, dealing with the economic matters, that we are heading for a depression all over the world. Unemployment is growing, trade is falling off. We know about the dollar deficit in most of the countries of the world. We know about the devaluation of currency. We know about the slacking down of trade. We know about all those things. It spells growing unemployment, it spells world [6105] depression. And I know I do not have to be a student of economics or have a college education to know that when a depression comes, the average person suffers, particularly the working people, particularly small business, the small farmer, and particularly the older citizens. They are in a bad way.

Q. Mr. Bridges, you have publicly criticized the Attorneys General of the United States. Have you ever criticized the brutal prosecutor of the infamous purge trials and the master of the voluntary confession, Mr. Vishinsky, about that?

A. Again referring to something you brought up here earlier——

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me, before we go into that. Maybe we ought to indict Manning Johnson, Crouch and Ross before you start talking about perjured witnesses and framed trials. That would be a good sign as to your own sincerity.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Are you now prepared to answer the question after the brief interlude?

A. My knowledge on those things is second-hand, but let me tell you this: Mr. Joseph E. Davies was ambassador to Russia. I had only one converation with Mr. Davies, once in his office in Washington, but I heard him speak at a couple of meetings in Washington, D. C., after he came back from Russia. One was at the press club in Washington and another one somewhere else. There was cases, maybe not criminal cases, at least I have learned to some degree to judge and to tell when a witness is telling the truth, when a witness is telling a story that is being third-degreed out of him. If the witness is under pressure or drugs," he said, "those witnesses in my opinion were setting out true confessions." He said, "Those people were traitors to their country." He said, "Those people were condemned to death and most of them or some of them were shot." He said, "In my opinion they received the proper type of treatment. They were shot; they should have been shot." He said, "Now, that is my answer to the question as to those trials, conditions, and so forth," and Mr. Vishinsky handled those trials, I understand. And an open forum. Questions were allowed to be asked, and someone got up in the audience and asked Mr. Davies the very same question you are asking me now. The words were [6106] practically the same, Mr. Donohue, and Mr. Davies answered, and the best way I can answer your question is to quote what he said: He said this, "I am a corporation lawyer." He said, "I do not hold with the policy, the legal policy of Soviet Russia, which is somewhat the reverse of ours here in the United States. The general idea you are innocent until proven guilty. Over in Russia it is more along the lines you are guilty until you can prove yourself innocent." He said, "Even though I do not hold with that," he said, "I am a corporation lawyer; I sat in the courtroom through those many months of trial. As a corporation lawyer who has tried many instead of taking my answer, there is the answer of a man who was there, who was an attorney, who was [6107] our ambassador to Russia and, of course, I don't think he has any connection with the Communist Party or the Soviet Union or anything like that. [6107-A]

Q. Did you editorialize in your column, "On the Beam," on the Cardinal Mindzenty trial?

A. I don't know; I might have. One of my jobs was to do those things. It is one of my jobs, and I am responsible for everything that appears in the paper. We employ an editor. If there is anything wrong in the paper, I can't blame the editor; I take full responsibility for anything that is said in the paper. Even though sometimes our paper may make a mistake, that is neither here nor there, if it said it, I stand behind it.

Q. What is your present recollection as to whether you made any comment on that question?

A. Specifically, I don't know.

Now, listen, if you are talking about espionage,—you know I am a grown up person, Mr. Donohue, and nobody is kidding me. I think that our country has got spies in every other country in the world, and I have no doubt that other countries have got spies in the United States. I don't limit it to just Russia. I think Russia and England and other countries have got spies here. I hope I am not mistaken, and I have got a hunch I am not. Probably a few of our people are in other countries too; it might be that they are in all kinds of garbs. It is nothing new. I didn't invent the idea. They may be disguising themselves as prosecuting attorneys, they may be disguising themselves as ministers of the faith, they may be disguising themselves [6108] as union leaders, as Communists, as Socialists, as Democrats or what not. Don't blame me. Spying is an old honored profession and its is probably still going on. We may engage in it and other countries may engage in it. Just don't blame me; I am not responsible.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Donohue: I have no further questions.

Redirect Examination

By Mr. Hallinan:

Counsel having introduced portions of the resolutions that you supported or resolutions that you offered—and I hope the jury won't be too dismayed because I will read very short excerpts from them, but if necessary, the entire document can be introduced in evidence—you stated with regard to them, Mr. Bridges, that in a great many of them you were supporting programs of the CIO, and I have here as far back as the proceedings of the first constitutional convention of the Congress of Industrial Organization in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania in November, 1938, in a resolution proposed by John L. Lewis, Mr. John L. Lewis the first president talking about war and anti-war. See if you can refresh your recollection from the statements that I will give, that these are part of the resolutions:

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

> "Who is going to do the suffering and the dying in the future but the sons and daughters of the workers of the country? The workers of this country will never make anything out of war. They merely work and sweat and fight and [6109] die; someone else takes the profits. Who took the profits of the last war? Not labor. If war comes, the United States will need the cooperation of the millions and millions of workers that are members of the CIO."

And then proceeding to the second constitutional convention——

Mr. Donohue: Excuse me. Was that a question?

Mr. Hallinan: Does that refresh your recollection that that was part of a resolution offered by Mr. Lewis?

If you wish, I will introduce the whole proceedings of the constitutional conventions, but I don't want to load the record up, and I am only going to pick excerpts out. If you want, we will offer them for identification, then you can take any part that you want, or I will offer them entirely in evidence, whichever you want.

Mr. Donohue: They are not admissible. We are not concerned with what John L. Lewis said. We are concerned with what Harry Bridges said.

Mr. Hallinan: Mr. Bridges stated on cross-examination that his views coincided with those and followed the line set out by the CIO conventions, and in order to give substantiation of this matter——

Mr. Donohue: The only matters we have sought to introduce from the CIO conventions were what Mr. Bridges said. Anything that Mr. Bridges said at any of these conventions we are glad to have introduced in evidence. [6110]

Mr. Hallinan: Then it is contended by counsel that these were some independent matters that Mr. Bridges thought up himself. I want to show, as he has testified already, that they conformed to and carried out the policies set by the convention of the CIO and its general officers. As a matter of fact, under the rule that if part of a proceeding is admissible it is all admissible, we could read everything in these proceedings on the subject. I don't want to do that. I just want to show the parts of it that substantiate what he said as to following the policies of the CIO in these matters.

The Clerk: If Your Honor please, may the exhibit be marked Defendant's H-3 for identification?

The Court: So ordered.

(Proceedings of 1938 CIO convention were thereupon marked Defendants' Exhibit H-3 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): In the next convention, that ~~is~~ in 1939 in San Francisco, Governor Culbert Olson speaking in support of a resolution——

Mr. Donohue: I object, if Your Honor please. Certainly anything that Governor Olson may have said at any convention is not admissible in this proceeding.

The Court: I can not see, Mr. Hallinan, how statements made by other political leaders or labor leaders might be relevant to this particular examination. I am willing to give, and I have given, extreme liberality, but I don't see—— [6111]

Mr. Hallinan: Here is the thing—I think there will be no question on this resolution in the matter of labor and the European war. This is the resolution adopted by the convention, and, as I say, is the resolution that Mr. Bridges testifies that he was in part carrying out; that while he has his own opinions on these things and expressed them, he was following the principles of the CIO constitutional convention. And I have here a resolution passed by that convention on the subject of labor and the European war in 1939.

Mr. Donohue: I think——

Mr. Hallinan: I want to read some excerpts from it.

Mr. Donohue: I think what Mr. Bridges may have said about that resolution is admissible, if Your Honor please.

Mr. Hallinan: No, here is the matter that counsel here selects by Mr. Bridges, who is an officer of the organization, where he expresses in his paper and in his union and so forth matters that have been decided at the constitutional conventions of the CIO, resolutions that have been passed, but makes it to appear or attempts to make it appear as though they were his own individual opinions; that he was expressing nothing more than his own individual opinions. In fact, he has tried to raise the inference that in all these matters he was running contrary to the opinions of the CIO.

The Court: Hasn't Mr. Bridges himself differentiated his statements in connection with the local paper which is edited [6112] by him or at least under his supervision, as distinguished from the thinking of the national CIO policies therein set forth?

Mr. Hallinan: I think he made that distinction. We are coming to that paper presently. Now we are coming to the matters that he read and resolutions that he supported in his own union. If counsel has started out to give, as he should give, the impression that Mr. Bridges was only carrying out the policies decided by the national CIO and expressing resolutions by them on the exact subject that he has been talking about—the second front, the second front in Japan and Russia, the support of the WFTU, the International Labor Organizations, the anti-war, the anti-conscription—all those things are policies of the national CIO set out in these conventions in resolutions adopted by them, and Mr. Bridges is only supporting what were the policies of that great union of 600,000 men.

Now, as I say, if counsel wanted to criticize Mr. Bridges for not attacking those things or being a member of the CIO which endorsed them, it might be one thing. But I submit that his whole principle and course that his examination took has been to raise the inference that Mr. Bridges was taking a position opposite to the CIO and that the matters which he was standing for were not the principles of the CIO.

The Court: Well, the point I have in mind is this, if you will bear with me a moment: The adverse views of leaders, let us say, such as John L. Lewis and Culbert Olson, upon a given [6113] subject might be as varied as on any subject men may debate upon. It is the net result that matters.

Mr. Hallinan: I see the validity of that suggestion.

The Court: In other words, ten men may debate the subject in many forms——

Mr. Hallinan: The only thing that would be proper would be the resolutions finally adopted by the CIO.

The Court: If there be some logical or legal relevancy in connection with the statements made by the witness on the stand with respect to what may have eventuated, I think those would be relevant.

Mr. Hallinan: That is it. In other words, I will omit the discussion by people like Governor Olson and John L. Lewis and come to the results finally which were binding on Mr. Bridges.

Mr. Donohue: If Your Honor please, the only resolutions of the CIO that I directed to Mr. Bridges' attention were the resolutions in which Mr. Bridges stood practically alone in opposition to the rest of the union.

The Court: If so, that should be reflected therein.

Mr. Hallinan: In other words, if he introduced resolutions that Mr. Bridges stood practically alone for, then certainly we are entitled to show that they were ones which he did not stand alone in.

Mr. Donohue: The resolutions I discussed with Mr. Bridges were the resolutions on which he was overwhelmingly defeated, [6114] and those were, one, the one against Communist domination in the CIO and the resolution endorsing the WFTU, which Mr. Bridges fought for and which were almost unanimously defeated. [6114-A]

The Court: Those are the two that I have in mind.

Mr. Hallinan: All right. Now, I will show, if the Court please, that while that is now the principle of the CIO, there are resolutions to the exact contrary, that the CIO not only passed resolutions endorsing the WFTU and stating that unity of labor organizations all over the world was essential to the preservation of peace and to the betterment of humanity generally, and especially endorsed the WFTU, but the CIO joined the WFTU, and for some years remained in it. The WFTU was a part of the program of the United Nations. The CIO eagerly took it up.

All right, in 1949—that is last year—the CIO changes its mind and withdraws from the WFTU. Furthermore, for several years the CIO, as we will show by the resolutions adopted, here, itself condemned red-baiting attacks upon Russia and other methods of dissolving and re-creating contentions in labor unions, and went right along with that program.

Now, here is the trouble, that when the CIO leaders, for their own purposes, decide to change that and now say, "We condemn what we once supported; we now say that there should be red-baiting against which we have passed resolutions; we now condemn the WFTU which we once extolled so greatly and which we joined," then Mr. Bridges is supposed to have the same lack of integrity that those people have, and he is supposed to change his mind and abandon his principles because it would suit his [6115] purposes. That is the whole proposition. All of counsel's suggestion is this: Mr. Bridges, having embraced principles that were embraced by the leading people not only of the United States but of the world, principles that were noble, principles of humanity, principles that were against the insular notion that we are some sort of an island set apart, and the rest of humanity can go hang so long as we are all right, because Mr. Bridges embraced those things when, as I say, every person of any nobility in the world was embracing it, now, when it might be a politic thing and might appeal to general hysteria for him to come in and apologize and backtrack on those and repudiate them, because Philip Murray or someone else has repudiated them, he is supposed to be a Communist. Everything that is good—if he stood against shipping war materials to Ethiopia and to Italy and to Japan, he is a Communist. If he held out for equality of races in the union, he is a Communist. If, when the war was on and the Russians were bleeding to death against the assaults of Germany, he was in favor of helping him, our allies, the people that we were sworn and bound to help, he is a Communist. If, when the war is over,——

The Court: Mr. Hallinan, don't you think you should reserve some of that argument for your closing argument?

Mr. Hallinan: Well, it is important on this, because I want to show——

The Court: I don't think you should expend yourself in the [6116] middle of the matter, but I would say this to you. If Mr. Bridges stood alone in connection with several resolutions to which reference has been made by the prosecution or by Mr. Donohue, then those matters may be gone into between yourself and counsel. Let us find those resolutions. Now, certainly neither this Court nor the jury can go into the changing tides that may have affected the CIO, nor the erosions of time that may have affected their thinking. But——

Mr. Hallinan: Well, then, suppose we get some place on it. May I ask——

The Court: Could we take the recess at this time and——

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, we have twenty times at recess endeavored to carry out orders of the Court——

The Court: Well, I only thought, Mr. Hallinan, that we might, during the recess time, correlate your thinking and Mr. Donohue's on these specific items and save our time.

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, you are setting me a task that I can not do, to correlate my thinking with Mr. Donohue's. He thinks in an entirely different fashion, and we have endeavored, and when we have endeavored to carry out a suggestion like that before, we have always been insulted. We walk up to the table and say, "What about this?" "We are not interested," and away we walk. Now, we can do it in five minutes here.

The Court: Well, I will say to you, Mr. Hallinan, that Mr. Donohue's demeanor in the recess must change rapidly from [6117] what we observe here.

Mr. Hallinan: It does, Your Honor.

The Court: Because his demeanor in court is uniformly courteous.

Mr. Hallinan: As soon as Mr. Donohue gets away from the jury, he is an entirely different man. You have heard him in court, talking about me and Mr. MacInnis when the jury wasn't here. No one would think, to observe him here, that he was capable of descending to the things he has said about us. What we say, we say out openly in front of everybody; but Mr. Donohue waits until the jury isn't around and then tells us whatever he wishes to say.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Now, I might suggest this, Your Honor. It won't take—it will take only a few minutes. Let's now find out what matter Mr. Donohue claims Mr. Bridges was at variance on with the CIO, and we will limit ourselves to that.

Now, he says one was the WFTU. Is that correct, Mr. Donohue?

Mr. Donohue: That's correct, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: All right. Now, how about Mr. Bridges' stand against conscription? Do you claim that the CIO was at variance with him on that?

Mr. Donohue: I didn't even ask Mr. Bridges about that.

Mr. Hallinan: All right. So then we will knock out the one on conscription. [6118]

I have one on the WFTU. Now, what about Mr. Bridges' position in 1941, of being in favor of aiding the Soviet Union in its heroic struggle against Germany? Do you think that that was contrary to the CIO's policy?

Mr. Donohue: It sounds like Mr. Bridge's policy.

Mr. Hallinan: All right. Do you think that that is not the CIO's policy, is that right? Well, I have that resolution. All right.

Now, I have another resolution, in 1942, condemning the—the CIO condemning Hitler's puppet states, condemning the Vichy, Finnish and Spanish governments and sustaining Great Britain and the Soviet Union. Do you deny that that was the CIO's policy?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Donohue: I didn't ask Mr. Bridges anything about it.

Mr. Hallinan: All right. Then that is not supposed to be his. Now, how about the second front? Do you claim that that was Mr. Bridge's own principle or do you deny that the CIO supported the same position that he did?

Mr. Donohue: I say that that is one of those situations where all persons who wanted the second front weren't Communists, but all Communists wanted the second front.

Mr. Hallinan: All right. Then that puts a lot of us as Communists.

Now, do you deny that the CIO came out in numerous resolutions supporting Harry Bridges and condemning the persecution [6119] by the government agencies of Harry Bridges?

Mr. Donohue: I didn't ask him, because I didn't want to embarrass him by the fact that they are not following now the same line.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes. But they have changed on this, too. I have a wonderful resolution here, too, telling all about the kind of people you represent and stating what a fine man Mr. Bridges is and what a ruthless and unjust persecution he has been undergoing for 15 years. Now, do you want me to read that?

Mr. Donohue: Well, that is true of every man charged with crime up to the time he is convicted, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, then, I think we will have the consolation of knowing that it will cease.

And you say that you do not contend that it was his position, that he took the sole position, on anti-conscription?

Mr. Donohue: No, I never asked him about that, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: All right. Now, what about Mr. Bridges' statement that the Federal Bureau of Investigation has been indulging in labor-smashing and spying on unions in the interests of the employers? Do you claim that that is Mr. Bridges' peculiar conclusion?

Mr. Donohue: His and the Communist Party's.

Mr. Hallinan: All right. Now, do you claim that the CIO hasn't said exactly the same thing in resolutions?

Mr. Donohue: If you will prove that at that time the CIO [6120] was not dominated by the Communist Party, I will concede to it.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, then, I think we should be allowed to read that, Your Honor.

Now, I have another anti-conscription policy one here. Now, what about anti-war and imperialism, in 1947? That was the article that Mr. Bridges wrote and which was condemned or for which he was condemned or questioned about, and on which he had said he was opposed to all war, any imperialistic war, including any that the United States might engage in? Do you claim that that is his peculiar statement, or will you admit that it was Resolution No. 4 of the Foreign Policy and World Emergency, of the CIO convention, held in October, 1947?

Mr. Donohue: The only time Mr. Bridges' record, as presented to him, showed he called the war an imperialistic war was before the Nazi Germany attack upon Russia.

Mr. Hallinan: Then I will be forced, I will ask to be allowed to read that one in, Your Honor.

Now, I have an anti-red-baiting resolution of the ILWU, in April, 1947. Do you claim that that was Mr. Bridges' sole notion, or do you admit that that was the policy of the union as expressed in resolutions?

Mr. Donohue: Well, it is pretty hard to say because Mr. Bridges so closely identifies himself with the union. It is difficult to say, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: We will limit ourselves to those matters, [6121] then, Your Honor. I put the other ones aside. I want to read some excerpts from the resolution on the WFTU as of 1946.

The Court: Now that you have taken those matters up, I think we had better take the recess.

Mr. Hallinan: Very well.

The Court: We will take the morning recess, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you, not to discuss the case under any conditions, nor to form or evpress an opinion thereon until it is submitted to you.

(Recess.) [6122]

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Hallinan: Reading from the resolutions of the convention of 1944 on the International Labor Unity, I ask you if you remember this resolution, Mr. Bridges. This is a portion of it only:

> "For these reasons the British Trade Union Congress on November 6 of last year issued a call inviting representtaives of organized labor in all countries to attend an international labor conference. The CIO readily accepted. Such an invitation was consistent with the policy that has been prescribed by our previous conventions. We have fully endorsed the program that International Labor Unity must embrace the labor organizations of all United Nations."

Q. Do you remember that? A. Yes.

Q. "This conference must establish a firm basis for International Labor Unity. We have suggested for the agenda of the conference the consideration of the establishment of an international trade union movement with participation on the part of all labor organizations in all of the United Nations, and after victory, all other nations desiring to so participate. The United Nations have demonstrated that through unity during the war nothing can stop our ultimate military victories. Such unity based upon international labor cooperation will bring the true [6123] and durable peace for which the common man throughout the world is now yearning. On its foundation the people will establish the kind of world in which the blessing of freedom of speech, freedom of worship, freedom from want and freedom from fear shall accrue to all."

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Pursuant to that resolution we sent a delegation to London. There was a meeting in London to found a worldwide labor organization.

Q. Then at the convention in Atlantic City in 1946—— A. I was not present.

Q. You have read the proceedings?

A. Later on. Our union was present.

Q. Let me ask you this, Mr. Bridges. As suggested, in addition to being president of the local union, you were West Coast representative at one time of the CIO and then California representative, is that correct?

A. I was president of the international union, West Coast representative of the CIO, and later on, after the convention of 1939, I was California representative, director.

Q. And as such were you obligated, not in the local matter, but in the matter in which you were a representative of the international, to carry out the policies adopted at the international conventions?

A. I was. I was bound as the regional director to carry out the policies and the orders and the directives of the national [6124] CIO, and generally I did. There came a time, however, when I refused to do so and I was removed from the job. And I made no complaint because I well understood that as long as I held that position, the reason I was in the position was in order to carry out the objectives and the program of the CIO as passed by its conventions, and when I refused to do so the CIO was within its right to remove me from the job.

Q. Taking the program set out in the convention I just discussed, and reading an excerpt upon the department that was created for international affairs, see if this refreshes your recollection as to some of the matters that were embraced in it.

> "In November, 1944, the CIO in its seventh convention resolved: 'The CIO supports the project of a new single powerful international labor body that shall include all the unions of free countries on the basis of equality, excluding none, and relegating none to a secondary place, and be capable of defending the interests of the common man.'
> This project has now been realized. Two world trade union conferences have already been the subjects of separate reports from our membership. The basis for the new federation was laid in London in February of 1945, and the work was completed in Paris in October, 1945, when the World Federation of Trade Unions was born." [6125]

Parenthetically, that is the organization that has been referred to by counsel as the WFTU, of which you have recently been elected president, when you were forbidden to leave the country to go to Marseilles; is that correct?

A. Not quite. The organization you refer to is the WFTU. The organization I was elected president of, although it is attached to the WFTU, it is a division or department of the WFTU, with this exception——

Q. What is it called, Mr. Bridges?

A. The International Union of Seamen, Harbor and Port Workers.

Q. Let me ask you, how many workers does the WFTU represent? A. Around 70,000,000.

> Q. "The Paris conference was attended by 185 delegates from 56 countries, representing over 66,000,000 organized workers. In spite of their diversities the delegates established a unity of purpose, thought and action, and an all-inclusive international trade union organization was formed, all-inclusive with the exception of the American Federation of Labor, the one major labor organization in the world which has remained aloof. The workers of all countries can now speak with a united voice on the international scene. Despite its youth and the fact that it had to organize itself amid the difficulties of the past war in Europe, the influence of the WFTU has already begun to be felt in a world development. In accordance [6126] with the Paris conference decision, the WFTU committee visited Germany in February, 1946. After thorough investigation of all four zones it made a complete report on denazification, the revival of free trade unions, and the progress of democratization of German life. This report > was adopted by the WFTU Executive Committee meeting in Moscow in June, 1946. The joint allied authorities in Berlin expressed their thanks for the report and they said they found it extremely helpful."

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Then skipping over some:

> "Throughout the world the CIO is endeavoring to promote friendships between people based on mutual understanding, human rights and respect for the right of each people to work for its own improvement, according to its own traditions and circumstances."

And finally:

> "In 1944, as in previous years, the CIO presented to President Roosevelt its request for equal representation in the labor delegation to the ILO conference scheduled for April of that year. The American Federation of Labor and its president became so vehement and obstreperous, under conditions as to create the danger of a major conflict in the midst of the tremendous war effort in which the people of this country were then engaged, and accordingly, on April 4, 1944, the CIO advised President Roosevelt that, [6127] conscious of his tremendous responsibility as President and Commander in Chief, and conscious of the necessity for avoiding any division or confusion in the midst of war, we would withdraw our formal request for > representation. In view of the position to which the Administration's present position has relegated the CIO and its spokesmen with respect to the operations of the ILO, your officers can see no further utility in participation by our representatives in this advisory capacity or in these special industry conferences. It is quite fortunate that at the present time, when the Administration's decision to limit so sadly American employees' participation in the functioning of the ILO, virtually destroys the utility of that organization, we do have available a far more effective and meaningful medium in a new fully active world federation of trade unions. This organization, representing as it does some 70,000,000 workers throughout the world, including as it does within its fold every single major labor organization in the entire world with the sole exception of the American Federation of Labor, is far more significant as a forum for the exchange of views, information and cooperative action among the workers' organizations throughout the world."

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Do you remember that resolution of the CIO at that convention?

A. That is right. And the WFTU was given somewhat of an [6128] informal status in so far as the United Nations is concerned. It is attached to the United Nations as an advisory body, in an advisory capacity.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Do you remember this from the proceedings of the third constitutional convention at Atlantic City, New Jersey in November, 1940, on the subject of involvement in the war—Resolution R-26, quoting only parts of it:

> "Whereas, 1, the people of this nation are more determined than ever to prevent this country from being dragged into the foreign wars now raging throughout the world, and, 2, John L. Lewis in his masterful Labor Day address in September of 1939, warned the nation of the dangers which beset the country and the efforts that would be made to drag us into the war and, 3, because the consideration on the part of the people of other grave affairs regarding their efforts to drag this country into the war, the candidates of both major political parties in the recent presidential campaign gave their sacred pledge that this nation would be kept at peace; and, 4, under the guise and false pretense of furthering national defense, the enemies of labor and democracy are attacking the living standards of the common people, the existence of labor unions, and the democratic institutions of the nation in their drive toward war;
> Now, Therefore, Be It Resolved that, 1, this convention [6129] reaffirms its determination that the nation must not enter into any foreign entanglements which may in any way, drag us down the path to entering or becoming involved in foreign wars. The eternal vigilance by organized labor will be the basic guarantee that a > repetition of 1917 will be avoided and peace and security for our nation will be preserved; and, 2, the executive board of the CIO at its meeting in June, 1940, unanimously adopted a policy relating to national defense and stated that the Congress of Industrial Organizations, its officers, constituents, unions and membership are fully prepared to discharge our responsibilities in the approaching national emergency to the best interests of the United States of America.

> The Executive Board made it clear and declared in unequivocal terms that we will defend the free institutions of this Republic under which the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution give us the greatest democracy on earth, government of the people, for the people and by the people. This policy is reaffirmed in clear, unmistakable terms. The Congress of Industrial Organizations and its millions of members and the members of their families are determined to protect and defend this nation, not only against our foreign enemies who may dare to attack us directly, but also against those forces within our nation who place the profits of their financial and industrial [6130] enterprises above the well-being of the millions of common people."

Do you remember that resolution?

A. Yes. There is more to it than that. The same resolution was adopted by the ILWU convention in

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

April, 1941, word for word, and that resolution was embodied and recommended to our convention in April, 1941. [6131]

Q. And as far as support of England, China and the Soviet Union before the entry of the United States into the war which has been called to your attention, do you remember, from the proceedings of November, 1941, at Detroit, Michigan, this Resolution R-1 concerning foreign policy, which states in part:

> "Resolved, that the CIO reflects the aims and needs of American workers, namely, the desire and right to live and work as free men in a free democracy. American workers cannot and will not tolerate any appeasement of any elements or forces which seek to undermine or compromise American democracy. We are fully cognizant and deeply appreciative of the dangers to our country as a result of the continued aggression of the Nazi government and Hitlerism. We cannot condemn too vehemently the coldblooded murder of innocent civilians in the conquered nations by Hitler and his Nazi hordes and call upon our Government to rally all free nations in their official condemnation of these brutal policies.
> At the present time the people of Great Britain and of the Soviet Union and China are engaged in their heroic struggle to smash Hitlerism. President Roosevelt, reflecting the unquestioned desire of the American people, has espoused the policy of extending complete and full aid to these nations in their vital struggle which involves the interests of the American people. [6123]

The CIO declares it to be of paramount importance to the security of the nation that we immediately furnish all possible aid to and completely cooperate with Great Britain, the Soviet Union and China, which are the nations now carrying on the struggle to rid the world of Naziism, the enemy of mankind, and thereby bring about the military annihilation of Hitler's regime. This program must be coupled with an aggressive preparedness and active defense by the united efforts of the nations of the Western Hemisphere.

The CIO commends President Roosevelt for his forthright foreign policy and in the joint action of the President and Congress in the recent amendments to the Neutrality Law which permits this nation to immediately arm and protect American ships and American seamen carrying vitally needed supplies to the heroic people of Great Britain, the Soviet Union and China, and thereby assure the quicker defeat of Nazi Germany.

National unity toward this end is essential. Efforts of any such as Lindbergh to disunite the American people on such un-American issues as anti-Semitism must be ferreted out and exposed as Hitler's Fifth Column. The American people demand that all aides of Hitler in this country,

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

> be their our own home-grown Quislings or the representatives of his puppet states, such as Vichy, [6133] France, must not be permitted to cause dissension or sow their seeds of disunity in this nation. Only through the united efforts of all our people to protect our great nation through the support of our clear foreign policy shall we survive with the heritage of our founders kept intact."

Do you remember that resolution? A. Yes.

Q. That was an official resolution of the CIO national convention in November, 1941?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, coming up to 1947 and the constitutional convention held in Boston on October 13 to 17, 1947, calling your attention to Resolution No. 4 on foreign policy and the world emergency, and reading only parts of it, I ask you if you remember this resolution in that convention: Going down a few paragraphs that are introductory:

> "1. That people demand peace. They condemn with all the vigor and determination at their command the belligerent predictions of the inevitability of war, from whatever source it may come. The voices which have been raised in a few places in our country calling for a so-called preventive war are not the voice of the American people. We deny any charge that we plan to launch a war. The American people oppose, as inconsistent with [6134] their basic in> terests and aspirations, any such attempt as we oppose any form of aggression by America or any other nation. There must be the most vigorous and relentless opposition by all liberty- and peace-loving citizens to the offensive led by evil forces to provoke and foster the insane idea of another world war."

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Passing over some more matters in which they call upon the United Nations to suppress this war hysteria:

> "3. We know that an enduring peace demands that the people everywhere, including the economically backward or colonial countries, be protected in their rights of self-determination and self-government—free from interference or coercion, be it military or economic, from any source—benevolent or despotic. The people of the war-devastated countries look to us for relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction. We therefore support sound programs for post-war rehabilitation. We urge in support of our nation's fight against hunger throughout the world prompt action to provide food and other economic aid for the rehabilitation of their countries. We also urge under no circumstances should food or any other aid given by any country be used as a means of coercing free but needy people in th eexercise of their rights of independence and self-government or to fan the flames of civil warfare.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

"4. Above all, the people of this country demand that [6135] there be a fulfillment of the basic policy of our late President Roosevelt for unity of purpose and action among the three great wartime allies—the United States, Great Britain and the Soviet Union within the United Nations. Failure to accomplish this necessarily means dissension and strife in the world. Each Nation has a right ~~and~~ obligation to present and support its basic principles but must be prepared to temper its firmness with self-restraint and understanding. The spirit and purpose of the United Nations does not contemplate, and we should deplore the use of, the veto to prevent the United Nations from furthering a full and lasting peace. However, the issue of the veto in the United Nations is but a symptom of the more basic underlying disunity that has developed among the Big Three and is threatening the very existence of the United Nations. If we fail to achieve unity then the world faces a war which means the destruction of humanity itself.

"World organized labor, through the World Federation of Trade Unions, has demonstrated that the workers can agree upon a common program for the preservation of peace, the full enjoyment of democracy and economic security and abundance for the peoples of the world. The governments within the United Nations cannot and must not be permitted to do [6136] less."

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Do you remember that? A. I do.

Q. And that conforms essentially with the statements that you made on the same matters, isn't that correct?

A. It is the same idea, same statement, same principle.

Q. Now, you were asked concerning a resume' of a speech made by you or a resolution that was proposed in the ILWU, and you stated that you would bring the original minutes of the proceedings. That was the proceedings of the seventh biennial convention of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union in San Francisco in April, 1947?

A. That is the speech dealing with the union——

Q. Red-baiting.

A. Unions being totalitarian, I think.

Q. That is right. That is the part that was cited to you; that is the thing that was shown you?

A. Yes.

Q. So I presume it was written by some other person, and whatever it states in that paper, it isn't your speech but a resume'? A. That is right.

Q. I will read the original resolution:

> "Secretary Caplan: Resolution No. 4, Red-Baiting and Government Witch-Hunting.
>
> "Our country is presently witnessing the whipping up of an atmosphere, by means of red-baiting and witch-hunting, [6137] in which political sycophants and scoundrels of all labels and stripes are frantically scrambling for front line places, hoping that by so doing they will win recognition and favor from the reactionary forces. Weak-kneed liberals in government office are seeking to appease reactionary political elements and even attempting to outdo them in the advancement of programs that threaten the very foundation of the American people's civil liberties. Red witch hunts are being called for by almost every high executive in the executive branch of our government, led by the Chief Executive himself. Spying on every act, statement and even thought, of a person's life—past and present—is being advocated and ordered and huge sums of money appropriated for such purposes.

"Proposals are made to restrict the rights of unions to make their laws, write their constitutions, choose their officers and leaders, unless such laws and leaders meet the approval of a government now captured and controlled by labor-hating, monopoly-loving politicians. Every labor spy, stool pigeon and political renegade is being called to testify before committees of our government, with their testimony given prominent display in the columns of the American press.

"Legislation to outlaw minority parties is being advocated by members of the Cabinet, as witness the [6138] proposal of Secretary Schwellenbach to outlaw the Communist Party of the United States.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

"This anti-Red hysteria has a purpose and an objective, and the purpose and the objective is to conceal the true aims of those responsible for organizing and projecting the atmosphere of hysteria. Our country is not suffering from any threat of Communism. Communism is not an issue in the United States, nor are our economy, political democracy or civil liberties threatened by agents of the Soviet Union. The real threat stems directly from the greed and desire for imperialistic world control of American trusts and monopolies. They are determined to depress American living standards; to smash all forms of workers' organizations; and curtail the liberties of the people so that no effective voice can be raised against them. The real issue is the issue of progress as against retrogression; of change as against the status quo—one of more for those that have the most—less for those that have practically nothing now. [6139]

"A great American president, beloved of his people, once stated the issue in simple terms when he said we must fight both reaction and frightened people in the interest of the country's security and welfare. President Franklin Delano Roosevelt in his first fireside chat in 1934 declared: 'We seek the security of the men, women and children of the nation. A few timid people who fear progress will try to give you new and strange names for what we are doing. Sometimes they will call it Fascism, sometimes Communism, sometimes regimentation, sometimes Socialism. But in so doing they are trying to make very complex and theoretical something that is really very simple and very practical.'

"Again in the election campaign of 1936 Roosevelt was obliged to speak out and obliged to publicly defend himself against charges of Communism. He stated then: 'In this campaign another herring turns up. In former years it has been British and French and a variety of other things. This year it is Russian. Desperate in mood, angry at failure, cunning in purpose, individuals and groups are seeking to make Communism an issue in an election where Communism is not a controversy . . .'

"Roosevelt refused to capitulate and cringe before the attacks and cries to the effect that he was importing and applying alien Russian Communist doctrines to the [6140] American way of life. Not so his successor, Harry S. Truman, or Truman's cabinet officers. Yet Roosevelt won that election with the greatest majority of votes ever received by an American president. The red-baiting and witch-hunting we are witnessing today is not for the purpose of combatting any threats of Communism to overthrow our form of government or destroy our liberal institutions. It is to conceal the attack of American big business upon the rights and gains of American labor made during the years of Roosevelt's administration. It is meant to divide and confuse the American people and render them frightened and helpless. It is meant to cloak the plans of American monopoly to grasp and control the resources of the nation in righteousness and patriotism.

"Let us at least in the ILWU make sure that we are not confused, divided or misled by this organized program of hysteria.

"We Resolve: 1. To oppose the enactment of any legislation claiming to have as its objective the outlawing of the Communist Party of the United States of America or any other minority political party that is pledged to the social, political and economic advancement of all American people without regard to race, color, religion or place of birth.

"2. To resist with all the resources at our command, [6141] legislation directed towards denying unions collective bargaining and other rights because its officers or leaders or any of its members may be Communists, Communist sympathizers, supporters or just trade unionists who refuse to be intimidated by American big business and its reactionary political puppets.

"3. To do all we can through the machinery of our organization to arouse our rank and file to the dangers to our union and to labor of the red-baiting, witch-hunting policies initiated and pursued by our present administration and Congress.

"On behalf of the committee, Brother Chairman, I move its adoption."

That was Brother Caplan speaking.

"President Bridges: It may be helpful and save a lot of argument and digression from the objective of the resolution if I, speaking for the officers, start the discussion.

"The resolution is submitted by your officers as one of the officers' policy statements. It has a purpose here and its purpose is not the issue of Communism. Its purpose is what is stated in the resolution.

"The premise from which the officers move is that the labor movement, including our union, faces an attack. The purpose of the attack is to confuse and divide labor [6142] people. The officers' position is predicated on many statements made by leaders throughout the years of history, including Presidents of the United States, one of whom is quoted here and others that can be quoted.

"So it is important to remember that the resolution is not for or against Communism. That is not the issue. Nor is the resolution in any way to be construed to deny on one hand a person's rights in our union to express himself as to what his beliefs are in opposition to Communist philosophy or any other. Nor is it to be construed as supporting any person with respect to his beliefs on Communist philosophy or any other belief.

"It is directed towards the upholding of our Constitution which provides that a person in our union can hold political beliefs whether we agree with those beliefs or not, and that they shall not be discriminated against, intimidated, attempts made to bar them from our union membership or from their jobs because of such beliefs, whether they be political, religious or any other type.

"That is the purpose of the resolution. It has no other purpose. It has nothing to do with the issue of Russian Communism or Communist Russia. That is not an issue. We are not suffering from any penetration from Soviet Russia. And although it has many times been said about our and other unions that we take our orders from [6143] Moscow and the Kremlin, I don't have to talk about that question; our membership and our local officers know the answer.

"It might be necessary to also make this statement on behalf of the officers: They are required to learn a few things, especially the chairman. Communism is not a form of government, it is a state of society. It is a system, and it is a system that holds that people can not exploit other people for profit. It simply means you can't own a factory or a ship and do nothing and live on the fat of the land and clip coupons while somebody sweats and slaves for a living. It is a form of society, it is not a form of government. And those who are arousing the hysteria and the hatred today to cloak their true motives and screen their true objectives, of course will not tell the common people that. What is done is to claim that a certain country or a certain philosophy is totalitarian in nature and to lump together Communism and such objectionable regimes and philosophies as Fascism."

Mr. Hallinan: May we take the noon recess at this time?

The Court: We will take the noon recess, ladies and gentlemen, and we will resume at a quarter past 2:00 this afternoon. 2:15 p.m. this afternoon. I again admonish you not to discuss the case under any conditions, nor to form or express an opinion thereon until it is submitted to you.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to 2:15 o'clock p.m.) [6144]

Redirect Examination

By Mr. Hallinan:

Q. To complete that resolution that we were concerned with, Mr. Bridges, it went on, and now coming directly to the question that counsel asked you:

> "It might be necessary to also make this statement on behalf of the officers."

No, I read that.

> "What is totalitarianism? A country that has a totalitarian government operates like our union operates. There are no political parties. People are elected to govern the country based upon their records.
> "That is totalitarianism, and it would be the same in this union if we started to divide up and run a Republican set of officers, a Democratic set, a Comunistic set and something else. We would have one hell of a time, and we have democracy, I think. Some unions do it that way and I don't see them getting ahead very far. I know in some big unions in the United States affiliated with the CIO they put on big election campaigns, they call caucuses. This group has got a caucus and a set of candidates, and that group has a set of candidates. The trouble is, they spend their whole damn convention doing nothing else. [6145] They spend the whole year lining up votes. The net result is that the workers get their eighteen and a half cents an hour, and that is all they have had for the past couple of years. The ILWU that doesn't do things that way gets 42 cents and 35 cents an hour.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

> "The lumping together of Fascism and Communism, of course, is another way to confuse the people. It is just as proper and just as similar to saying that the ILWU and the Chamber of Commerce are the same thing because they are both organizations; or that the ILWU and the Pacific Coast Waterfront Employers both being associations are the same thing. Well, they are both organizations and they are both associations, but believe me, they are different.

"As long as we get these simple facts before us, we know the purpose of the resolution simply and clearly, and we shouldn't waste any time getting off the question.

"Communists are supposed to overthrow the government by force and violence. The funny part about it is there is still to be one Communist in the United States in the history of that minority political party convicted of any such crime as that. Now, if the organization was dedicated to such a program, with the FBI, the police departments and all the rest of it going full blast all the time, they should have been able to grab one damn Commy by now and hang him for actually doing something [6146] along those lines.

"The record is even clearer. It is not a question of whether we are for or against Communism. The program of this union has been enunciated too many times by the statements of its officers, the resolutions in our conventions, by our actions, to be beyond challenge. But the fact remains that throughout the world, particularly in Europe, large sections of the people have adopted the Communist Party and Communist philosophy as their belief. They participate in government, and in some countries they are the predominating labor party.

"We have to think of those people because we are believers in international solidarity. We are going to need them and their help, and if those people don't know where we stand on the question of what their political beliefs are, maybe they won't think so much of us. They do not ask us to agree and support their beliefs. They only ask the right to have the choice to have beliefs. They have that right. It was guaranteed them in the Atlantic Charter, and we just fought a war over it.

"But it is peculiar in those countries where Communist parties are large and armed, why don't they get busy overthrowing some of those governments by force and violence? Well, they don't. They don't.

"These are matters of fact, not things that I am [6147] making up, and I am not making an argument in support of Communism. Remember I have a Supreme Court decision.

"In some other countries you have people's movements that are armed. China is a good example. The Communist Party in China is in the leadership of large numbers of people that are armed. As to whether it is their program to overthrow the present government by force and violence, if somebody asked me I would say that I think it is. Maybe we might have ideas on that. Maybe it's the type of government that needs overthrowing. And if the Communists and the common people of China are wrong, so are the original people that overthrew the British Crown in the United States in the war of the Revolution.

"Certainly we supported the people in the Dutch East Indies to overthrow their government by force and violence. That is the only way they will get the Dutch out of there.

"And I hope the Indian people sometime get enough power to throw the British out of India.

"Neither of those matters are issues of Communism; they are issues of people's rights, and we support people's rights everywhere.

"It is that simple. And as I said at the outset of this convention, the rule we are applying is what will help labor. During the war we applied the rule 'What will help the war' and we put that first and we had a lot [6148] of things we didn't like. During the peacetime the rule is 'What will help labor' in the United States and any part of the world because what helps labor helps all the people. If we are wrong on that premise I will admit we are wrong on most of the resolutions that are before this convention.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

"Now, the main argument on the so-called Communists is this: that they penetrate and infiltrate into labor movements and take them over and control them. Well, I don't know. I know how I got into this labor movement. I guess it was a big gigantic plot that after going to sea six or seven years (all figured out in advance, of course), I came to work on this lousy waterfront. They booted me around fourteen years. All the time I was penetrating this movement, of course. (Laughter) Eventually, after a strike, I got elected to office by the rank and file of this union and I have been elected ever since. And that is what they mean by penetrating.

"And of course, I control this union. All you people know that. (Laughter)

"I refer you, as a matter of fact, to the minutes of our Aberdeen convention in 1938 where I, as the president of this organization, introduced the 15 per cent recall and got an argument from the floor that it wasn't democratic. (Laughter) And I know that I, not myself but with other [6149] forces, Matt Meehan and others, fought for and instituted all the possible democratic controls in this union we could think of. And believe me, to a lot of people that is plain Communism. That is what Congress calls Communism, and I want you to remember that back in '34 and '35 industrial unionism was Communism; unemployment insurance was Communism; a lot of those things.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

"Infiltrate into a labor union? Why, the cock-eyed phonies, they don't know whether they are coming or going. (Applause)

"But the bills pending in Congress and the public campaign that is being waged by our government is predicated on the fact that Communism and Fascism are the same, and that a big plot is directed from Moscow to overthrow the government. Sympathizers, supporters, members of that philosophy are alleged to be a part of this plot. Therefore they have no part and no right to be in labor unions, and unless labor unions kick them out of office or out of their membership those labor unions will not be allowed to bargain collectively or organize or strike.

"When you think it through, fellows, don't worry about people like me that have been condemned as Communists for a long time. Worry about those others that have been less outspoken you might say than myself and the other officers. The plan is to get everybody that dares to stand [6150] up and talk back to the boss.

"They didn't pay a damn bit of attention to me when they booted me around that waterfront, or any of the rest of you. But when you start to speak for the workers, and that is all I mean, speak for the workers, and when they can't boot you around, when you talk back, and when you realize the strength of your rank and file and know you can fight, well, you all know the angle there, and that is what is behind this whole hate program and this whole hysteria.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

"Let us keep our heads. In any one of our local unions a member can get up and get the floor and state his views against the Communist Party. He can say, 'I am 100 per cent against it, and here is why,' and we can't change that without endangering the solidarity and the unity of this union or the rights of the people in it.

"And the reverse is true. Our present constitution also 4 gives people the right to get up and say they are Communists and remain Communists. A hell of a lot of people think 'Those poor screwballs.' So what? It's a question of the right to do things and believe things. And because we have a policy such as we have, because we have a constitution such as we have, we have made gains through our solidarity.

"Look at some of these other unions that spend so damn [6151] much time passing resolutions to bar Communists, to get on the popular bandwagon. I don't see them getting any better treatment from the bosses. Our great friend, Milton Murray, president of the Newspaper Guild CIO, goes down before a committee of Congress and testifies; licks their boots. (Laughter)

"I don't see Milton Murray breaking any records in organizing extra members into his union or getting them wage increases. Too damn much energy poured out in doing other things.

"Well, it is just plain foolishness if we allow ourselves to do that.

"Finally, on the point of outlawing minority parties, there have been enough people point out the danger of that. The danger of outlawing any political minority party, Communist Party or other, is that that can't be done without eventually and directly jeopardizing our own liberties.

"I will conclude my remarks by once again quoting a man that was not recognized as a great liberal until just before he died, and that is why I selected him. You can find sufficient statements from Abe Lincoln, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and many other outstanding liberal presidents; but I want to quote a statement from a man that didn't undergo any attacks because of his political beliefs or having beliefs along radical lines, and he said this: [6152]

" 'For minorities are rich assets of a democracy, assets which no totalitarian government can afford. Dictatorship must, of necessity, fear and suppress them. But within the tolerance of a democracy minorities are the constant spring of new ideas, stimulating new thought and action; the constant source of new vigor. To suppress minority thinking and minority expression would tend to freeze society and prevent progress for the majority itself is stimulated by the existence of minority groups. The human mind requires contrary expressions against which to test itself, for now, more than ever, we must keep in the forefront of our minds the fact that whenever we take away the liberties of those whom we hate, we are opening the way to loss of liberty for those we love.'

" 'Our way of living together in America is a strong but delicate fabric. It is made up of many threads. It has been woven over many centuries by the patience and sacrifice of countless liberty-loving men and women. It serves as a cloak for the protection of rich and poor, black and white, Jew and Gentile, foreign and native-born. Let us not tear it asunder, for no man knows once it is destroyed, where or when man will find its protective warmth again.'

"I think that if we follow out that advice of a great American we can understand why this resolution needs our [6153] support. Not because we are Communists or Communist sympathizers, but because we are defending our own union, our own liberties, and the right to our own beliefs.

"The words which I wish were mine were those of someone I quoted earlier in the convention, the late Wendell Willkie."

Now, that was the resolution and the speech on it, was it, Mr. Bridges? A. That's right. [6154]

Q. I notice in turning to page 229 that there was a change made in the resolution. Can you tell us what that was?

A. I spoke on the resolution. That was the speech you just read. There were other speeches pro and con and eventually the resolution was carried with six dissenting votes, I think. Five of those dissenting votes represented the entire delegation from one of our local unions, and after the resolution was passed this delegation came around to me and said, "Look, now, we are not against that resolution, but we think it would be improperly construed, the text of the resolution itself plus your remarks, when you explained some of the things you explained—which they did not disagree with incidentally. By that they meant my remarks there on the nature of a Communist society as being separate from the government, and so forth. They said, "Now, we fear that the resolution, together with the remarks made by the officers could be construed as being an endorsement of or in support of, and not in opposition to the Communist Party or Communist philosophy." And they asked me, "Will you join with us to reopen the matter and reconsider the matter so that the resolution can be amended with a special amendment saying that, 'We do not endorse or support the Communist program, philosophy or party.'?"

Q. Let me read the amendment. A. Yes.

Q. In other words, Mr. Bridges, after this resolution had been [6155] offered and passed, but not unanimously, and after you had made this talk upon it, you reopened the matter so that an amendment to that resolution could be proposed, and assist that amendment:

> "This resolution is not meant as endorsement of the philosophy of the Communist Party or of any political party, nor is it to be construed as sponsoring the organizing of a campaign by any political party within the ILWU."

Was that the amendment to the resolution?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you support that amendment?

A. If you read the record there, you will see that I as chairman of the convention asked leave of the convention to let the delegation from Local Union 19 take the floor in order to put a motion to reconsider on the floor for the purpose of making that amendment, and I pointed out that the matter had been taken up with the officers, that the officers supported the move to reconsider, and the officers supported the amendment. And later on when the vote was taken, and eventually the vote to support the resolution as amended was unanimous, again I made the statement that the officers, without speaking in support of the amendment, favored and supported the amendment. So the final action of the convention, for the reasons I have stated, was unanimous support for the resolution with the amendment that I pointed out for clarification, that the resolution was not meant as any endorsement or support of the Communist Party. [6156]

Q. Mr. Bridges, have you with you the expense account that you were asked to produce here for the years 1948 and 1949? A. Yes.

Q. Taking the year 1948 first, what do you find that your travel and subsistence allowance was?

A. $3,316.92.

Q. And the expense allowance?

A. $780, making a total of $4,096.92.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. So that in addition to your salary, amounting to $6300 or $6400 a year, whatever it may be, you explained you were allowed by the union that year to spend on its business $6,096.92, is that correct?

A. That is right, but that includes everything. I have a breakdown.

Q. That is what I want you to give us. Will you tell us what that breakdown is?

A. Plane fare, $1,167; railroad fare, $435; airport, bus and taxi fares, $150; car expenses, $449; long distance phone and telegrams—that is when I am away out of town and make long distance phone calls—$196, and there is an item of miscellaneous that at this moment I do not know what it is exactly, $90 for the year.

Q. How much did you collect that year, in the entire year, on the $14 a day subsistence?

A. I would say—— [6157]

Q. It is down there? A. Yes, $870.

Q. $870?

A. Yes, and I have a breakdown as to how it was collected.

Q. Will you tell us what that was? In other words, Mr. Bridges, let us get this: Of the $4,096 that the union paid for travel expenses and subsistence expenses for you in the year 1948, only $870 was for your own upkeep; that is at the rate of $14 a day while you were absent from San Francisco?

A. That is right, the $14 a day rate. That comes to $870.

Q. Now, will you tell us what does the $870 cover?

A. During the course of the year I was away out of town a total of 63 days: 17 days in Hawaii—that was with regard to negotiating an agreement for the pineapple and longshore industry down there. I spent twelve days in Washington and New York for the CIO executive board meetings. I am a CIO board member, and when the board is called together I respond and attend, but my union pays my expenses. The CIO does not. Twelve days in Pittsburgh and New York in June. That was with respect to the maritime strike and negotiating matters. I was twelve days in Philadelphia and New York on various other matters, four days in Detroit around Labor Day. I made a Labor Day speech and returned via Seattle. And six days on the West Coast. That would be traveling to Seattle, Portland, Los Angeles and places like that, 63 days. [6158]

Q. So then the only receipt that you got for that year, that $870, that is the only item upon which anything could possibly personally accrue to you, is that right?

A. That is right. The other way outlay on which I had to furnish vouchers—the $870 there, that 63 days at $14 a day, put it that way.

Q. Do you think you spent more or less than the $870 in the 63 days?

A. More. I was just back from the Cleveland convention. That was just last November. I left there to come back here two or three days before this trial started. So that is my last time I was out of town for any length of time, and I was in Cleveland—there were two or three conventions on. The World Federalists were meeting and others. I had a hard time getting a hotel room. My hotel room rent alone was $10 a day. Every day I used to go down and ask for a cheaper room and I couldn't get one, so out of my $14 I was paying $10 a day for a room.

Q. So if you took persons out to meals, that had to be included in the $14 also, is that right?

A. Right.

Q. For the year 1949, Mr. Bridges, will you tell us what your entire expense account ran to for that year? A. $6,259.71.

Q. How is that broken down?

A. Plane fares, $2,598; railroad fares, $406; airport bus and [6159] taxi fares, $135; per diem, $1,414; car expense, $399; telephone and telegrams, $97; miscellaneous, $50, a total of—that much amounts to $5,101.32, and there is an expense allowance in addition to that of $1,158. We had changed our constitution in 1947 and allowed more expenses to the officers because they were losing too much money on their expense account between what they actually spent and what it cost them to stay in office.

Q. Out of that amount the only sum that went directly to you that was not expended for travel, subsistence, so forth, or rather, for fares and matters such as you mentioned, was $1,414?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Right.

Q. And then on the next page you have a breakdown of that, that is, the places you were out of town and for how many days?

A. 101 days.

Q. So that was just $14 a day you received for that. Now, will you tell us where you were for those 101 days?

A. 56 days in Hawaii, New York and Washington, D. C., regarding the Hawaiian longshore strike. That is 56 days. 28 days in New York, Washington, D. C., Cleveland for the CIO executive board meeting and the national CIO convention, 8 days in Southern California on union business, and 9 days in the Northwest, that is the Pacific Northwest, Portland and Seattle, 101 days.

Q. You say on all the items now except the $14 a day you had [6160] to submit vouchers for, is that correct?

A. They were monies paid out, phone bills and other things, that is money paid out, yes. I didn't get it. And neither of the two years—the question Mr. Donohue asked—in neither of the two years did my expenses exceed my salary, and in no year since I have been in office has my expenses exceeded my salary.

Q. You mean by that the amount you spent has always run above the $14 you were allowed?

A. No, I didn't exactly mean that, because that wouldn't really be the case. I am not taking the year as a whole. My total expenses, and that includes rail, plane fares and all that, has never exceeded my annual salary.

Q. I see. Now, you were asked some questions concerning the time that you first met with a man named Thomas Raye. A. Yes.

Q. I have some documents here to help establish that.

(Documents handed to Mr. Donohue.)

Mr. Hallinan: Will you show him these matters?

(The documents referred to were handed to the witness.) [6161]

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you have seen this document before; have you, Mr. Bridges?

A. Yes, these documents are out of my files.

Q. They are kept in the regular course of business of the union, are they?

A. That's right.

Q. And obtained from the files?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, as I remember the question, it revolved around some such matter as this: Counsel wanted to know when you first met Thomas Raye, and according to a statement that you had made in the Sears trial, you said that you had met Raye in New York in June, 1937, but you afterwards corrected that to say that you met him in July, 1937, that the other matter had not been one closely inquired to—you hadn't made any research, and that by looking into your records, you find that the first time you met him was in July, '37?

A. After I looked up those records there.

Q. Now, in support of that, I call to your attention that one of these documents is a wire from John L. Lewis dated June 21, 1937, from Washington, D. C., and addressed to you at the Maritime Federation of the Pacific convention in Portland, Oregon. Was a convention being held at that time? A. Right. [6162]

Q. All right.

Mr. Hallinan: And I offer this wire in evidence, if the Court please, as Defendants' exhibit next in order.

Mr. Donohue: I don't think it is admissible, if Your Honor pleases. I have no objection to Mr. Bridges refreshing his recollection from it.

The Court: May I see it?

(Document handed to the Court by the Clerk.)

Mr. Hallinan: The whole purpose of all these documents, if Your Honor please, is only to establish the time of meeting Mr. Raye.

The Court: Yes, for that limited purpose it will be admitted and solely for that purpose.

Mr. Hallinan: All these documents have the same purpose, and no other.

The Clerk: May it be marked Defendants' I-3?

(Wire from John L. Lewis to defendant Harry Renton Bridges, dated June 21, 1937, was received in evidence and marked Defendants' Exhibit I-3.)

Mr. Hallinan: Now, this is a wire reading:

(Whereupon Defendants' Exhibit I-3 was read to the jury by Mr. Hallinan.)

Mr. Hallinan (To the Witness): Now, in answer to that, I have a copy of a wire dated June 26, 1937, from you to John L. Lewis. [6163]

I offer it in evidence as Defendants' next exhibit, for the same purpose only, also.

The Court: It may be marked in evidence.

The Clerk: May it be marked Defendants' J-3?

(Whereupon wire dated June 26, 1937, Bridges to Lewis, was received in evidence and marked Defendants' Exhibit J-3.)

The Court: For that purpose.

Mr. Hallinan: And I don't know, Your Honor, whether there is any significance to the suggestion that Mr. Bridges may have gone to New York in June, but in case there is, we want to meet it all in advance.

Now, this letter dated June 26, or day letter, reads as follows:

(Whereupon Mr. Hallinan read Defendants' Exhibit J-3 to the jury.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, do you remember going to Washington, D. C., pursuant to those telegrams, Mr. Bridges? A. I do.

Q. And I have here a digest of the proceedings at the conference of the representatives of various organized groups in the maritime industry, held in Washington, D. C., on July 7th, 1937, at the invitation of the Committee for Industrial Organizations. Was that the meeting which you attended in pursuance of those matters?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. That's right. And they are in effect the minutes that were [6164] drawn up as to what the meeting discussed and the action the meeting took.

Q. Do you know when the convention that you were attending in Portland ended?

A. It ended after I left there. I left there in the early part of July.

Mr. Hallinan: We offer the document of the minutes of the meeting as Defendants' Exhibit next in order, and again for the same purpose.

The Court: So ordered.

(Whereupon minutes of meeting of July 7, 1937, referred to above, were received in evidence and marked Defendants' Exhibit K-3.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, there was a convention in Portland at the time you received these wires, and you left that convention, and where did you go? A. Washington, D. C.

Q. Did you go to New York first, or did you go to Washington first?

A. Went to Washington—New York later.

Q. All right. Do you know how you got there? Did you fly or go by train? A. No.

Q. Beg pardon?

A. I either flew or took the train. I can't recall. I think [6165] that I either flew or took the train.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Now, I notice——

A. I could check the minutes of the convention, you see. The minutes of the convention would have me marked present or absent.

Q. Now, this digest of proceedings gives a list of persons who were absent—"Conference opened at 11:00 a.m. by Mr. John L. Lewis, chairman of the Committee for Industrial Organizations. Those present were: Harry Bridges, president of the Pacific Coast District International Longshore Association * * *" Then it gives a list of other men. I won't read them all, nor their designations:

E. R. Stowell
C. W. Deal
Eugene Burke
Mat Batanovich
V. J. Malone
Randolph Meriwether
Charles May
Martin Olsen
P. Fitzpatrick
Samuel J. Hogan
Joseph Curran
Patrick Whalen
Frank Jones
H. P. Trainer [6166]
Captain Pinchin
Mervyn Rathborne
John Green
and then Thomas Raye, Philip Van Gelder.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Now, it states that Thomas Raye is from the Maritime Council, New York. Does that refresh your recollection as to whether that is the first time you ever met Thomas Raye?

A. As far as I recall, it was.

Q. And at that meeting was there formed a CIO Maritime Commission?

A. CIO Committee.

Q. Committee, I mean, yes. A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right.

Mr. Hallinan: Now, I have here another document, the minutes or a statement of the meeting of the CIO Maritime Committee on July the 8th, 1937, and we offer this now for the purpose of showing the visit to New York following this meeting, if the Court please, for the purposes of meeting Ryan, as the defendants' exhibit next in order.

The Court: So ordered.

> (Whereupon minutes dated July 8, 1937, of meeting of the CIO Maritime Committee were received in evidence and marked Defendants' Exhibit L-3.)

Mr. Hallinan: And in this document there is a paragraph [6167] which says:

> "A resolution was passed that a subcommittee of three, consisting of Mervyn Rathborne, Harry Bridges and Joseph Curran, submit the proposals of the CIO Maritime Committee to Joseph P. Ryan. If Joseph P. Ryan and ILA national and district officers other than those > of the Pacific Coast refuse to accept the program as outlined, then a CIO charter will be issued for the West Coast ILA and all support be afforded them in organizing the longshoremen on a national basis."

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Does that refresh your recollection now, that you, Mervyn Rathborne and Joseph Curran were made such a subcommittee to call on Joseph P. Ryan?

A. Yes, we went to New York and waited around for him and eventually tried to see him. We never did see him.

Q. So this, then, was on the 8th of July. Do you know when you went to New York? Well, I have another document here, the report of H. R. Bridges on the CIO Maritime conference, and on the last page of that report, by you, it makes this statement:

> "The subcommittee of three——" withdraw that.

> "The conference adjourned Friday, July 9th, on completion of its instructed duties. It should be noted that all decisions of the conference and the committee of seven were unanimous. The subcommittee of three met with the subcommittees appointed by [6168] J. P. Ryan of the ILA in New York, Monday, July 12th. After putting forth the proposals of the CIO, President Ryan and his committee flatly rejected them, with the announcement > they could see nothing in the CIO that was an improvement over the way the Atlantic and Gulf districts of the ILA had functioned for the past 25 years and the improvements that they had gotten for their membership in that time, and proposed to carry on in conjunction with the Teamsters as they had always done.

> "I wish to correct at this time the statement made by Delegate Fitzpatrick in his telegram at the maritime convention that the subcommittee had backed out of the job of seeing Joseph P. Ryan and to also state that any report as to tieup of ships on the East Coast by the ILA because of CIO organizing drive is not a report of the conference, but only that of individual delegates' own private opinions, and has no basis in fact."

Now, does that refresh your recollection that the meeting with Joseph Ryan's committee was on Monday, July 12, 1937? A. That's right.

Mr. Hallinan: All right. We offer this document as Defendants' exhibit next in order for that same purpose.

The Court: So ordered.

> (Whereupon report of defendant Harry Renton Bridges on the CIO maritime conference was received in evidence and [6169] marked Defendants' Exhibit M-3.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): And then the minutes of the Pacific Coast District Executive Board on the question of affiliation to the CIO, held in Seattle, Washington, July 18, 1937, contains a report by you on this convention, for the formation of this committee and this language as to the time at which you met Ryan and the time at which you returned to San Francisco, on page 5:

> "When this committee of three was appointed, we got in touch with Ryan and Lewis sent him a telegram. We left Washington on Saturday after being informed both Friday and Saturday that Ryan was out of town and would not go back until Monday. On Monday we got in touch with Ryan again. Ryan said he wouldn't meet with any committee that Bridges was a member of, so we issued a public statement that the committee would give Ryan until 5:00 o'clock that night to meet with the committee and listen to the CIO program; otherwise we would go on the assumption that the answer was 'No.' At 4:30 Curran notified us that Ryan had gotten in touch with him by telephone and was willing to meet with the CIO committee, that he would appoint a committee of three to meet at 5:00 o'clock that night, which was the deadline we had set. On the committee was Holt, international vice president, and an official of the Brooklyn ILA local, and Hasselman, business agent of [6170] the ILA local in New York."

Then it goes on to give the conversations with that committee, and then the statement ends:

> "That is about all. I left that night after the conference and returned to San Francisco last Wednesday. And that is the outcome of the whole thing."

Now, in other words, you left the conference, apparently, on Monday night, the conference with Ryan's people and arrived in San Francisco on Wednesday, is that correct? A. Right.

Mr. Hallinan: We offer that, then, as the last exhibit of the defendant on that matter.

The Court: So ordered.

(Whereupon minutes of Pacific Coast District Executive Board, Seattle, Washington, July 18, 1937, were received in evidence and marked Defendants' Exhibit N-3.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): So that, refreshing your recollection by the documents that you have just seen, the fact apparently is that you first met Tommy Raye or Thomas Raye——

A. Right.

Q. ——in Washington on July the 7th, 1937, or the 8th, whatever it may be, and thereafter, being appointed one of the committee of three, proceeded to New York, interviewed Ryan's committee and then came home?

A. That is the way I remember it. [6171]

Mr. Hallinan: Now, there is a—no, I have a copy of it here.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

(To the Clerk:) You have an exhibit on that subject; do you know what it is?

The Clerk: Yes, I believe I can find it.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, I will use the photostat and then we will—it has been introduced in evidence already.

Q. Now, there has been a photostatic reproduction of a guest registration card at the Governor Hotel by Mervyn Rathborne, and you will remember that in the testimony of the witness George Wilson there was a statement made that a meeting, a so-called Communist meeting, took place at the Governor Hotel, at which Mr. Goldblatt, Rathborne, yourself and one or two other persons were present; and the discussion was then had about a controversy that existed in the union between Goldblatt and Rathborne. You remember the testimony?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, the prosecution produced at the time upon our demand the record having been first removed from the files of the Governor Hotel and retained by the Immigration Department, a guest registration card of Mervyn Rathborne. And so the jury's recollection may be refreshed on the matter, the name is Mervyn Rathborne, address 150 Golden Gate Avenue, San Francisco, Room 709. Number in party: one; arrived 7/8/43. Rate: $2.50. And then on the back of the card it gives the information: [6172] Room 709. Rate: $2.50. He moved in on 7/8/43 and moved out three days afterwards, the total bill being $7.50. The whole record is Defendant's Exhibit No. C-2. The document is marked with pencil 6/1/49, and R. H. Curry, it looks like.

Mr. Hallinan: I understand that that is the name of the agent who removed the document, is that correct?

Mr. Donohue: I don't know anything about that, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, I think the 6/1/49 was explained as something like that, that the document was taken out on the first of June, 1949, and remained in the custody of the Immigration Department.

Q. (Continuing): Now, I want to show you a copy of a voucher submitted by Mr. Mervyn Rathborne to the California CIO Council for payment of this bill of $7.50.

(Document handed to the witness by the Clerk.) [6173]

Q. I want to show you a copy of a voucher submitted to the California CIO Council for payment of this bill of $7.50. You have seen that document before, have you, Mr. Bridges? A. Yes.

Q. And could you tell us now what was the occasion for Rathborne being in the Governor Hotel for the three days concerning which the hotel expenses of $7.50 were charged to the California CIO Council?

A. There was a meeting of the CIO Council

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Executive Board for those three days, and inasmuch as he lived down the Peninsula he stayed in town so as to be available in case there was need for a meeting earlier, and sometimes for a night session, and he would take a room just around the corner and stay at the hotel. And that was the purpose, and this is the voucher from the files of the Council where he turned in his expense voucher for the hotel there and was paid or reimbursed by the State Council for the room rent.

Mr. Hallinan: We will offer this in evidence, if the Court please, as the Defendants' exhibit next in order.

Mr. Donohue: No objection, your Honor.

The Court: It may be marked.

(Voucher for $7.50 was marked Defendants' Exhibit O-3 in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): So that the bill of Rathborne ran for three days, the 8th, 9th and 10th of July, 1943, a total of [6174] $7.50, and on July 11, 1943, he submitted a voucher for $7.50 entitled, "Charge Executive Board meeting"; is that correct, Mr. Bridges? A. That is correct.

Q. Now, with regard to the controversy that is alleged to have been settled at that meeting or at some meeting at the Governor Hotel at which Mr. Wilson testified there were certain persons present who he says were members of the Communist Party, you have already seen——

Did your Honor want to take the recess?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

The Court: We will take the afternoon recess. Ladies and gentlemen, the same admonition not to discuss the case under any conditions or circumstances.

(Recess.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Mr. Bridges, are you familiar with that document? (Showing document to witness.) A. Yes.

Q. Do you know where it came from?

A. It came from the files of the CIO Council.

Q. Kept in the regular and ordinary course of business? A. That's right.

Q. Now, do you know by whom that was distributed, who put that out?

A. Originally this was a memorandum distributed by Mervyn Rathborne, secretary. [6175]

Q. And to whom was it distributed?

A. To the people whose names appear on the memorandum—myself, Philip Connolly, George Wilson, Paul Schnurr, Paul Heide, Eugene Patton and Louis Goldblatt. All those people had—all those people had some title as an officer of the State or local CIO.

Mr. Hallinan: Might I have that?

That document bears upon the quarrel between Rathborne and Goldblatt and concerning which it was testified a meeting of Communists was held at the Governor Hotel by the witness named George Wilson: is that the matter——

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. This is the purpose of the document in question—the history of the document is this——

Mr. Hallinan: Wait a minute. I offer it as defendants' next in order.

Mr. Donohue: No objection.

The Court: So ordered.

The Clerk: Defendants' P-3.

(The document was marked Defendants' Exhibit P-3 in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Suppose I read the document first. It says, "Memorandum Distributed" on the heading of the California CIO Council, CIO Building, San Francisco, telephone number, President Philip M. Connolly, Secretary-Treasurer Mervyn Rathborne. [6176]

Confidential Memo. May 10, 1943. Now, I call attention to the fact that that is two months earlier than the bill from the Governor Hotel that the Government produced here.

Mr. Donohue: Is that a question, if your Honor please?

Mr. Hallinan: No, I call that to the jury's attention, and that that is perfectly proper.

"To: Harry Bridges, Philip Connolly, George Wilson, Paul Schnurr, Paul Heide, Eugene Paton, Louis Goldblatt.

"From: Mervyn Rathborne.

"Subject: Conferences of April 21, May 1 and May 6, concerning the policies and activities of the California CIO Director and California CIO Council and the Los Angeles CIO Council.

"On April 21, at the request of Brother Louis Goldblatt, a conference was held in the State Council office to discuss certain matters of policy concerning the California CIO Council. Present at this meeting were Brothers Wilson, Paton, Goldblatt and Rathborne.

"At the beginning of the meeting Brother Goldblatt announced that he desired to discuss the following items:

"E. Recent activities of the Los Angeles CIO Council with respect to the campaign conducted by that Council to secure added affiliations and the reasons why the Los Angeles CIO Council had recently adopted certain amendments to its constitution. [6177]

"2. The financial condition of the Los Angeles CIO Council.

"3. The discussion about the Labor Herald which took place during the meeting of the State Executive Committee held in Los Angeles April 3, 4.

"4. The relationship between the California CIO Director and the California CIO Council.

"With respect to points 1 and 2, I took the position that it was not proper to discuss those matters except in the presence of Brother Connolly, inasmuch as he is the responsible executive officer of the Los Angeles CIO Council, and also because

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)
Brother Goldblatt was extremely critical of the Los Angeles Council, its present policies and leadership.

"After Brother Goldblatt had unsuccessfully spent 40 minutes insisting that we discuss the details and merits of points 1 and 2, the discussion finally took place on 3 and 4. Brother Goldblatt was very critical of what he termed the weak attitude taken by the officers of the State Council at the Executive Committee meeting with respect to the Labor Herald. He also contended that in his opinion a very bad relationship now exists between Brother Harry Bridges as CIO Director for California, and the officers of the California CIO Council.

"During his exposition on this subject, [6178] Brother Goldblatt stated in so many words that the officers of the State Council were attempting to usurp the powers and authority of Brother Bridges, and in effect, were trying to do a 'hatchet' job on the California CIO Director.

"Nothing conclusive resulted from the conference except that it was agreed for the sake of unity of the CIO in California and clarification of any policies that might be obscure to Brother Goldblatt, a second meeting, at which Brothers Bridges and Connolly could be present, would be held and the entire policy of the CIO of California would be discussed.

"On May 1, Saturday, the second conference was held in Brother Bridges' office and the policies and activities of the CIO in California were discussed in considerable detail. Among those present were

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Brothers Harry Bridges, Philip Connolly, Paul Schnurr, Paul Heide, Eugene Paton, Dick Lynden, Joe Lynch, Mervyn Rathborne, and Louis Goldblatt. Except for the report made by Brother Connolly with respect to the recent actions of the Los Angeles Council to secure added affiliations and to further cement the unity of the CIO in Southern California, there was no discussion of the points raised by Brother Goldblatt at the meeting of April 21. Brother Goldblatt did not bring up these matters for discussion.

On Wednesday, May 5, at the instigation of Brother [6179] Goldblatt, a third conference was held in Brother Bridges' office. Present were Brothers Bridges, Wilson, Paton, Goldblatt and Rathborne. Although Brother Connolly was in San Francisco, precautions were taken to make sure that he was not present at this meeting. Brother Goldblatt again brought up and stressed his contention that the officers of the California CIO Council were trying to 'move in on Brother Bridges,' to relegate him to a secondary place in the leadership of the CIO in California, and that a 'bad' relationship now exists between Brother Bridges and the California CIO Council. During the discussion Brother Goldblatt made it very plain that he considered it as his 'right' to be 'consulted' in connection with the policies and activities of the California CIO Council. After considerable discussion, a self-appointed committee of three, composed of Brothers Goldblatt, Wilson and Paton, was set up to draft

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)
'rules and regulations' to govern the future relationship between Brother Bridges, as CIO Director for California, and the California CIO Council.

"After additional investigation and careful consideration of the issues raised by Brother Goldblatt and the motives behind the raising of these issues, I have the following comment to offer:

"1. The relationship which now exists between California [6180] Director Bridges and the officers of the California CIO Council is excellent. Should it require any strengthening or organizational changes, such arrangements will be worked out between Director Bridges and the properly elected officials of the State Council without benefit of blessings by Goldblatt.

"2. It is the publicly announced aim and intention of the officers of the California CIO Council to constantly improve and strengthen the relationship between the Council and Director Bridges, and to afford the greatest degree of support to Director Bridges in all matters affected not only by the CIO but Bridges, personally. It is the hope and desire of the officers of the California CIO Council that Brother Bridges in the future will become more active in the affairs of the CIO in California. It is superfluous to reiterate that the officers of the California CIO Council are entirely amenable to any suggestions which Director Bridges may make with respect to building and unifying the CIO in California or improving the work, policies and programs of the California CIO Council.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

"3. It is, and it will continue to be, the duty and function of the officers of the California CIO Council to make of the Council the largest, most active, influential and effective State CIO in the country. Nothing and [6181] no one will be permitted to interfere with the achievement of this objective or to disrupt or break down the unity of the CIO in this State.

"4. There is no reason why Brother Goldblatt should be 'consulted' about anything which goes on in the State Council to any greater degree than the international representative of any other [6181-A] union.

"When any matters come up in the State Council which affect the ILWU, it will be the obligation of the officers of the State Council that to do as they have done in the past, that is, to consult with the properly elected national or local leaders directly concerned. In no event will Brother Goldblatt be consulted in connection with CIO Council problems which do not directly concern him in his capacity as an international representative of the ILWU. In my judgment, Brother Goldblatt can make his greatest contribution to the work of the CIO if he keeps his nose out of State Council affairs and attends strictly to the job which the ILWU pays him to do.

"5. ——"

Weren't all these people supposed to be brothers in the Communist Party or some such things as that,

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Bridges, or is my memory going back on me? Well, let us proceed.

> "5. The officers of the California CIO Council will not be parties to, nor will they tolerate any political maneuvering, throat-cutting, partisan fights, diversive or disruptive acts of the kind in which I believe Brother Goldblatt is now engaging. Our job is to build and unify and strengthen the CIO in California—that is the job we are going to do, no matter who does or does not like it.
> "We have witnessed too many examples of trade unions which have been torn and disrupted by political maneuvering, [6182] personal and partisan fights and throat-cutting. We have seen these unions brought to a standstill and start to go backwards because the initiative, energy and attention of the leadership was directed toward jockeying for power and position and not toward building and strengthening the organization.
> "6. It would be interesting to know why those who called the meeting of me were so anxious to prevent Brother Connally from attending."

Wasn't Brother Connally supposed to be a Communist member, Mr. Bridges, from statements made here? Well, let us proceed.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

"7. It is my intention to present to the State Executive Committee the report of the committee of three which is now engaged in drafting the 'Rules and Regulations' to govern the relationship between Director Bridges and the California CIO Council. If this matter is so serious as to require special attention by the president of the San Francisco CIO Council, the international secretary-treasurer of the ILWU and an ILWU international representative, then it certainly should be brought to the attention of the State Executive Committee and all the issues laid on the table and thoroughly discussed by the members of the body which is officially elected and designated to guide the policies and administration of the California CIO Council between conventions. [6183]

"8. In my judgment, Brother Goldblatt, when he raised these issues, was not motivated by sound trade union standards or policies. Nor do I believe Brother Goldblatt to be genuinely concerned with what he alleges to be a 'bad' relationship between Director Bridges and the officers of the California CIO Council. I am convinced that the manner in which Brother Goldblatt raised and discussed these issues was not only disruptive, but dishonest and insincere.

"Further, it is my belief that Brother Goldblatt is deliberately trying to manufacture a situation with a purpose in mind. That purpose, I believe, is to advance the personal interests and power of Brother Goldblatt. I believe Brother Goldblatt was deliberately attempting to bring about an alleged 'split' between Brother Bridges and the leadership of the California CIO Council, and was maneuvering to convince Brother Bridges that a 'bad situation' exists between Bridges and the State Council. The purpose of such a move is to get Brother Bridges to appoint an unofficial 'acting regional CIO director,' in the person of Brother Goldblatt, to handle the affairs of the CIO director when he is out of town, and to keep the officers of the CIO California Council 'in line.'

"In the event any further attempts along this line are made by Brother Goldblatt, you can rest assured they [6184] will be fought all the way down the line by the California CIO Council. It is my judgment that probably the worst thing which could happen to the CIO in California would be to have Brother Goldblatt function as acting regional director, either while Brother Bridges is out of town or at any other time.

"Further, it is my opinion that Brothers Wilson and Paton are not direct parties to this unprincipled personal maneuvering by Brother Goldblatt, deliberately designed to enhance his personal position and prestige in the CIO. Rather, I believe Brothers Wilson and Paton to be sincerely concerned with the preservation and extension of the unity and strength of the

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

> CIO, but they have been, to some extent, taken in by Brother Goldblatt's glib arguments.
> "Finally, I would offer some advice to Brother Goldblatt—gratuitous though it may be—if you desire to become influential in the California CIO Council, why don't you seek election as the president or secretary-treasurer, don't try to sneak in through the back door."

June 24, 1943. Now, June 24, 1943, we have gone forward a month and we are still a couple of weeks behind the Communist Party convention in the Governor Hotel:

> "To Philip Connally, Paul Schnurr, Paul Heide, Harry Bridges, George Wilson.
>
> "From Mervyn Rathborne. [6185]
> "Subject: Memorandum of May 6.
> "On May 6 I sent you a confidential memorandum which dealt with certain organizational problems of the California CIO Council and the difference of opinion concerning these problems which had arisen between Brother Goldblatt and myself. After consultation with Brother Bridges and others concerned, it is my opinion that these problems can best be solved by means of a conference between those concerned. I therefore wish to draw the memorandum of May 6 and ask that if you have a copy you return it to me. If you have destroyed your copy, will you please notify me accordingly."

Q. Now, do you remember the beef that involved this little matter, Mr. Bridges? A. I do.

Q. What was the resolution of it? What happened finally to the matter? And I might say parenthetically, let us have a little guess now as to what will happen between now and Thursday to explain away both Mr. Rathborne and Mr. Wilson on this. We will reserve that parenthetically. But could you tell us now, Mr. Bridges, what was the matter and what happened to the difficulty?

Mr. Donohue: If Your Honor please, I move at this time to strike the remark.

The Court: It may be stricken. [6186]

Mr. Hallinan: It should be a confidential communication between counsel and his attorney. We will have a little guessing game over the holidays as to how they will wiggle out of that.

The Court: The last remark may be stricken.

Mr. Hallinan: Go ahead, Mr. Bridges.

A. I think that Rathborne's memorandum there generally outlines the conspiracy at that time. It was Goldblatt's opinion that the officers of the State Council, that is, Rathborne and Connally principally, were handling matters in such a way that my position as regional director was not being considered, and Goldblatt very strenuously protested, as is indicated by Rathborne's communication there. So we eventually straightened the matter out through the union machinery, by sitting down and going over it, and finding out if there was anything to Rathborne's fears. Rathborne really thought Goldblatt was after his job. That was really it. Yet he didn't put that down in the communication. What Rathborne put down was Goldblatt was trying to create a position for himself as assistant regional director. Goldblatt, you should understand, at that time was a representative of our international union, employed full time and being paid, and had formerly been the secretary of the State Council. He was succeeded by Rathborne. So Goldblatt, in addition to being someone very familiar with the work and policies of our international union, knew something about the [6187] State Council, and when I looked into the whole matter I found it was no more than Goldblatt's fears and worries that the State Council was not living up to the reputation that had been established while Lou Goldblatt was the secretary. He thought that the hard work he had put in building and establishing the State Council in the first place was not being properly recognized by the policies and activities of the State Council under the leadership of Rathborne. It was really a matter of a tempest in a teapot. I was kind of a referee in there, and we got the thing straightened away, just as Rathborne's memorandum shows, through the machinery of the Council, by sitting down and talking the matter over, and finally going out and having a few drinks. And Rathborne called in all these memorandums. He realized when we finally got him sitting down and talking about the matter, he didn't only realize the memorandum he put out was pretty disruptive there, but carried some pretty unfair charges, was a pretty unjust thing to circulate against a person like Goldblatt. So the later memorandum was for the purpose of recalling the first memorandum attacking Goldblatt, and they were all recalled or destroyed, as far as I remember, except the only person that didn't destroy the memorandum was Rathborne himself. He had put that in the files and that is where I got that from, and that is where that came from. And finally, all the discussions and meetings and conferences that took place on that took place either in the office of the State [6188] Council, in my office or conference room, and we did not have to go down to any $2.50 room in the Governor Hotel—I do not know how big a room you could get for $2.50 in 1943—but we had far better rooms available in our headquarters, and there was no need of any outside help to massage that little beef or straighten it out.

Q. Mr. Bridges, with regard to some of these charges that were made against you concerning principally the military and political policy of the union of Socialist Soviet Republics, I do not know whether or not counsel is charging you with having some fault in those matters, whatever they may be, but with regard to your attitude toward the Soviet Union, was that any different from the attitude of the CIO generally? [6189]

A. It might be the last couple of years, but before, the answer would be no. Over a period of years. The general attitude of the CIO, certainly the attitude of our union and the attitude of my own union, nothing original.

Q. Well, could you tell us, Mr. Bridges, now what is your attitude and that of the ILWU toward the Russian people? What do you feel on the attitude that the United States Government should have toward, the reciprocal attitude their Government should have toward us? What is your notion on that?

A. Well, our organization sent a delegation to tour Europe, and Russia also; four American rank and file workers from our own union. We have got a pretty simple attitude toward these things. I am speaking now of the ILWU. And in my experience, it is true of the bulk of the workers here in the United States, certainly it is my attitude, that we think the people of all countries should get along together. We don't look upon the people in Russia, at least I don't look upon the people in Russia, as being any different than anybody else. I think they want to get along with us and vice versa.

From what we have been able to find out, what our own delegatioon found out—and this is the reason the delegation went on over there, they went over to find some of these things out. They weren't representing me, they were representing our union. Not only the people of Russia, but of Britain and all the other countries, as far as we know, we [6190] consider our trade union brothers, you might say; but our friends. And we expect and want to get along with them.

We are opposed to war, and although we realize that in trying to get along with people of other countries there's many, many ideas as to how it is best to be done—different forms of government, some people have ideas as to Communism, some people have ideas on Fascism, some people have ideas on world federal governments, and so forth. But our attitude is that that is a somewhat secondary thing, that that is the form, how it is to be done, the various governmental structures.

What we complain about, at least this is the way we see it, is that the primary idea has not yet been accepted by too many countries. And that is that people everywhere are more or less the same and want to get along. Generally speaking, they want to live in peace, they want to be able to work and advance and do other things.

But we think the main quarrel springs from the fact that there are too many people that think that because the people of one country are the people of that country, they are different, they are inferior. In some cases it is expressed because of their color, in some cases because of their political views, in some cases because of their forms of government, and things like that. We claim that all those things are secondary, that the first issue, and the first thing to recognize and to establish and to get agreement on is that people generally, [6191] nothwithstanding what their country is, what their color happens to be, what their religion happens to be, their race—people are generally the same. They want to get along, they want to work together, they are friends, they are brothers.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Now, in essence that is the philosophy of our organization, and as far as I know it is generally the philosophy of the national labor unions. Where the trouble occurs, and where arguments start, is how best to do it. Now, our union takes a very simple position, and generally I try to reflect the views of my organization. It takes two people to start a fight, two countries to start a war. We think that the United States, which is our country, ought to do all it can to avoid a war with Russia or any other country. We think unless that is done, if we eventually get involved in a war and we recognize that is possible, that there is a chance of losing the war. The country that is wrong will lose the war. It is not always a question of "Might makes right." It is not always a question of who has got an atom bomb. The country that is right is liable to win the war in the long run. And as far as Russia is concerned, we also believe that there is a responsibility on that country, and the resolution we passed at the CIO convention—and I was on the resolutions committee; I have always been on the resolutions committee—in 1947, as far back as '47, also says that. There is an equal responsibility on Russia. That is true of other [6192] countries, but right now the other big power in the world is Russia. We know that.

So the way we look at it, there is just as much responsibility on Russia and on the Russian people to hold their government in line, to see that their government doesn't start heading up for another war and doing things that lead to war.

Now, we know there's a lot of argument over who might be right or wrong, but in the final analysis it is pretty late after the war starts and bombs start to drop, and it is not only our union that feels that way, but a lot of people feel that way, that the next war is going to be a lollapalooza, it is going to be a dilly. [6193]

It will make the last one look small. And on your question, opposition on war is just that simple. We don't hesitate to make opposition known, that as far as the people of any other country is concerned, we don't believe they have got any quarrel with us. We don't believe that. We don't believe the American people have got a quarrel with the people of Russia, and when we sent a delegation over to ask the people of Russia just that, never mind the leaders, we tried to talk to the people in the street, in the organizations. And our people, as far as the reports we got, they had interpreters, they said, "Look, do you want—are you looking for a war with us?"

Generally, the people in Russia and all the other countries says, "No, go back and tell your union we have had enough. We are trying to build up after the last war."

Why, our delegation didn't move five miles in any direction in Europe without running across numerous people; every one of them had the same story to tell, and we printed it. We printed it in a report. They hardly could move without running across people that hadn't lost relatives, children and others in the last war. So our position on war is a very simple thing, and nothing more should be read into it.

But there's a lot of criticism, I know that, and sometimes we have a hard job explaining it. Not because we feel our position is wrong, but because too much hysteria grows up around these things. And our union's position on war has remained the [6194] same. It remained the same all during the war. We was against war during the war. But we weren't against fighting.

Now, after all, if you get into a war and certainly our position changed after Pearl Harbor, certainly our position changed. But after the war was over, we don't want to have another war. And we don't see where we should be criticized for that, or anybody think there is anything wrong with that very simple position. We don't believe the people of the world are looking for war. They are looking for peace, they are looking for security, better wages and things like that. And they want democracy, they want good governments. And we also believe that the people of any country has got the right to choose their form of government, whatever it may be. And they ought to concede the right to those things ourselves and keep their nose out of our business, and vice versa.

Now, that is the way we see things, and that is the way we have advocated in our union, that and nothing more.

Q. Mr. Bridges, you were shown a birth certificate in which your name was put down as Alfred Renton Bryant Bridges; do you remember that?

A. Yes.

Q. Had you ever seen that document before?

A. No, but I have had the name of Harry for a long, long time—when I was a kid in school. Now, that might be the name on my birth certificate, but I know my baptismal name, and I know I [6195] had the name of Harry when I was going to school. I had that name when I was confirmed.

Q. You were confirmed by that name?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever make any effort at all to be born in this country?

A. No. Can't blame me for that.

Q. Pardon? A. Can't blame me for that.

Q. Well, don't be too sure. I think that James MacNeil Whistler excused himself being born in Massachusetts by saying he wanted to be near his mother.

Say, now, with regard to another incident that was testified to here, do you remember the gentleman who was a brigadier general in the Red Army, Paul Crouch? A. I remember.

Q. That said every document or other resolution that was proposed in the CIO convention in Oakland, he had to pass on personally before it could go through?

A. And that he wrote the resolution that I introduced. I remember.

Q. That's right. Now, did anything like that occur at all? A. No.

Q. Did you ever remember meeting that fellow before?

A. No. I remember the kissing incident. [6196]

Q. The what?

A. I remember the Gypsy Rose Lee incident. She was at that time supporting the USO, Gypsy Rose Lee—who, just incidentally, happens that I know her. I am not trying to——

Q. Brag? But she did kiss you in public?

A. All right, brag. I don't mean that. We are old friends. At that time it just happened to be that she appeared before the membership of my own local union, requesting funds for the USO. And I opposed the request before the local union, so the request could be channeled through the CIO Council, so that instead of just some unions supporting this idea, the whole Council would support the idea. And that was a little incident where that happened before the meeting at that time. That is the only part that I remember about Crouch. As far as I know, it might have been that he was in that meeting and seen me. But he had never met me in his life, and I never met him.

Q. But you didn't recognize him when he took the stand here? A. No, no.

Mr. Hallinan: Should we have the adjournment?

The Court: Yes. We will take the adjournment.

We will take the adjournment, ladies and gentlemen of the jury; tomorrow is a legal holiday, as you know, and therefore we will regularly stand adjourned until the 23rd. That is Thursday next, the 23rd of February, at 10:00 o'clock. I again admonish you not to discuss the case under any conditions nor to form or express an opinion until it is submitted to you.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to Thursday, February 23, 1950, at 10:00 o'clock a.m.) [6197]

February 23, 1950, 10:00 A. M.

The Clerk: United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial. The witness on the stand is Harry Renton Bridges, heretofore sworn.

Mr. Hallinan: Just a few questions I have left.

Redirect Examination

(Resumed)

By Mr. Hallinan:

Q. Now, there was some discussion about messages being sent to the Attorney General and so forth at the time he overruled the decision of his appeal board in the second deportation hearing, and numerous protests came in from men who were working on the docks, and so forth. And you had been instrumental to a large extent in devising procedures and techniques for rapidly loading the ships and matters of that kind, is that true?

A. To some degree.

Q. And I have here a wire, or a copy of a wire; you recognize that document? (Document handed to the witness by the Clerk.) A. Yes.

Q. Is that obtained from the regular files of your union, kept in the regular course of business there? A. That's right.

Q. And was the original of this sent by you to Mr. Donald Nelson, the chairman of the War Production Board? A. It was. [6198]

Mr. Hallinan: That would be on May 28, 1942. Now, we offer it in evidence as defendants' next in order, if the Court please.

Mr. Donohue: Purely self-serving, but we offer no objection to it, if Your Honor please.

The Court: It may be marked in evidence.

(Whereupon copy of telegram dated 5/28/42, Bridges to Donald Nelson, was received in evidence and marked Defendants' Exhibit Q-3.)

(Whereupon Defendants' Exhibit Q-3 was read to the jury by Mr. Hallinan.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, Mr. Bridges, you were asked in the cross-examination about some statement that the witness Jaworsky made, the man from Stockton, and who testified as to the matter of the adoption of the slogan of the employers, that there was no middle ground between the employer and the employee. Do you remember the other statement he made, where he said that he remembered from your speech in Stockton that night that you had said, as I get the effect of it, that if they doubled the hours of wages, to have the amount of work done?

A. I think his statement was that, the one he remembered; I advised them that if they got 95 cents an hour, to do 45 cents an hour worth of work.

Q. Yes.

A. Jaworsky testified here that at that time he was not a longshoreman, [6199] he was a bargeman. The union was attempting at that time, and has succeeded since, in having the bargemen, who used to man and work various types of craft on the Bay and on the river here, given the same status as longshoremen. That is, in terms of wages, hours and working conditions. At that time the bargemen were working ten, twelve hours a day. They were paid approximately, I think, 60 cents an hour, and they didn't receive overtime. And in an effort to meet that situation, why, my advice was exactly somewhat along the lines as Mr. Jaworski testified to.

The barge operators, that is, the operators of these vessels, clung fast to their idea that they were going to try and continue on a ten and twelve hour day and pay the men 60 cents an hour without any overtime, and generally that meant seven days a week. So it is exactly what I said, with a bunch of employers like that—until they changed their ways, don't let them get rich on it at that rate; until we can get in a position to change that situation, don't work too hard.

Q. You testified that in the first meeting, that there was—this was of some union organization, just around the time of the 1934 strike, you remember the name of some man who attended there, and the reason you remembered was that he was marked present though he was absent. What was that situation?

A. That wasn't around the '34—That was around the '34 strike. That was the first meeting of the executive board of the [6200] newly created union. That was the first meeting of the elected executive board, following the elections that we had forced through the committee of 500, following the seating of the board. We were a bunch of people who were determined, if you will—we were determined to be new brooms and sweep clean. We had already laid down a set of rules and had a constitution adopted that required, amongst other things, that every member of the board had to be a working longshoreman. We had other rules that you had to attend meetings; no excuses were offered for absence from meetings except actually being at work, that is, working as a longshoreman or being ill. If you couldn't prove that you were doing one or two of those things when a meeting came up, you were removed from the board.

So the first meeting of the board comes along, one of the men on there—and I remember it so distinctly because it created a problem for us, it put us in a dilemma. We had preached far and wide along the waterfront that we were going to be a different set of trade unionists. So we find ourselves supporting a man on our slate, we put our printed slate up, who wasn't directly working on the waterfront. He was doing some other work, good work; he was organizing part time as a teamster and trying to organize the warehouses. So he didn't fit our rules and terms of technically, at least, working on the waterfront—although he had been a longshoreman up until recently. And second, he doesn't show up at the meeting, which means that [6201] he would be fired from the executive committee. So we put up a big fight that night, that wasn't fair right at the start—that was the first meeting, and of course our enemies were only too willing—not our enemies, but those who were in opposition to our stringent rules—they were only too eager to pick up our own battlecry and use it against us, making us stay with our own rules. So that was the reason for the action we took at the first meeting. We were criticized pretty severely for it, and—— [6202]

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. What were you criticized for?

A. No. 1, allowing a situation to develop——

Q. I mean as regards marking him present when he was absent.

A. We were criticized for that.

Q. What was the result of that criticism?

A. There was no more of that. We were told to cut out the funny business and stay by our own rules that we had adopted.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. For instance, in these minutes of June, 1936, is there any question of any person marked present being actually absent?

A. I don't think so. I was only talking about the first meeting of the union. The meeting I have reference to is the first meeting of the Executive Board of the brand new union, a bunch of people determined to do the right thing, and that is how that situation developed. That is why I remember it.

Q. Mr. Bridges, do you obtain or do you receive any salary from any other organization other than the ILWU? For instance, do you receive any additional salary from the CIO?

A. I have never received any salary from the CIO. I was many years the CIO Regional Director. I was the only CIO Regional Director that was not paid.

Q. In other words, when you spoke of the salary you had been receiving from the ILWU, that is all the money you have been getting for all your activities, is that correct?

A. Our union forbids any of its officers from drawing a salary—drawing more than one salary. I receive my salary as an [6203] officer of the union, as president of the union, and no matter what other jobs I have, I am not allowed to receive any other salary.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. You were questioned about your subscription to the People's World. What other papers do you subscribe to or periodicals?

A. Our newspapers here. I subscribe to the Chronicle, the Examiner, News, New York Times, Wall Street Journal, Journal of Commerce, Nation, New Republic, New Yorker, Weekly Chess Review, and at home we have got a subscription to——

Q. When did you commence to start subscribing to the Weekly Chess Review? Only since "Dynamite" beat you?

A. Oh, no, I have subscribed to that for some time. I subscribe to a magazine called Gourmet, which is a food magazine. There are some others. I forget them.

Q. Have you ever endorsed any other newspaper or written things for them besides the People's World document that was shown to you?

A. Yes, on two or three occasions: P.M., New York Star—those were the same paper.

Q. Any local paper?

A. Chronicle, the San Francisco Chronicle.

Q. There was discussed with you, and you testified to the steps you took to expose the espionage to which you were subjected in the year 1941 in New York that you brought newspaper reporters in on the matter. Are you familiar with the [6204] report called "Some Fun With the FBI" that was run in the October 11, 1941, edition of the New Yorker, narrating a discussion with you by one St. Clair McKelvey? Are you familiar with that?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. I remember St. Clair McKelvey's article. It was written as a humorous article in the New Yorker.

Q. Yes, but you can't make fun of people like that. You have seen that before, of course?

A. Some time ago. I have not seen it for quite a while.

Q. Was that written at the time it purports to have been written? That appears in the October, 1941, edition of the New Yorker, Mr. Bridges, is that correct? A. That is right.

Mr. Hallinan: We offer it in evidence, if the Court please, as the defendants' exhibit next in order.

Mr. Donohue: I object to it, if your Honor please, as immaterial, incompetent, and not relevant to any issue before this Court or jury.

Mr. Hallinan: I might say, your Honor, one of the purposes is that if some contention should be made or some inference raised that Mr. Bridges has fabricated or invented any part of the episode which he has narrated, it is set out in that document or in that write-up, written at the time. That is eight and a half years ago.

The Court: Objection sustained.

Mr. Hallinan: I will ask that it be marked for identification. [6205]

(The article referred to was marked Defendants' Exhibit R-3 for identification.)

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): You were asked if you consulted any members of the Communist Party since the inception of this trial. What if any help did you receive, Mr. Bridges, from that source?

A. I merely asked them to help out the investigator attached to the case, if there were any questions they could answer. They said they didn't know what questions they could answer. I don't know what happened along that line. Not much, I don't think, as far as I know. Another thing, they did give us the copies of the bound volume of the Western Worker. They gave us those, or lent us those, I should say.

Q. Mr. Bridges, didn't you say in your redirect examination you had written something for the San Francisco Chronicle? A. Yes.

Mr. Hallinan: That is all.

Recross-Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Mr. Bridges, at the time you sent that telegram to Donald Nelson, the 28th of May, 1942, that was about the time you were beating the drums for a second front in Europe, wasn't it?

A. 1943? It could well be.

Q. 1942.

A. I don't know if it was that early. It might have been. I [6206] doubt if it was that early. That was shortly after Pearl Harbor.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Yes. Do you recall being asked whether or not, eight months after Pearl Harbor, you had not suggested that despite the opinion of the joint chiefs of staff, in your judgment we should then have opened a second front in Europe?

A. I am not sure it was that early. I thought that came later.

Q. You are certain on the 28th of May, 1942, Soviet Russia was an ally of the United States in the war in Europe?

A. I think that is true, yes.

Q. Mr. Bridges, do you agree with the declaration of foreign policy as enunciated by the President of the United States yesterday?

A. I didn't get a chance to read it yet, Mr. Donohue. You tell me what is in it and I will tell you my views on it.

Q. Mr. Truman is quoted in the morning Examiner, of which you say you are a subscriber——

A. I didn't say I believed it.

Q. Pardon?

A. I didn't say I believed it. I may be a subscriber to the Examiner during this case to find out what you are thinking, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Mr. Bridges, Mr. Truman is quoted in the morning Examiner as having said——

Mr. Hallinan: We object to that, if the Court please, as to reading out from the Examiner what Mr. Truman is quoted [6207] to have said. He can show him the document and ask him if he has any opinion on that subject.

The Court: You might show him the document. If he has any opinion on that matter he may express it.

Mr. Hallinan: There shouldn't be any contradictions between the witness and the newspaper. The Examiner's foreign policy has always been such as to delight Americans.

The Court: Is this asserted to be quoted matter?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: This is not editorial matter?

Mr. Donohue: No, your Honor.

Q. Mr. Bridges, do you endorse the statement of the President that the great danger of Communism does not lie in its false promises, it lies in the fact that it is an instrument of an armed imperialism which seeks to extend its influence by force?

A. I don't agree with that statement made by the President or anyone else, and here is why, Mr. Donohue——

Q. Yes.

A. The theory of Communism—and if you look it up in the dictionary or an encyclopedia, my understanding is largely the ownership, control and operation of the basic means of production, the basic resources of a country on behalf of the people and in the interests of all the people as against such basic resources and means of production being owned by private [6208] enterprise, you might say. Now, that is one thing as a theory. It seems to me one might have ideas on that score. But on the other hand, organizations that set themselves up supposedly to carry out that theory might be something else entirely different. Any political party, the Republican Party, for example, has a lot of slogans, and when you look into what it is supposed to do or claims, what its platform is supposed to be, and what in fact and in truth the leaders of that party or the representatives of that party might do, hey could be two different things.

The same with Democrats, the same with Communists and others, as far as I have been able to find out. There are various shadings of all these matters. Now, then, a general term like that and a general denunciation of the term "Communism," I can't find out from that—that is, as far as I can see—exactly what the President means. Now, if the President means imperialism, if the President means imperialism of any sort—I don't care whether it is Communistic imperialism or any other form of imperialism—if the President there is preaching to meet such imperialism with force of arms, I am in 100 per cent agreement. But I don't believe we should single out any country. I don't believe the world is threatened now by so-called Communist aggressive imperialism. That is my belief. I don't know a great deal about Russia maybe, but I don't know of any Russian colonies. I do know of colonies of [6209] other countries because I have been there. I have been to British colonies; I have been to French colonies; I have been to Dutch colonies. I have seen the people in slavery; I have seen them dying of disease and starvation. I have seen absolute oppression and tyranny, no rights of the people. I have seen those things myself personally. And if the President means that we should use force of arms to overthrow such things as that, I think he has got a good program. But these general terms of trying to draw distinctions between forms of imperialism, I just don't see it. I think imperialism of any kind—I don't care if it is carried on in the name of the King of England, the Queen of the Dutch Empire, the King of Greece, or what they choose to call the Republic of Italy these days or the Republic of France—I think they are all no good, and I think the world would be a better place without all of them. And if that includes Russia, then, by golly, yes, I am against any form of Russian expansionism or imperialism, whether it is in the form of aggression or any other type. I don't care so much what the President says and whether I agree—I am not quite sure what that means, but if it means what I am saying now, then I am for it. Unless it means that, I don't see that it means anything one way or the other. It is the statement of a politician, and one of the things maybe that is wrong with our country is too many politicians who claim they are out to save everybody else, to save the world, when [6210] they are really out to only line their own pockets.

Q. May I read you another statement by the President of the United States: "This Communist threat of force"——

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute, if the Court please. He is doing exactly what he was told not to do.

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Bridges has seen this, if your Honor please.

Mr. Hallinan: That does not mean he is entitled to read it out, the editorial of the paper or the message of the Presiednt, or whatever it may be.

The Court: I asked specifically on that question. I understand you are reading a direct quote.

Mr. Donohue: A quote of the President of the United States on the subject of Communism.

The Court: Mr. Bridges, may I ask you, Have you read the quoted article?

A. I read through the whole article there pretty rapidly and briefly. My answer, incidentally, which I just gave was intended to cover the whole article, your Honor.

Mr. Donohue: May I read the quotation, if your Honor please? I have the right to ask this witness——

Mr. Hallinan: He can ask him but not put it in the words of another person.

Mr. Donohue: I am going to ask him if he agrees with the statement of the President of the United States. [6211]

Mr. Hallinan: How do we know what he stated on that subject? You have to have the whole message, not special excerpts taken out. As a matter of fact, counsel has been the one who has been sustaining Communism here with ex-Communists all throughout the case.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

The Court: Mr. Bridges said he read the direct quotes. You can ask him about them.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Bridges, do you agree or disagree with this statement made by the President of the United States: "This Communist threat of force is a challenge to all peoples who are free or wish to be free. The fundamental issue is whether men are to be free to choose their own way of life or whether they must live under a system imposed upon them by force. Freedom cannot grow and expand unless it is directed against the armed imperialism of those who would destroy it." [6212]

A. Whether the President said it or not, I am in favor of people being free to select their own way of life. I am in favor of them resorting to arms to enforce their choice in that respect. I thought I had said that. And I don't know what particular item the President is referring to, but I certainly believe people should be free to select their own way of life and to have the means at hand to protect their choice.

Q. Now, a minute ago, Mr. Bridges, you indicated that you referred to a dictionary or an encyclopedia to get a definition of Communism. You are better informed on the subject of Communism than one might expect by reading a definition in a dictionary or encyclopedia, are you not?

A. No.

Q. You have read Karl Marx?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Oh, I have read Marx upon occasions. And when you say—I have read a lot of things. Now, I draw a line between reading and studying. I have read a lot of things. But as far as going over and over and keeping them in my mind and making a real study of it, well, there's a little difference, I should say, between that and reading a book. Certainly I have read Marx. I have read Engels, I have read a lot of people. I have read Stuart Chase. I have read quite a few people. After all, I am president of a trade union. I am supposed to be able to come up with some answers upon occasion. I am asked a lot of things. It doesn't do my membership any good to say I don't know. They [6213] say, "What is wrong with you? What do we pay you for? What do you do with your time? Can't you look it up? What do you expect us to do? Do you expect us to do those things? We are down here busy, trying to make a living, working, keeping this union going." Certainly I read. Don't go by what I read, Mr. Donohue. You would be surprised at what I read.

Q. Mr. Bridges, as a subscriber to the New York Times and as the international or world-wide president of an affiliate of the World Federation of Trade Unions, are you familiar with a recent memorandum filed by the World Federation of Trade Unions with the United Nations?

A. On what? Filed on what?

Mr. Donohue: (To the Clerk): Ask Mr. Bridges

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

if he will look at this article from the New York Times.

(Document handed to the witness by the Clerk.)

A. (Continuing): Well, I would say this, Mr. Donohue. I haven't read this report as yet—that is, this complaint of the WFTU, but I see nothing in there that I would necessarily disagree with. What you have just shown me there is a report of it in the New York Times that draws attention to the fact that the World Federation of Trade Unions has complained to the United Nations that the rights of workers in trade unions in the United States are being disregarded by the use of the Taft-Hartley Law and other things. I don't need any WFTU to tell me that. I know that. People I represent know that. They learned [6214] that the hard way. I don't have to read that in any newspapers.

Q. And it also states, Mr. Bridges, which you didn't tell us, that the WFTU complaint enthusiastically praises the Soviet Union and other eastern European countries as the "only governments that act in the interests of the workers." Do you agree with that also?

A. That might be a matter of opinion. The people, whoever it was, in the WFTU that drew up the report, I might disagree with them on that particular point. I guess I can't get into any squabbles with them on what they think is the best form of government. I am not going to agree with them on those things. I am not well enough informed. The government here is satisfactory as far as I am cocnerned, and I even say that when I might disagree with some people that are supposed to represent it, Mr. Donohue.

Mr. Donohue: May I have the last exhibit filed by the defendant? I think you have your hand on it.

The Clerk: Defendant's P-3.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Referring now, Mr. Bridges, to the memorandum which you presented to us on Tuesday from Mervyn Rathborne to yourself and others, when did you first acquire possession of this particular document or memorandum?

A. It was gotten out of the files some time ago.

Q. When, Mr. Bridges?

A. I couldn't say. [6215]

Q. What is your best recollection?

A. Oh, possibly following the—no, it would be before the testimony here. I think we got all the material concerning Rathborne together from all the files, I think, in preparation for this possible appearance here as a witness.

Q. When did you get this document, Mr. Bridges?

A. I couldn't say specifically when, Mr. Donohue. I could probably check with our research department.

Q. Well, did you personally get it or did someone else get it for you?

A. Oh, I had in mind the incident later on, after I heard the testimony. So in that connection I asked that a search be made for the document. But prior to that time, that document, along with many, many others, had already been removed from the files, in a general sense, I would say.

Q. Yes, that is what I am interested in, Mr. Bridges. When and for what reason was this and other documents removed from the files in a general sense?

A. We expected that the witnesses that had testified before the grand jury, particularly Rathborne, after all the public statements that he made, would be a witness here. We were just preparing a few things. We figured he would be up here.

Q. Now, again, Mr. Bridges, what is your best recollection as to the time when you first acquired possession of this document?

A. You are asking me when I first acquired it? And by that I [6216] say when we first lifted that out of the files, you might say for the second time. When I say the second time——

Q. Well, did you lift it out of the files twice, Mr. Bridges, or just once? A. Twice.

Q. When was the first time?

A. Where all the material in connection with Rathborne was gathered together by our research staff from all the files. So therefore there was a file on Rathborne, it was about three feet wide (indicating), you might say. Now, all that stuff is together on everything. Then when I talk about the second time is when certain things were selected which would include them. So, fairly recently, in the last few weeks, we took that particular document out, for the purpose that it has been used for here.

Q. Now, when you took it out for the purpose for which it was being used here, from where did you take it?

A. From this general file that we have kept on Rathborne since he appeared before the grand jury, and in anticipation of his appearance here.

Q. Then this was taken from the files of the California CIO Council prior to the date of this trial?

A. I think so, with full permission of the Council and the Council's officers.

Q. Can you give us any better estimation as to when, Mr. [6217] Bridges?

A. No, I think a little checkingup will reveal that right to the date, without depending on me. After all, I didn't personally supervise the whole thing, just generally.

Q. I guess this file of Mr. Rathborne's which you have suggested was about three feet wide is much bigger than your file on me, isn't it, Mr. Bridges?

A. Yes, that's right. Don't make it appear we have too much information on you, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Well, I didn't know whether you had any, until you told me I too was the subject of an investigation, Mr. Bridges.

A. Well, you could be a Lawrence Ross.

Q. Pardon?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Well, you could be a Lawrence Ross, you know, for all we know.

Q. Well, you apparently have attempted to find out? A. No, no, not a Lawrance Ross.

Q. Don't misunderstand me. I am not objecting. Now, Mr. Bridges, having had this memorandum in your custody for some time, and having had it read to you very clearly by Mr. Hallinan on Tuesday, do you recall now that there was a dispute between Mr. Rathborne and Mr. Goldblatt?

A. I didn't think it had been disputed. I recalled it very distinctly.

Q. Well, do you further recall, from having had this memorandum [6218] read to you, that in order to resolve that dispute, three conferences were held which were noted herein, one on April 21st, one on May 1st and one on May 6th, true?

A. Well, according to that. I remember the conferences, but that's the best—I would say that is the best document to go by. That nails the dates down.

Q. Is it your recollection now, Mr. Bridges, that one of these conferences was held in Mr. Rathborne's office and two were held in your office?

A. I have a better recollection of the officers in my own office; but I recall myself speaking to Rathborne about it. You see, there was a certain development at that time that this document doesn't show, and that Rathborne didn't know so much about. I notice he even—it didn't seem to mention it in that document. Goldblatt became our secretary-treasurer at that time. He became international secretary-treasurer of the international union at that time. The other secretary-treasurer went into the army, Eugene Patton—volunteered. Goldblatt took his place as acting secretary-treasurer, pending election around that time. Now, that doesn't reveal that.

So what was developing here, Goldblatt, the secretary-treasurer of the Council, came into somewhat of a clash with the State Council—correctly so—over the handling of certain funds of our union. And I don't even see any reflection in that document of that particular point. [6219]

Q. Well, is your recollection refreshed to the point now, Mr. Bridges, where you will state as to whether or not after the conference indicated here on April 21st, this simple Labor Council dispute was resolved between the parties?

A. Well, it was resolved.

Q. Then why the meeting on May 1st?

A. I don't know.

Q. And why the subsequent meeting on May 5th?

A. I think the meetings, the subsequent meetings or the meetings were to get this memorandum withdrawn. We just thought that Rathborne had gone out and bought himself a bottle of some kind of white wine or something and really took off on a dandy. And when he sent a memorandum like that around——

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Well, don't you remember, Mr. Bridges, that the memorandum is dated after the third meeting was held to resolve this simple labor union dispute?

A. Right, right.

Q. Then it wasn't settled on any one or all of these three meetings, was it?

A. Oh, I didn't think it was; I didn't mean to say it was. I said it was settled subsequent.

Q. When was it settled?

A. I don't know. I don't know. But I know my position. Goldblatt was the new secretary-treasurer of the union. As such, he was a person of authority, and when it came to the [6220] question as to who would determine the policies of our union, the State Council in the form of Rathborne or Goldblatt as secretary-treasurer, it was no question where I stood. I stood with Goldblatt. And once we got that cleared, there was no more trouble and that is the way it was settled. That I know.

Q. Aren't you reversing the situation, Mr. Bridges? Wasn't the trouble not that Rathborne was trying to run the ILWU, but that Goldblatt, secretary-treasurer of the ILWU, was trying to run the CIO Council?

A. Goldblatt was offering certain suggestions as to how the affairs of the Council should be conducted, and they were resented very much by Rathborne. That is certain. That is true, too. That is all right.

Q. Was Goldblatt a member of the CIO Council?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. At that time he was a member, maybe, but he held no official position.

Q. Mr. Bridges, the dispute wasn't settled as late as June 24th, was it?

A. Oh, I think it was settled before the board meeting, I think. I am not so sure.

Q. You recall the memorandum which Mr. Hallinan read to you Tuesday, in which Mr. Rathborne, under date of June 24th, states:

> "After consultation with Brother Bridges and others concerned, it is my opinion that these problems can best be solved by means of a conference between those concerned." [6221]

As late as June 24th, it wasn't solved, was it, Mr. Bridges?

A. All right, then, if that was what the memorandum says, I think that is correct.

Q. Now, the meeting——

A. It was solved subsequent to June 24th, I guess.

Q. The meeting that George Wilson testified about, called to solve the dispute between Rathborne and Goldblatt, he said, took place in the Governor Hotel, didn't he?

A. Yes, with some other people present; as I recall.

Q. And your counsel showed you the photostatic copy of the registration at that hotel by Mervyn Rathborne, in his room, George Wilson said this meeting took place, didn't he?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. I don't think he did. I——

Mr. Donohue: May I have it?

A. (Continuing): While I was testifying here, I did not see the registration card. He had it over there, and I don't remember being shown it. But he read what it was; I think he read it.

Q. Well, you know——

A. (Continuing): I was shown the voucher that Rathborne turned in to the State Council.

Q. Then you know substantially that that registration showed that Rathborne was at the Governor Hotel, arriving on the 8th of July?

A. Yes. [6222]

Q. Now, isn't it a fact and known by you to be a fact, Mr. Bridges, that a copy of this memorandum came into the custody and possession of William Schneidermann? A. I don't know.

Q. And do you not know it to be a further fact that Mr. Schneidermann called this meeting at the Governor Hotel during the period of the convention of the executive committee an to resolve this difference between Rathborne and Goldblatt, as George Wilson said he did?

A. I am sure there is no truth to that. There was no such meeting that I recall, because I was supposed to be there. I don't believe the matter would have been—any attempt would have been made to settle it without me. And why go around the corner to the Governor Hotel?

Q. You were meeting in convention at the Governor Hotel, weren't you?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. No, no, Mr.—The meetings were held right in the CIO Building. You have got a dozen rooms there. Now, you just paint the wrong picture, Mr. Donohue. Look, let us assume for the sake of argument that what you are saying was correct: there is no need to do any more than just march into my office, half a dozen people there, march into my office, shut the doors and go right to it there. If not my office, Goldblatt's office, a half a dozen other offices, or one of the half a dozen conference rooms in the building. Why sneak around a block [6223] and a half to the Governor Hotel, where, if we were really trying to conceal something, we would really make it look like something. You would be bound to excite suspicion, particularly if there was a convention on. And particularly by renting a room, and so forth, for that purpose. It would be far easier and simpler, believe me, what you are saying wouldn't occur to us under the circumstances. We were all in the same building. It is a big building. It has got all kinds of rooms and offices—Rathborne's office, a half a dozen other offices. They would have been available for such a session. It wouldn't have taken very long. We wouldn't have had to go around and have Rathborne hire a place. The truth of the matter is that Rathborne was staying at the hotel because it was a practice of his, inasmuch as he lived down in the country. He hired a room to sleep in so they wouldn't have to go home. Nothing more than that. [6224]

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Mr. Bridges, in 1943, in July, with your deportation matter pending, do you think you would have had Mr. Schneidermann come down to your office building and have a meeting with you, and Slim Connolly, and Ruby Heide, and Mervyn Rathborne and George Wilson?

A. If necessary, yes; certainly, if necessary, yes, No question about it. I thought I had testified to that. Any time I thought it was necessary as part of my work, if not as president of the organization, the CIO Regional Director, if these people wanted to see me, including Schneidermann, they could see me right down in my office. Or if the occasion warranted, as upon occasion it might have, I would go somewhere else to see them. I thought I had testified to that. If I didn't, that is exactly what happened upon occasion. But what you did, you picked out some of these occasions and it makes it look as if this happened as a regular thing, day in and day out, or week in and week out, or month in and month out, whereas, as against the dozens of meetings or conferences I held with other people who were not Communists, people of other political organizations and faiths, these few infrequent meetings I ever had with Schneidermann or other Communists or officers, they were few and far between, and relatively insignificant. That is the point.

But I wouldn't want to be mistaken here, that any time that I thought it was necessary for me to call up the [6225] Communist officers and say, "Look, I want to see you people on this, that or the other thing, whatever it may be," or if they wanted a conference with me on some matters, we would have a conference. But that is a far cry from saying that as a result of any such conferences I took any orders, followed any instructions, or those conferences in any way affected the course of our trade union movement by the policies of our movement, because absolutely nothing like that ever happened.

Q. Mr. Bridges, did you discuss with Mr. Schneidermann, in the presence of others, the dispute between Goldblatt and Mervyn Rathborne?

A. Not to my knowledge. The question might have come up at some time in the course of discussion, mentioned or something, I don't know. But in so far as the discussion with the connotation that you want to give it, meaning that the discussions were with the idea in mind of settling this dispute, no such discussions were held, no such discussions were necessary.

Q. Mr. Bridges, it was not my connotation; it was Mr. George Wilson's connotation I have asked you about.

A. Well, all right, then. That was what he thought.

Q. Can you tell us, Mr. Bridges, when and where this dispute between Mr. Goldblatt and Mr. Rathborne was settled, if it was ever settled?

A. It was settled, as I said, by conferences between the principals. [6226]

Q. When and where, and who was present?

A. When you say "when and where," do you mean what physical place?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Yes.

A. Right in the building, I would say. The conferences—the only conferences that took place within the respective offices, official places of business, that was where and when, it would be around the time the memorandum refers to, shortly after or between that time and the Executive Board meeting, or during the Executive Board meeting. I couldn't say as to the exact specific date, but around that sometime.

Q. Who was present? A. I don't know.

Q. Do you have any distinct recollection, Mr. Bridges, of the incident or meeting at which this dispute was resolved or settled?

A. No, no. There was a series of conferences. If you are asking me now do I specifically recall the final conferences that settled this thing completely and where it was held and who was present, I really don't, because there was quite a few conferences and I couldn't recall that specifically. I know there was conferences. I know the thing was settled. I know generally where the conferences were held, and specifically where some of them were held, and I know—maybe I don't know everybody who was present, but I know some people who were [6227] not present, and that is the way I remember it.

Mr. Donohue: I have no further questions, your Honor.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Further Redirect Examination

By Mr. Hallinan:

Q. Just one or two questions on that particular thing: The Governor Hotel, you say, is about a block and a half from the CIO Building at 150 Golden Gate Avenue? A. Two blocks.

Q. And that CIO Building is a rather large building, isn't it? A. Yes.

Q. How many floors, Mr. Bridges?

A. Three—four.

Q. On the ground floor they have a large auditorium with a stage and fixed seats that hold about how many people? A. 1200.

Q. 1200 people? A. Yes.

Q. Then on the second floor they have another auditorium with a stage and fixed seats that is called Santa Maria Hall; how many people does that hold?

A. That is a couple of hundred. But in between there is a mezzanine with a series of offices. That is where the union offices are right now.

Q. Then you have your office upstairs on the second floor? [6228] A. That is right.

Q. And Mr. Goldblatt has his adjoining you, is that right, or across the hall?

A. Except at the time we are talking of here the arrangements in the building were slightly different.

Q. About how many large offices are there on that floor?

A. Oh, probably twelve or fourteen.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. And in some of them you have your executive meetings, is that right?

A. Conference rooms, yes.

Q. How many people will be held in that executive room? A. 25 or 30.

Q. Large table and chairs all around?

A. Yes, and at this time there used to be other conference rooms. We eliminated some of them in recent years.

Q. Have you ever had a convention at the Governor Hotel?

A. Never had a convention, Executive Board meeting, or any other type of meeting, to my knowledge.

Q. Have all conventions since the acquisition of that building been held in the CIO Building?

A. I don't know of a single exception of that rule, not one. I do not recall a meeting or convention or a conference being held any other place but in the CIO Building since we acquired it.

Q. And if I remember correctly, that meeting in the Governor [6229] Hotel room is supposed to have occurred, one, after your hotel room in the Multnomah Hotel in Portland had been dictagraphed, and, two, after your room in the Hotel New Yorker had been dictagraphed, is that right?

A. That is right.

Mr. Hallinan: That is all.

Mr. Donohue: I have no further questions, your Honor.

Mr. Hallinan: That is the defendants' case. We have no further evidence.

The Court: We will take the recess, ladies and gentlemen, and may I again admonish you not to discuss the case under any conditions or to form an opinion until it is submitted to you.

(Thereupon a recess was taken.) [6230]

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me, I have the document. It just arrived. But I would like to introduce it, if the Court please. It is the report of the Executive Committee meeting for July 9, 10 and 11, 1943. In other words, it is not for the contents of it I want to admit it except as to the matters I will point out. This is the report of the Executive Committee meeting of the California CIO Council held at San Francisco, California, on July 9, 10 and 11, 1943. The minutes show that it was held at the CIO Building, San Francisco, California. It shows the presence of Secretary-Treasurer Mervyn Rathborne. Now, according to the exhibit from the Governor Hotel, Rathborne checked in there at 6:35 p.m. on the 8th of July, 1943. The first session of the Executive Committee was on July 9, 1943, the following morning. And then Rathborne stayed three nights at the Governor Hotel. The convention lasted three days. The record that I am referring to is Defendants' Exhibit C-2, which shows the times that he was at the Governor Hotel are those which I have indicated. We will offer the minutes in evidence for the limited purpose which I have just enunciated.

Mr. Donohue: May I ask your Honor at this time, because I apologize to your Honor and the jury and Mr. Hallinan——

The Court: Before announcing that fact, for the limited purpose announced by Mr. Hallinan, the minutes of the meeting may be received in evidence as to the date, for that limited purpose. [6231]

(The minutes referred to were marked Defendants' Exhibit S-3 in evidence.)

Mr. Hallinan: And also showing that the convention was held in the presence of Rathborne at all sessions.

Mr. Donohue: May I at this time ask your Honor to adjourn until two o'clock? In the meantime I have some documents which I would like to leave with Mr. Hallinan to examine over the recess, and we can discuss them at two o'clock, if your Honor will adjourn until that time.

The Court: No objection. You will proceed with Mr. Robertson at that time?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: We will adjourn until two o'clock this afternoon, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions nor to form or express an opinion thereon until the matter is submitted to you.

(Thereupon a recess was taken until 2:00 p.m. this date.) [6232]

Mr. Hallinan: One matter, if the Court please, that I overlooked. You will remember, in the discussion that Mr. Cleary participated in the Defendants' Exhibit B for identification, the Supreme Court decision, was proffered, if only for the limited purpose of excluding testimony and not offered as a positive matter. We offer it now in evidence as bearing upon the one question of res adjudicata, as establishing that fact.

The Court: The objection is sustained, in accordance with the opinion heretofore rendered.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, we will ask—it appears in the record, it is already marked for identification.

The Court: It may be marked for identification.

Mr. Donohue: Call Mr. Robertson.

The Clerk: Call Mr. Robertson.

J. R. ROBERTSON

one of the defendants herein, was recalled; previously sworn.

The Clerk: The witness on the stand is J. R. Robertson, heretofore sworn.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

For the purpose of refreshing the recollection of the witness, if your Honor pleases, I ask the clerk to hand him a photostatic copy of the United States army service [6233] record of Chris C. Robertson. (Handed to witness by the Clerk.)

(Testimony of J. R. Robertson.)

The Witness: I have examined this record, your Honor, and it refreshes my recollection not at all. I have looked at the material here and I have nothing to say other than what I have said when I was on the stand, in regards to this matter. Both in the army and in the navy, I bought my way out, I did it legitimately, and I have nothing else to add.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): May I ask you, Mr. Robertson, to look at your signature on the next to the last page of that——

Mr. MacInnis: Well, now, pardon me. So far as the document is concerned, independently of any question put by the prosecutor to the witness, the document reflects matters which are entirely collateral to the representation of the witness. The document is not an impeaching document in any way, in any of the methods prescribed by law. We would object to its introduction here or to the putting of any questions concerning its contents to the witness.

Mr. Donohue: I don't seek to introduce it, if your Honor pleases, nor do I seek to use it for the purpose of impeaching the witness. I do think I have a right to test his recollection and his credibility in the light of the statement that the witness made.

Mr. MacInnis: In other words, your Honor, we don't question the state of the government records. Apparently the records show that Mr. Robertson received an honorable discharge [6234] from the army, and in the navy he was marked as a deserter.

He gave his explanation on the stand. But those matters intruded collaterally as they were, on the cross-examination of the defendant Robertson, would not permit the improper introduction of the records into the case.

Mr. Donohue: I haven't sought to introduce them, if your Honor please. I want to ask the witness this question:

Q. If he will look at the record in his hand and tell us if it refreshes his recollection as to whether, when he joined the United States Army, he stated that he was born——

Mr. MacInnis: Well, now, that matter, your Honor, again would be collateral to the case. This gentleman who was not asked any question on direct examination which could be followed properly by the question now put to him, either as an impeaching question or as one involving a proper cross-examination. It exceeds the scope of the direct examination; it involves purely a collateral matter.

Mr. Donohue: If you will look in the record, you will find on direct examination I asked Mr. Robertson if it wasn't a fact that when he joined the army, he stated that he was born in Alba, Texas, and when he joined the Navy three years later he swore he was born in Kansas City, Missouri.

Mr. MacInnis: Well, you see, he confuses direct with cross-examination. Counsel asked those questions of Mr. Robertson on cross-examination, but he may not cross-examine the witness [6235] solely for the purpose of drawing out further questions of his own. He can not extend the scope of the record, because that is set by the tenor of the direct examination.

The Court: I will allow the question.

A. I don't see any place of birth here. I see where it gives my home address.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Would you look on the first page, Mr. Robertson?

Mr. MacInnis: May I see that again, too, please?

(Document examined by Mr. MacInnis.)

Mr. MacInnis: Now, the first pay says "Service Record, Robertson, Chris C." And it gives the army serial number and says, "First infantry."

Mr. Donohue: That is the cover, Mr.——

Mr. MacInnis: Yes, that is the cover.

Mr. Donohue: Just turn over to the first page.

Mr. MacInnis: It says here, "Born in Alba, Texas."

Mr. Donohue: Correct.

Mr. MacInnis: For his place of birth. You mean that by this page, the first page, do you?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, the page following the cover.

(Document returned to the witness by the Clerk.)

A. (Continuing): I see that typewritten in. I have no recollection of telling anyone where or when I was born, Mr. Donohue, if that is your question. I don't question this document. You [6236] have asked me do I recall. I don't. I just don't recall.

(Testimony of J. R. Robertson.)

Mr. Donohue: Will you ask the witness now to look at his service record in the United States Navy and ask him to look at that portion, please?

(Document handed to the witness by the Clerk.)

The Witness: I see the place of birth here. It is typewritten in, "Kansas City, Missouri." Is that what you mean?

Q. Yes.

A. It is typewritten in. Now, are you asking me if I have a recollection of giving this as my place of birth?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. I do not. I am not questioning it, Mr. Donohue. I don't remember. That has been quite a few years ago.

Mr. Donohue: No further questions, if your Honor pleases.

Mr. MacInnis: No questions.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor pleases, some time during the course of the trial your Honor requested that we furnish the personnel file of the witness George Wilson, and I may say to your Honor——

The Court: You sought to offer it in evidence and Mr. Hallinan wished to glance at the contents.

Mr. Donohue: Well, I may say that I have——

Mr. Hallinan: No, it was never produced.

Mr. Donohue: I have here, if your Honor pleases—— [6237]

The Court: No, to the contrary, Mr. Hallinan. The record, as I recall it, the George Wilson record, and the file containing the record, was exhibited by Mr. Donohue at one stage of the trial, and at that time Mr. Donohue said, "I now offer the document in evidence." And you said, to the best of my recollection, that you would like to examine it.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, then, my recollection is very, very defective. I don't question that your Honor's is far superior to mine, but——

The Court: I may be incorrect, but I am stating what I am remembering.

Mr. Hallinan: But I feel certain, except that I wouldn't contradict you on it, and that I must concede that I would be mistaken more likely than you. I have no reollection of any such thing happening, and it was my positive impression and belief, and it still is, that they not only did not do that but they never produced Wilson's record. Now, that is my impression.

The Court: Mr. Reporter, I ask you to examine the record and determine the facts.

Do you have any recollection, Mr. Donohue?

Mr. Donohue: My recollection is, if your Honor pleases, that some time shortly after this was received, which was early in the month of February, I had it in my hand when some question was raised about it by Mr. Hallinan, and I said, [6238] "I now offer it in evidence," at which time my recollection is that Mr. Hallinan said, "Well, just wait a minute. We want a chance to examine it."

The Court: That is my recollection.

Mr. Hallinan: That didn't happen at all. Now that happened with regard to Michener's statement but never with regard to Wilson's. They never produced it. They produced—here's what happened. Michener's statement, they produced part of the statement and the document showed on its face that there were papers missing from that, and I said we would refuse to accept any ex parte offer of it, because it said on the Michener paper that there was a part of it that wasn't included. We insisted upon getting that. We also insisted upon getting the witness Wilson, when they never produced the Wilson one, and the Michener one. That is all they brought of it. Now, they did bring out also a portion with parts of it torn out of Schrimpf's testimony, but this is the first time they have mentioned Wilson's. [6239]

The Court: I would not like to stake my recollection against the transcript as dogmatic, but at the same time I have a vivid recollection that Mr. Donohue had the file in his hand, that you had demanded at least some time prior the production of the Wilson file with respect to any oath it might contain or asserted oath.

Mr. Hallinan: That is Michener.

The Court: Also Michener.

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, I pride myself on my memory. I have never seen this file before.

The Court: You know, curiously, I am a person who also prides himself on his memory.

Mr. Hallinan: I accord that to you. I say what you say may be so, but I have never seen this document before. I have never seen this file that is presented to me.

The Court: I recall the incident. Mr. Donohue had the file and he made an offer of the whole file, and I thought it rather unusual that he would offer a whole file and the contents thereof. You at first appeared to accede and then you said, "I had better look at the contents." That is substantially the record of the testimony.

Mr. Hallinan: I would like to see it anyhow.

The Court: Mr. Reporter, would you check the record on that?

Mr. Hallinan: I think you will find no such thing. Your [6240] Honor has confused Mr. Michener.

The Court: If I am confused on that, Mr. Hallinan, I will instruct the jury accordingly.

Mr. Hallinan: The jury won't get upset about it. I am not upset about it. I do not think it is of any great moment.

The Court: You are staking your recollection on it. I am staking mine.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, that is correct. I do not think it is of great moment which of us happens to be right. I just say I have never seen the thing before.

Mr. MacInnis: I might say, your Honor, I understood this morning this recess was asked for by the prosecutor so the documents could be inspected by the defense, and here is a new and larger document than either of the others that is handed to us for the first time.

The Court: Is that the Wilson document?

Mr. MacInnis: Yes, if that is the document just handed to Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Donohue: You may have it and inspect it at your leisure.

Mr. Hallinan: Suppose we hold it during the recess until Monday.

Mr. Donohue: No objection.

Mr. MacInnis: The prosecution is supposedly putting on evidence, your Honor. We are ready to go ahead.

Mr. Donohue: There is a witness out in the hall named [6241] Robertson. I wonder if you would have him called.

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, here is an office memorandum dated February 2, 1950:

> "In accordance with your telegraphic request of February 1, 1950, there is forwarded herewith via registered mail the complete personnel file of George Edward Wilson, duly certified by Charles G. Stearns, Director of Personnel, and Planning Branch, Public Housing Administration, Washington, D. C."

Now, the defense had been on long before February 2 and here this letter and memorandum enclosing documents by registered mail is dated February 2. It is easy enough that there should be some confusion with the Michener one, but I felt certain that this document was not transmitted before. Do you contend that you have had this document before February 2?

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Hallinan——

Mr. Hallinan: Do you or don't you?

Mr. Donohue: Who are you talking to?

Mr. Hallinan: You. Did you have this document before February 2, 1950?

Mr. Donohue: You don't have to holler at me.

Mr. Hallinan: Be fair with the Court. The Court and I have had some discussion as to whether this was presented before. Now, you tell us: Did you have it before February 2, 1950? [6242]

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, we had that complete file, and we got it certified after the 2nd day of February so there wouldn't be any question about it.

The Court: I suggest during the recess we determine what the transcript shows on the matter and resolve it one way or the other.

Mr. Donohue: Call Mr. Robertson.

KENNETH C. ROBERTSON

called for the Government in rebuttal; sworn.

The Clerk: Will you state your full name to the Court and jury, please.

The Witness: Kenneth C. Robertson.

Direct Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Robertson?

A. I reside in Berkeley, California.

Q. What is your business or occupation?

A. I am Regional Attorney, United States Department of Labor, stationed in San Francisco.

(Testimony of Kenneth C. Robertson.)

Q. How long have you been associated or connected with the Department of Labor?

A. Since 1938.

Q. How long have you been with the Department of Labor in San Francisco?

A. Since July 1, 1948 [6243]

Q. Have you in your possession a certain file of documents from the Department of Labor?

A. I do.

Q. What is the document or documents which you have?

A. I have in my possession a photostatic copy of a file entitled "Lew Michener, San Francisco," consisting of photostatic copies of documents appearing in the personnel file of Lewis H. Michener, now in the possession of the Department of Labor.

Q. Is that document or are those documents certified by any officer of the Department of Labor?

A. They are.

Q. And by whom?

A. Harris P. Shane, Director of Personnel, with a further certificate by the Acting Secretary of Labor, Michael J. Galvin.

Mr. Donohue: May I have the doument, please?

Mr. MacInnis: I think if your Honor will glance at this document you will see it is testimony of a negative sort, because there is an affidavit saying the one who forwards this does not purport to say this is the whole record, and also he is not responsible for keeping the record. I have not read further.

(Testimony of Kenneth C. Robertson.)

Q. (By the Court): Do you have any information on this subject?

A. I am advised, your Honor, that the documents—— [6244]

The Court: I will withdraw the question. Perhaps I was somewhat anticipating counsel.

Mr. MacInnis: As I say, I have read only that first page.

The Court: Isn't it a matter of the examination of the witness here?

Q. You are the custodian of the record?

A. I am the present custodian of the documents.

Mr. MacInnis: It may be I can save a little reading time by asking the prosecutor if this document here is the same document or a copy of the one that you showed us before.

Mr. Donohue: It is a photostat of it, yes.

Mr. MacInnis: It is the same document?

Mr. Donohue: It is the same document.

Mr. MacInnis: In other words, we have seen this one?

Mr. Donohue: I do not know that.

Mr. MacInnis: You do not know one way or the other?

Mr. Donohue: I do not.

Mr. MacInnis: You did not compare one with the other?

Mr. Donohue: I just saw the file about ten minutes ago, Mr. MacInnis, so I don't know.

I may say, if your Honor please, at your Honor's request, following a request by the defendant, we asked the Department of Labor in Washington to send us whatever file they had with respect to Mr. Michener, and this gentleman brought it down here a few minutes ago, and that is all I know about it. I [6245] may say, if your Honor pleases, having identified this file, I am not moving its admission. I brought it here only at the request of the defendant and at the subsequent request of your Honor. Any question the defendant wishes to ask this witness on it, I have no objection, of course. Otherwise if they don't want the file I would be glad to return it.

The Court: Have it marked for identification, and then it may be used by either the prosecution or the defense. It is not in evidence for any purpose. It is merely marked for identification. Is that agreeable, counsel?

Mr. MacInnis: Naturally I could not object to its being marked, your Honor. Have you any further questions?

Mr. Donohue: No.

(File re Michener marked U. S. Exhibit 37 for identification.)

Cross-Examination

By Mr. MacInnis:

Q. Mr. Robertson, just so we won't be in the dark about the meaning of this file, you have not of course, been the custodian of this file continuously, have you? A. I have not.

(Testimony of Kenneth C. Robertson.)

Q. And as you say, you embarked upon your duties for the Department of Labor on July 1, 1948, is that correct?

A. That is at this station in San Francisco.

Q. Yes. And the record which has been brought here is one involving the period of time extending during the last war? [6246]

A. That is correct.

Q. And without speaking further of the contents of these papers, you have read them over, have you not? A. I have.

Q. And you were requested to bring them here?

A. I was.

Q. Were you subpoenaed to come here?

A. I was asked to come and told that, if necessary, I would be subpoenaed. Whereupon I appeared without a subpoena.

Q. To whom did you talk, Mr. Robertson?

A. I talked initially with Mr. Kesler.

Q. A Mr. Kesler?

A. That is correct, who is, I believe, an investigator of the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Q. Did you write to get this record at his request?

A. I did not. As I understand the situation, the Immigration Service attempted to procure the file from the Department of Labor in Washington, D. C., without my knowledge. The Department decided that the proper way to transmit the file was to send it to me, and I was instructed, upon receiving the file, to get in touch with the Immigration Service, which I did.

(Testimony of Kenneth C. Robertson.)

Q. In other words, you never made any request yourself of the Department of Labor in Washington to send back the record on Lewis Michener?

A. That is correct. [6247]

Q. But some time after the Immigration Department had itself made some investigation you were informed by your superiors that the file would be sent to you? A. That is correct.

Q. And you were told that when the file reached you, you were to contact the Immigration Service?

A. That is correct.

Q. Who is Harris P. Shane?

A. Harris P. Shane is the Director of Personnel of the U. S. Department of Labor in Washington, D. C.

Q. You are familiar, of course, with the affidavit of Harris P. Shane contained in these papers?

A. I am.

Q. You have read the statement of Harris P. Shane to the effect that he could not find the original oath of office of Lewis Michener?

A. That is correct.

Q. So that if such an oath was taken, this file does not reveal it? A. That is correct.

Q. The file does mention the existence of such an oath of office, doesn't it? A. It does.

Q. Although it does not contain the oath itself?

A. That is correct. [6248]

(Testimony of Kenneth C. Robertson.)

Q. Do you have in your hand any other memoranda which might aid us in this matter?

A. I have merely the transmittal memorandum to me of the file.

Q. May I see that, please?

A. It is marked "Confidential." It is not a part of the personnel file of Mr. Michener. I don't believe it would throw any light on the question which you are asking. I would prefer not to show it to you.

Q. But I might have a different idea. I might think it would throw some light. I think, your Honor, probably the document should be made available, unless there is a personal reason, and I take it it is not that kind of document. It is a document which I suppose the witness wishes to safeguard because of the duties of his own office.

A. That is right. It is marked "Confidential." It is addressed to me.

The Witness: May I ask your Honor to examine the document to determine whether or not it should be the subject of examination?

Mr. MacInnis: Before his Honor does that, or while he does it, let me ask you this:

Q. Mr. Robertson, you depend upon the contents of that letter, do you not, for the information that you give the Court and jury today and the request of the Immigration Service for the record of Lewis Michener in Washington? [6249]

A. That is correct.

(Testimony of Kenneth C. Robertson.)

Q. That is your source for making that statement?

A. In addition, I was telephoned from Washington the day before this memorandum arrived by the Solicitor of Labor, who signed this memorandum, advising me one day ahead of time of the contents of the memorandum.

Mr. MacInnis: I suggest this, too, that if the document is to be referred to in the record, it should probably be marked for identification and then shown to his Honor.

The Court: Without my examining the document, do you regard the subject matter of the document as confidential communication between your superior officer in Washington and your department here?

The Witness: I do. I have no objection, I may say, to your Honor's examining it. I am convinced that it has no relevancy to the issue and contains nothing, I think, which expands on the file which is transmitted with the memorandum.

Q. (By the Court): You examined the file folder? A. Yes, I did.

Q. And the covering note? A. I did.

Q. You now testify, under oath, as you are, that the confidential memorandum has no bearing upon the subject matter of that file?

A. It has only the bearing that it indicates that a request was made of the Department of Labor for the file by the [6250] Immigration and Naturalization Service.

(Testimony of Kenneth C. Robertson.)

Q. You have explained that.

A. That is correct. It covers nothing that I consider of any relationship to the file other than that which I have already testified to.

The Court: I see no occasion for this letter.

Mr. MacInnis: I think this, your Honor: This gentleman is undoubtedly speaking the truth about his own opinion concerning the memorandum. There is just some slight possibility that there might be something revealed which would not occur to him since he has not been sitting in this case. That is the only thing I have in mind. We have no wish to reveal something that belongs to the Department of Labor that would have nothing to do with the issues in this case, and obviously if there was such material, there would be no question we could possibly put to the gentleman concerning it. But I think we should see it if it has those references.

The Court: I would see no occasion for the Court to go into the contents of the memorandum between the two departments.

Mr. MacInnis: I do not know, your Honor, whether there is any confidential communication where that would protect——

The Court: The witness has so testified. Now, we prescind from the premise, and as testified, it is a confidential communication. He testified it has no bearing on the controversy at hand. I see no occasion to delve into it. The proseutor has [6251] not seen it, you have not seen it, I have not seen it. The witness states it will not aid or assist any matter before the Court.

The Witness: That is my very solid belief.

The Court: And the explanatory note that you gave is the upshot and purport of the situation.

The Witness: That is correct.

Q. (By Mr. MacInnis): Mr. Robertson, let me ask you this: In discussing your coming here as a witness with any person connected with the Government prosecutor, did you refer to that letter or show the letter to them? A. I did not.

Q. You did not refer to it at all?

A. That is correct.

Q. Do you have some other document in your hand?

A. I have a document, which is not marked "Confidential," which bears the date February 7, 1950, and is addressed from Harris Shane to Mr. Thysen, the Solicitor, which transmits to Mr. Thysen the personnel file for retransmittal to me. I have no objection to your seeing this. I may say the document appears to be a copy. It does not carry the original initials of Mr. Shane.

Q. Mr. Duggan is a member of your office in Washington? A. Mr. Duggan?

Q. Yes. [6252]

A. No, he is not that I am aware of. I would assume he was connected with the Immigration Service in some way.

Q. The heading on this letter is "U. S. Department of Labor." A. Yes.

Q. That is the department with which you are connected? A. That is correct.

(Testimony of Kenneth C. Robertson.)

Q. Then the text says, "Mr. Duggan of this office called"——

A. Then you are correct. I do not happen to know him, but I agree with you. I hadn't read that recently. I would agree that apparently he then is in Mr. Shane's office. [6253]

Q. In other words, that is just an impression that you have?

A. That's right. I don't know him.

Q. And you were given this information, reading as follows: "Incidentally, the District Attorney is not handling the prosecution, a special assistant to the Attorney General has been assigned to the case."

A. That is so stated in the memorandum.

Mr. MacInnis: That is all.

Redirect-Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Mr. Robertson, while you have been in the Department of Labor in San Francisco since 1948—— A. That's correct.

Q. When did you first become employed in the United States Department of Labor?

A. In December, 1938.

Q. And where were you then employed?

A. In Washington, D. C.

Q. And how long did you remain employed in Washington after 1938?

A. Until 1948, at the end of June of 1948, with a period out during the war.

(Testimony of Kenneth C. Robertson.)

Q. And then you were transferred here?

A. That's correct.

Q. And the document which you brought here this afternoon you received from your superiors in Washington? [6254] A. That's correct.

Q. None of the papers which you have brought here were found in the San Francisco office of the Department of Labor, is that correct?

A. Not since I have been here. They may originally have been here as a part of the labor files, as I understand it, but they were not here.

Q. But not since you have been here?

A. They were not in the files of the department in San Francisco since I have been here.

Mr. Donohue: No further questions.

Recross-Examination

By Mr. MacInnis:

Q. When did you make the search, Mr. Robertson, to see if any of these papers were on file with the San Francisco office?

A. I made no search, because there would have been no occasion to do so, since the War Labor Board at the time it existed in San Francisco was independent of the Department of Labor and upon the dissolution of that agency, the files were recalled to Washington, D. C. and from that point transferred to the Department of Labor in Washington, D. C.

(Testimony of Kenneth C. Robertson.)

Q. How did you know that?

A. I knew that because I was in Washington, D. C. in 1947, I believe it was, when the Wage Stabilization Board, which was the successor agency to the War Labor Board was a part of the [6255] Department of Labor for housekeeping purposes and was finally dissolved, I think, in that year.

Q. Well, from your experience, Mr. Robertson, do you have some notion as to what the regulations were concerning members of the regional War Labor Boards?

A. I do not. I am sorry to say I do not.

Q. You don't know it to be a fact that members of the regional War Labor Boards did have to take oaths of office?

A. I would have assumed so from a mere examination of this file; in that file, it states that an oath was taken.

Q. Well, you know that the regulations promulgated by our government are to that effect, do you not? A. That is correct.

Q. And that the oath of office is missing from the file transmitted to you?

A. That is correct.

Mr. MacInnis: That is all.

Further Redirect Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Are you familiar, Mr. Robertson, with what the oath of office is, as distinct from the sworn statement on a Form 57?

(Testimony of Kenneth C. Robertson.)

A. I have a general recollection of what the oath of office is, and I believe since about 1940 the oath——

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me just a minute. The regulations are printed, and would be the best evidence of this fact, Your Honor. [6256]

Mr. Donohue: You just asked him if he didn't know from his experience, a question. Why can't I do the same thing?

Mr. MacInnis: Well, I am suggesting, Your Honor, that the printed regulation would be the best evidence as to the contents of this oath.

Mr. Donohue: May I ask his question now. Withdraw the last question.

Q. To your knowledge, Mr. Robertson, would the oath of office be the same in 1945 as it was in 1942?

A. My best impression is that it was.

Mr. Donohue: Then, if Your Honor pleases, in the George Wilson file is an oath of office signed in 1945, and I am perfectly willing to agree that the same oath of office is the oath of office which would have been signed in 1942.

Mr. MacInnis: No further questions.

Mr. Donohue: Thank you so much, Mr. Robertson.

Mr. Hallinan: On this George Wilson, if the Court please, the file contains the application and oath that was taken by George Wilson. Now it states specifically and unequivocally, "Do you advocate or have you ever advocated or are you now or have you ever been a member of any organization that advocates the overthrow of the government of the United States by force or violence?" "Now are you or have you ever been a member?" And he answered it under oath, "No." And now he also, if the Court [6257] please, answers the question, "Do you use intoxicating liquors?", "Yes," marking it "Occasionally." And he gives among his references Harry Bridges, 604 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, labor official.

Now is it——

Mr. Donohue: Who else?

Mr. Hallinan: Well, he gives four others.

Mr. Donohue: Who are they?

Mr. Hallinan: Well, I don't intend to read the whole thing in. You can read them in. What I am getting at is this, if the Court please. What I am getting at is this: that we were trying to show in the examination that Wilson had filed an affidavit in which he probably denied membership in any organization advocating the overthrow of the government by force——

The Court: Pardon me, Mr. Hallinan. My recollection is that you did not address any questions to Mr. Wilson on that subject.

Mr. Hallinan: I say, to the contrary, to the contrary. While I didn't ask that exact thing, I asked him if he had filed an application at any time for a civil service job with the United States Government.

The Court: That is correct.

Mr. Hallinan: Because I knew that that was contained in it. And as soon as the witness said yes, he did, then I surmised that he had answered that question in the negative, and [6258] that that was the way they were able to force him to say what they wanted. Ergo, if I had seen this document before, I couldn't have neglected it or passed it by. I think therefore I must reaffirm what I say, that I never saw this file before.

The Court: Mr. Hallinan, neither you nor I should become intensely sensitive about our colloquy, and I am sure I didn't intend to provoke you into the tantrum that I saw exhibited here with Mr. Donohue. The same——

Mr. Hallinan: Well, now, Your Honor, I object to the use of that term "tantrum." The term comes from Mr. Donohue. Mr. Donohue is the one who started the tantrum.

The Court: To the contrary, to the contrary.

Mr. Hallinan: Of course, there are good boys around here and what they do means nothing; what the others do is given a great deal of attention.

The Court: I think we should——

Mr. Hallinan: Now I make this statement, Your Honor, and of course the thing is that from certain points of view in a court of law, one can be very urbane and very smooth and very calm about things, but when a document is first, as I contend, concealed and not produced even after the Court has ordered it, then when it was pretended that it was brought in before and contains on its face the evidence that it was not, I think that it is time to stop being so smooth and courteous and kind. We have people here whose liberties are involved in these [6259] things.

The Court: Mr. Hallinan,——

Mr. Hallinan: Mr. Donohue can afford to be quite calm. He is a little boy who is caught. Now that is my position on it and Your Honor calling my conduct a tantrum, I think, is certainly misdescribing it. I am not supposed to pretend that there is nothing to the thing except what Mr. Donohue says. So I reiterate, Your Honor, I am not—I don't—I say we had discussion about the Michener file and the Schrimpf file, and I don't believe that you looked at either one of them. I am not sure, but I don't remember they were shown to you. But I did, and I am definite that whether you saw this or not, or whether Mr. Donohue had it in the court, I never saw it before. That is all I want the record to show.

The Court: Well, Mr. Hallinan, first I will stand on the recorded transcript of the testimony. And if I be incorrect in that, I shall be very quick to make that admission. I say and repeat to you, however, it is my best recollection that Mr. Donohue had the file in his hand and sought to offer it in evidence, and I thought it was a rather unusual situation to offer a file content in evidence. You then said, as I reiterate and as I said before, you said, "I want to look at it." Now, that was the discussion, that was the George Wilson file, and that is my best recollection.

With respect to your assertion made to Mr. Donohue that he has secreted or suppressed the file, I say there is no evidence [6260] before the Court either expressly or by inference that he did suppress the Wilson file, and I admonish the jury to disregard——

Mr. Hallinan: I think, Your Honor,——

The Court: ——to disregard that phase of Mr. Hallinan's discussion.

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, I think that should be left to the jury whether he has produced it or not. Now we are charging some of these government officials with having suppressed a great deal of evidence, and to take part of it out like this and tell the jury that it isn't suppressed, I think is invading the province of the jury. I would ask Your Honor to withdraw that admonition, because the jury may well conclude that counsel has only brought it in at the last moment as being the lesser of two evils to him.

Now, we are entitled to argue those matters, and the Court should not remove a matter of fact like that from the jury. And furthermore, the Court might not wish to have any reflection cast on Mr. Donohue, but I don't care about Mr. Donohue, who he is or do I desire to cast any reflection on him. But I say this, Your Honor: These things don't emanate from Mr. Donohue, there are other agents of the government who have them and procure them. He may not know about it.

The Court: Mr. Hallinan, let us attempt,—and if I may proceed without interruption on your part momentarily. The charge or assertion you made that Mr. Donohue is guilty of [6261] suppression of the Wilson file is based upon your present assertion, apparently upon your present assertion, that it is produced at this late stage. I assume that is predicated, that that is the predicate for your assersion. Now, if that were the predicate for your assertion, the whole thing must fall and your assertion must fall, and your charge must fall, for the simple and obvious and apparent reason, to the Court, that this file folder was produced before; and it would seem to require no argument, if that be the fact, that the jury should be admonished to disregard your present assertion that the file folder was suppressed. And I therefore charge them accordingly.

Mr. Hallinan: But that is with the understanding that the record supports the Court's memory as against mine, that it was.

The Court: That is correct.

Mr. Hallinan: If that is so, I will be the first to apologize on this thing.

The Court: There is no apology necessary; it is a question of the verity of the record, and I stand on it.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, I will certainly be the first to admit my fault on it if that be the thing.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Donohue: Your Honor, with respect to this file, I think I should say to Your Honor that Mr. Hallinan, with respect first to the witness Schrimpf, then the witness Michener and now [6262] with the file of the witness Wilson, has drawn a conclusion which the case of the gentleman whom his client seems to know so well, Mr. Schneidermann, does not justify. And that is that as of the date and time when these affidavits were filed, that there was any adjudication anywhere to the effect that membership in the Communist Party was membership in an organization which sought to overthrow the government of the United States by force and violence. Now, of course the inference that Mr. Hallinan is trying to draw is that these people were asked whether or not they were members of the Communist Party and that they had said, "No," and for that reason that the United States was wielding or exercising some sort of duress. Now, the duress that Mr. Hallinan speaks about with respect to the witness George Wilson and which was the line taken by one of the three witnesses when they testified, wasn't, apparently followed by the other two. And now, I most respectfully say to Your Honor what Mr. Hallinan's purpose in reading the fact that Mr. Bridges was one of the persons who endorsed the application of George Wilson for federal employment——

Mr. Hallinan: I didn't say that; I said that Mr. Wilson gave his name as one of his references.

Mr. Donohue: Well, then, as I say, if Your Honor pleases, never knowing just what purpose he may have in mind, I think, since he has read the name of Mr. Bridges, that I should say to Your Honor that the application also shows as names given as [6263] references by Mr. Wilson, the name of Roger D. Lapham, City Hall, San Francisco, Mayor; Frank R. Havenner, Washington, D. C., Congressman; Frank A. Clarvoe, 812 Mission Street, San Francisco, editor San Francisco News; and William M. Malone, Mills Building, San Francisco, attorney.

The Court: I have a telephone call?

The Clerk: Long distance.

The Court: We will take a short recess, ladies and gentlemen. We will take the afternoon recess. It will be convenient now. And may I again admonish you not to discuss the case under any conditions, nor to form or express an opinion thereon until it is submitted to you.

(Recess.) [6264]

The Clerk: For the sake of the record, your Honor, your Honor asked me to look up the record as to certain matters during the recess. May I say that in Volume 40 of the reporter's transcript, Wednesday, January 25, 1950, on page 4299, the record reads as follows:

> "Mr. Donohue: If there be any further documents, we shall produce them.
>
> "Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, another direction that was made at the same time by the Court, and it can be done at this time, is that all documents relating to the witness George Wilson be also produced. The Court made the same suggestion.

"The Court: George Wilson we approach from a different level. On George Wilson—the record is not before me——

"Mr. Hallinan: The documents are in the same category.

"Mr. Donohue: I will produce it after the 11:00 o'clock recess for George Wilson.

"Mr. Hallinan: All right. That is the whole file.

"Mr. Donohue: Yes, sir, we will offer it in evidence, if your Honor will permit me to reopen our case for that purpose.

"Mr. Hallinan: Let me ask you this—no, we had better see it. Is the Schrimpf file available? Will your Honor look at it during the recess?

"The Court: I will when it is available." [6265]

I think that is all the matter that concerns this question.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor pleases, at this time I offer in evidence both the Michener file and the Wilson file.

Mr. Hallinan: We agree to the offer in evidence of the Wilson file, but the Michener file on its face is lacking documents. The Michener file states that there are documents lacking from it, and we object to the Michener file being produced in the form it is. We ask that this gentleman produce the entire file. For instance, the document which Mr. Wilson had to make out which contains that information that he never was a member of an organization advocating the overthrow of the Government by force and containing above it the statement that he had never been sentenced on any violation of any law except some traffic law, or something like that, that is missing from the Michener file. That is the exact thing we wanted to see in Michener's file. We know Michener answered those two questions falsely. We want that document produced here. It has not been produced.

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Hallinan is not telling the truth to the Court. He does not know that the Form 57 was signed and signed in the negative, because the record itself shows the Form 57 and it was not signed and was never signed.

Mr. Hallinan: There is an unsigned document in there. We can't accept that. We know a little better of the proceedings [6266] of the United States Government. Why should Wilson have to fill out very closely a form that stated these matters in complete detail in order to get the same job or a similar job to the one Michener had, but Michener had to fill out none? In other words, they substituted and put in here a blank document and pretend that that constitutes the Michener file. We do not accept it. Furthermore, they have no such certificate as they have affixed to the other that is the entire file.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, the suggestion by Mr. Hallinan that we or anyone substituted any document for any other document is a misstatement of fact. It is untrue.

Mr. Hallinan: Now, how does he know that?

Mr. Donohue: Just as I ask you, How do you know that Mr. Michener, as you just stated to the Court and jury, signed a Form 57 in which he denied that he had ever been arrested?

Mr. Hallinan: We have our means of knowing things. We hear things. Some of your babies have been babbling around as to the reason they had to come in and testify. Mr. Michener is one of them.

Mr. Donohue: Then I think he should be asked by the Court to produce such evidence.

The Court: I will order the recall of Mr. Michener. I will order Mr. Michener recalled for further examination.

Mr. Donohue: I would be glad to have him recalled.

The Court: Is there anyone else who made any such statement [6267] as you suggest?

Mr. Hallinan: Where is the one who has not? We have claimed they all are in that category.

Mr. Donohue: I would like to call Mr. Hallinan's attention that if you will read Mr. Michener's testimony, Mr. Michener on the stand bet him a hat he had never signed the Form 57.

The Court: Recall Mr. Michener. The Michener file may be marked presently for identification. The other file is offered in toto. There is no objection to the Wilson file. It may be received. Mark the Michener file for identification pending the return of Mr. Michener to the witness stand.

The Clerk: The Wilson file may be marked Government's 37 for identification.

Mr. MacInnis: I am interested in another matter, a matter which I was about to speak before you received the telephone call before the recess.

The Court: Yes, sir.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Donohue had just offered the Court his observations on the significance of George Wilson's answers to the questions, and he said at that time a man could safely say the Communist Party was not one of the prohibited organizations because there had not been any such adjudication. I would like to reply to that by reminding the Court for the record, and of course I know the Court is familiar with the law that [6268] in 1940 was passed the Smith Act, which embraced by its terms any organization having for its object the overthrow of the Government by force or violence or any person affiliated therewith, and that was the act under which Harry Bridges was prosecuted. That act was in existence in 1940, and the evidence produced against Harry Bridges at that time was the same allegation that he at one time had been a member of or affiliated with the Communist Party. So the Communist Party, from the perspective of the Government, was always that type of prohibited organization. [6269]

Now, the other remark I would like to make for the record is this. In respect of the record of the witness George Wilson, Mr. Mitchell has read correctly from the record, showing that the name of Wilson does appear in this record as uttered by Mr. Donohue on January 25th of this year, 1950. Now, here on the very face of this document we find that on February 1st, 1950, at about a week later, the special prosecutor made a telegraphic request to Washington for the complete personnel file of George Wilson, and that he then received that, apparently, air mail and registered out of Washington on February the 2nd. So he would have had it by the very earliest on the evening of the 3rd or 4th of February this year. Now, I would suggest that he could hardly have had the same file in his possession on January the 25th. Whatever he referred to in the record at that time could hardly be the same document concerning this letter speaks, and the letter is here. The letter says that he made the request on February the 1st of 1950.

The Court: Mr. Donohue?

Mr. Donohue: What Mr. MacInnis fails to observe, Your Honor, is that I had a complete photostat of the file, having offered it in evidence, even though Mr. Hallinan shied away from it, on the 25th of January. I then asked for a rephotostat of the file, certified, so I can offer it in court. And the document which is here today bears the certification which I requested of Charles G. Stern, director of the Personnel and [6270] Planning Commission of the Public Housing Administration. Knowing I could not introduce the evidence without the certification, that is the reason for the request.

Mr. MacInnis: Well, let me ask the special prosecutor this: Do you contend that at any time you placed in our hands the record of George Wilson?

Mr. Donohue: Mr. MacInnis, I never said so.

Mr. Hallinan: He never said so.

Mr. MacInnis: Well, if you say you didn't——

Mr. Donohue: I told you as the record shows that you could have it at the 11:00 o'clock recess, but you saw fit to overlook it. You weren't anxious to see it.

Mr. Hallinan: Nothing further was said about it; that is all that was ever said.

Mr. MacInnis: In other words, if there is now no contention that we ever saw the record, the matter should be settled.

Mr. Hallinan: No, there should be a further concession, that the matter was not produced. If he says he did not produce the matter, it was not produced.

The Court: The only fair inference to be drawn by the Court was that the record was available. That was the basis for my position.

Mr. Hallinan: That is all right.

Mr. Donohue: May I recall the witness J. R. Robertson, or rather, the defendant J. R. Robertson for a question that I [6271] overlooked?

J. R. ROBERTSON

one of the defendants herein, recalled; previously sworn.

The Clerk: The witness on the stand is J. R. Robertson, heretofore sworn.

Cross-Examination

(Resumed)

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Mr. Robertson, does the inspection which you made of the photostat, and in the event there should be any question about that, I have also a certified copy of the photostat—of your service in the United States Army refresh your recollection as to the fact that you joined the army on the 20th of January and that you left the army on the 22nd of July, seven months and two days later?

A. It doesn't refresh my memory at all, Mr. Donohue. I don't question the record, but I have no recollection of when I got in and when I got out.

Q. Well, in the light of your statement that you were in such a short time that you forgot it, would you consider that period of time so short a time in the army as to justify you in forgetting the fact tha you had had such service?

A. What period of time do you mean?

Q. From the 20th of January until the 22nd of July. A. That is a short period of time.

Q. Seven months and two days? [6272]

A. That's correct.

Mr. Donohue: No further questions.

Redirect Examination

By Mr. MacInnis:

Q. Mr. Robertson,——

Mr. Hallinan: It is really six months and two days.

Q. Mr. Robertson, this army service was in the year 1921?

(Testimony of J. R. Robertson.)

A. I think the record shows that. Frankly, I haven't checked it too closely.

Q. And the navy service was in 1924, is that correct? A. Yes, I think that is so.

Q. One of those dates being 29 years ago, 20 years plus, and the other being 16 years plus——

Mr. Hallinan: 26.

Q. (By Mr. MacInnis, continuing): ——Pardon me. 26 years plus, is that correct?

A. About that. I haven't figured it out.

Q. Now, after you left the navy, did you ever receive any communication from the navy?

A. Nothing, nothing.

Q. Were you ever informed that the records of the navy had marked you as one absent without leave? A. Nothing.

Q. Was any inquiry ever addressed to you in the course of your whole life about that?

A. Nothing at all. [6273]

Mr. MacInnis: That is all.

The Witness: Nothing at all.

Recross-Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Mr. Robertson, after you left the navy in 1924, did you ever have any correspondence with your mother?

A. Oh, I went home after that.

Q. Well, I call your attention to a letter in your navy file stating that the man's next of kin, mother, Mrs. Kate Robertson, had been notified of his desertion by letter and ask you if that refreshes your recollection as to whether or not your mother ever told you she was so notified by the United States Navy. (Document handed to the witness by the Clerk.)

A. I will have to get my specs. Well, this document here says that my mother had been notified, but my mother has never said anything to me, and I talked to mama since I have been on this witness stand, and she says she has no recollection of ever having received anything. That is from my mother.

Mr. Donohue: I have no further questions.

Further Redirect Examination

By Mr. MacInnis:

Q. Now, as to whether or not any communication was ever addressed to you, let me ask you if this refreshes your memory, that there was a letter written by one of the navy bureau chiefs on July 7, 1938, concerning you, saying, "His return to naval custody for disciplinary purposes is no longer desired. However, if you have knowledge of his present whereabouts, [6274] you are at liberty to inform him that if he will communicate with the Bureau requesting discharge, he will be furnished full instructions as to the procedure necessary to follow in order to obtain his discharge."

(Testimony of J. R. Robertson.)

Did you ever receive from any source, any naval bureau or any other person, those forms for discharge? A. I never received anything.

Q. Did you ever know, until the prosecutor used the word in questioning you, that you were apparently charged with desertion from the navy?

A. I sure didn't.

Q. Now, in the army your record shows an honorable discharge with your character marked "Excellent." Did your manner of leaving the navy vary in any fashion from your manner of leaving the army?

A. I did it, I did the same thing in most instances.

Further Recross-Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Is that—that is, except that in your navy record, it doesn't show an honorable discharge, does it?

A. I did the same thing, Mr. Donohue, in both instances.

Q. The navy doesn't report the——

A. And I don't remember all the details. I am telling you as I reconstruct this thing. That is the situation as it was. I bought my way out. It was legitimate, and nothing has been said down through the years about this thing. That is the way [6275] it is.

Mr. MacInnis: If you are looking for the discharge, I will show it to you.

(Testimony of J. R. Robertson.)

Mr. Donohue: No, I am looking for the letter from which you just read, Mr.——

Mr. MacInnis: Right there.

Mr. Donohue: I think I had better read the whole letter, if Your Honor pleases.

Mr. MacInnis: Well, now, this document is not in evidence.

Mr. Donohue: I know, but you read a part of it, so I think I had better read the whole of it.

"My dear sir:——"

The Witness: May I ask who the letter is from and who it is to and where they got their information? Frankly, I couldn't make it out. I read it myself, Mr. Donohue.

Mr. Donohue: I was hoping you might have asked Mr. MacInnis that, but the letter seems to have been written by J. O. Richardson.

The Witness: And who was he?

Mr. Donohue: Chief of Bureau, A. M. Bledsoe, by direction Chief of Police, New Orleans, Louisiana.

The Witness: No; who was it to and who was it from?

Mr. Donohue: That, Mr. Robertson, I can't tell you.

The Witness: Well, I couldn't figure it out either.

Mr. Donohue: I want to read you a letter from which Mr. [6276] MacInnis read a part, and the letter reads:

"My dear sir:——"

(Testimony of J. R. Robertson.)

The Witness: And when is the letter dated?

Mr. Donohue: 7 July 1938.

The Witness: That is just after I was beaten up in New Orleans by the cops. I remember it. I remember the day, I remember the period quite well.

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me. I think this, Your Honor: that the previous two purposes, one by the prosecutor and one by myself, of calling the attention of Mr. Robertson to portions of this file was upon the avowed purpose of refreshing his recollection. Now he can show him this letter, but that is hardly an excuse to read from the letter or to read it in its entirety over objection.

Mr. Donohue: Well, why did you read from it, Mr. MacInnis?

Mr. MacInnis: You didn't make any objection.

Mr. Donohue: Well, you shouldn't object to my reading the rest of it, then.

Mr. MacInnis: I am not bound by your conduct. It is not of any importance, but the matter is not evidence, Your Honor.

Mr. Donohue: Oh, I won't read it, then. That is all, Mr. Robertson.

Would you call Mr. Lawrence Armond, please, who I think is in the hall?

The Clerk: Call Mr. Armond. [6277]

LAWRENCE C. ARMOND

called on behalf of the United States; sworn.

The Clerk: Will you state your full name to the Court and jury?

A. Lawrence C. Armond.

Q. Will you spell your last name, please?

A. A-r-m-o-n-d.

The Clerk: Lawrence C. Armond.

Direct Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. And where do you live, Mr. Armond?

A. San Mateo.

Q. And what is your business or occupation?

A. I am with the United Air Lines.

Q. And how long have you been with the United Air Lines? A. About 17 years.

Q. After examination by counsel, I want to hand you what is captioned "June '36, the Official Aviation Guide of the Airways," and ask you a question.

(Document examined by defense counsel.)

Mr. MacInnis: Well, I don't propose to read the book. It covers all of the airlines in the United States about proposed schedules, but I see what the book is.

Mr. Donohue: Would you ask the witness to look at the book?

(Document handed to the witness by the Clerk.) [6278]

Q. (By Mr. Donohue, continuing): What is that which you have in your hand, Mr. Armond?

A. This is the Official Aviation Guide that was used by all air transport companies in that year as a reference periodical for ascertaining schedules.

Q. Would you refer to that guide and tell us what the air schedule flight and time was from San Francisco to New York City in June of 1936?

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me. If the Court please, this question obviously calls for hearsay. There is no foundation whatsoever laid. If we have the particular flight records of the week involved, why, that of course could be received in evidence. But this is a hearsay document, it deals with proposed schedules, and there is no foundation at all that would allow this witness, despite his years of service with airlines, to read from a booklet and tell us what the schedules were in 1936. There would be little provative value, but the main objection would be that is based on hearsay, without any proper foundation. Now, a witness may refresh his memory by use of a document for direct testimony only in certain instances, particularly if a memorandum is prepared by himself or under his direction, and constitutes his entire recollection. This, I take it, is not one of those instances, and that foundation has not been laid and we hence make the objection.

The Court: Well, time tables and the like are taken prima [6279] facie, as I recall the law, until some rebuttal testimony is shown, or some negative testimony is shown. I assume that this is just an attempt to lay the foundation for the prima facie showing, is that right?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor, and I simply want the witness to refresh his recollection by reference to that airline schedule and tell us from his long experience, if he can, what the schedule between San Francisco and New York was in June of 1936.

The Court: Very well.

A. I can, sir, tell you what the schedules were on those days. This is a publication that has been in use for a great many years, and as I mentioned, has been the book from which we quote schedules to anyone inquiring. There were three daily schedules in each direction in this month. Do you want me to give you the departure hours and arrival hours?

Q. If you would.

A. First schedule of the day left San Francisco at 1:00 p.m. and arrived in New York at 8:45 the following morning. The second one left San Francisco at 6:45 p.m., arrived in New York at 2:30 the following afternoon. There was a third one, which left San Francisco at 11:00 p.m. and arrived at New York at 7:15 the following evening. There were three schedules also returning. Do you want those?

Q. Would you give us the return schedules, too, please? [6280]

A. The first one left New York at 8:30 in the morning and arrived back in San Francisco at 1:26 a.m. the following morning. A second one left New York at 4:30, arrived at San Francisco at 9:16 a.m. the next morning.

(Testimony of Lawrence C. Armond.)

Mr. Paisley: 4:30 what? a.m. or p.m.?

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): A.m. or p.m.?

A. Left New York at 4:30 p.m., arrived at San Francisco at 9:16 the following morning. The third one left New York at 11:00 p.m., arrived at San Francisco at 4:11 p.m.

Q. Can you tell us, Mr. Armond, from your experience with the airlines whether or not at that time schedules were pretty well maintained?

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me. Now, your Honor, that obviously calls for speculation.

The Court: Yes, it does. You might, if you have any records available, determine whether or not there were any conditions of an unusual nature during that period of time or the like.

Mr. MacInnis: If there are any flight records, we would be very glad to receive them.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): To your knowledge, are there any flight records available as of that time, Mr. Armond?

A. Not to my knowledge. However, that is not a record that I have had much experience with. I know of them, but you would want other men to produce those, I am sure. [6281]

Q. Were you with the air lines in 1936?

A. I was.

Q. To what air line were you then attached?

A. The United Air Lines.

Mr. Donohue: I submit, if your Honor please, from his own experience with the air line in 1936 he is qualified, if he recalls or can tell us whether or not at that time schedules were maintained or were not maintained.

Mr. MacInnis: Of course, your Honor, that would hardly be a subject for expert testimony in the first place, and in the second place, we have not been given the particular job which this witness had at that time, whether he supervised the flight schedules, the departures, the arrivals, and so forth.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): What was your occupation at that time with United, Mr. Armond?

A. Basically the same as it is now. My present title is Staff Superintendent, Telephone Sales, and the group I supervise today is charged with the responsibility of providing accurate information on future schedules and the delivery of those schedules, as we call it, on a day-to-day basis, handling inquiries as to when flights are going to arrive.

Q. That was essentially your occupation or your assignment in 1936? A. That is correct.

Mr. Donohue: I submit, if your Honor please, the man is [6282] qualified. May I withdraw that and ask another question?

Q. Did you personally handle flights of the Transcontinental Lines in 1936?

A. No, my travel in 1936 was coastwise.

Q. Then I will ask you this question. Don't answer until the Court has had an opportunity to rule.

(Testimony of Lawrence C. Armond.)
From your experience with the air lines in 1936 are you able to tell us whether or not the transcontinental schedules maintained, or to what degree of accuracy with respect to their scheduled operations did they maintain that schedule?

Mr. MacInnis: The same objection, your Honor.

The Court: You may answer as a general proposition.

A. It could be nothing else but general. I do recall the advertising claim, which I believe to be true, on the part of most air lines then that they were completing better than 95 per cent of their schedules. However, that does not imply completion on time. That is completing at some time. I would be only guessing, and one which I do not frankly feel too well qualified to say, as to what per cent were on time. That is as close as I can come.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. MacInnis:

Q. Mr. Armond, who first contacted you in this case? A. A Mr. Kesler.

Q. How long ago was that?

A. I would guess a month or a little more. [6283]

Q. Was he alone when he first saw you or did he have someone else with him?

A. He was alone, as far as I recall.

Q. Did you see him once or more than once?

A. I believe I have seen him twice, today being the second time.

(Testimony of Lawrence C. Armond.)

Q. Were you served with some subpoena?

A. I was.

Q. Requiring you to attend here today?

A. That is correct.

Q. When you were first approached by this Mr. Kesler did he ask you to inquire into all available records to see if you could give some fairly specific information on flight schedules in 1936 in the month of June?

A. He asked what records were available.

Q. Is the book that you brought with you today about the only record that is available?

A. This?

Q. Yes. A. I didn't bring this, sir.

Q. I understood you to——

A. No, there are many copies of this in existence, I presume. I know another one is in our library in Chicago.

Q. Is that document the only record that was available?

A. You are inquiring now about locally? [6284]

Q. I was speaking only of transcontinental flights from San Francisco to New York and return.

A. United Air Lines had no records here that I was able to locate of the flights of that year. Does that answer your question?

Q. Yes. Before coming here had you consulted the record before you, that is, the booklet to which you refer? A. Yes.

Q. Where did you do that?

(Testimony of Lawrence C. Armond.)

A. In a room down the hall here.

Q. You mean you came here and sometime before you took the witness stand some person connected with the prosecution asked you to look over that book? A. Rather naturally, yes, sir.

Q. Hadn't you seen it before you came here?

A. This book? Oh, surely.

Q. I don't mean the precise copy.

A. I have seen hundreds of these; work with them every day.

Q. Had you made any independent investigation as to what that book showed as to transcontinental flights in June, 1936?

A. No, sir, I have not, but my memory is pretty—I mean, when you have worked in a business that long you remember those things as they developed pretty well. These schedules are correct.

Q. So far as the schedules themselves were concerned. [6285] A. That is correct.

Q. In other words, there would be bound to be certain variations in schedule depending on many factors; isn't that true?

A. Weather, mechanical delays, and what not.

Q. Yes. A. Certainly.

Q. In other words, even today, fourteen years later, air line schedules are not perfect, are they?

A. I am afraid you are right, sir.

Q. Would you say, Mr. Armond, that air line schedules have improved over the last fourteen years? A. Definitely.

(Testimony of Lawrence C. Armond.)

Q. In other words, the schedules that we meet now, and which we find when we engage in air travel, are infinitely better than they were in 1936, isn't that true?

A. The schedules are faster, definitely.

Q. And there are less delays today, are there not?

A. In the last year that is true.

Q. Where did airplanes land in New York in June of 1936?

A. This book refreshes my memory on that. Newark Airport was the only one used by commercial planes in that year.

Q. From Newark, which is in New Jersey, one would have to traverse or go under the Hudson River to get into New York?

A. Yes, they use the Pulaski Skyway and the Holland Tunnel, that is correct. [6286]

Q. Was the Holland Tunnel finished in 1936?

A. Yes.

Q. And how long would it take a person from the Newark, New Jersey, airport to get into metropolitan New York? I shouldn't say metropolitan New York; I will say downtown Manhattan.

A. At the time the accepted quoted time for that transaction is an hour. Actually it is a little bit less, but for rough purposes that would take him in to his actual destination as a rule.

Q. In other words, the limousine which I suppose was used in 1936 was marked as taking an hour, although you say it could make it in less, from the Newark, New Jersey, airport to some point in midtown Manhattan, is that correct?

(Testimony of Lawrence C. Armond.)

A. That is right. [6287]

Q. There would be some necessary delay, in any event, between the landing of any plane and the start of the limousine from the airport?

A. That hour generally includes the time for delivery of the baggage at the landing. An hour should take you to your destination.

Q. According to all the information in your possession, there are no accurate records possessed by United Airlines concerning actual flight, departures and arrivals, at that time?

A. To the best of my knowledge, there are none here. I do not know of any other upon search at any point.

Q. And when you give us these various periods of time, the departure from San Francisco and arrival time in New York, for example, do you take into consideration the three hour differential in time?

A. Yes. I should have mentioned that the schedules that I read from this guide use Pacific Standard Time in San Francisco and Eastern Standard Time in New York, which makes your transit about 17 hours eastbound, about 19 hours westbound.

Q. In other words, actual flying time, if the schedule was perfect, would be 17 hours in the air going east and 19 hours in the air coming west?

A. Approximately.

Q. You would answer that the time spent in travel, and you would answer that any necessary or unforeseen delays? [6288]

(Testimony of Lawrence C. Armond.)

A. You would add to that if you wanted to establish the total amount of time required, yes, sir.

Q. The least total time which you could figure if the schedule were perfect from San Francisco to New York would be 17 hours in the air plus whatever time a person consumed going to and from airports, and having in mind in New York the landing field was at Newark, New Jersey?

A. That is correct.

Q. And coming west there would be two hours added to that, making it 19 hours, plus the travel time——

A. Due to prevailing westerly winds, that is true.

Mr. MacInnis: That is all.

Mr. Donohue: No further questions. Thank you, sir.

I would like to have this marked only for identification, if your Honor please.

The Court: It may be marked for identification only.

(The Airline schedule referred to was thereupon marked United States Exhibit No. 39 for identification.)

Mr. Donohue: We have no further witness available at the moment, if your Honor please, and at this time I respectfully ask your Honor to give us an adjournment until Monday morning, when we shall be able to proceed without further delay.

Mr. MacInnis: Of course, that matter again is entirely within your Honor's discretion. We would prefer to go ahead, but only for the purpose of going ahead. We have no other reason [6289] if your Honor feels inclined to grant the request, of course our objection would not be one based upon any rule of law. We would like to go ahead but it is within your Honor's discretion.

The Court: Friday afternoon Mr. Mitchell scheduled several criminal cases.

The Clerk: If I may for the sake of the record say, your Honor, there is a very important habeas corpus matter concerning an inmate of Alcatraz that I should like to put on your Honor's calendar for tomorrow morning.

The Court: Mr. Karesh and Mr. Zirpoli

The Clerk: Yes, your Honor, and the [illegible] e some four other cases that I think might take the day.

The Court: Under the circumstances the request is granted, and we will adjourn this case then until Monday, tomorrow being Friday, Monday at 10:00 o'clock. Accordingly, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, this case and the Court in this matter will stand adjourned until next Monday, February 27th, at 10:00 o'clock. There will be no court tomorrow, Friday; next Monday at 10:00 o'clock and I again admonish you not to discuss the case under any conditions nor to form or express an opinion on the matter until it is finally submitted to you, and not to suffer any person to converse with you on any subject of the case.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to Monday, February 27, 1950, at 10:00 o'clock a.m.) [6290]

Monday, February 27, 1950—10:00 A.M.

The Clerk: United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, your honor?

The Court: Yes, sir.

Mr. Donohue: Would you call Mr. Mervyn Rathborne.

MERVYN RATHBORNE

called for the government in rebuttal; sworn.

The Clerk: Will you state your full name.

The Witness: My name is Mervyn Rathborne.

Direct Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Rathborne?

A. I live in Half Moon Bay, off Kelly Street.

Q. How long have you lived there?

A. At that particular address I have lived there about approximately three years.

Q. Are you a married man, Mr. Rathborne?

A. Yes, sir, I am.

Q. Of what does your family consist?

A. My wife and two children.

Q. Where were you born, Mr. Rathborne?

A. I was born in Santa Monica, California.

Q. And when? [6291]

A. June 3, 1905.

Q. Will you briefly tell us the extent of your formal education or schooling.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Well, I went to the various public and private schools in Southern California, Los Angeles, and later took a course in radio, and then went to sea for a while and alternated between going to sea and going back to school, and I completed high school and some college work.

Q. At any time did you do any study and preparation for the teaching profession?

A. I did.

Q. What was that study and to what extent did you qualify?

A. I took some special courses in connection with getting a state vocational teacher's credential, and I think it was in 1930 or 1931 I completed the work satisfactorily and obtained a California State vocational teacher's credential.

Q. Did you exercise the privilege granted by that certificate? A. I did.

Q. In what manner, Mr. Rathborne?

A. Well, I taught courses in electrical work and radio work and theory in two of the public schools in Southern California.

Q. How long did that continue?

A. For two years.

Q. Did there come a time when you came to San Francisco. A. I did. [6292]

Q. Approximately when?

A. My recollection is it was in the spring of 1934.

Q. In what occupation were you then engaged?

A. Shortly after I arrived in San Francisco I was employed by the Mackay Radio and Telegraph Company as a radio engineer in their station down near Half Moon Bay, about seven miles south of Half Moon Bay.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. How long did you work for the Mackay Radio Corporation?

A. A few months; I believe four or five months. I am not certain of that.

Q. What were the circumstances under which you left that occupation?

A. Well, at that time the union activity was being carried on among the employees of that station, and I was quite active in that work, and I was given notice that my employment was terminated. The notice given me was it was a staff reduction. My opinion and the opinion of the other fellows who worked was because I had been active in union organizing.

Q. Were you then a member of a union, Mr. Rathborne? A. I was.

Q. Of what union were you then a member?

A. An organization known as the American Radio Telegraphists' Association.

Q. When you left your employment with Mackay, what occupation did you then follow?

A. At that time when I worked with Mackay the 1934 maritime [6293] strike was going on, and shortly after I left Mackay I shipped out as radio officer on the President Adams, I think it was, on a trip around the world that took a little over three months.

Q. And when you returned were you still in the calendar year of 1934, as you recall it?

A. My recollection is it was late in 1934 when I returned. I believe it was November.

Q. That was about the time you got married, wasn't it, Mr. Rathborne?

A. I got married on December 1, 1934.

Q. Then what was your next occupation?

A. I came ashore here in San Francisco and went to work on a volunteer basis in the union that I had been a member of, the ARTA, and completed that activity of trying to organize radio men on the ships particularly and also in the station to shore for some time.

Q. Did there come a time when you became a full-time employee of the American Radio Telegraphists' Association? A. Yes, there did.

Q. When, Mr. Rathborne?

A. Sometime in 1935, I believe in the early part of 1935. The then secretary, Mr. Pyle, was elected to national office in the organization and I was named as acting secretary of that organization, Local 3, here in San Francisco.

Q. Did you later become full-time secretary rather than acting [6294] secretary?

A. At the next election I was a candidate and was elected to the regular secretary job.

Q. Was that at the 1935 convention of your union?

A. No, the election took place by referendum vote of the membership, and I believe there was an election in 1935; at least I recall I was elected by the membership.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. In that same year did you assume any other position with any other organization, Mr. Rathborne, 1935?

A. Yes. That year the Maritime Federation of the Pacific was founded and there were district councils, local councils of that organization set up in various ports along the Pacific Coast, and one was set up in San Francisco. At that time I was designated as secretary-treasurer of this council in San Francisco, the Martitime Federation.

Q. Was that District Council No. 2 of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific, do you recall?

A. I believe the full name was the San Francisco District Council No. 2, Maritime Federation of the Pacific.

Q. And at the time when you were elected secretary-treasurer who was the president of San Francisco District Council No. 2?

A. At the same time I was elected secretary-treasurer, Mr. Bridges was elected president or chairman of the Council. [6295]

Q. And in what year was that, Mr. Rathborne?

A. It was in 1935.

Q. Had you met Mr. Bridges prior to the time of your dual election to these two positions with the District Council No. 2?

A. Yes, I did.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Under what circumstances had you met Mr. Bridges before, Mr. Rathborne?

A. My recollection is that after I returned from this trip around the world, and I was working in the union, I went out to lunch one day with Mr. Pyle down to a restaurant down on lower Market Street near the Embarcadero. I think it was the Cooperative Restaurant. I am not certain. Anyway, it was on the south side of Market Street a few doors from the Embarcadero. And while we went into the restaurant Mr. Bridges was sitting there having lunch, and Mr. Pyle introduced me to him.

Q. Now, you continued, I take it, then, as secretary-treasurer of the San Francisco Council or District No. 2 of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific, and at the same time with the secretary of Local 3 of the ARTA? A. That's right.

Q. And did you continue in those two occupations during the period of the 1936-1937 strike?

A. Not during the entire period, no. I left San Francisco for New York early in 1936.

Q. Early in '36? [6296]

A. Early in 1937, I believe. That's right, '37.

Q. When is your best recollection as to the time when the '36 strike began?

A. My recollection is that it began either late October or early November and continued until about February.

Q. And was the strike still in progress at the time when you left San Francisco for New York?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. It was.

Q. Now, during the period of the strike did you occupy any position with respect to the strike?

A. Yes, the District Council of the Federation, District Council No. 2, became the joint strike committee for the San Francisco area by action of the unions. And the officers of the Council became officers of the strike committee.

Q. And then I take it that during the '36-'37 strike, at least while you were in San Francisco, that Mr. Bridges was the president of the joint strike committee for San Francisco and you were the secretary of that committee?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, what is your best recollection as to the time when you left San Francisco?

A. My recollection is it was early in '37, I believe January.

Q. And will you tell us the circumstances under which you left San Francisco and where you went?

A. Well, in 1936 the union to which I belonged, the ARTA, held [6297] national elections and my name was on the ballot for president of the organization, and I was elected president, and I was supposed to have taken office late in '36; but because of the strike here on the West Coast, the retiring president, Mr. Haddock, consented to remain in office until the strike was over and until I could leave to go to New York and take the job there.

Q. Then you did go to New York early in '37 as president of the American Radio Telegraphers Association?

A. That's right. As president-elect. I mean, I actually didn't take office until I——

Q. Reached New York?

A. Reached New York.

Q. Now, did there come a time when the American Radio Telegraphers Association changed its name? Did it become any other organization?

A. Yes, it changed its name at a national convention held in New York, I believe in '38. I am not certain as to the date.

Q. And what organization did it then become?

A. Changed its name to the American Communications Association, or known as the ACA.

Q. And did you continue as president of the organization under its new name? A. I did.

Q. Did there come a time, Mr. Rathborne, when the ARTA or its [6298] successor, the American Communications Association, became affiliated with the CIO? A. Yes.

Q. When was that, Mr. Rathborne?

A. Well, it was shortly after I got to New York, because I recall one of the first things that I did was talk to Mr. Haddock about the need for affiliation. Our organization was non-affiliated at the time, although we had entered into an understanding with the Commercial Telegraphers Union of the A. F. of L. to affiliate with them. But the Commercial Telegraphers Union raised certain demands or certain additional requirements for our affiliation, and it appeared that affiliation was not possible. Therefore Mr. Haddock and I talked it over and we made arrangements to talk to John L. Lewis, who was then chairman of the newly formed Committee for Industrial Organizations. We went down to Washington early in '37 and talked to Mr. Lewis about it, and after going through certain motions within the organization to get approval to apply for affiliation, we applied and our affiliation to the CIO was accepted. I believe it was April or May of 1937.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. That wasn't too long after you went to New York as president-elect of the ARTA, was it?

A. It was a few months.

Q. Does the American Communications Association still exist? A. Yes. [6299]

Q. Same organization, as an organization?

A. It does.

Q. And is it still affiliated with the CIO?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. As president of the ARTA and subsequently of the ACA, and subsequent to its affiliation with the CIO, did you then occupy any position with the CIO?

A. Yes, I occupied a couple of positions.

Q. What were they, Mr. Rathborne?

A. Well, the CIO, when it was formally organized at its first constitutional convention, set up an executive board, a national executive board, consisting of the officers of the CIO—that is, the president and the secretary-treasurer and I believe the vice president, plus one representative from each affiliated organization such as the Steel Workers and the Auto Workers and the Longshoremen, and so on. And at a convention of my union, I was designated to represent my union on an executive board ~~of~~ the national CIO, and I served in that capacity from the time the executive board was set up until I left the East. And in addition to that,—

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. That was during what years, Mr. Rathborne?

A. Well, it was from the first convention at Pittsburgh, when the constitution was adopted, up until the end of 1940.

Q. How many CIO conventions do you recall having attended, national conventions, at which time you were then a member of [6300] the executive board of the CIO? A. Two or three.

Q. Do you know, Mr. Rathborne, whether or not at the time you were a member of the executive board of the national CIO, that Mr. Bridges was also a member of the executive board of the CIO?

A. Yes, after his union became affiliated, I believe he was designated by his organization to serve on the national CIO executive board.

Q. Do you recall having seen Mr. Bridges and talked with him at any of the conventions you may have attended between '38 and '40 at which time you were both members of the executive board of the CIO? A. Yes, I do.

Q. Now, there came a time, Mr. Rathborne, when you left New York and returned to California? A. That's right.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. When was that, Mr. Rathborne?

A. That was late in 1940, right after the 1940 CIO convention in Atlantic City.

Q. Did you attend that convention in Atlantic City? A. I did.

Q. And you returned thereafter, I take it, to California? A. Yes, I did.

Q. What were the circumstances or the reasons for your leaving the presidency of your union in New York and returning to [6301] California?

A. Well, because of the pressure of work and so on and so forth, I became rather ill and I was unable to carry on my duties as president of the ACA in the manner in which I thought they should be carried on. And I also had medical advice that I had to slow down and take it easy, and take a long rest. And in light of that situation, I tendered my resignation to the executive board of my union and came back to California.

Q. Now, when, to your best recollection, was it that you returned to California?

A. At the end of 1940.

Q. And where did you go to live when you returned to California?

A. I went down to live in the Coast side of San Mateo County for a while. We lived in Half Moon Bay and then we later on moved to a place called Moss Beach, which is about five or six miles north of there.

Q. And how long did you continue on your return unemployed?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. It was a matter of, I believe, three or four months; I am not certain.

Q. Then what employment did you take?

A. An opportunity was offered me to become the secretary-treasurer of the San Francisco CIO Council and I became a delegate to that Council and was elected to that job and started working [6302] at it.

Q. When you say an opportunity came to you to become secretary-treasurer of the San Francisco CIO Council, can you recall in what form or who notified you or who advised you as to that possibility?

A. Well, when I returned from the East, my intention was to either go back to sea as a radio operator or to become a commercial fisherman at Half Moon Bay. I had no intention of coming back into the labor movement because of the problems I had had with my health and it was too strenuous, and medical advice had been given to me. I was, however, subsequently, during the period I was in Half Moon Bay contacted by a number of people who came down to see me and asked me if I would be interested in taking that job, if I would be willing to take it, and in fact, suggesting rather strongly that I had better take it.

Q. And what did you do in order to qualify yourself for taking that position, Mr. Rathborne?

A. Well, I had during the time I was in New York transferred my membership from Local 3 of the ARTA, which is the Marine Radio Operators

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

local to Local 9; the reason being that my license as a radio operator had expired, and eligibility for membership in Local 3, one of the requirements was to have such a license. So I transferred to Local 9, and when I came back here after the request was made that I run for the secretary-treasurer of the San Francisco CIO Council, I attended a meeting of my local at which they elected me as a delegate to the Council and I believe it was the first night I attended the Council I was also as a delegate elected as secretary-treasurer. [6303]

Q. Now, how long did you continue as secretary-treasurer of the San Francisco CIO Council?

A. My recollection is about two years, sometime, I believe, in 1942.

Q. Do you recall who was president of the San Francisco CIO Council at the time when you were secretary-treasurer?

A. During part of the time—I am not sure whether it was all the time, but at least during part of the time George Wilson was the president.

Q. What was your next occupation after you left the position as secretary-treasurer of the San Francisco CIO Council?

A. The next occupation I had was as secretary-treasurer of the California CIO Council.

Q. Will you tell us how you became secretary-treasurer of the California CIO Council?

A. Well, it is a rather involved story. Mr. Goldblatt, Lou Goldblatt, at that time was the secretary-treasurer of the Council. His international organization, the ILWU, wanted Mr. Goldblatt to work for them full time, to relinquish his job as the secretary-treasurer of the California CIO Council, and Mr. Goldblatt discussed it with me and a number of other people discussed it with me, and finally it was decided that I should take the job and replace Mr. Goldblatt in that position.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. When, as you now recall it, was it that you first took over [6304] your duties as secretary-treasurer of the California CIO Council?

A. My recollection on that point is it was sometime early in '42.

Q. And I take it the California CIO Council encompassed the entire State of California?

A. Yes, that was the body established by the national CIO to coordinate the activities of the CIO on a statewide basis, in California and in the other states in which the council was set up, to carry out the CIO policy, and to forward the objectives of the national CIO.

Q. Over how long a period following 1942 was it that you continued as secretary-treasurer of the California CIO Council?

A. Until the later part of 1947.

Q. And what were the circumstances under which you left the California CIO Council?

A. The circumstances were that I was not a delegate to the last convention, was not eligible for election to office, and was not interested in being elected to office in the organization.

Q. You did not stand for reelection in the convention of 1946? A. In 1946 I did.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. But not 1947? A. No, I did not.

Q. Since you have left the position as secretary-treasurer of the California CIO Council in 1947 what has been your occupation? [6305]

A. Well, right after leaving the Council I went to radio school here in San Francisco, took a refresher course, and got my radio officer's license back, and early in 1948 I shipped out as a radio officer on the President Madison and was employed in that capacity except during the period of the '48 strike, until May of 1949.

Q. Mr. Rathborne, during the time that you were in New York and as national president of the American Communications Association were you appointed to any position by the government of the United States?

A. Yes, during the time in the early years of the CIO John L. Lewis and the CIO made available to our union a considerable sum of money to pay for organizers to organize other branches of the communications industry, particularly the telegraph, Postal Telegraph and Western Union, and other branches like what is known as point-to-point broadcast, and so on; and in connection with this work our organization became quite active in helping to organize telegraph messengers, and that was the days before the wages and hours law, and those boys were getting in those days—I believe the average take-home pay nationally was about $6 a week—and we were trying to correct that situation, and in connection with that work with the telegraph messengers I came into contact with a number of youth organizations and with the program of the NYA, National Youth Administration, and we had a number of quite successful strikes [6306] among the telegraph messengers, and we were also able to lobby in Washington to have the telegraph messengers included under the 25-cent-an-hour minimum in the Wages and Hours bill, which was in the process of being passed by Congress. There were several amendments to leave them out, and through aid from other organizations and support from the Department of Labor, the program of our union plus the groups it was working with succeeded and we had them included in the 25-cent minimum wage bracket.

As a result of this work I came in contact with the officials of the National Youth Administration and with Mrs. Roosevelt, and some time after these events that I have related I received a letter from the President asking me if I would serve on the National Youth—on the National Advisory Board for the National Youth Administration.

Q. And you did so serve for some period of time? A. I did, yes.

Q. During the period of time when you were here in California as secretary-treasurer of the California CIO Council were you appointed by the government to any Federal board here in California?

A. During the war I served as a member of the—I believe they call it the District—District Labor-Management Committee of the War Manpower Commission. I also served as an alternate member of the larger commission, the Regional Labor-Management [6307] Committee of the War Manpower Commission.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Were you ever the labor panel member of the War Labor Board? A. Yes, I was.

Q. Sometime during the year 1945 and while you were still occupying the position of secretary-treasurer of the California CIO Council, did you make a trip into the Pacific? A. Yes, I did.

Q. What were the circumstances under which that trip was made and by whose appointment?

A. At that time the war in Europe was on its last lap. Everybody was pretty sure it would be won and the military authorities in conversations we had had with them on various occasions had expressed considerable fear that when the war in Europe was won there would be a reaction in this country that the war in the Pacific is just a minor affair and there might be a tremendous letdown, particularly in production, and also in public interest. And conversations of that time went on for a period of time, and finally, after discussing these problems, it was determined that one of the ways of counteracting the situation would be to send a group of Pacific Coast labor representatives out to the Pacific to the battle areas to see how tough the going was out there, how the things that were being produced in this country were being used by the fighting forces, what the morale of the fighting forces was like, and also to let the fellows out there know that labor and the people generally [6308] in the states were behind them, because apparently there were some morale problems involved, and also for this group to report back to various organizations and groups of their experiences and what they saw, and in that way give a closer contact between the fellows who were actually doing the fighting and the dying and the fellows who were—officials of the labor organizations whose members were doing the producing of the materials of war.

Q. How large was that group, Mr. Rathborne?

A. That group was ten.

Q. And you served as a member of that group?

A. That is right.

Q. On your return what did you do about what you had seen or heard?

A. Well, the invitation that was extended to us to go on the trip was extended jointly by the Secretary of the Army and the Secretary of the Navy, and as a part of that invitation we had the responsibility to report on what we had seen, and all of us made a joint report, which was quite widely publicized, and in addition each one of us wrote stories for various labor publications particularly, and we were interviewed by the newspapers and gave reports on what we had observed.

Q. Did you make any report to the California Assembly?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Yes. Shortly after we returned the Assembly was in session in Sacramento, the State Legislature, and a resolution was [6309] adopted requesting members who had made this tour to come up and make a report to the State Assembly, and the naval officer who accompanied us requested Mr.—he was a fellow in the AFL Building Trades—I can't remember his name—anyway, one of the AFL representatives and myself to come up to Sacramento and report to the State Assembly, which we did.

Q. Mr. Rathborne, did there come a time in your experience when you made an application or made application to join the Communist Party?

A. Yes.

Q. When and under what circumstances?

A. Well, that occurred early in 1935. I was, as I related, active in the work of my union——

Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute. I object. The question has been answered, your Honor.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Donohue: I asked him to explain the circumstances, if your Honor please.

Mr. Hallinan: We will object to the circumstances as not binding on the defendants. The fact that he joined is sufficient.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): What did you do, Mr. Rathborne, in order to become a member of the Communist Party?

A. Well, one of the things I did was to sign the application.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Do you know to whom you delivered that application after you [6310] signed it?

A. The application was given to me by a Mr. Pyle, Lee Pyle. I signed it and gave it back to him.

Q. Did there come subsequently a time—and this was in what year? A. '35.

Q. Did there come subsequently a time when you received a membership book or card?

A. Yes, shortly after I joined I started attending what was known as new members' classes, and during that period, sometime during that period, I was given a membership book, I believe.

Q. At the time you made application and received a membership card in the Communist Party, did you make application in your own name or in some other name?

A. I made application in another name.

Q. What was that name, Mr. Rathborne?

A. James Jennings.

Q. Why did you make application in the name other than your own?

Mr. Hallinan: I object to that as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, if the court please.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Donhue: You may answer, Mr. Rathborne.

A. There were a number of reasons for that. First, I was [6311] advised by a fellow by the name of Elmer Hanoff, who was——

Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute. I object to this, your Honor, as calling for hearsay. It is out of the defendants' presence, not binding on them.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Donohue: I assume, if your Honor please, the purpose of this testimony is not to bind the defendants but is merely to qualify the witness as a member of the Communist Party familiar with its——

The Court: We had a ruling heretofore on the matter, and I ruled that the evidence along this line was admissible, not as binding upon the defendants at bar, but for the purposes as announced by Mr. Donohue. We had a stipulation also on the subject.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

The Court: Do you wish to engage in the same stipulation?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, I will do that. We will have the stipulation that the objections are made that this is hearsay, calling for the opinion and conclusion of the witness, res inter alios acta, and we won't have to repeat it to each question.

The Court: I will make the same order on the same stipulation.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Will you state now the reasons for your seeking membership or applying for membership in the Communist Party under a name other than your own? [6312]

Mr. Hallinan: If the Court please, there is another objection to this matter, and while I assume that the preceding matters were all preliminary, that is, leading up to background, and so forth, isn't this the rule, that rebuttal testimony must be directed to new or different kind of testimony introduced in the defense, and that the prosecution cannot simply reopen its case and start putting in new evidence to the same effect? Now, the only new evidence that has been introduced by the defendants related to reputation evidence and evidence establishing that Harry Bridges was in Stockton or in San Francisco at the time he was testified by Johnson and Crouch to have been in New York, and that is the only testimony to which rebuttal can be properly directed. They have no right to simply hold witnesses out and then reopen their case and start the entire case all over again, which seems to be what this gentleman is leading up to.

Mr. Donohue: I have in mind, if your Honor pleases, thus far only qualifying the witness. I have asked him no questions concerning his testimony. I do, however, expect to ask the witness concerning certain incidents about which the defendants upon their examination denied as having taken place. I suggest to your Honor that I certainly am well within the rule of rebuttal testimony to inquire of this witness with respect to those matters. I think also the rule undoubtedly is that your [6313] Honor has sufficient discretion, which he may exercise at the request of Mr. Hallinan, to permit this witness to testify as to any pertinent matters.

The Court: I will meet the objections as I come to them, as announced by Mr. Hallinan, but specifically this last question has to do with his familiarity with an organization known as the Communist Party.

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: I will allow that. It is preliminary. With respect to the other matters, I will rule on them when the time arrives.

Mr. Hallinan: I might suggest in passing questions cannot be asked of the defendant on cross-examination for the purpose of them refuting them on rebuttal. [6314]

Q. Mr. Rathborne, pursuant to His Honor's ruling, would you now state to us the reasons for your applying for membership in the Communist Party in a name other than your own?

A. Well, I was advised by the man whom I had been brought into contact with, who I was told by Mr. Pyle was a representative of the Communist Party, Mr. Hanoff, that I should sign up under an assumed name. This was before I signed the membership application. And I was advised, told by Mr. Hanoff, that this was done for a number of reasons: first, for security reasons in so far as the records of the Communist Party were concerned; second, that it was the common practice for those members of the Communist Party who were active members of the trade unions or officers, to have an assumed name because they didn't want to be revealed as open Communists in the union, because their work as Communists could be most effective if carried on in the way where the membership of the union did not know that they were Communist Party members. And I was advised by Mr. Hanoff that that was the policy and procedure of the Communist Party at that time.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Is the Mr. Hanoff you just referred to the same Mr. Hanoff who conducted the first Communist Party school to which you made reference a few minutes ago, as having attended?

A. Well, it wasn't——

Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. Object to that as leading and suggestive and assuming something not in evidence, if the [6315] Court please.

Mr. Donohue: He testified, Mr. Hallinan, a few moments ago that shortly after he made his application, he attended a new beginners' class, and I understood him to say that Mr. Hanoff was the teacher.

Mr. Hallinan: I didn't remember any such testimony.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Did you so state, Mr. Rathborne?

A. My recollection is that I stated that shortly after I signed the membership aplication I was assigned to a new members' class. I believe that is what I—that is my recollection of what I said.

Q. Who conducted that class, Mr. Rathborne?

A. Well, the class was conducted at one time by Mr. Hanoff, another time by a fellow by the name of Freeman.

Q. And what generally was the nature of the instruction of this class?

Mr. Hallinan: We renew the objection, if the Court please; this is new matter, it is hearsay, not binding on the defendant. He is reopening the entire case again with this same sort of discussion.

The Court: Overruled.

A. I didn't——

Q. What was the general nature of the instruction that you were given at this class?

A. The instructions were generally along the lines of indoctrinating [6316] new members in the basic theory of Communism—it is known as Marxist Leninism and Stalinism, I believe is the general name for it; and indoctrinating them in the basic teachings of Karl Marx, Lenin and Stalin, so that they could be in a position to understand and to carry out the ideological objectives of the organization to which they belonged.

Q. Now, did there come a time after your course of instruction in the Communist Party that you were assigned to any unit of that party?

A. Yes, after attending these classes I was assigned to the unit or branch that existed within my own local union, Local 3 of the ARTA.

Q. And as a member of that unit or branch, did you attend meetings? A. Yes, I did.

Q. How regularly or irregularly?

A. Regular meetings were scheduled for once a week, and then occasionally there were extra meetings, special meetings called.

Q. Now, did there come a time, Mr. Rathborne, when you were assigned to any other unit or to a unit other than the unit within your own local union, the ARTA?

A. Well, yes, there was; the unit within my own local union, like all the other units in similar unions, elected or designated representatives to serve on what was known as a waterfront section committee, and after being in my own unit for some [6317] time, I was designated to be a member of the waterfront committee of the Communist Party here in San Francisco.

Q. And as a delegated member from your union to the waterfront section of the Communist Party, did you attend meetings of that section?

A. I attended a number of meetings of the section committee, yes.

Q. Did you ever hold any position as a member of the waterfront section of the Communist Party, or did you continue only as a member?

A. I never was elected to a particular position, no.

Q. Did you continue as a delegated member of the waterfront section of the Communist Party up until the time of your transfer to New York?

A. Well, after the formation of the District Council of the Maritime Federation, there was a group established known as the fraction of the District Council; that is, the delegates to that District Council were also members of the Communist Party—were set up as a group to meet and to act on the problems that came before the council in these fraction meetings, Communist fraction meetings, and then to put their ideas and recommendations before the council at this meeting.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Can you tell us, Mr. Rathborne, how frequently the fraction of District Council No. 2 of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific would [6318] meet?

A. My recollection is that they usually met a day or two before the council meetings and then from time to time as emergencies arose, there were special meetings to consider emergency problems on the waterfront and so on. However, as I recall it, their meetings were on a regular weekly basis. A few of them were missed. That is, they didn't always meet weekly.

Q. Now, did you continue as a member of the Communist Party fraction of District No. 2 of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific and as a delegated member of the waterfront section of the Communist Party until the time that you left San Francisco for New York?

A. As far as attending meetings of the waterfront section committee, I didn't attend those regularly after the District Council fraction was set up. I used to attend occasional meetings, but not regularly. But I continued as a member of the fraction in the District Council No. 2 until I left for New York.

Q. Now, when you went to New York, Mr. Rathborne, as you have indicated, early in 1934, did you continue in New York as a member of the Communist Party?

A. Well, that was early '37.

Q. I am sorry, 1937.

A. Yes, I was transferred by District 13 out here to a unit in New York that existed within my own union back there, CP unit in [6319] the marine locals.

Q. Now, while in New York, and I take it from your testimony you were there from early '37 until late '40—— A. That's right.

Q. Did you belong to any other section or branch of the Communist Party other than the fraction within your own union?

A. Well, it wasn't a fraction, it was a unit. The unit is a home base. That is the group which a member of the Communist Party is duly assigned to as a member, the one to which he pays his dues. And I continued as a member of that unit. I also became a member of what is known as the national fraction of our organization which consisted of the officers of our union who were also Communist Party members, and later on I became a member of what was known as the national fraction of the CIO, national CIO, which consisted of members of the national CIO executive board who were also Communists.

Mr. Donohue: I wonder if we might take the morning recess at this time.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

The Court: Yes, we will take the morning recess, ladies and gentlemen; the same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions nor to form an opinion thereon until it is finally submitted to you.

(Recess.) [6320]

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Donohue: To intrude for a moment, Mr. Rathborne, I forgot to ask you, did there come a time when you became a member of the CIO maritime committee? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you tell us exactly what that organization was and what your responsibilities were with respect to it?

A. Well, during the entire time our union was negotiating for affiliation with the CIO, and after we became affiliated, a number of us talked to Mr. Brophy who was then the secretary of the Committee for Industrial Organization, and Mr. John L. Lewis, about the problems of the maritime industry and the need for effective national organization, and the job that had to be done on the West Coast in bringing better organization to the various maritime workers. Our union was one of the first, I believe the first, union that had maritime members, sea-going members, to become a CIO affiliate.

Q. You mean the ACA or the ARTA?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. The ARTA, then. And Mr. Lewis conferred with other officials of the maritime unions and the result of these conferences was, the national CIO or Mr. Lewis determined to set up what was known as the CIO maritime committee, the national committee, consisting of representatives of the various maritime waterfront unions who were either in the CIO or about to go in. And [6321] such a committee was organized, and Mr. Brophy, John Brophy, was named the chairman of that committee and I was named as secretary of it. And that committee functioned, I believe, from '37 until I think it is still in existence.

Q. Now, getting back, Mr. Rathborne, to the time when you went to New York and you were assigned or transferred as to your party membership from District 13 to the unit within your union and then subsequently to a waterfront fraction in New York?

A. I did, sir, for a period of time on the waterfront section committee in New York. I attended several of its meetings.

Q. And we have reached the point where you said you were a member of the Communist Party fraction of the CIO executive board?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, did you continue as a member of that unit until you severed your connection with the ACA in 1940?

A. Well, I served part of that in that group, that fraction, until I left the East. When I left the East, I ceased to become a member of the national CIO executive board.

Q. Now, on your return to California, what happened to your Communist Party membership?

A. When I returned to California, I was inactive for a while and later on, after I became secretary of the San Francisco CIO Council, I was assigned to a group, a study group of about nine people which was considered to be a very hush-hush group [6322] because there were about, all of the members of the group were government employees except myself. And I continued to be a member of that group for some time. And then later on, I was sent back to the unit within Local 9 of my own union of the ACA.

Q. Now, during the period when you were a member of the—or as secretary-treasurer of the San Francisco CIO Council, you were a member of this special study group or a Communist Party member within the unit in Local 9?

A. That is my recollection, yes, sir. [6323]

Q. Now, when you became, I think you said, in 1942 secretary-treasurer of the California CIO Council, did you change your Communist Party unit or did you continue as a member of the unit you have described?

A. I continued as a member of the basic unit in Local 9 of my own union.

Q. Did you belong to any other Communist Party unit or organization?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Yes, there was in existence at that time a group known as the top fraction of the State CIO, which consisted of the members of the State CIO Executive Board; the officers were also Communist Party members. In addition to that the members of that committee who lived in Northern California were assigned to a group here in San Francisco which was known as a special committee or God's committee, referred to facetiously by some of the members of the Communist Party who were not members of that group.

Q. You were a member of God's committee, Mr. Rathborne? A. That is right.

Q. To your personal knowledge was every other member who was a member of God's committee also a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute. Now, if the Court please, I object to this as improper rebuttal. This is starting the trial of the case all over again. Counsel asked questions on cross [6324] examination of the defendants for the purpose of producing a witness on rebuttal, and that is improper, and it has often been held so.

The Court: The question itself, Mr. Donohue, I believe requires additional foundation before an answer is permitted by the Court in the light of my prior rulings.

Mr. Donohue: I will withdraw the question, if your Honor please.

'he Court: With respect to the other objection urged by Mr. Hallinan as to the propriety of these witnesses on rebuttal, I will hear you on that if you have any observation.

Mr. Donohue: Yes, if your Honor please. We find ourselves in this position——

Mr. Hallinan: If we are going to argue this matter the jury might be excused for ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. Donohue: I have no objection if your Honor please.

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, we will discuss these legal matters that have arisen this morning.

Do you think it will take fifteen or twenty minutes?

Mr. Hallinan: I do not think so.

The Court: The jury may then retire until they are called in the jury room. The same admonition to you.

(Thereupon the jury retired from the courtroom, and in their absence the following occurred:)

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor pleases, before calling your [6325] Honor's attention to a couple of citations on the legal point involved, I think there is another matter which your Honor should consider in a determination of the legal issue involved: No. 1, the defense has challenged the United States to produce the witness Mervyn Rathborne; No. 2, Mr. Bridges as a witness for himself gratuitously and without solicitation has sought to massacre the character of Mervyn Rathborne; No. 3, with reference to the matter that was just under inquiry, no one ever mentioned the term "God's committee" except Mr. Bridges. Mr. Bridges contributed to the evidence in this trial the fact that there was such a committee as God's Committee, and whether he was intrigued by the fact that a name, or a committee with such a high-sounding name should have been one of which he was a member, he even stated he was a member of that committee. I most respectfully say to your Honor that in the interests of justice this jury, which has not been blind or deaf to the challenge offered to the United States by these defendants, and who have not been unmindful of the fine piece of surgery which Mr. Bridges used to mutilate the character of a witness who at that time was not called, but who is now here present, is a matter which I think your Honor should consider carefully, in addition to the question of law, before coming to a conclusion as to the limit with which this witness may be called to testify.

Now, when I called the witness this morning I had in mind [6326] asking the witness only with respect to matters of which I had inquired of the defendants, particularly the defendant Bridges, and which the defendant Bridges had specifically denied. I have no objection, because while I know Mr. Hallinan will seek if he can to confine to such a limited scope of examination, he will nonetheless feel that the field of cross-examination is wide open for himself, even on matters that we have not examined about on the direct examination of this witness.

On the question of how far this witness in rebuttal may be examined, I would like to call your Honor's attention to the case of Marron v. the United States cited in 8 Fed. Rep. 2d Series, and reading from page 257——

The Court: That is from this circuit, isn't it?

Mr. Donohue: No, I am sorry—yes, your Honor, this is from the Ninth Circuit.

The Court: I remember the case. I know the case.

Mr. Donohue: In which, briefly quoting, the court said:

> "Lathan's testimony was received in rebuttal, and error is predicated thereon. The testimony controverted Gorham's statement that he was unable to secure admission to the flat. It was therefore proper rebuttal. It is also to be said that the order of proof is in the discretion of the trial court, and it is not ordinarily error to receive in rebuttal testimony which ought to have been offered as a part of the case [6327] in chief," and citing as its authority Goldsby v. United States; 160 U. S. 70; Seebach v. United States, 262 Fed. page 885; and U. S. v. Heitler, a District Court case, 274 Fed. 401.

In addition, and from the Ninth Circuit, I would ask your Honor to consider the case of Austin v. United States, decided in this circuit and reported in 4 Fed. Rep. 2d Series, and quoting from page 775, it would seem that the defendants in error reserved testimony for rebuttal—the defendant in there was the United States—that should have been offered as a part of its main case. Thus the government proved as part of its case in chief that the multigraph letters to the bank and the trust envelopes were delivered to the wife of the plaintiff in error by his direction, and that she usually paid the bills by checks, and if the government intended to prove that the indictment letters were signed by the wife, that was the proper time and place to do it. But it is not prejudicial error to admit testimony in rebuttal which should have been offered as a part of the main case unless the party against whom the testimony is admitted is denied the right to controvert or contradict it, and there was no denial of that right in this case.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

In the instant case we have the contradiction or denial by the defendant Bridges even before the witness was called. And so I most respectfully say to your Honor that as a matter of law it would appear that it is within the discretion of your [6328] Honor, and not a matter of error, for your Honor to allow this witness to testify as though he were being brought here as a witness in chief and not a witness on rebuttal.

I am invited, if your Honor please, to call your Honor's attention to one further authority confirming those already cited to your Honor; that is Osborne and another v. the United States, also from this circuit, cited in 17 Fed. Rep., 2d Series, at page 246.

I most respectfully say to your Honor that if ever there was a circumstance wherein the discretion of your Honor might well be exercised as the law permits in allowing the widest latitude in the testimony of a witness, this is such an instance, an instance in which we have been badgered and threatened with respect to the testimony of Mervyn Rathborne, both in the presence of the jury and out of the presence of the jury, a witness who has been referred to in this court as a burglar, a witness who has been referred to as a drunkard, a witness who has been referred to as a gambler, a witness who has been referred to as a thief, a witness who has been referred to as a liar. Now, in answer to that challenge, and with an opportunity in the interests of justice to let the jury determine as between Mervyn Rathborne and Harry Bridges, it does not seemly come from the defense to offer objection.

Mr. Hallinan: While, of course, it is a rule that the matter of proof is within the discretion of the court, it is [6329] always held that proper rebuttal is only to meet new evidence put in by the defense, that is, evidence of a new and a different kind. I think there will be no question of that. Now, these so-called challenges and the discussions about Rathborne's character all emanated from questions put to Mr. Bridges by Mr. Donohue, and not one word was addressed to Mr. Bridges or any other witness on the stand by myself or Mr. MacInnis in that respect. Mr. Donohue took it on himself to question Mr. Bridges about Mr. Rathborne, how he happened to leave the union, what his relations with him were, what discussions he had had, a great number of questions of that kind, and everything in that relation was adduced on cross-examination. That is whole vice of it, and he cannot ask questions on cross-examination simply for the purpose of reopening his case.

What it amounts to is this: that having put on their case, the case having been refuted, then in order to refreshen it, to bring it back into the limelight again, their side of the matter, they ask questions on cross-examination, hold a witness out and then put the witness on. The witness on rebuttal should be confined to rebuttal, not to a reopening of the case. They are not requesting the right to reopen the case; they request the right to use as rebuttal what is not proper rebuttal. In all these cases they have cited, which I assume are trial court decisions——

The Court: No, the Marron case, I presume, is a Court [6330] of Appeals decision. That is a conspiracy case involving Marron, the Assemblyman.

Mr. Hallinan: I suppose when that is done one is always confronted with the situation that on appeal matters that may not be prejudicial are overlooked, and the language that has been cited is,

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

"There is no prejudicial error." That does not mean that it is not error, and that does not mean it is not proper procedure, and, as I say, all the statements about this man's character, his drinking, his stealing funds from the union, his embezzlement of an automobile, were adduced on cross-examination by the prosecutor, and no question whatever was put to the defendant by his own attorneys on the matter.

The Court: I am prepared to rule on the matter, gentlemen. In ~~the~~ light of the trend the evidence has taken, and in the interests of justice, and in the broad discretion which is reposed in the trial court, I will allow both sides complete and full latitude with respect to the examination of this witness. You might call the jury in.

(The jury was recalled to the courtroom and the following proceedings were had in their presence:)

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Rathborne, who other than yourself were members of this committee referred to heretofore as God's committee? [6331]

Mr. Hallinan: If the court please, in view of the ruling you have just made, I suppose it will be unnecessary for us to repeat the objection that all these matters do not relate to the new matters suggested are improper rebuttal, do not constitute rebuttal, and we object to them upon that ground, and may we have the stipulation, to save repetition, that it is unnecessary to repeat that objection to each such question?

Mr. Donohue: I shall be glad to so stipulate.

The Court: The objection is overruled. The stipulation may be recorded in the record.

The Witness: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Donohue: Would you read the question.

(Question read.)

A. I cannot recall the names of all the members, but the ones I can recall included William Schneidermann, George Wilson, Bob Robertson, David Hedley and myself. There were a number of others whose names I don't recall at the moment. [6332]

Q. Now, at the time, Mr. Rathborne, of the existence of this committee, were you at that time the secretary-treasurer of the California CIO Council?

A. I was.

Q. And what position at that time did Mr. Wilson, George Wilson, occupy?

A. My recollection, at that particular time, or during part of that time, he was the secretary of the Bridges Victory Committee, I believe they called it.

Q. What position did Mr. Robertson hold at that time?

A. He was an officer of the International Longshoremen & Warehousemen's Union.

Q. And David Hedley?

A. He was connected with the Political Action

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

department of the state CIO.

Q. And William Schneidermann?

A. He was an official, I belief the chairman—I am not certain—of the Communist Party in California. He was secretary or chairman.

Q. Mr. Schneidermann had no function or position with either the California, the San Francisco or the national CIO, did he?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. You have used the expression a moment ago that you were a member of the top fraction of the state CIO, correct?

A. I believe that was correct. [6333]

Q. Would you explain to the court and jury just what you mean by the words "top fraction"?

A. Well, according to the Communist organization procedure, they had within various groups, such as the state CIO, a committee of the members of that organization—in this case the members of the executive board of that organization—who were also Communist Party members, and they designated that group as a "top fraction," and used to meet and function as such.

Q. Now, shortly ago you stated that you were a member of a fraction of the waterfront.

A. I believe I stated that the San Francisco District Council of the Maritime Federation also had such a group functioning within it.

Q. Would that also be called, or was it called, so-called, a "top fraction"?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. That is ~~my~~ recollection; yes, it was.

Q. Mr. Rathborne, you have stated that you joined the Communist Party some time in 1935 or '34? A. '35.

Q. '35. Over how long a period did you continue as a member of the Communist Party?

A. Until sometime early in 1947, I believe.

Q. Now, what were the circumstances leading to your non-membership in the Communist Party?

A. Well, over a period of time I had a number of differences, [6334] that is, I became more and more to disagree with certain policies and certain actions and things that were espoused and were put forward as the party line, and one particular instance was the organization of a third party, political party. Another one was the line to be carried on following the end of the war within the trade unions. And more and more, during 1946, I indicated differences and opposed certain policies and certain programs that were forwarded or put forward by the Communist Party officials or by the decisions in various meetings, and it finally came, early in 1947, two people came to my office—Mr. Brown, Archie Brown who I believe was then state trade union director, and a lady by the name of Loretta Starvis.

Q. And who was she?

A. She was a member of the state committee—California State Committee of the Communist Party. And Mr. Brown.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. Object to any statements outside the presence of the defendant as hearsay, if the Court please. Here is a conversation——

The Court: I make the same ruling and the same admonition as I have heretofore given, that this evidence is not elicited as binding upon, nor is it presumed or intended to bind either of the defendants or any of them, and for the avowed purpose, I take it, of showing the reasons underlying the severance of this witness from the Communist Party.

Mr. Donohue: Correct, your Honor. [6335]

The Court: That is correct.

Mr. Donohue: For no other purpose.

The Court: I admonish the jury accordingly.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): You may continue.

A. There two came to my office at 150 Golden Gate, and Mr. Brown advised me that a meeting of the state committee of the Communist Party had been held, at which my derelictions and activities had been discussed, and that because I was, had refused to carry out the party line, because I was considered to be politically unreliable and because of my opposition to the policies and programs put forward by the party, that I had been dropped from membership by action of the state committee and that in consideration of the long membership I had had in the party and also the fact that I had occupied a position of considerable importance in the labor movement, in their eyes, they were not making this suspension or dropping, or whatever—I forget the term used—public, but were advising the party members, the comrades in the various meetings throughout the state, what the situation was; that I was no longer considered to be a reliable and trustworthy Communist.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Did you ever attend any Communist Party meeting after this visitation by Archie Brown and the lady whose name you mentioned, Loretta Starvis?

A. Not that I recall. I don't—I am pretty sure I didn't.

Q. Did you pay any dues to your knowledge, after that time, [6336] Mr. Rathborne?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. And since that time have you ever again reassociated yourself in the Communist Party as a member thereof? A. I have not.

Q. Now, going back, Mr. Rathborne, to the year 1936, did you at that time attend a convention of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific which was held in San Pedro, California?

A. Yes, I was a delegate to that convention.

Q. And at that time you were a delegate representing the ARTA?

A. I was either representing the ARTA or the District Council of the Federation. I am not certain. I was representing one of them, anyway.

Q. Do you recall about when it was that the '36 convention was held in San Pedro?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. My memory is that it was during the summer, because I remember it was quite warm?

Q. Do you recall how long you remained there during the period of the convention?

A. Well, certainly several days. I believe it was a week. It might have been longer, but I would say it was between five and ten days. The record of the convention will show how long it was in session.

Q. Now, while you were in attendance at this convention, Mr. Rathborne, do you recall having seen the defendant Harry Bridges [6337] present?

A. Yes, he was there.

Q. Did you attend any meeting while in attendance at this convention other than a regularly scheduled meeting of the delegates to the convention?

A. Oh, I attended quite a few meetings other than regular convention sessions.

Q. You knew Roy Pyle at that time?

A. Yes, I was working very closely with Roy Pyle during that time.

Q. And what was his position in the labor movement at that time?

A. My recollection is that at that particular time he was still secretary of Local 3 of the ARTA.

Q. At that time did you know a man named Pringle? A. Tim Pringle, yes.

Q. And what was his position in the labor movement, if you knew?

A. He was, I am pretty sure at that time he was secretary of the local of the radio operators,

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

ARTA, in Seattle. I know that he held that position, and it is my belief that it was at that time.

Q. Did you know a man by the name of Van Ermen? A. T. J. Van Ermen?

Q. Yes. A. Yes. [6338]

Q. And what was his position in the labor movement, if you know?

A. Well, he was connected either with the radio operators of the District Council, or the Maritime Federation of the CIO; I don't know. There was—the reason I am not sure, at one time Pringle was the secretary of the local in Seattle and at another time Van Ermen was, of our own local, and I am not certain just when the change took place.

Q. Did you know a man named Henry Schmidt at that time? A. Yes.

Q. What position, do you know, did Mr. Schmidt occupy in 1936?

A. Well, he was an official of, I believe the president of the San Francisco Longshoremen, at least he was connected with that organization and he was a delegate to the Maritime Federation convention from the San Francisco longshoremen. That is my recollection.

Q. Did you know a man named Harry Jackson?

A. I am not certain. I knew Harry Jackson; I am not certain whether I knew him at that time or not.

Q. What position did he occupy at the time when you did know him?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. At the time I knew him, he was—I don't know, he was working with a fellow by the name of Rappaport in Seattle, and he was active on the waterfront for the Communist Party. What his position was I am not certain.

Q. Did you know a woman by the name of Hazel Wood? [6339] A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you know a man by the name of Walter Lambert? A. Yes.

Q. What position did Mr. Lambert occupy?

A. Well, Mr. Lambert was in an official capacity known as a—or usually referred to as a—full time functionary of the Communist Party, at one time. I am not certain, again, as to whether it was this particular time, Mr. Lambert was state trade union director for the party. It is my recollection that he was state trade union director in 1935, but again, I am uncertain as to the time.

Q. And you knew Harry Bridges, I take it, at that time? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Now, at some time during the Maritime Federation of the Pacific convention in San Pedro in the summer of 1936, did you attend a meeting at which the persons whose names I have just listed were also present?

A. I attended a meeting—I don't recall whether Mr. Jackson was present at any meeting I attended in San Pedro.

Q. Where, if you can tell us, was it that you recall a meeting with the persons named other than

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Harry Jackson?

A. Well, it was in an apartment or an apartment hotel in Long Beach down near the waterfront, just, oh, a few blocks toward San Pedro along the pike there—I mean, the extension of the pike. [6340]

Q. Do you recall how you were informed that there was going to be or would be such a meeting?

A. My recollection is that I was informed either by Mr. Pyle or by Mr. Lambert that a meeting would be held at this particular place.

Q. I forgot to ask you, Mr. Rathborne, do you know a man named Charles Krolek?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. He is your brother-in-law, is he not?

A. That's right.

Q. And what was his position at that time?

A. He was—again I am not sure at that particular time, but he was connected with the Radio Operators' Union in Portland and either at that time or very shortly after, he was the secretary of that local of the Radio Operators.

Q. Do you recall that he was present at the meeting which you are about to describe?

Mr. Hallinan: Now, just a moment. Your Honor, this is leading and suggestive. Of course, the entire line of questioning has been so; instead of asking him if he were at a meeting and who he remembers being there, he first asks him if he knows these people, stating it so there can't be any question of memory or recollection. Now he says, "Were you at a meeting of all these?" That is highly improper, but now he adds onto that by adding in another name to the question, putting still another [6341] person in there.

Mr. Donohue: Proof of that——

Mr. Hallinan: The whole question, all these questions asked of this witness, are leading and suggestive. He doesn't ask him to give the information about the meeting and then tell who the people were who were there, which is the proper mode, but names out people and says, "Were you at such a meeting?" and then adds another person at the end of it.

Mr. Donohue: Proof of——

Mr. Hallinan: He might as well get up and testify himself, as have a witness up there.

Mr. Donohue: I think the proof to the contrary as to my intention, if Your Honor please, is evidenced by the fact that the witness said one name I mentioned, to his recollection, wasn't there.

Mr. Hallinan: Oh, that is just to make it look a little more veracious; that is a common known trick, nobody falls for that.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): May I ask you this question, Mr. Rathborne: With reference to a meeting which you had in an apartment at Long Beach during the Maritime Federation of the Pacific convention, during the summer of 1936, to which your attention was called either by Roy Pyle or Walter Lambert, who other than yourself do you now recall was present at such a meeting? [6342]

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. My recollection of that meeting is that it was attended by Pyle, Roy Pyle, Krolek, Earl King, Walter Lambert, Hazel Woods and myself. And there were several others present, but I am not—Mr. Bridges was there, and several others that I am not certain as to who they are, at this particular time.

Q. What was the subject of discussion at this meeting, Mr. Rathborne?

A. As I recall it, there were several things discussed. One of the matters under discussion was the coming election of officers in the Martime Federation convention, and there was quite a bit of discussion over the presidency, I believe, and the secretaryship of the organization, as to who should be recommended and supported by the Communist Party forces in the convention. Another matter which was discussed there was the matter of the farmer-labor party resolution because I remember being on the committee that time to consider the Farmer-Labor Party, and subsequently in a—in that convention I made a minority report for the committee in connection with the convention, going on record supporting a Farmer-Labor Party and at this particular meeting in Long Beach, that matter was discussed because I remember asking that it be discussed, be brought up and consideration be given to it in order to try to see what the attitude was on a Farmer-Labor Party.

Mr. Donohue: May we take the noon recess at this time?

The Court: Yes, we will take the noon [6343] recess. Ladies and gentlemen, the same admonition to you. We will resume at 2:00 o'clock this afternoon.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to 2:00 o'clock p.m.) [6343-A]

Afternoon Session—Monday, February 27, 1950

The Clerk: United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, your Honor?

Q. Referring still, Mr. Rathborne——

The Court: Where is the witness?

Mr. Donohue: The man who wasn't there, your Honor.

MERVYN RATHBORNE

resumed.

Direct Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Mr. Rathborne, referring still to the meeting you have described during the 1936 MFOP convention in San Pedro, do you recall the name of the building in which this meeting was held?

A. My recollection is it was the Venetian Square Apartments.

Q. Do you know who leased or lived in the apartment in which the meeting was held?

A. The people that were living there apparently were Mr. Lambert and his wife. I remember kidding them about it being such a fancy layout.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. And was the Hazel Wood whom you indicated as having been present the wife of Walter Lambert? A. Yes.

Q. What was the occasion for this meeting being held down in [6344] Long Beach with the convention taking place in San Pedro?

A. My belief is it was called down there for security reasons, that is, not to hold such a meeting in the same vicinity of the convention.

Q. Mr. Rathborne, from your personal knowledge of the persons who were there and the subject matter of the discussion are you able to tell us if this was or was not a meeting of members of the Communist Party?

Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute. We object to that as calling for the opinion and conclusion of the witness, if the Court please, and no proper foundation laid. This witness has testified to the names of four or five people. He said there were several other people there whose names he doesn't remember. The nature of the discussion has already been explained to the Court and jury, and there is no reason why the witness should qualify it.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, this witness has already stated that he was himself a member of the Communist Party, that for security reasons he attended a meeting which discussed some phase or phases of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific convention which was being held in San

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Pedro, that this meeting occurred in an apartment which was under lease or in which at that time lived the training director of the Communist Party of the State of California, Walter Lambert and his wife, and he has stated the subject matter of the meeting was the Communist [6345] Party's attitude toward, one, the election of officers, and, two, this question of some farm labor movement. Having been present at that meeting, having participated in the discussion, I think no one is better qualified nor has there been a more complete foundation for this witness now to say what was the nature of that meeting.

Mr. Hallinan: It is up to the jury to reach its own conclusions, especially as the witness has identified several persons who were not there.

Mr. Donohue: I concede, you Honor, that would go to the weight of the testimony, not to its admissibility.

The Court: Did he testify as to the person who may have issued the call?

Mr. Donohue: He said he was notified to appear at the meeting there by Walter Lambert or Roy Pyle.

The Court: I will allow it.

Mr. Donohue: Would you read the question?

(Question read.)

A. I attended the meeting as a member of the Communist Party, and as being invited to a Communist meeting, and the conduct of the meeting was in accordance with the procedure of the Party, and the Party was mentioned frequently at the meeting, and the attitude the Party should take on different issues was mentioned. My recollection is it was presided over by Mr. Lambert, but I am not certain as to that point. [6346]

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Going back for a moment, Mr. Rathborne, to the preceding year, 1935, at which time you stated you were a delegated member from your union to the waterfront section of the Communist Party, how frequently did you attend meetings of the waterfront section of the Communist Party?

Mr. Hallinan: If the Court please, that is a construction and a twist upon the thing that even this witness' testimony does not bear out. The question was: Was he delegated as a member of his union, that is, delegated from his union to some Communist Party organization. That is the witness' testimony. The most that he says is that he was delegated by the political organization that he belonged to, the Communist Party, as a member of this so-called——

Mr. Donohue: I am happy to amend the question to include the fact, if the court please.

Q. With reference, Mr. Rathborne, to the waterfront section of the Communist Party to which you were a delegated member from the Communist Party unit in your labor organization, the ARTA, how frequently did you attend, let us say, during the year 1935 meetings of that waterfront section?

A. I attended a number of those meetings. I am not certain as to how frequently. I would say—well, I can't break it down to 1935. I would say I attended probably ten or twelve meetings of the waterfront section committee during the time I was in San Francisco. [6347]

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Where were those meetings held?

A. They were held at various places, sometimes in private homes, sometimes they were held up in one of the rooms in the ARTA hall, and other times they were held at different places.

Q. Can you from your present recollection tell us who, other than yourself, attended these meetings of the waterfront section of the Communist Party at the time you are now discussing?

Mr. Hallinan: Can we limit this? The question was addressed to 1935. The witness says he can't break it down to 1935. Can we find what time we are discussing?

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): During what period were you a delegated member to the waterfront section?

A. The period during which I attended the meetings was sometimes, I would say, after the middle of 1935, until I left for the East, which was, I believe, early in 1937.

Q. Then may I ask you, without referring only to 1935, during the period of time that you were a member of the waterfront section of the Communist Party what is your best recollection of the number of meetings in toto that you attended?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Hallinan: I submit that has been answered, your Honor. He said ten or twelve meetings.

Mr. Donohue: He said 1935, and you asked him not to limit it to 1935.

Mr. Hallinan: No, he said during the time he was here.

The Court: What was is approximately? [6348]

A. I would say, your Honor, all together during that period I probably attended from ten to twelve meetings of that organization. After I became connected with the District Council group my attendance at the waterfront section meetings was not too regular.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Who other than yourself, Mr. Rathborne, do you now recall as having attended at the same time as you were present meetings of the waterfront section of the Communist Party?

A. On various occasions I attended meetings of the waterfront section committee with Dave Saunders, John Schomaker, Henry Schmidt, Harry Bridges; Walter Lambert was present at several of the meetings, I believe; Al Quintana was representing the sailors' unit on the committee at that time, and there were quite a few others, because the personnel at different meetings was frequently different. [6349]

Q. Directing your attention now, Mr. Rathborne, to the period of the 1936 and '37 strike, at least up until the time when you left early in '37 for New York, did you ever attend any meetings with reference to the strike at which, among other persons being present, Mr. Walter Lambert or Mr. William Schneidermann were also present?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Would you tell us where these meetings were held?

A. They were usually held at an apartment down, I think it was on Bay Street, anyway, it was right across the street from the Ghirardelli Chocolate Works, there on the second floor, I recall.

Q. How frequently did you meet in that apartment so located?

A. In some periods during the strike we met there daily.

Q. And who was present at these daily meetings?

A. Normally meetings would be attended by Harry and myself and Walter Lambert. Occasionally Mr. Schneidermann would be present.

Q. And when you say "Harry," you mean Mr. Bridges? A. That's right.

Q. What was the purpose of these meetings among you, Walter Lambert, Mr. Bridges and so on, and on occasion Mr. Schneidermann?

Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. Object to that as calling for the opinion and conclusion. He can state the substance of the conversation, Your Honor, the statements that were discussed. [6350]

Mr. Donohue: I am glad to accept that suggestion, if Your Honor please.

Q. What was discussed at these meetings, Mr. Rathborne?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I was the secretary of the strike committee, Mr. Bridges the chairman, and at these meetings we discussed various phases of the development of the strike, what—well, for example, at one point, upon one occasion, the sailors were beginning to start independent negotiations to settle the strike, and we discussed issues such as that, and what policy should be recommended to the joint strike committee to meet the various issues that confronted the striking unions.

Q. Now, neither Mr. Schneidermann nor Mr. Lambert were members of the joint strike committee, were they?

Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. Object to that as leading and suggestive, if Your Honor please.

Mr. Donohue: I will withdraw the question, if Your Honor pleases.

Q. Was either Mr. Lambert or Mr. Schneidermann a member of the strike committee?

Mr. Hallinan: It is always held, Your Honor, that to ask a leading question, have an objection sustained and withdraw it and then simply repeat it in another form retains the original vice of the procedure. We object to this also as leading and suggestive.

Mr. Donohue: If Your Honor pleases, I can see an error in [6351] its original form. I can see no error in asking a witness who has testified that at the time these meetings took place Mr. Bridges was the president of the strike committee and that he was the secretary, and that at these meetings they discussed the subject matter of strikes, strike strategy; to ask him whether or not either Mr. Schneidermann or Mr. Lambert were members of the joint strike committee of which the witness was secretary and Mr. Bridges was president.

Mr. Hallinan: That isn't the vice, Your Honor: the question is, he first asked a leading question, that they were not, when the Court sustained an objection or appeared about to—he withdrew it and changed the form of it to ask, "Are they?" It is still a leading question because of the original question. Now, that is a vice that counsel frequently falls into; I don't want him to get started off on it again. Therefore we object to it.

The Court: Let us enumerate the members of the strike committee, then by process of exclusion I assume you can identify the others.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Would you tell us who were the members of the strike committee as you now recall them, Mr. Rathborne?

A. That would be very difficult. Each union elected a number of delegates. I don't exactly recall how many delegates were from each union, and at this time I could not enumerate all of the members. I could enumerate certain of them. [6352]

Q. How many persons would you say constituted the joint strike committee?

A. There was a coastwise committee and a San Francisco committee. I would say in the neighborhood of 40, Mr. Donohue. That is my best recollection of the number.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Will you identify the Walter Lambert present at these meetings you have just described?

Mr. Hallinan: Object to that as calling for the opinion and conclusion; no proper foundation laid.

The Court. Overruled.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Will you answer the question, Mr. Rathborne?

A. The Mr. Lambert was what is known in the parlance of the Communist Party as a full-time functionary of the party, and in other words, full-time employee, and held—it is my recollection that he held at that time the position of state trade union director.

Q. For the Communist Party? A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. Schneidermann's position at that time was what?

A. He was also a functionary, my best recollection is he was state secretary of the Communist Party. I am certain that he was an official, just what office he held I don't recall at this time.

Q. Can you tell us in what measure or to what degree Mr. Lambert [6353] or Mr. Schneidermann participated in this discussion with you and Mr. Bridges, what their function or purpose was?

Mr. Hallinan: Object to that as calling for the opinion and conclusion, Your Honor, and again, he can ask the conversation, the witness can state it or at least the contents of it.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Have you exhausted your recollection as to what the conversation may have been or was at these meetings, Mr. Rathborne?

A. Well, as I stated, my recollection is that we used to discuss specific issues pertaining to the strike and to work out programs and ideas, recommendations to bring back to the strike committee. The substance of each individual conversation I have forgotten.

Q. And did Mr. Lambert and/or Mr. Schneidermann participate in the discussion of the subject you have just indicated? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In consequence of the discussions which were held at these meetings, what, if anything, did either you or Mr. Bridges do as a result thereof, to your own knowledge?

Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. Object to the part about Mr. Bridges as calling for the opinion and conclusion of the witness, if the Court please.

Mr. Donohue: I asked him what he knew of his own knowledge.

Mr. Hallinan: And no proper foundation.

The Court: Well, if he knows of his own knowledge or was [6354] acting with or in association with Mr. Bridges, he may testify.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, that is a foundation that is lacking. He didn't ask him that, he asked him what did he or Mr. Bridges do. He laid no foundation to show what the witness' knowledge would be.

Mr. Donohue: Would you repeat the question, Mr. Reporter, as asked?

(Record read.)

Mr. Hallinan: You see, that is calling for the opinion and conclusion.

The Court: You might rephrase that, Mr. Donohue.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): What, to your knowledge, Mr. Rathborne, did Mr. Bridges do in consequence of these meetings which were held in the manner you have just indicated?

Mr. Hallinan: The same objection, Your Honor, that does not lay the foundation; that is merely calling for the opinion and conclusion of the witness. We first have to get the basis for the witness' knowledge, before such a question is proper.

The Court: Overruled.

A. You want me to answer?

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): The Court said you may answer.

A. Well, as a result of these discussions that took place certain conclusions were reached or decisions were made. Or sometimes these decisions were relayed directly to the strike committee; sometimes they were taken up with the Communist Party [6355] units within the unions; and on occasions we would reach some kind of a conclusion or decision at these meetings at this place I have mentioned and at the next meeting or shortly thereafter make recommendations along those lines to the strike committee.

Q. And did these meetings continue, Mr. Rathborne, up to the time you left San Francisco in '37?

A. Yes, they did.

Q. Could you estimate how many times you met there with Mr. Bridges?

A. Oh, it was a good many times. It is difficult for me to recall, but I would estimate at least 30 such meetings took place.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Did there come a time, Mr. Rathborne, when you attended a CIO national convention in Pittsburgh? A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall when it was?

A. Well, it was the first constitutional convention, and when the CIO changed its name from the Congress of Industrial Organizations to the Committee for Industrial Organizations. I think that was in 1938. I am not certain of the year.

Q. Now, where was the convention held?

A. In the William Penn Hotel in Pittsburgh.

Q. Did you see Mr. Bridges at the convention?

A. Yes, he was present there.

Q. Did there come a time, Mr. Rathborne, when you made a [6356] motion on the floor of that convention which had something to do with one's political belief as a condition precedent for membership in the CIO?

A. Yes, there was at that time, yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall what the motion was that you made or its substance?

A. At that time the constitution was being adopted, of the national CIO, and at each section of the constitution, as it was being read to the delegates at the convention, and there was a clause there regarding qualifications for membership in the CIO. As I recall it, the clause or section was read that there shall be no discrimination for membership in the CIO because of race, color or creed. And at that point I, after this had been read to the delegates, asked for the floor and was given it by Mr. Hillman, Sidney Hillman, who was acting chairman, and I offered an amendment, the amendment being to the effect that they add the words "political affiliation," so that it would read that there would be no discrimination as to membership in the CIO because of race, color, creed or political affiliation. And there was quite a to-do. As a matter of fact, it stopped the convention.

Q. Now, in consequence of having offered that motion or having made that motion on the floor, did you ever subsequently thereto attend a meeting at which that motion was the subject matter of discussion? [6357] A. I did.

Q. Where and when with relation to the time of having made the motion was the meeting held?

A. That meeting was held either that night or within a day or two of the time that I made this motion on the floor.

Q. And where was it held, Mr. Rathborne?

A. It was held in a room in the William Penn Hotel.

Q. And whom do you now recall as having been there present?

A. Well, my recollection is that Mr. Roy Hudson was there, Julius Emspak, Harry Bridges, myself, I believe Louis Merrill of the Office & Professional Workers was there, I believe there were about eight or nine people altogether. That is my—as I recall the meeting.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Now, by whom were you notified of this meeting, Mr. Rathborne?

A. I believe by Mr. Hudson. I am not certain, however.

Q. Whom did you know Roy Hudson at that time to be?

A. Roy Hudson at that time——

Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. Object to that as calling for the opinion and conclusion and no proper foundation.

The Court: Overruled.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): The Court said you may answer, Mr. Rathborne.

A. Roy Hudson at that time was a member of the national committee of the Communist Party and I believe its national trade [6358] union director. Again, I know he served in that capacity, as national trade union director, but I am not certain that he was in that position at that particular moment.

Q. Now, had you met Roy Hudson prior to this meeting in the William Penn Hotel in Pittsburgh?

A. I was very friendly with Roy Hudson. I used to know him very well.

Q. And you knew him prior to this meeting about which you are now talking?

A. I did, yes.

Q. Will you tell us as best you can recall what was said and if you can tell us, by whom, at this meeting?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Well, I remember that meeting rather clearly, because this national CIO convention was my first national trade union convention that I had attended, other than attending conferences of the CIO——

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. Have we fixed a month in 1938 when that was held? I don't think that was discussed. Could we have it a little more specifically as to time?

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Do you recall the month when this convention was held in Pittsburgh?

A. It is my recollection—I am not certain of the month, but it was toward the end of the year. It was in the winter, it was very cold.

Q. And your recollection is it was 1938? [6359]

A. That is my best recollection. However, the records will show when the national—the first constitutional convention of the national CIO was held.

Q. Now, what is your best recollection of what was said and by whom at this meeting?

A. Well, as I say, it was my first major national labor convention, and when we attended this meeting Mr. Hudson was particularly annoyed and angry at me, and he gave me a very good dressing down because he said I acted in an undisciplined and individualistic manner, that I had not discussed with the party making such a motion and that by making such a motion I had created embarrassment to the leftwing or Communist forces of the convention because when the motion was put to a vote, a very large number of delegates at the convention voted on it and it stopped the convention, created quite a furor in the press. And the newspapers in Pittsburgh the next day came out with big headlines that "John Lewis crushes leftwing revolt in CIO," and that I had, Mr. Hudson pointed out, worsened the relationship that the party was trying to build with John L. Lewis in working within the CIO and gave me a very severe criticism, and repeatedly called to my attention that I was not acting as a disciplined and effective Communist Party member in carrying on that kind of activity. That sentiment expressed by Mr. Hudson was shared and expressed by others, some of the other people who were present at the meeting in the hotel room. [6360]

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Do you recall whether or not Mr. Bridges expressed any opinion at this meeting?

A. My recollection is that he said I had made a mistake and deserved a lot of criticism for it.

Q. At that time, Mr. Rathborne, were you a member of the executive board of the national CIO?

A. Well, not at that particular time, because the executive board of the national CIO was not created until after the convention or during the convention, and I believe I became a member of the executive board shortly after the convention.

Q. Were you a delegate to the convention from your union? A. I was.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. And to your knowledge, was Mr. Bridges a delegate to the convention from his union?

A. It is my belief that he was; he was on the floor.

Q. And while you state that you can not now recall the name of some other persons who were present, at the time of this meeting did you know the identity of every person who was present?

A. I am reasonably certain that I did, yes.

Q. Were all of the persons other than Mr. Roy Hudson delegates to the national CIO convention at that time? A. I am not certain of that.

Q. Mr. Rathborne, from the source of the notification which you had of the meeting, from your own experience as a member of [6361] the Communist Party and from your knowledge of the discussion which you had at this meeting, can you tell us whether or not this was a Communist Party meeting?

Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. Object to that, if the Court please, as calling for the opinion and conclusion of the witness, no proper foundation laid.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor pleases, I think the answer to the question on the foundation laid is admissible and only an objection could be had as to the weight of the evidence, not as to the admissibility.

Mr. Hallinan: No, we object to its admissibility.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Donohue: Would you repeat the question?

(Record read.)

A. It was my opinion then and it still is, that this particular meeting I referred to was a meeting of the top fraction of the national CIO, top CP fraction. [6362]

Q. Was there any discussion, Mr. Rathborne, at this meeting about the relationship between the Communist Party and the national CIO?

Mr. Hallinan: If the Court please, he has already stated that subject. Moreover, that is leading and suggestive. He can be asked the conversation that took place, not pick out isolated matters and ask him about those.

Mr. Donohue: I asked him that, if your Honor please, and I take it he has exhausted his recollection.

Mr. Hallinan: So he said. He said he told about that.

The Court: Overruled. You may answer.

A. The only other matter that I recall being discussed there, after I got my hair combed, was the matter of the election of officers of the newly formed CIO, and the fact that there was no dispute or discussion hardly on who the logical choice would be for president. That was John L. Lewis. However, there was some discussion on the secretaryship, and if I remember correctly, it was decided that the Communist forces at that convention should try to prevail upon Mr. Lewis to accept Mr. John Brophy as the secretary-treasurer of the CIO, and subsequently Mr. Brophy was not elected, incidentally.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Do you recall, Mr. Rathborne, when the CIO national convention in Philadelphia was held?

A. Philadelphia—let's see. I believe that was during the war. I believe it was in 1943, if I remember correctly. [6363]

Q. Were you a delegate to that national convention? A. No.

Q. Did there come a time, Mr. Rathborne, when during or subsequent to that convention held in Philadelphia that you learned about a move to cause Mr. Connally, who was the president of the State CIO Council, and that he be supplanted by somebody else?

A. Yes. I received a telephone call from Mr. Connally, Pittsburgh—in which he stated he was in Pittsburgh—advising me that a decision of that kind had been reached, and that Phil Murray was to be contacted and advised of it.

Q. Did there subsequently come a time when you learned the decision had in fact been reached during the convention in Philadelphia?

Mr. Hallinan: I object to that as calling for hearsay and no proper foundation.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Did you ever talk to Mr. Bridges about it, Mr. Rathborne?

A. Yes, I did.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Will you tell us where and when and what was said?

A. Well, the first time I recall talking to him about that particular incident, that is, the subject matter I had discussed with him prior to Philadelphia, but the actual matter of making the decision to change the State president was during the course of the convention, during the time the convention was in [6364] session. Mr. Bridges called me on the telephone, which was after the call that Mr. Connally had made, and it was in response to a telegram or telegrams I had sent after Mr. Connally had called me very vigorously protesting against the decision that Mr. Connally had advised me of, and at that time I was extremely angry on his telephone conversation and told Mr. Bridges, "If Roy Hudson wants to run the State CIO, let him come out here and run it and I am going to get out and let him take my place, if that is the way things are going to be done." He asked me to hold off and not do anything, hold my fire until the delegates from Philadelphia got back to San Francisco and the thing could be explained.

Q. What was the occasion in your telephone conversation with Mr. Bridges for your having made reference to Roy Hudson and his trying to run the California CIO?

A. I had been advised by Mr. Connally——

Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute. I object to this as hearsay.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): What did Mr. Bridges say about that, Mr. Rathborne, if anything?

A. Well, he indicated considerable irritation at my mentioning Mr. Hudson's name and just asked me not to take any action or not do anything precipitous, because at that time I had told Mr. Bridges I was going to wire Phil Murray and submit my resignation to him, too, and so I was disgusted and didn't like—thought this move was extremely objectionable to me because we [6365] we had a State Executive Board here, we had a convention in Philadelphia, and in my judgment the convention and the elected delegates were the proper people to elect the officers and to make changes in the officers. So he merely asked me to withhold taking any action, and I didn't promise to do anything.

Q. As a matter of fact, you did not communicate with Mr. Murray as you had indicated that you might?

A. No. The extent of my communication on the subject was to talk to Mr. Goldblatt at great length about the matter and also to send either one or two telegrams, I believe, to Philip Connally in Pittsburgh expressing extreme opposition to the decision to make that change.

Q. You mean Pittsburgh or Phiadelphia?

A. I am sorry. It was in Philadelphia.

Q. When, as a matter of fact, before this CIO convention was it that Mr. Connally had been elected and by whom was he elected president of the California CIO Council?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. We held a convention of the State CIO, I think it was in Fresno—I am not certain of that—about a month or maybe—a very short period of time, a month or less before the national CIO convention. That State convention was attended by several hundred delegates from the various unions affiliated to the California CIO Council, and at that time there were elections held of officers as one of the orders of business of the convention, and at that convention there were candidates for the [6366] various offices, including president. Mr. Connally at that time was elected president by secret ballot of the several hundred delegates present.

Q. Who was his opponent in that election, if you recall?

A. My recollection is he was oposed by a fellow from the Shipyard Workers at that time.

Q. Was Connally already president and was this a compaign for reelection?

A. He had been president in a prior year, yes.

Q. Do you recall who was the candidate against Mr. Connally in the preceding year?

A. I believe it was Thimmes of the Steel Workers.

Q. Who was it who did in fact supplant Connally after the 1943 national CIO convention as president of the California CIO Council?

A. At an Executive Board meeting of the State CIO held in Los Angeles some weeks after the national CIO convention Mr. Connally resigned as president and Mr. Thimmes was elected by the

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)
Executive Board as acting or temporary president until the next election, until the next convention.

Q. Do you recall when Mr. Bridges returned to San Francisco after the convention in Philadelphia?

A. Yes I do. I mean I don't recall the exact date or I didn't meet him at the airport or anything, but I know he did return to San Francisco. [6367]

Q. Did you have any discussion with him at that time concerning the action that had been taken, if any had been taken, in Philadelphia?

A. Yes, I did. I had one or two discussions with him at least.

Q. What is your best recollection as to what he told you about what happened while he was in Philadelphia?

A. Well, I was still hot under the collar about the thing, and I got in touch with Harry quite soon after he got back and said—expressed my opposition. The reasons for my opposition were that the convention had just elected a president, that that was the democratic way to do it, and also that we had a State Executive Board here in California that was supposed to make decisions for the State CIO between conventions, and that this decision to replace Connally with Thimmes had not been taken up with the State Executive Board; it was made by a group outside the Executive Board. It was violating all the principles of democracy of the organization, and that, as I expressed it on the telephone, in my judgment Roy Hudson was trying to run the State CIO by remote control from Philadelphia, and for those reasons I was very violently opposed to it and I still thought it was the wrong thing to do.

Q. What was Mr. Bridges' answer to that?

A. He stated my objections were—he didn't think they were valid because I was paying too much attention to form and not to substance. Sure, this State Executive Board was the form, [6368] but it was not the substance. The actual substance was to get a setup here that would be a better relationship with the so-called center forces of the CIO, including Philip Murray, and he had objected to it for entirely different reasons, that his objections were based on the ground that we were giving too much—making too many concessions to the phonies, that is, the anti-left-wing forces, and that by opening this door it would be encouragement to take over the State CIO, and once they took it over, why, we were finished, we were out, because they were not going to give the same kind of consideration to us as we were giving to them, or words to that effect. That is my recollection of the conversation.

Q. Did Mr. Bridges indicate to you by whom the decision was made?

Mr. Hallinan: I object to that as leading and suggestive, if the Court please. He can ask the rest of the conversation and not suggest it.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Have you exhausted your recollection on the conversation you had with Mr. Bridges, Mr. Rathborne?

A. There is one other remark that I recall: "The thing is done now, the decision. There is nothing we can do about it. We've got to go along with it. That is all there is." That is the extent of my recollection of that particular——

Q. What did you understand by Mr. Bridges' statement that it was a decision and you had to go along with it? [6369]

Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute. I object to that as calling for the opinion and conclusion of the witness.

Mr. Donohue: I have a right to, if your Honor please.

Mr. Hallinan: His understanding is not important. It is the words that were uttered. The jury has the right to draw its own conclusions.

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Rathborne has stated as best he can recall the words that Mr. Bridges used about its having been a decision and there was nothing they could do except go along with it.

Mr. Hallinan: Counsel asks a number of prepared questions and gets prepared answers out of them, and it is just the same as if counsel were testifying himself. It is not a matter of asking the witness the questions; it is a matter of counsel suggesting and recommending what the witness shall answer.

Mr. Donohue: I think, if your Honor please, in the light of the fact that the witness has given his best recollection of the statement made to him by the defendant Bridges, that he has a right to state his understanding of the remark made to him by Mr. Bridges.

Mr. Hallinan: That is a new rule of law, when a witness can state his understanding of what was said. He can state what was said.

Mr. Donohue: He has already stated what was said.

Mr. Hallinan: That should finish it. [6370]

The Court: Did you give all the conversation to the best of your recollection, Mr. Rathborne?

A. That is the sense of the conversation as I recall it, your Honor.

The Court: I will sustain the objection.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): At any time, Mr. Rathborne, did Mr. Bridges discuss with you the mechanics whereby this decision was reached in Philadelphia while he was there?

Mr. Hallinan: The same objection, your Honor, leading and suggestive. The witness has stated he has given the conversation as he remembers it.

Mr. Donohue: After having exhausted his recollection, if your Honor please——

Mr. Hallinan: You do not supply it by putting in your own conclusions.

Mr. Donohue: I am not putting in any conclusions.

The Court: What do you mean, as the formula under which this recommendation——

Mr. Donohue: Yes he is discussing what happened here.

The Court: I understand.

Mr. Donohue: I want to find out if he has any recollection of what Mr. Bridges may have said with respect to what happened in Philadelphia. (To the witness.) You were not in Philadelphia?

Mr. Hallinan: He has already stated what the conversation was or the alleged conversation with Mr. Bridges. What counsel [6371] wants to say now, or what he wants to do is to put in some invention of his own or something he has agreed upon shall be said, and ask the witness that. That is all it amounts to.

The Court: Of course, whatever rule I may make, I do not subscribe to any suggestion on your part, Mr. Hallinan, that there has been any conduct on that score. I am merely ruling on the matters that you interposed in the nature of objections. I think if the witness has given his full understanding to the best of his recollection of the conversations, unless he does know the formula of his own knowledge tending to result in any recommendations that were made by outside persons or external influences, I think that is the end of the matter.

Mr. Donohue: I shall not pursue it further.

The Court: Unless he has an independent recollection of these other matters; that is a matter he knows and not I.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Rathborne, did there come a time when as secretary-treasurer of the California CIO you had some difference of opinion with a man named Louis Goldblatt?

A. Yes, there was one occasion when I had some——

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Donohue: May I see the defense in evidence which is the memorandum we discussed the other day? Would you ask Mr. Rathborne to refer to that, to take a look at it?

(Defendants' Exhibit P-3 was handed to the witness.)

A. (After examining document.) Yes, I recall this. [6372]

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Rathborne, what was the basic difference of opinion between yourself and Mr. Goldblatt?

A. The situation arose this way: It is my recollection Mr. Goldblatt had been in Washington or had been back East somewhere working for his union, that he came back to California, and when he came back he started sitting down with various people in the State CIO Council, his staff members, the people on the Labor Herald, research department, and so on and so forth, kind of making an investigation of the affairs of the Council and making certain recommendations to them with regard to things that should be done. These people we sat down with came and asked me, "What about it? Goldblatt says to do this and he says to do that. What should we do?"

I said, "Goldblatt ought to at least"——

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, this does not appear to have been said in the presence of the defendants. We object to it as hearsay.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Did there come a time.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Rathborne, that you prepared this memorandum? A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall now from this memorandum that there were three meetings held to discuss the subject matter of this memorandum?

Mr. Hallinan: I object to that as leading and suggestive, [6373] if your Honor please.

Mr. Donohue: You introduced it in evidence, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: We object to the question as leading and suggestive.

The Court: How many meetings were there, where were they held, and so forth? Does that show on the face of it?

Mr. Donohue: The memorandum was prepared by the witness and submitted in evidence by Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: That does not give him any right to ask leading questions on the subject. He can ask the witness, if he wants, but he hasn't any right to state a fact, "If that is so, isn't that so?" The objection is not to an examination on the subject or on the memorandum, but counsel placing his own interpretation on it.

The Court: Mr. Donohue states in the document there is a showing as to the number of meetings.

Mr. Hallinan: Granted. It does say that.

Mr. Donohue: I will withdraw the question.

Mr. Hallinan: That does not permit him to ask leading and suggestive questions.

The Court: All right.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Were any meetings held, Mr. Rathborne, concerning the subject matter of this memorandum?

A. Yes, there were.

Q. How many? [6374]

A. There was the original meeting in my office with Goldblatt, where he made a number of——

Q. Who was present?

A. My recollection is—I think it says in the memorandum there George Wilson, Gene Paton, myself and Goldblatt, I believe, if I recall the meeting correctly; that is who it was.

Q. Mr. Bridges was not present at the first meeting? A. No.

Q. Where was that meeting held, Mr. Rathborne?

A. It was held at the office of the California CIO Council.

Q. Did there subsequently come a time when there was a second meeting?

A. Yes, shortly after that.

Q. Where was that held?

A. That was held in Mr. Bridges' office.

Q. Can you tell us what ~~took place at~~ the meeting in Mr. Bridges' office?

A. Well, the issues in dispute or in controversy were discussed to some extent, that is, the matter that Mr. Goldblatt was very critical of the State CIO Council, various actions they had taken, and that matter was gone into at considerable length. Another was some business with regard to the Labor

Herald. I believe the Labor Herald was running in the red at that time, or there were some problems concerning the paper. And general matters of the State Council were discussed and the differences of opinion [6375] between Goldblatt and myself, the differences in point of view were brought out rather sharply.

Q. Do you recall that there was a third meeting?

A. There was another meeting later on, also in Mr. Bridges' office, and if I remember correctly at this meeting it was brought out by Mr. Goldblatt that the State Council was trying to supersede, to supplant the Regional Director of the CIO, who was Harry Bridges, and kind of act in his capacity to take over the functions and duties of his office and kind of put him in the shade. That was the burden of Mr. Goldblatt's charges at that time against me, I believe.

Q. Do you recall the memorandum dated June 24, 1943?

A. I guess I just saw it. I recall sending it.

Q. Do you note that in that memorandum you state, "The difference of opinion concerning these problems which had arisen between Brother Goldblatt and myself, after consultation with Brother Bridges and others concerned, it is my opinion that these problems can best be solved by means of a conference between those concerned." Do you recall that?

A. That is right: I recall that.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Was there such a conference for the purpose of resolving these differences?

A. Yes, there was a final conference which did fairly well succeed in resolving most of the differences.

Q. Where and when was that conference [6376] held?

A. That was held not long after this memorandum you read was sent out, at the Governor Hotel here in San Francisco.

Q. Who was present at that conference?

A. Lou Goldblatt was there, George Wilson, Harry Bridges, Bill Schneidermann, and David Hedley; I think Paul Schnurr, but I am not certain of that.

Q. Who arranged for this conference, Mr. Rathborne?

A. Mr. Schneidermann arranged for it.

Q. Can you tell us what was said by any one of those persons who were present at the time this conference was held?

A. I recall Schneidermann being extremely critical of me for writing that first memorandum, saying that that was not a comradely way to behave, that any differences I may have had with a fellow comrade should not be resolved by sending out memorandums, that people could get hold of and make capital out of; that there are channels within the Party to settle such differences and they should have been taken up within the structure of the Communist Party and settled that way without involving a lot of other people and without writing things that might be dangerous if they became public, and that I was very, very roundly and severely criticized by Mr. Schneidermann, and he was also quite critical of Mr. Goldblatt, and we were both told to get in line and stay in line, to behave ourselves or we would be subject to strict Party discipline, that is the Party would take action to see that we would behave ourselves. [6377]

Q. At that time, Mr. Rathborne, in 1943, you stated that you were a member of the top fraction of the Communist Party within the state, State California CIO? A. That's right, yes.

Q. How many persons would you say constituted that top fraction of the California CIO?

A. At that particular time?

Q. Yes, '43, let's say.

A. Well, the actual top fraction itself consisted of the officers of the State Council who were Communist Party members and the executive board members; and it is my recollection that that group was about, right in the neighborhood of ten. It may have been three or four one way or the other, but right around that number.

Mr. Donohue: May we take the afternoon recess, if your Honor please?

The Court: Yes. We will take the afternoon recess, ladies and gentlemen, and the same admonition to you, not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Recess.)

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Rathborne, can you tell us when, in relation to the time of this meeting at the Governor Hotel, that the California CIO executive committee had its meeting? [6378]

A. It was during the meeting at the Governor Hotel, that was held during the period the executive committee was in session.

Q. Where did the meetings of the executive committee take place during its session here?

A. In the CIO Building at 150 Golden Gate Avenue.

Q. Was there any reason why the meeting you said was called by Mr. Schneidermann was held in the Governor Hotel and not in the CIO headquarters building? A. I believe there was, yes.

Q. What reason?

A. Because that meeting in the Governor Hotel was the Communist Party meeting.

Q. In what room in the Governor Hotel was it held, Mr. Rathborne?

A. I don't recall.

Q. Do you recall in whose room it was?

A. It was held in the room in which I was registered.

Q. You do not now recall the room in which you were registered? A. The number?

Q. Yes. A. No, sir, I don't.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Mr. Rathborne, did you attend the 1939 CIO national convention in San Francisco?

A. I attended the national CIO convention or part of it in San Francisco, yes, sir. [6379]

Q. At that time you were permanently in New York as president of the American Communications——

A. That is where I resided, in New York, at that time, yes, sir.

Q. And were you a delegate to the 1939 CIO national convention? A. Yes, sir.

Q. At that time were you a member of the executive board? A. I was.

Q. Over what portion of the convention, do you recall did you attend?

A. I didn't attend very much of it because we had a strike going on here in the Western Union in San Francisco at the time, my own union, and I only attended a small number of sessions of the convention. However, I did attend executive board meetings that were held in connection with the convention.

Q. Do you recall attending a meeting held in the Whitcomb Hotel in San Francisco during that portion of the CIO national convention which you did attend?

A. I recall attending a meeting of the national CIO executive board, yes, sir.

Q. Did you attend any meeting in the Whitcomb Hotel which was not a meeting of the executive board of the national CIO? A. Yes, I did.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Would you tell us when, where and who was present, as you best recall it? [6380]

A. As I recall it, there was a meeting held there at the Whitcomb Hotel in one of the rooms, and it was attended by—I know it was attended by Mr. Schneidermann. I am not certain about Mr. Hudson. I may have that confused with another meeting. Attended by Louis Merrill, myself, Mr. Bridges, I think Ben Bolt was there, and I think Julius Emspak was there. That is my recollection they were.

Q. Can you tell us anything that was said by anyone of the persons who were present?

A. Yes, I remember that meeting quite well, that is, the subject matter, because we held an executive board meeting of the national CIO a day or two before, and at the national CIO executive board, John L. Lewis, for the first time, came out against the Communists. He made a statement in the executive board that "no aspiring young Communist is going to get anywhere in the CIO, and mark that down in your book," or words to that effect. And then some time after that, or very shortly after that, he said, "There are going to be some changes in the CIO. The position of West Coast director of the CIO is abolished. It doesn't exist any more. Present West Coast director will be the California director and I will appoint new directors for the rest of the area," that had formerly been covered by the West Coast director. And I know it came as quite a shock and surprise to everyone there that he would make these two statements, first in effect denouncing or announcing that as far as the [6381] Communists were concerned, well, he didn't say they weren't welcome, but he made the statement that no aspiring Communist needed to think he was going to get anywhere, and the subject matter of Lewis's address, remarks to the executive board, was discussed at this subsequent meeting that I have already talked about.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Can you tell us what was said by anyone at that meeting?

A. I can recall that the problem came up there of, "Well, now Lewis has opened up or he has expressed disapproval, what should the attitude be of a party group in the CIO toward Lewis?" and so on and so forth. It was a matter of policy, of approach, and I recall that Harry made the statement that, "Well, as far as the directorship is concerned, I don't think that should be an issue, trying to argue the fact that I was demoted," and that "Our attitude toward the national CIO leadership should be one of cooperating to try to work with John L. Lewis. But at the same time we ought to build our party forces stronger down below in the unions so that we can have a greater influence and be in a position to more effectively prevent Lewis and his henchmen from red-baiting and taking an anti-party position in the future." And there was a general discussion along those lines, engaged in by all of us, and subsequently it was decided that that would be the policy that we would recommend with respect to the working members and officers of the CIO, and also Communists within the CIO. That was the general tenor of the [6382] discussion, as I recall it.

Q. Mr. Rathborne, do you remember attending the 1944 CIO convention in Chicago?

A. Yes, I believe I do, yes.

Q. Do you recall whether you went alone or in company with anyone else to that convention?

A. Well, I went back to that convention, on, I believe it was the City of San Francisco, and I shared a compartment there with Mr. Bridges.

Q. Do you recall any discussion that was had with Mr. Bridges and yourself at that time about the subject matter of that memorandum which you have heretofore identified?

A. We talked about a number of things, including the fact that I had had this dispute with Lou Goldblatt, and we went into it rather casually, and I tried to point out the dispute was settled. I mean, I wasn't carrying on any continuing feud. I discussed it with him in the light of certain mistaken ideas that I thought Lou had had. It wasn't a heated discussion at all, it was just a friendly talk——

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. What year is this?

Mr. Donohue: '44.

Mr. Hallinan: 1944?

Mr. Donohue: Correct, sir.

Mr. Hallinan: All right.

A. (Continuing): We did discuss the incident.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Do you recall anything that was said by Mr. Bridges on the subject?

A. Well, he said, he stuck up for Lou pretty much. He said he was a good boy, good party man and a hard worker, and he had done a good job, and he was all right. And I generally agreed with him. And then we discussed Goldblatt a little bit as two friends would about another person who was pretty much—pretty much just a friendly discussion about the incident.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Mr. Rathborne, while you were in New York City did you ever see Mr. Bridges in New York?

A. I saw him on quite a number of occasions in New York, yes.

Q. Did you know when you were in New York where Communist Party headquarters in New York was?

A. Oh, yes, very definitely.

Q. Did you ever go there with Mr. Bridges?

A. Yes, I went there on, I believe two occasions with him.

Q. Can you tell us where you went, whom you saw and what may have been said by anyone present?

A. Well, on one occasion—I am trying to remember the year, my recollection is 1937. We were both in New York, and the matter of the maritime situation, so far as the CIO was concerned, was rather a hot issue then. And I was asked by somebody in the Communist Party, I can't remember who it was, if it would be possible to arrange a meeting with Harry, and I said I would try.

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. I didn't get that last statement. [6384] Could I have it repeated?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

(Record read.)

Mr. Hallinan: Thanks.

A. (Continuing): Subsequently a meeting was arranged and he and I went up to the CP headquarters, what they called "the Kremlin," up on the ninth floor and had a meeting with—I know Hudson was present, Stachel, and I am pretty sure Mr. Browder was there. And we stayed there for, oh, I believe half, three-quarters of an hour, about three-quarters of an hour, I would say, discussing this matter with respect to the maritime setup in the national CIO. And kind of reviewed what the policy of the CIO maritime groups would be and what the Communist Party policy was, and seemed to be pretty much in agreement on it.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): How long—Was that the first time you went tehre with Mr. Bridges, to your best recollection?

A. I cannot remember, Mr. Donohue, whether that was the first or the second time.

Q. Can you recall anything that may refresh your recollection about a second incident at Communist Party headquarters?

A. I think there was one time where a meeting was arranged there and Mr. Bridges declined to go there because he thought it was too hot; and we subsequently met in the home of Roy Hudson down in Greenwich Village, on James Street, I believe it was. I used to be a frequent visitor at Mr. Hudson's home in those days. [6385]

Q. Who was present at this meeting at Roy Hudson's home on James Street?

A. Well, four of us, I think—Tommy Raye, Roy Hudson and Harry Bridges.

Q. Were you at Mr. Hudson's home with Mr. Bridges on one or more than one occasion?

A. I don't recall any other occasion except the one I have just related. Trying to place it in point of time. I don't remember what year it was.

Q. Was it during the period of time when you were permanently in New York with the ACA?

A. Yes, it was during that period of time.

Q. And that was from some time in early '37 until late '40? A. That's right.

Q. Mr. Rathborne, from your experience as a trade union leader and as a member of the Communist Party, can you explain for us the method whereby the Communist Party seeks to make its influence felt in a trade union?

Mr. Hallinan: Object to that as calling for the opinion and conclusion of the witness, if the Court please; not a proper subject for expert opinion.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor pleases, Mr. Bridges——

The Court: Overruled, overruled.

Mr. Donohue: Would you repeat the question to the witness, please? [6386]

(Record read.)

A. Yes, that is quite a long subject, but I will do the best I can. To understand the methods the Communist Party uses in the unions, one has to have some understanding of the ideologies and objectives of it, and it was taught to me at least, when I attended various courses and discussion groups in my own unit and also other Communist Party meetings, that the major purpose of the Communist Party is to work within mass organizations, in order to, so that they can be with people, so they can contact the people, and that the trade unions are, from their point of view, one of the best types of mass organization in which to carry on the work of educating people to their ideology and recruiting members to the Communist Party. As a matter of fact, in some of the classical literature, Lenin refers to the trade unions as "schools of Communism," and states that every means, method, legal or illegal, must be used to penetrate the trade unions, to bring——

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Hallinan: Well, now, just a moment. Object to this as not the best evidence, if the Court please. This gentleman is purporting to be reciting from some book, which must be available, or some document.

Mr. Donohue: I submit the witness is qualified, if your Honor pleases, to answer the question.

The Court: He may answer.

A. (Continuing): I am merely trying to explain what produces [6387] results. And to carry on the work in these mass organizations, in order to become leaders within the mass organization and to sell the program and ideology of Communism, and thereby bringing the members of these mass organizations over into a sympathetic position, and to recruit membership. In order to accomplish this, the

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Communist Party has what they call, I believe in the military service, a "table of organization." They have an organized setup. The unit, for example, is the basic setup, the basic organization, and that consists usually of, from, oh, five to 15 Communist Party members, who are members of the same trade union. And unit meetings are frequently attended by some functionary of the Communist Party. The purpose of the unit is to hold regular meetings and to discuss problems within the union and to introduce in that union the issues and programs of the Communist Party.

To be a good Communist in a trade union, one first has to be a good trade unionist. That is the basic teaching. Because by activity in the trade union, regular attendance at meetings and working for the organization, promoting the economic program, the members of the Communist Party in the union can put themselves in a position where they are recognized as leaders and have influence among the rank and file, and thereby more effectively work within the organization to disseminate and to put into effect the other sections of the Communist doctrine and ideology. [6388]

Mr. Hallinan: Well, now, if the Court please, here is certainly something that is not only reopening a case, but starting a whole new case. In other words, Mr. Donohue is now trying the sixth Bridges case instead of leaving it up to the pupils at the USF. We are starting now in a wholly new principle, we are getting into the Communist Party principles as regards trade unions and starting all over again on the matter. This is certainly something that is far, far removed from rebuttal. It was explained here that this gentleman should be in justice allowed to testify here because Mr. Donohue had shown on cross-examination of Mr. Bridges that he is a liar, a thief, a drunk, and a lot of other things. But now that doesn't bring in the right to show that he is some sort of expert on Communist penetration of trade unions. We are starting off on a whole new career, not touched upon before.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor pleases, Mr. Bridges himself on many occasions has said, "No outside influence, particularly the Communist Party, has any determination or any control over my union." I expect to show by this witness to the contrary.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, this is a different—We are back in Russia now, we have got Lenin. We are clean out of San Francisco. We are back in St. Petersburg or wherever it is. This has got nothing to do with any contention here as to whether Mr. Bridges is or ever was a member of the Communist Party. Now, this gentleman having earned his $34 a day, brushing up as an [6389] expert for these people, is going to earn it for a few minutes by giving out his opinion of the matter Lenin taught. Well, we are not interested in that. As I say, that is starting a whole new case now. They have finished this case, the defense is put on, and off we go again on the merry-go-round with a new set of expert testimony.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

First, we had the overthrowing the government, turning it over to Russia, starting a black republic in the South. But now this gentleman is coming in, we have got a whole new line of issues to meet, as to what they are doing in trade unions, and particularly what Lenin said about it. I submit, your Honor, that this is just starting a new trial all over again. We are not concluding the first one, we are beginning the second one.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Hallinan: Take the witness and sober him up and wash him and bring him in here with his furbished story about trade unionism.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor pleases, at this time I move your Honor will strike the last remark made by Mr. Hallinan and instruct the jury to disregard it.

The Court: Yes, the last remark may be stricken from the record, ladies and gentlemen, and I admonish you to disregard the statement made by Mr. Hallinan concerning the witness on the stand, Mr. Donohue or any other person having sobered him up to bring him in here. You may proceed. [6390]

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Would you continue, after the interruption, Mr. Rathborne?

A. Well, I don't want to make my answer too long. As I said, the first requirement of a good Communist in the trade union is to be a good trade unionist, in order to become effective and achieve a following. [6390-A]

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Hallinan: Now, your Honor, I submit that if he is going to testify as an expert, at least there ought to be some foundation laid to show where he is getting his knowledge from, what documents he has read. Let us find out what he has done toward making himself an expert, because this is expert testimony being offered now.

The Court: In part it may be regarded as expert; in part I assume, Mr. Hallinan, it can be regarded as based on the sort of contacts, if any, he may have had with Communists, his dealings, and the like in and with respect to the trade union movement.

Mr. Hallinan: That is an assumption that the witness hasn't any support for.

The Court: He testified, to the best of my recollection, at least he started his training in this original school, and thereafter I assume with respect to the contacts he had with these men that he may embellish thereon.

(To the witness): The subject matter of your testimony, Mr. Rathborne, you may give based upon your experiences.

The Witness: That is what I am doing, your Honor.

The Court: You may proceed.

The Witness: I am merely giving what I learned and by reading, by contacts, and by attending classes while a member of the Communist Party. That is the extent of my knowledge on the subject. At these unit meetings within the various unions [6391] various issues before the union are discussed—for example, in my own Local 3 here in San Francisco at our unit meetings we would take up under discussion the regular order of business, coming negotiations with the shipowners, what attitude the Communist unit within the union would recommend or try to favor at the membership meeting. Also we would take up political issues. We used to get bulletins and directives from the county committee or from the waterfront section or with regard to certain political issues, such as the situation that existed in Spain or some other matter. We would discuss those and try to bring into the union meetings resolutions on these various political subjects in which the Communist Party was interested. We were bound to go into the union meeting and fight to maintain and put over the position and the line of the Communist Party and influence the membership of that organization to vote the way—on the basis of the decisions that had been either handed down to us or made in our own unit. So that is the way my experience has shown the Communist Party works within an individual trade union. And there are higher echelons, as I explained: the section committees, waterfront section, industrial section, and then the fractions within each labor group which meet and discuss those problems in much the same way as a unit and operate in much the same way as the unit.

Q. Mr. Rathborne, at any time has Mr. Bridges expressed his views to you on the relationship between the Communist Party [6392] and the trade union movement?

A. We have discussed the subject on a number of occasions, yes.

Q. Do you have any recollection of anything that may have been said by Mr. Bridges on that subject?

Mr. Hallinan: Might we have the time and place?

A. I have had a large number of discussions on the subject. I would say that the one that stands out, or more than one that stands out clearly was around in '36, when we used to discuss the activity and role of the Party on the waterfront and the desirability of making—building a strong Party movement there within the unions in order to bring the unions under unified leadership, that is, the leadership of the Communist Party. This particularly came about in connection with the Sailors' Union, where there was a considerable anti-Communist element led by Mr. Lundeberg, and there was a vigorous and vain effort made by the Communists to build up strength among the membership of the Sailors' Union, to try to overthrow Mr Lundeberg's policy and try to move him out of office. Those discussions, as I recall them, took place on various occasions in San Francisco in 1936.

Q. Can you recall specifically what Mr. Bridges may have said on that subject?

A. I can't recall his exact words, no, sir. I know we discussed the matter, the method of work, and the necessity for creating strong organization within the unions was discussed, but as [6393] far as the honor.

Mr. Donohue: I will withdraw the question, if your Honor please.

Q. To your knowledge, Mr. Rathborne, did Mr. Bridges ever receive any instructions with respect to exercising care or caution with respect to attendance at Communist Party meetings?

Mr. Hallinan: No proper foundation laid there, your Honor. He should state the basis for such information he had.

The Court: I take it the question asks for the basis or bases of the information. If you have any knowledge you may answer; if you haven't, of course you can say so.

A. On the matter of security precautions to be taken during the 1936-1937 strike, I was advised——

Mr. Hallinan: That is hearsay, your Honor. We details as to what he said and what I said, I don't have any independent, clear recollection.

Q. At any time, Mr. Rathborne, during the years that you were a member of the Communist Party did you ever publicly disclose the fact that you were a member of the Communist Party?

A. I did not, no, sir.

Q. At any time during the period that you were a member of the Communist Party did you ever receive any instructions with respect to keeping your Party membership secret or avoiding detection?

Mr. Hallinan: I object to that as calling for hearsay and not binding on these defendants, your are [6394] talking about Mr. Bridges, not this witness.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Do you know whether Mr. Bridges received any advice during this time, Mr. Rathborne?

Mr. Hallinan: I object to that on the ground that there is no foundation laid to show who was present when any conversation was had.

Mr. Donohue: I will withdraw the question.

Q. Mr. Rathborne, did you ever attend any of these meetings during the 1936-1937 strike up near the chocolate plant with Mr. Lambert or Mr. Schneidermann at which you entered the meeting with Mr. Bridges? A. I did.

Q. Was anything said as to the reason why you two went together?

A. Not particularly, not as to why we went together. Sometimes we went together and sometimes we went separately.

Q. At any time during that period of time did Mr. Bridges tell you anything about security?

A. I don't recall Mr. Bridges ever telling me anything like that.

Q. Mr. Rathborne, have you ever been convicted of a felony? A. No, sir.

Q. Did there come a time in your life when you were arrested for some offense?

A. Yes, there was.

Q. Will you tell us the nature of that offense and what [6395] happened?

A. In 1924 I was attending a radio school in Los Angeles, a YMCA radio school——

Q. How old were you then?

A. Nineteen, I believe. And I was a very avid radio amateur, and very much interested in radio, both as an avocation and a vocation, and I made the very serious mistake of trying to take some radio parts from the school that I attended. I was arrested and charged with this, whatever the charge was, and between the time——

Mr. Hallinan: Let us find out. Was he charged with electricity, radio or what? The charge was burglary. They know that. I think that is the only method the witness should have, your Honor, of telling what the charge was.

Mr. Donohue: You will have an opportunity to show it.

Mr. Hallinan: You know what it was. Why not come right out and let him say what it was?

Mr. Donohue: Was it first degree or second degree, Mr. Hallinan?

Mr. Hallinan: What difference does it make whether you commit burglary in the daytime or in the nighttime? Do you think it is more noble to do it in the daytime than in the night? If a man is a burglar, he is a burglar. We are not quarreling with him about that, but what we are going to quarrel about is that he is also a perjurer. [6396]

Mr. Donohue: May I again at this time ask your Honor to——

Mr. Hallinan: I think, your Honor, they have no right to quibble on anything like this. Counsel knows the nature of the charge. He knows when the witness says he has not been convicted of a felony that that is false, that that is perjury. He has been convicted of burglary. He knows it. We have the record. He hasn't any right to start this sort of explaining it in advance and exculpating it and excusing it as a means of getting rid of impeachment. [6397] I do not think counsel will even challenge the statement. The witness has been convicted of burglary in Los Angeles. Counsel extenuates it by saying it was second degree burglary: it happened in the daytime. It is still burglary. It is still a felony. And he has no right to have the witness told or advised it is not a felony.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor pleases, in the light of the injudicious statement made by Mr. Hallinan, I would like to call your Honor's attention to the fact that under Section 1203.4 of the Penal Code of California, reading from the 1949 edition, the California Code provides:

> "Every defendant who has fulfilled the conditions of his probation for the entire period thereof, or who shall have been discharged from probation prior to the termination of the period thereof, shall at any time thereafter be permitted by the court to withdraw his plea of guilty and enter a plea of not guilty, or if he has been convicted after a plea of not guilty, the court shall set aside the verdict of guilty, and in either case the court shall thereupon dis> miss the accusations or information against such defendant, who shall thereafter be released from all penalties and disabilities resulting from the offense or crime of which he has been convicted."

Mr. Hallinan: That doesn't make any difference, if the Court please. While it has been held that that relieves a [6398] person from the penal punishment, he is still guilty of the conviction of a felony within the meaning of the impeachment rules.

The Court: Was there a decree expunging the record?

Mr. Donohue: I am so informed and, of course, I shall present the entire record.

The Court: Present the matter in due course and I will make my ruling on it.

Mr. Donohue: May we have the recess at this time, if your Honor please?

The Court: Yes, we will recess until tomorrow morning at 10:00 o'clock, and may I admonish you to disregard the remarks, ladies and gentlemen, made by Mr. Hallinan, at this stage at least, until we have the record before us. May I have some quiet, please? Until such time as the record is before us and the status of this gentleman's record be determined with respect to any alleged felonious conviction or conviction for felonious conduct, that Mr. Hallinan's remark be disregarded by you, that is, his assertion that, first, this witness perjured himself, and, second, he was convicted of a felony. I ask you to disregard the suggestions made by Mr.

Hallinan. At a proper time he may examine the witness concerning the matter and at the proper time I assume Mr. Donohue will bring in the record.

Mr. Donohue: Yes, I will.

Mr. Hallinan: I think that the jury should be instructed to [6399] ignore Mr. Donohue's amelioration of the situation. Let the jury and the Court pass upon it themselves.

The Court: The whole matter may be ignored at this juncture until such time as we have the record before us.

May I again admonish you not to discuss the case under any conditions and not to form or express an opinion until the matter is submitted to you. You may now retire.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to tomorrow, Tuesday, February 28, at 10:00 o'clock a.m.) [6399-A]

Tuesday, February 28, 1950, 10:00 A.M.

The Clerk: United States of America vs. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, I think we ought to discuss the question of law involving the alleged conviction. I will ask your Honor to excuse the jury for a few minutes while we discuss that question of law.

The Court: I have undertaken to do some work last evening in association with my law clerk. I am prepared to rule on the matter. I do not think the matter will require extended argument.

Mr. Donohue: Very well, your Honor.

The Court: I shall rule on two cases——

Mr. Hallinan: I would like to make——

The Court: Would you like to argue the matter?

Mr. Hallinan: I would like to make some argument.

The Court: Have you considered People v. Mackey?

Mr. Hallinan: I do not remember the case offhand.

The Court: If it is only a question of convenience with respect to the jury, you can argue the matter now if you desire.

Mr. Donohue; Very well.

The Court: Or we can have the jury retire and recall them. I suppose under the circumstances the jury may retire momentarily during the pendency of this legal argument, and you will be [6400] called at the conclusion thereof. I again admonish you not to discuss the case under any circumstances.

> (Thereupon the jury retired from the courtroom and in their absence the following occurred:)

Mr. Donohue: I would like to offer the Court the record of the expungement (handing document to Court).

If your Honor pleases, at page 6397 of the record of yesterday Mr. Hallinan stated, "Counsel knows that when the witness says he has not been convicted of a felony"——

Mr. Hallinan: What page did you say that is?

Mr. Donohue: Page 6397. "Counsel knows that when the witness says he has not been convicted of a felony, that that is false, that this is perjury." I am sure your Honor has had——

Mr. Hallinan: It goes on: "He has been convicted of burglary,"

Mr. Donohue: I am sure your Honor has had called to your attention an article in 13 Cal. Law Review at page 301, from which I quote as follows:

> "A witness' character may be impeached by showing that he has been convicted of a felony. What is the conviction? The verdict of the jury or the judgment? The Court holds that the verdict of the jury is sufficient. If a witness has been convicted of a felony he may be impeached even though he has been pardoned. A pardon does [6401] not blot out guilt. How about probation? In view of the large number of probationers the question is of some practical importance. In People v. Mackey the court held that a witness who had been granted probation, which he had successfully completed, could not be impeached for conviction of a felony. Suppose, however, the question is asked the witness. What should be his reply? The only way in that case to keep the impeaching fact from the jury would be to deny that he had ever been convicted."

And I am sure it is unnecessary for me to call your Honor's attention to the Mackey case, because I am sure your Honor has read it, but to read briefly from the pertinent opinion, reading from page 131——

Mr. Hallinan: What is the citation, please, and the date of the decision?

Mr. Donohue: 58 Cal. App. Rep. 1922; reading from page 131: After a lengthy argument the Court concluded:

> "On the whole we conclude that the legislature intended by the enactment of Section 1203 that no convicted person discharged after probation thenceforth should be regarded as one possessed of the degree of turpitude likely to affect his credibility as a witness. The trial court did not err in excluding the record against Rustin."

And, of course, as your Honor will recall, Rustin was the principal witness against the appellant in the case of People v. [6402] Mackey. And I am sure your Honor has considered the fact that the purpose of this statute is like the purpose of a probation act itself. Its purpose is to rehabilitate one who has been convicted of an offense, including felony, the circumstances being such as upon careful inquiry and investigation a report by a probationary officer to the court persuades the court that in the absence of the imposition of any sentence which may be served, that the ends of justice are satisfied by the court's placing the accused on probation and giving him an opportunity to rehabilitate himself. And as your Honor knows, the advantage which accrues to one in that position from that section of the California Penal Code to which reference has been made continues to attach with him forever unless and until there may come a time when once again he may be charged with an offense, and then as we must concede by the authorities from California courts, that should one in that position again commit an offense, the purposes of the statute are not then met by permitting him to deny the prior conviction. If he were accused of crime and were a party defendant, then the purpose of the statute would not be served in permitting him to deny that he had ever been convicted of an offense, including a felony. But unless and until that situation arises, such a person is entitled to all the benefits of the statute. Of course, the witness is not on trial. He is here as a witness and not as a defendant. I therefore most respectfully say to [6403] your Honor that for the purposes of impeachment, the witness Rathborne has not been convicted of a felony, and I most respectfully say to your Honor that he has not committed perjury when within the purview of the law he has denied a conviction of a felony, and I therefore respectfully ask your Honor to say to the jury that the witness Rathborne under California law has not been convicted of a felony and his credibility may not be thus impeached nor has he committed perjury when he denied that conviction.

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, could I have an opportunity to look at this review of the two documents counsel has, and if I may have a few minutes, I may find something that will be of help. [6404]

Mr. Donohue: I might add, if your Honor pleases, just one more thought. There is a rather well established principle of law which is based in soundness and reason, and in support of which there are many sighted authorities, and I quote only the principle from 70 Corpus Juris at page 871:

> "An inquiry into the character of a witness must relate and be confined to a time so recent as to throw some light on his present character. Questions as to conduct so remote as not reasonably to bear on his present character being improper. What constitutes remoteness as to justify exclusion of a question is a matter for the court's discretion."

In that light I call your Honor's attention to the fact that the incident sought here by way of impeachment occurred nearly 26 years ago, at a time when the witness was then 19 years of age; and I most certainly say to your Honor that the theory of remoteness is like the principle upon which the expunging statute of California is based, and that is upon the theory that one should be entitled to an opportunity to rehabilitate himself, and having done so, he ought not to be impeached by an offense committed more than a quarter of a century ago, particularly when the offense was committed at a very youthful age.

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, on this Mackey case I know I have had the experience of having the opposite pointed out in a criminal case, that even though a person had been granted [6405] probation, there had been an expunging, that he could still be confronted with this. I notice that the decision that counsel cites is in June, 1922, and I would feel sure there have been further adjudications on the matter since that time. I would like to have any discussion on that reserved until the afternoon recess. We may be able to find something on this, unless you have satisfied yourself in advance that there is nothing. Of course, counsel's statement about the antiquity of the charge is in sharp contrast to the degree of inquiry that he instituted with regard to the alleged desertion by Bob Robertson years before that, when he was 19 or 20, or 21. And counsel persisted and persisted, although the witness testified, the defendant testified he had bought his way out of the army or out of the navy and in trying to show or trying to raise an implication that the record contained an allegation of desertion. So he is scarcely in a good position to take the position of the "poor boy" being revived by his diligence and going down here since this indictment and having the record expunged. In other words, the expunging the defendant in this case, the defendant in the case that we are discussing now, Rathborne, having pleaded guilty to a felony, to wit, burglary, and being put on probation—nothing is ever done about that until the year 1941. In the meantime the witness has voted.

Mr. MacInnis: 1949.

Mr. Hallinan: 1949, I mean. The witness has voted, he [6406] has made affidavits he hasn't ever been convicted of a felony, and everything else of the same nature. Then, undoubtedly with the connivance of the prosecuting officers in this case, in September, 1949, an expunging order is made. Now, I am not sure even if the Court would have jurisdiction any longer to do that. But it is apparently the rule that to testify against Bridges, the crooked path becomes straight and the rough road becomes smooth, and I would like the opportunity at noontime, if the Court please, to look into that a little further and see if by this late maneuver they can remove the impeaching evidence or the implications of it.

Mr. MacInnis: I would like to add something further to that, your Honor. Now, in the course of this trial from time to time where legal objections have been made one way or the other, we have had occasion to cite California cases and California code sections, and invariably when we do so, the prosecutors in this case arose and informed your Honor that this was a federal case and that probably we weren't used to federal procedure, and that the California law, while persuasive, was not binding upon the federal court. And often the Court—and I am not commenting now upon the propriety of those rulings sustained the prosecution, upon the theory that California authority would not be binding upon your Honor.

Now, we come to the one situation in which the federal code itself holds entirely differently to the California law. [6407] It is fundamental that under the law of California a man is only convicted of a felony in certain circumstances, outlined by the California code. For example, if a man is found guilty of burglary, but if the trial judge satisfies himself there are some extenuating circumstances and gives the man a year in the county jail and suspends the penitentiary term, then that is not a felony conviction in the State of California. However, according to the Federal Code, the test of what is a felony and what is not a felony is determined by the punishment for which the act is susceptible. In other words, if the punishing or penal clause of the code section states that the act can be punished by a penitentiary sentence, then the act in federal court contemplation becomes a, felony.

Now, there is introduced by the special prosecutor the California code section, I think he said it was 1203 of the Penal Code, which permits under certain circumstances the expunging of a record. Now, I am very frank to concede that in all respects as would involve the civil status of the man involved, the expungement of the record would erase his character as a felon. He could vote, he could own property, he could have all the ordinary incidents of the citizenship. But can that code section wipe out something which existed as a fact in the past? I think that the prosecutor asks you and asks us to go a long way with an astounding distinction, which is almost metaphysical in its content, because here is what he says. Back [6408] in 1924 Mervyn Rathborne was convicted of a felony. Now we come to a period right there. Anybody who looked up the record of Mervyn Rathborne at that time would see this man has been convicted of a felony and that's all there is to it. He was given probation, which does not militate against the character of his act remaining a felony. So, many years passed. Twenty years passed. And all of that time Mervyn Rathborne was a convicted felon. That was a fact that was true during all of those stages of his life. But then Mervyn Rathborne was produced in May of 1949 before the grand jury in this federal court as a witness against Harry Bridges. At that time he was still a convicted felon. Nothing whatever had been done to that record. So upon the threshold of this trial, on September 12 of 1949, with the Bridges trial in preparation, with Rathborne a contemplated witness, Rathborne is taken down to Los Angeles and some application is made, and we are certain that it was made by persons connected with this case—and now after the passage of all those years, suddenly that man is no longer a felon. Well, I just cannot follow that. I certainly don't claim that the expungement of the record does not restore to him his civil rights, but that man cannot say in this court with any standing that for twenty-odd years of his life he did not exist in this community or any other community as a convicted felon. Rathborne was convicted of a felony. Now that is the question which is the classic impeaching question. Whatever his status may be [6409] now, I suppose can be shown in amelioration of that fact; but Rathborne was nevertheless convicted of a felony and that is all there is to it.

The Court: Counsel, much of what you might say as to the philosophy underlying the rule no doubt was addressed to the District Court of Appeals in the case of People v. Mackey in 58 California App. 123 at page 128, wherein the language which was mentioned was particularly pointed out.

Mr. MacInnis: Yes.

The Court: The judge, as I recall, in that decision, reached the conclusion that the prior record of conviction was not admissible against the alleged felon or person convicted of felonious conduct. He reached that conclusion after considerable argument and after a rather lengthy opinion. Now, true enough, in these courts we look to our own decisions, but here in this ~~instance~~ we have penal code section 1203 subdivision 4, a rehabilitation section. From the offer made to the Court, it appears to the Court that Judge Robert Scott, on a date mentioned in the transcription of the record, duly and regularly expunged the conviction of felony. Thus automatically there was a restoration of all the rights and privileges and benefits to which Mr. Rathborne may have been theretofore denied. The effect of that decree, I take it, operates immediately and retraces the steps to the time of the original conviction, notwithstanding the intervening years and notwithstanding the [6410] vicissitudes, both socially and economically, as well as politically perhaps, that may have entered into the man's career during the intervening years.

Now, apart from our research under the California law we encountered the following decisions which seemed to fortify the conclusion which I have reached. Judge Yankwich, in the case of In Re Ringnalda, 48 Fed. Sup. 975, "with approval from the Mackey holding in connection with the naturalization of an alien whose conviction of a crime had been wiped out or expunged by application of Section 1203, subdivision 4 of the California Penal Code section. Thereafter the court granted citizenship to the applicant.

Also, the late Judge St. Sure, who as you may recall, presided over these courts many, many years, reached a similar conclusion in the case of In Re Paoli, reported at 49 Fed. Sup. 128, following the provision of Section 1203, subdivision 4 of the Penal Code.

Mr. MacInnis: What was the issue in that case, Judge?

The Court: Practically the same.

Mr. MacInnis: Was that a citizenship hearing?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. MacInnis: In other words, the man's status as a felon was in issue but not the impeaching question?

The Court: Yes. Now, I am prepared to rule, gentlemen, under the Mackey case. [6411]

Mr. MacInnis: All right. May I say one more thing, Judge?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. MacInnis: Now, your Honor, in reading the document offered today, a certified copy of this order expunging the record of Mervyn Rathborne, it was said that the order in its effect would retrace its steps over the years, that it would be retroactive.

Now, I have had some practical experience with those orders and I know they are not retroactive, and I will give you the practical analogy.

I represented a man, oh, within the last year or so, who had applied for a job with the State of California. It was determined that he had been convicted of a felony many years ago. He had had the record expunged, so he made an answer in his application that he had never been convicted of a felony. The State of California took the position that the order was not retroactive at all, that the order restored him to his status as a citizen, the order made him in effect no longer a felon, but that there was a period of time in which he had been a convicted felon.

Now, it is just like Mervyn Rathborne. Now, if this order had a recital that it was made nunc pro tunc as of 1924, then it would be a retroactive order. But that we, in this tribunal, should for the sake of rehabilitating this man called Mervyn Rathborne, read a retroactive inference into that is astounding.

The Court: There is nothing astounding about an interpretation [6412] on the part of this Court with respect to a California Penal Code section. That section is incorporated in the statutory law as the result of legislation on the subject. I am interpreting it in the light of the California decisions in the Mackey case and in the light of the interpretations placed upon it by two distinguished judges of these courts. Now, there is nothing startling about it. As I see it, it is a plain question of application of judicial rule. Nor do I see anything amazing about it. Those statutes were incorporated for the benign influence of rehabilitation. Now, whether the application was made in 1949, 1939 or any other date may be regarded as purely accidental or coincidental.

Mr. MacInnis: Well, it is not accidental with the government——

The Court: Well, it may well be—not affecting the prime rights of the parties.

Mr. MacInnis: Well, it is hardly accidental that it be determined that the government prosecutors arranged for this man to have this record expunged. [6413]

The Court: Counsel, I do not know that. Your statement has been made by Mr. Hallinan. I do not know the facts, whether Mr. Rathborne appeared individually or whether he appeared in association with any counsel.

Mr. MacInnis: What do you think his reason would be to wait until the year 1949 in September to make this application?

The Court: I have no idea. I am ruling on this matter on the evidence before me.

Mr. MacInnis: Of course, there is another facet to the problem, your Honor, if I may add that to what has already been said. We are not confronted here with a situation which might have arisen under your present ruling if the witness Rathborne had been asked the simple question on cross-examination, "Have you been convicted of a felony?" Our attention is directed to this whole incident on direct examination by the prosecutor, who brought out from the witness the fact that he had pleaded guilty to the crime of burglary. Now, that is the situation we are in now, and having opened that subject it can hardly be foreclosed by this happy production of a record, however incidental, coincidental, or what the intervention of the Government may have been.

The Court: You offer that transcript in evidence, Mr. Donohue?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: It may be received and marked in evidence. [6414]

(The record referred to was marked U. S. Exhibit No. 40 in evidence.)

Mr. MacInnis: I would suggest this, your Honor, in view of the manner in which this incident came before us: that your Honor withhold any ruling until questions be put to the witness himself so that objections can then be made and rulings made by the Court, because we are apparently discussing now, however much we may disagree with each other, a purely hypothetical matter. There is no question here.

The Court: Not altogether, counsel, for the reason that Mr. Hallinan late yesterday afternoon said to the witness Rathborne, or at least charged the witness Rathborne with committing perjury in the presence of the jury. Now, under those circumstances I feel that the matter should receive prompt disposition and such clarification made as may be in keeping with the record and in the light of the law as I read it, and I intend to make prompt disposition of this matter.

Mr. MacInnis: Let me be prompt, then, to assure your Honor we will demonstrate further evidences of perjury out of the lips of the same witness.

The Court: Counsel, I shall meet these matters as they arise step by step. At the present time there is only one matter before me. I accordingly rule that the matter of the charge made by Mr. Hallinan in open court and in the presence of the jury that Mr. Rathborne had committed perjury in connection [6415] with his testimony late yesterday afternoon was improper, and I accordingly——

Mr. Hallinan: Might I make this suggestion, Judge: We have a record, gotten some time back, of Rathborne's conviction. We never knew about this expunging thing until it was produced this morning.

The Court: Nor did I. I said yesterday afternoon if counsel produced a record expunging the prior conviction, that I would entertain the matter and rule upon it. Now I am ruling.

Mr. Hallinan: What I am discussing now is the type of language that you employ in discussing the matter. In other words, to say the thing is improper, the allegation that there was a conviction of a felony with the information we had—we had no idea that the prosecution had taken the step to expunge this record at so late a date—we have the record; I have it with me, a certified copy of the transcript received some months ago prior to this September date, showing merely the conviction of a felony. Therefore, we simply made the charge in good faith, without any notice, although I would have asserted the same thing, arguing with the Court and discussing it with the Court, however; but we had no knowledge that they had taken any such procedure as they have taken.

Mr. MacInnis: In other words, your Honor, at the time we saw the record it was a judicial fact that Mervyn Rathborne was a convicted felon, and on that basis the offer and the [6416] statement was made.

The Court: Counsel, the order made by Hon. Robert Scott is an official record of the courts in Los Angeles and public notice and knowledge is given to all official records. Therefore it is presumed you had notice and knowledge of that record expunging.

Mr. Hallinan: The Government did not trouble to send us a copy when it obtained this expungement for Mr. Rathborne.

The Court: That may be.

Mr. Hallinan: I do not think we can be charged as individuals with the contents of the criminal records of the County of Los Angeles. There are a great number of cases that hold for certain purposes a recordation of a public document is notice, but it is always notice to a particular person who is put upon inquiry on the matter.

The Court: Mr. Hallinan, do you not agree at this stage of the proceeding that it is only fair and proper that this Court instruct the jury that the charge made by you that Mr. Rathborne had committed perjury in connection with his answer made yesterday afternoon should be stricken from the record and that they should be admonished to disregard the same?

Mr. Hallinan: If your Honor is going to give an admonition it should be along those lines. It should not involve a criticism of us in the matter, because so far as the information we had, there was no such document as this extant. [6417]

The Court: Call the jury.

(Thereupon the jury returned to the courtroom and the following proceedings were had in their presence:)

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, at this state of the proceedings I desire to instruct you, in addition to the instructions which I gave you last evening, that the statement made in court and in your presence that Mr. Rathborne had committed perjury in this court in connection with any alleged prior conviction of a felony should be dismissed from your minds and stricken from the record. I accordingly readmonish you to do that, to ignore any such assertion made. I think for the present that will suffice, unless counsel for the Government requests an additional instruction or admonition.

Mr. Donohue: Not at this time, if your Honor please.

The Court: All right; you may proceed.

MERVYN RATHBORNE

Direct Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Mr. Rathborne, returning again to the time of the national CIO convention in Philadelphia, do you recall testifying yesterday that you did not attend that convention? A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. You testified yesterday that you received during the period of that convention a telephone call from Phil Connally and a telephone call from Mr. Bridges?

Mr. Hallinan: I object to this, if your Honor please. [6418] Most of it has been asked and answered. The questions are in their present form leading.

The Court: The question is leading. You might answer.

A. I recall testifying to that effect, yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue:) I would like to ask, at or about that same time you received another phone call from some other person? A. I did.

Q. And from whom?

A. From Mr. Roy Hudson.

Q. Now, following the closing of that convention did you attend a meeting in San Francisco with reference to the incidents which occurred at that convention? A. I did.

Q. Where and when was that meeting held, Mr. Rathborne?

A. The meeting was held shortly after the delegates who were present at the convention at Philadelphia returned to California, to San Francisco here; I would say approximately three or four days, possibly a week.

Q. Where in San Francisco was that meeting held?

A. At a home on Pierce Street, I believe.

Q. Do you recall by whom you were informed as to that meeting?

A. Yes, I recall that. During the period from the time I received the information from Philadelphia until after the delegates returned, I remained in my home in San Carlos and did not go near the office, because I did not want to let people know around the CIO how I felt about the thing until I had an opportunity to cool off and talk to the people who came back from Philadelphia. I was called at my home by Mr. Schneidermann, who said——

Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute. I object to this as hearsay, if the Court please.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): In consequence of the phone call from Mr. Schneiderman what then did you do?

A. I attended a meeting that Mr. Schneidermann has notified me about on the telephone at this place on Pierce Street.

Q. Who was present, Mr. Rathborne?

A. I recall Philip Connally, Slim Connally was there, George Wilson, Lou Goldblatt, Bill Schneidermann, and I an reasonably sure David Hedley was there; and there were several others, I believe

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

—my recollection is that Paul Schnurr, Sandra Martin were also there, but I am not positive of that.

Q. Were any one of the defendants here present at that meeting?

A. I believe Mr. Robertson was there, but again I am not certain of that.

Q. Can you recall what was said by any person or persons at that meeting?

A. Yes, I recall it very clearly because of my feeling on the matter after I had been advised what had taken place. Mr. Schneidermann opened the meeting with a discussion or a talk telling us what the Party line was at that time and what he— [6420]

Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute. We object to this, if the Court pleases. In the first place, it has not been shown that any of the defendants was there.

Mr. Donohue: The witness has said——

Mr. Hallinan: He says he thinks Robertson was there, but that it is not enough to establish that fact.

Mr. Donohue: He said his best recollection is Mr. Robertson was there.

The Court: Let us ask him again and see.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): What is your recollection as to whether or not Mr. Robertson was present?

A. It is my recollection that he was there.

Mr. Hallinan: He would be bound to answer it that way, given such opportunity; but originally the answer was not that.

The Court: I didn't hear you.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Hallinan: I said he would be bound to fill it in that way, but his original answer was he thought; he wasn't sure whether he was or was not.

Mr. MacInnis: May we have the date of this alleged meeting?

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): What is your best recollection of the date, Mr. Rathborne?

A. The best way I can place the date, I would say within two weeks after the convention, this national CIO convention that was held in Philadelphia. It was a few days after the delegates returned from that convention, which I would say would put it [6421] within two weeks after that convention.

Q. What is your best recollection as to what was said by anybody who was present?

A. As I said before, Mr. Schneidermann opened the meeting with a statement of what the position, line, decision of the Communist Party at that time was in relation to this matter, in relation to the attitude of the Party for the CIO, and that position as he stated it was that it is obligatory upon the Communists to work closely and for unity with what he called the center forces of the CIO, which he typified by Philip Murray; that unity was essential for the war effort and essential so that they could influence the center forces and help isolate the right-wing forces. This particular decision to remove Slim Connally and substitute him with Thimmes as president came from the national office of the Party, and it was in the furtherance of this policy or this line that Mr. Schneidermann laid down, it was a decision that had been gone over in Philadelphia with the California people there, and it was final, and so far as the purposes of the meeting was concerned, it was to clarify the reasons for the decision; and that that was as much as the meeting could do, that there was no—the decision could not be changed.

Then following that there was considerable discussion by quite a number of people including myself. I raised some very strong objections to it. The objections were along the same lines as I stated here yesterday, as I gave to Mr. Bridges at [6422] the meeting in his office some time later.

Q. Do you recall anything said by anybody else?

A. I recall that Slim Connally reported on the meeting that was held in Philadelphia, and the burden of the discussion there, and reported that he was satisfied with the decision and that he intended to carry it out; and that was the way we should proceed, was to have unity with the right and center forces, and the best way to do that in California would be to offer to one of Phil Murray's men, namely, Thimmes, the presidency of the State CIO as a practical way of demonstrating the desire for this unity with the so-called center or Murray forces in the CIO.

Q. As a matter of fact, was this meeting which you are now discussing held prior to the time when Mr. Thimmes actually did replace Mr. Connally?

A. Yes, Mr. Connally resigned at an Executive Board meeting of the State CIO held in Los Angeles I think in March—I am not certain as to the month—in March of 1944. At least early in 1944.

Q. Were you present at that meeting in Los Angeles, Mr. Rathborne? A. I was.

Q. Upon the resignation of Mr. Connally what action was taken by the CIO Executive Board?

A. The motion—when Mr. Connally resigned somebody took the chair—I believe Mr. Zussman—and he called for a motion for [6423] the election—for the nomination of an acting president, and thereupon Mr. Thimmes was nominated and was elected by, I believe, the unanimous vote of the Executive Board to serve in Mr. Connally's place until the next convention.

Q. Do you recall whether Mr. Bridges was present at that 1944 meeting in Los Angeles?

A. I don't recall him being there. I don't believe he was. My best recollection is he was not.

Q. Mr. Rathborne, on some occasion yesterday you testified as to membership on a unit, sometimes referred to as God's Committee. How often did that organization or that unit meet?

A. It was scheduled as a regular weekly affair. It was a regular weekly meeting. However, there were occasions when weekly meetings were not held by virtue of conventions, absence from town, people in other regions.

Q. Was your attendance at the meetings of that committee fairly regular?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. It was quite regular during the periods I was in San Francisco.

Q. Over what period of time can you now tell us was it that you were a member of this committee?

A. The committee—that particular group, I believe was organized in 1944 or thereabouts, and I functioned with it until sometime in 1946. I would say about two years. That is approximate, [6424] though.

Q. Mr. Rathborne, how do you distinguish between the top Communist Party fraction in the CIO, which you have heretofore described as God's Committee?

A. Well, the State CIO top fraction technically consisted of only the members of the State CIO Executive Board and the officers of the State CIO who were also Communist Party members. The so-called God's Committee or special committee consisted of those people I have just described who resided in San Francisco or near by, plus a number of local people connected with the San Francisco CIO Council and some of the unions here.

Q. Then membership on the God's Committee was restricted to persons in Northern California or in the Bay Area?

A. I would say on the San Francisco side, because on the Oakland side they had another committee known as the Joe Hill Committee, which functioned on that side of the bay, much the same as God's Committee did on our side.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Was Mr. Bridges a member of God's Committee? A. No, sir, he was not.

Q. What if any was the relationship of Mr. Bridges to God's Committee?

Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute. I object to that as calling for the opinion and conclusion of the witness, if your Honor please. It is not a matter that he knows. If he wants to state a conversation or lay a further foundation——

Mr. Donohue: I will withdraw the [6425] question.

Q. Mr. Rathborne, did you ever discuss any of the activities of God's Committee with Mr. Bridges?

A. I did. [6425-A]

Q. Will you state the circumstances and reasons for such discussion?

A. From time to time I would see Mr. Bridges and relate to him some of the things that had happened at the meetings of this so-called God's Committee.

Q. Would you do so alone or were you ever accompanied by anyone else?

A. Some cases I did it alone, some cases Mr. Schneidermann and I would call on Mr. Bridges at his office usually and discuss the matters with him that have been taken up by this committee.

Q. How frequently would you say that either you alone or in company with Mr. Schneidermann discussed with Mr. Bridges the activities of the so-called God's Committee?

A. Oh, I—the best way I can answer that is to say on a number of occasions over that period of time. In other words, we kept him advised; that is, I kept him advised of what was going on, what the decisions were, and what the discussion was from time to time.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Was there ever any discussion between you and Mr. Bridges as to why Mr. Bridges was not meeting with the God's Committee?

A. No, not particularly.

Mr. Donohue: This is a convenient breaking place, if Your Honor pleases, if we may take the morning recess.

The Court: All right. We will take the morning recess [6426] ladies and gentlemen; the same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Recess.)

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, Your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Rathborne, when did you first publicly declare your membership in the Communist Party?

A. The first time, I believe was at the grand jury proceedings in May of last year.

Q. May of 1949? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you prior to that time ever denied under oath that you were a member of the Communist Party? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hallinan: Wait a minute, wait just a minute. What was that?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Donohue: Would you read the question for Mr. Hallinan, please?

(Record read.)

Mr. Hallinan: Denied under oath that he was a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. Donohue: Why, certainly, Mr. Hallinan; you knew that, didn't you?

Mr. Hallinan: This witness?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, this witness. [6427]

May I proceed, Your Honor?

Mr. Hallinan: Now, what about that perjury statement, Your Honor, that we raised here?

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, Your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me please. I think at this time we should make a formal request that Your Honor now recall the admonition given to the jury that this witness had not committed perjury.

The Court: Counsel, the motion is denied. Proceed, Mr. Donohue.

Q. (Mr. Donohue): Would you state where and when you so testified, Mr. Rathborne?

A. I gave testimony before what was known as the Dies Committee, I believe the Un-American Activities Committee, and also before what was known as the Tenney Committee.

Q. Was that testimony given in Washington or in California?

Mr. Hallinan: Now, just a moment. Object to this as leading. I think we ought to get the circumstances from the witness.

The Court: All right.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Will you relate the circumstances as to time and place and before what body?

A. Some time in 1940, I believe, I was subpoenaed by the Dies Committee, the Un-American Activities Committee which is a committee of Congress to appear in Washington, D. C., at a [6428] hearing or proceeding they were holding. I did appear and testified there. Some time later, I think it was in 1941, I was subpoenaed to appear before the Tenney Committee which is a committee set up by the California Legislature to appear in San Francisco. I appeared at hearings of that committee and testified.

Q. Now, will you state to His Honor, and to the ladies and gentlemen of the jury the reasons for your denying your membership in the Communist Party before both the House Un-American Activities Committee and the Tenney Committee?

Mr. Hallinan: Now just a minute. Object to that, if the Court please, as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial. The witness has no right to exculpate himself. First he is freed of a burglary charge and now he is going to be freed of a perjury charge on some sort of an explanation. Now, he hasn't any right to make such explanation, if the Court please, particularly on direct examination. Here, if this witness has testified falsely that he was not a member of the Communist Party at a time that he has just sworn before this jury he was, then that is proper impeachment. But it is nothing for these people to now take and allow him to give some sort of explanation as to why he committed perjury.

Mr. Donohue: I submit, if Your Honor pleases, the witness has the right to answer the question as to why he so testified in 1940 and 1941.

The Court: Objection overruled. [6429]

A. I testified to the question, to the effect that, "Are you a member of the Communist Party?" and I gave my answer as "No," because at that time I considered myself to be a good Communist and I was acting under Communist Party instructions. I was advised by the Communist Party that the——

Mr. Hallinan: Now, wait a minute. Object to this, if the Court please, as hearsay. He was advised by the Communist Party!

Mr. Donohue: I submit it is proper, if Your Honor pleases. He was a member of the Communist Party, he had attended their schools, he had discussed——

Mr. Hallinan: This is a matter of hearsay, if the Court please.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, then, at least, if Your Honor please, a party can not advise anybody. Let the gentleman give the names of the persons who advised him.

The Court: All right.

A. (Continuing): In connection with the appearance before the Dies Committee, I consulted with Mr. Hudson of New York——

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. Let me get that, will you, a minute? What Mr. Hudson is that?

The Witness: Mr. Roy Hudson of New York.

A. (Continuing): And advised him of the fact that I had been subpoenaed and that I was going to appear, that I had to appear under the subpoena—— [6430]

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. I missed that.

Mr. Donohue: Would you read back what the witness said, Mr. Reporter?

(Record read.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Will you continue, Mr. Rathborne?

A. And in that particular instance, naturally the question came up, because the Dies Committee at that time was carrying on an investigation into alleged subversive activities, as to whether I would be asked whether I was a member of the Communist Party. And he advised me to answer "No," and he told me that the Dies Committee was a part of the—as he put it, capitalist state that was suppressing the working classes and that we should have no respect for them and not to—committing perjury under those circumstances was an act that was looked on with favor by the Communist Party. And further told me that as far as the state setup, the setup of the state was concerned, that is, the legislative, judicial branches of the government, they were merely the means of suppressing the working people, used by the capitalists in order to keep the working people under subjection, keep them from taking over the ownership of the means of production and so on and so forth.

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. Are we having now an answer to what Mr. Hudson told him at this time?

Mr. Donohue: That's right.

Mr. Hallinan: In other words, the gentleman hasn't discovered [6431] this in the seven years that he had been in the Communist Party up to that time? That is all I wanted to find out.

Mr. Donohue: He hasn't said.

Mr. Hallinan: That he was having a refresher course, I take it, in perjury.

Mr. Donohue: He hasn't said that, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, let's go on; it's interesting.

Mr. Donohue: Why don't you let us go on?

A. (Continuing): I discussed this at some length with Mr. Hudson. It was a very serious thing, and I asked what the justification was; why, if I was to carry out my responsibilities, I should put myself in this position. We had considerable discussion about it. I believe it lasted for a good part of an evening. On the second occasion I consulted with Mr. Schneidermann here in San Francisco, and while I didn't have any prolonged discussion with him, as I had with Mr. Hudson, he advised me——

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. Object to this as hearsay also, if the Court please, and furthermore, Your Honor, that neither Mr. Hudson or Mr. Schneidermann has the right to advise any person to commit perjury, nor can a person commit perjury and then remove himself, exculpate himself by putting it on the shoulders of some person he said advised him. In other words, under such circumstances, both persons would equally be guilty of a felony. [6432]

Mr. Donohue: So what?

Mr. Hallinan: Well, of course, go right ahead. He is just in line with some of the other gentlemen who have preceded him. I shouldn't have been surprised, but I am, a little bit.

A. (Continuing): On the second occasion I consulted with Mr. Schneidermann regarding the Tenney Committee appearance and he gave me the same instructions, the same advice, to deny my membership in the Communist Party.

Q. What had you been taught as to your responsibility to the party, in the Communist Party schools which you attended with respect to admitting or denying your membership in the Communist Party?

Mr. Hallinan: Now just a moment, if the Court please. Object to that as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, and it is no justification for a man to say that he has been taught a thing to excuse perjury. If this gentleman has committed perjury on two occasions as he has stated he has done so, he can not justify or excuse himself by saying he was taught that in some school. Now, he has been taught differently, I take it, in other schools, and it is no justification what he has been taught or what he has not been taught. In other words, Your Honor, if he is merely a member of the conspiracy to commit perjury, if he is a co-conspirator to commit perjury either in this case, as we believe and feel, or before the Dies Committee in conjunction with Mr. Hudson or other members of the Communist Party, and Mr. [6433] Schneidermann, that does not excuse him. It is the law that where persons advise, aid, abet and assist others in the commission of crimes, they are all principals. Now, if this gentleman is a felon and a perjurer, he can not excuse himself by saying somebody else advised, abetted and aided him in committing his perjury. There is no justification in that at all.

The Court: Mr. Hallinan, I am limiting this testimony with respect to the alleged internal operations of the Communist Party, and instructions, if any, received by this man with respect to the situation then confronting him, and for that purpose only.

Mr. Hallinan: Might I ask this, Your Honor: For what purpose can that be a justification? Suppose he says, "Some other scoundrel as black as myself, advised me to commit perjury. Therefore I am freed from any culpability." What is the purpose of bringing in these other people? Does it excuse him being a perjurer? Does it make him any the less a felon or a liar that somebody else told and advised and instructed him to do so? Now, it might all be very well if he is so weak and so insipid and such a fool that he has taken somebody else's advice as to what he shall do to excuse himself in a moral sense. But it doesn't excuse him in the sense in which he is brought here as a witness, and it doesn't make him any the less a felon, a liar and a perjurer. Why, here Mr. Donohue told us last night that Mr. Bridges on the witness stand said that this [6434] man was a thief, a drunk, a liar and a perjurer. Well, the only thing that we haven't gotten that he has admitted now is a drunk, so far.

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, I think that it is my duty under the law, and under my oath, as I perceive it, to instruct you to disregard the remarks of Mr. Hallinan in their full contents. The testimony, as I told you at the start, the threshold of this case, and as I will tell you when we finally conclude and I finally instruct you, comes from the witnesses and not from the arguments of counsel, not from the declarations made in open court, not from invective or not from any other matters that may be contained in the remarks made by Mr. Hallinan. True enough, the background of this witness has been exposed to us, both to the Court and to the jury, by reason of statements made off the witness stand and in open court. This witness, equally with the litigant in this case, is entitled to some degree of protection at the hands of this Court, and he will receive that protection. Now you may proceed.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Would you continue—

Mr. Hallinan: I might suggest, Your Honor, that the exposure of the burglary and the perjury comes from the witness' own examiner; it is not cross-examination; it is not charges made by us.

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, I admonish you that the last remark of Mr. Hallinan represents misconduct [6435] with respect to any alleged burglary. During the recess period, while you retired, this Court heard legal argument. At that time I considered the law under Section 1203.4 of the Penal Code of the State of California. That is a rehabilitation section. The legislature of the State of California, in a benign way, has seen fit to incorporate under the penal statutes, a section wherein a person theretofore either convicted of felonious conduct or entering a plea thereto, might in terms of rehabilitation receive after the full probationary period has expired, a certificate from the trial court wherein he first appeared. That certificate has been received in this case. The record has been expunged of any alleged felonious conduct. This witness may not be impeached with respect to that particular transaction. Mr. Hallinan is mindful of that statement.

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me, Your Honor. Might I make one suggestion?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Hallinan: Now, you have two elements involved in the conviction: You have the act of burglary and the conviction of a felony. The conviction of a felony, the effects of it, may be wiped away, wiped out by the decision of the court, but the act of burglary is not wiped out by the decision of the court. For instance, the commission of perjury in 1940 can not be prosecuted in the court because that statute of limitations has expired.

The Court: Mr. Hallinan, without again unduly interrupting [6436] you, I told you when we had the legal argument that I would meet each point as it arose.

Mr. Hallinan: But you get my point, Your Honor, the distinction between the two.

The Court: Just a moment. In fairness to the Court, I have reached the initial point, and I ruled under the matter presented to me. I instructed the jury. Now, proceed.

Mr. Hallinan: Very well.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Would you continue——

Mr. Hallinan: We enter an exception to the Court's admonition to the jury.

The Court: You have an exception as a matter of law, to any and all rulings of this Court.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Would you continue, Mr. Rathborne, where you left off?

A. I have forgotten what the question was.

Q. The question was, what were you taught in the Communist schools which you attended and by the Communist literature which you read with respect to the subject matter of concealing your own membership in the Communist Party?

Mr. Hallinan: Well, now, if the Court please, we object to that upon the further ground that it is not the best evidence, that if he has read some books, let's see these books that are supposed to justify him. We further object to his calling for hearsay, opinion and conclusion of the witness; it is incompetent, [6437] irrelevant and immaterial what he was taught or what reasons he had.

Mr. Donohue: If Your Honor pleases, the motive, the state of mind of this witness when he testified in 1940 and 1941 with respect to these membership matters in the Communist Party is a matter to which he is now entitled to state. Mr. Hallinan makes the mistake of forgetting—and it is an advised mistake—that the witness is not on trial, the three defendants are on trial.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, and it is strange. In other words, the three defendants are charged with perjury and they are on trial; the witness comes up and admits perjury and is not on trial. Counsel is correct in saying that. But the fact that I should forget it is not so strange.

Mr. Donohue: In the light of that statement, if Your Honor pleases, I think Your Honor should refresh Mr. Hallinan's recollection — though it doesn't need it because he inadvertently stated it a moment ago—that this offense committed in 1940 and 1941, and not discovered by the government until 1949, is barred by the statute of limitations and we couldn't prosecute Mr. Rathborne even if we desired to.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Hallinan: We grant that. That was the point I made.

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, Your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Rathborne, would you proceed? [6438]

A. I am sorry. Will you ask me the question again?

Q. The question was——

Mr. Hallinan: The court has not ruled on the question. Your Honor has not ruled on that.

The Court: Was it a question or an argument?

Mr. Hallinan: It was a question that was asked, and I made the objection that it called for hearsay. He said books he read, things he had heard.

The Court: The objection is overruled. [6439]

Q. The question was, Mr. Rathborne, what had you been taught in the Communist schools which you attended? What had you learned by the Communist literature which you had read on the subject of disclosing your membership in the Communist Party?

A. We were told in the classes and in the meetings we held that we should not disclose our membership in the Communist Party except with the approval and by the decision of certain echelons within the Communist Party, depending upon the area in which we operated; that is, certain people, for example, operating in California, it would be a matter for the State Committee of the Communist Party to determine whether that comrade should be permitted to come out in the open as an open Communist or be permitted to so testify or to operate as an open Communist.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Were you in fact in 1940 or 1941 a member of the Communist Party? A. I was.

Q. And are you in fact today a member of the Communist Party? A. I am not.

Mr. Donohue: You may have the witness.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Hallinan:

Q. Well, to get this straight now, Mr. Rathborne, you were a member of the Communist Party in the year 1940, is that right?

A. Yes, sir, I was. [6440]

Q. You had filed an application, is that right? You had filed an application for membership in it, had you?

A. I filed the first application, as I testified, I believe in 1935.

Q. Books had been issued to you, had they?

A. That is my recollection, yes, sir.

Q. You were paying dues? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were a full-fledged member of the Communist Party in the year 1940, is that right?

A. That is my recollection, yes, sir.

Q. You were a full-fledged member of the Communist Party in the year 1941, is that right?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. That is my recollection.

Q. And you received a subpoena from a committee called the Dies Committee, is that right?

A. I believe the proper name was the House un-American Activities Committee.

Q. That is a committee of the United States Congress, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. So before going there you went and consulted a man named Roy Hudson as to what you should say, is that correct?

A. That is substantially correct.

Q. And Roy Hudson held some sort of office also in the Communist [6441] Party, is that right?

A. My recollection is that up to that time he had been National Trade Union Director.

Q. What did he do for a living besides that? What was his ordinary occupation?

A. He was a full-time paid employee or functionary of the Communist Party.

Q. Do you know what his trade had been before he became such?

A. I believe he was originally a seaman. As a matter of fact, I am pretty sure he was.

Q. A seaman? A. Yes.

Q. An ordinary seaman sailing on ships, is that right?

A. I don't know whether he is an ordinary seaman or an able seaman, but at least he told me he used to go to sea.

Q. Do you know when he became a member of the Communist Party? A. No, sir, I do not.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Do you know when he became a hired functionary of the Communist Party?

A. I don't know for sure, but I would say it was probably around 1935.

Q. And then in addition to the advice he gave you, you had also been prior to that time taught in some school that you should not answer as to your membership in the Communist Party except upon the advice of some top echelons, as you put it, is that it? [6442]

A. I didn't say except upon advice of the top echelons. I believe I testified on the advice of the proper echelon or proper group or division within the Communist Party.

Q. And then when you came out to San Francisco and received a subpoena from the Tenney Committee, which is a committee of the California State Legislature, I take it, is that right?

A. That is my understanding.

Q. Then you went to Mr. Schneidermann, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. And you asked him about it, is that correct?

A. That is——

Q. When you asked Mr. Hudson about the matter, he told you as this committee represented a part of the hostile capitalist state, that you should not give it the dignity of answering its questions correctly and you should commit perjury, is that right?

A. That is substantially my recollection.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. So you went ahead and committed perjury, is that right? A. That is correct.

Q. And when you came out before the Tenney Committee you took the stand and also committed perjury, did you? A. That is right.

Q. And you say this is a practice of Communists, is that right?

A. I don't quite—— [6443]

Q. I say, you say such procedure is a practice of Communists, is that right?

A. I would say, based on my own experience, yes, that was the procedure they followed generally.

Q. Therefore it is, according to you, a procedure, a legitimate procedure of Communists to take the witness stand, swear to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, and testify falsely, is that correct?

A. I would say that has been the position of the Communist Party at times in telling their own members to do such a thing, yes, sir.

Q. And it was your position at the time you testified before the Dies Committee and the Tenney Committee, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. So that at least in the years 1940 and 1941 you could not be believed under oath, could you?

Mr. Donohue: I object, if your Honor please. The question is argumentative.

Mr. Hallinan: Oh, no, I think that is proper cross-examination, if the Court please. It is preliminary.

The Court: Overruled. You may answer that.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I would like to put my answer this way: As to the things I testified to before these two committees, the only wrong or prejurious answer I gave was the answer to my membership in the Communist Party. As to that fact I would deny membership in the [6444] Communist Party during that period, and did.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): So you felt free, then, at least in the years 1940 and 1941, to lie under oath on matters concerning the Communist Party, is that right?

A. On matters concerning my membership in the Communist Party.

Q. Only matters concerning your membership?

A. That is the only matter that I testified to.

Q. Did you testify in that hearing as to the membership of any other person?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you testify truthfully?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Were you asked, for instance, whether Mr. Hudson was a member of the Communist Party?

A. No, I was not, not that I recall.

Q. Who were you asked concerning?

A. I was asked concerning a number of people. I don't at the time recall their names.

Q. And those people, were they members of the Communist Party?

A. I would have to see the list in order to——

Q. I haven't the list. You tell us who they were.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I don't recall all the testimony that I gave at that proceeding.

Q. Let me ask you this: Were you asked concerning the membership of any one person in the Communist Party other than [6445] yourself before the Dies Committee?

A. It is my recollection that I was.

Q. And was that person a member of the Communist Party?

A. Well, again, Mr. Hallinan, I don't recall the names that were——

Q. If you had been, if you were asked concerning the membership of some person in the Communist Party, would you have denied it at that time, or did you deny it?

A. It is my recollection that I was asked concerning—I was asked whether certain people were members of the Communist Party. As I say, I don't recall who the names were, and it is also my recollection, at least—well, some of them were and I denied their membership. That is the clearest statement I can give you.

Q. That is what I am trying to get. So you felt free to lie under oath not only concerning your own membership but concerning the membership of other persons, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. And you felt free to lie as to when you had entered the Communist Party and when you had left it, isn't that right?

A. I don't think that question was asked.

Q. Let me ask you this, Mr. Rathborne, and see if you can figure this one out: How anyone can tell right now whether you are lying as to whether you were a member of the Communist Party.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Donohue: I object, if your Honor please. That question [6446] is argumentative.

Mr. Hallinan: I think it is proper cross-examination. He was asked and allowed to give his reasons for saying and doing things, his own motives, his own purposes and philosophies in it, and we are entitled to inquire into it further.

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if the Court please——

Mr. Hallinan: And furthermore, I might call counsel's attention to the difference between the manner in which the defendants were cross-examined and the manner in which Government witnesses were cross-examined. We did not interpose a single objection to any question asked except as to "Please allow the witness to finish his answer." But every witness they put up here has to be protected, nursed and coddled along. Now we are starting in again, and this man, who admits he committed perjury before a congressional body of the United States Congress, your Honor, has to be protected from the reasons he had.

The Court: I have not seen any nursing or coddling.

Mr. Donohue: May I say that the record shows 34 times yesterday Mr. Hallinan interrupted.

Mr. Hallinan: That is your witness—putting in hearsay, but we did not make one objection to any question you asked of the defendants on cross-examination.

The Court: Mr. Hallinan, I will overrule the objection.

Mr. Hallinan: Very well. [6447]

The Witness: Will you repeat the question, please?

(Question read.)

A. The only answer I can give to that, I came here and I took an oath to tell the truth, and I am telling the truth as I know it, and I believe it is up to the jury and the Court to determine the weight of the evidence.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Yes. You went before the Dies Committee and you took an oath to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, and you lied, didn't you?

A. I didn't tell the truth with respect to the points I told you about, my own membership in the Communist Party and other people that I might have been questioned about.

Q. Let us break it down a little. When you went in before the Un-American Activities Committee you were put under oath, weren't you?

A. I believe that is true, yes.

Q. You raised your right hand, you swore to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, didn't you? A. That is right.

Q. And you lied, didn't you?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. With respect to the matters I related I did, yes.

Q. You lied with respect to any matter that you felt like lying concerning, isn't that right?

A. That is not right.

Q. Now you came into this court and you swore to tell the [6448] truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, didn't you? A. I did.

Q. Can you tell me how the jury or anyone else can tell whether you have changed your philosophy or not, and whether you are not just lying now?

Mr. Donohue: Again I object, if your Honor please.

The Court: The objection is sustained as argumentative.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Well, here, how can anyone know whether you ever were a member of the Communist Party or whether you left the Communist Party, and how can anyone know whether you are not now up here telling some lies under Schneidermann, Roy Hudson or anyone else?

Mr. Donohue: I object to that as a double-barreled question.

Mr. Hallinan: He knows the meaning of if. Let him figure it out.

The Court: I sustain the objection. I think the witness has answered it in one form or another. The objection is sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, this Mr. Hudson —how long had you known Mr. Hudson at the time he told you to go before the Dies Un-American Activities Committee and commit perjury?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. It is my recollection that I first met Mr. Hudson in either 1935 or early 1936.

Q. You knew him first in 1935 or 1936? [6449]

A. That is my best recollection.

Q. Where did Mr. Hudson live during the time that you knew him?

A. When I went to New York in 1937 he lived, at least for a part of the time I was there, in Greenwich Village on Jane Street.

Q. How old a man was Mr. Hudson?

A. I would say that Roy is in his forties, 46 or 47, around that.

Q. Is he about the same age as yourself?

A. I would judge approximately. I don't know for sure what it is, but I would say approximately the same.

Q. A seagoing man around the same age as yourself? A. He might be a little older.

Q. You went to him and asked him what you should do, as to whether you should commit perjury or not when you went before the Un-American Activities Committee?

A. I didn't go to him as a seagoing man, Mr. Hallinan. I went to him as a person with whom I had been working very, very closely and under whose general direction and guidance I had been working in the Communist Party.

Q. Before you went to Mr. Hudson had you made any resolve in your own mind as to what you would do when you went down before the congressional committee?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I don't think I had. I think the only resolve I had made [6450] was to talk it over with the Party and see what their decision would be in the matter.

Q. So you went to see Mr. Hudson and then you talked to Mr. Hudson, and it wasn't until after you talked to Mr. Hudson that you made up your mind to commit perjury, is that right?

A. That is my recollection. It happened a long time ago. To the best of my recollection that is correct.

Q. How long did your conversation with Mr. Hudson take on that occasion?

A. My recollection is I spent an evening at his home discussing the matter with him, and I would say the conversation—we were together, I would say, two or three hours.

Q. And then when you talked to the other gentleman Mr. Schneidermann, about your testimony before the Dies Committee, how long did you spend talking to him?

A. I wouldn't—I would say a comparatively short period of time, something like a half hour. I don't recall the exact time. [6451]

Q. And you say that this was in the year 1940, is that right? A. What was in the year 1940?

Q. The testimony before the Dies Committee.

A. That is my recollection of the matter, yes, sir.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Well, now, did you know in November, 1939, Mr. Earl Browder had appeared before the Dies Committee and admitted that he was general secretary of the Communist Party and given them a list of the members of the Central Committee for the years 1936 and '38?

A. I didn't know that.

Q. You didn't know that? A. No, sir.

Q. And you didn't know that many, numerous other persons, officers of the Communist Party had appeared and testified that they were members of the Communist Party before that committee and furnished them with evidence?

A. I have some general knowledge that open members of the Communist Party had appeared before various committees and admitted their membership. I also have general knowledge that so-called members whose names were not supposed to be revealed had appeared and denied their membership. That was general knowledge that I had.

Q. Now, a point was made that you were 19 years old when you were arrested and charged with burglary in Los Angeles. How old were you when you went down before the Dies Committee [6452] and committed perjury?

A. Oh, you subtract—35, I would say.

Q. 35?

A. About 35; born in 1905, and that was 1940.

Q. Do you think you were a better person when you were 35 than you were when you were 19?

Mr. Donohue: I object, if Your Honor pleases.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

The Court: Sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, with regard to the Los Angeles situation, did you know when you came here to testify that there had been an order expunging the record of your conviction, that the guilty plea had been set aside and a not guilty plea entered?

Mr. Donohue: Object to the question, if Your Honor pleases. That is a matter of law which Your Honor has already ruled upon.

Mr. Hallinan: No, this is on a different point, Your Honor. This is not with regard to an impeachment at all, this is for an entirely different reason.

The Court: I have ruled on that matter.

Mr. Hallinan: Why, Your Honor ruled that it is not impeaching as proof of the conviction of the felony. But the matter is still in the record, it was introduced by themselves and we have the right to inquire into it. That is all.

The Court: All right. [6453]

A. Will you repeat the question, please?

Mr. Hallinan: All right. Well, will you show the witness this document, which is U. S. Exhibit 40?

(Document handed to the witness by the Clerk.)

Q. Have you ever seen that document before?

A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. Now, when did you see this document before?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Oh, I saw it, I believe, in the latter part of last year.

Q. Where?

A. In—I believe it was Mr. Barber's office.

Q. And where was that?

A. Down on Sansome Street.

Q. In San Francisco? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you gone to Los Angeles yourself on this matter? A. No, sir.

Q. What was the first time that you heard of this, now? You say you saw it in Mr. Barber's office; what was said to you about it?

A. Well, in discussing the case with Mr. Barber, I had previously told him about this matter that occurred.

Q. Well, what had you told him?

A. I told him that I had been arrested in Los Angeles——

Q. On what charge did you tell him?

A. In 1924, and that—as a matter of fact, I said —I am not [6454] certain exactly what it was and I would like to find out, get the records and look at them, see what the thing amounts to.

Q. Did you get the records?

A. Because I had gone back to Los Angeles in 1928 or '29 and inquired of the probation office there, and they said the whole thing is dismissed. I asked them if I could vote and they said, "Yes, you can." So I thought the thing was ended. But I mentioned it to Mr. Barber and he got the records.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. And did he show you the record?

A. Yes, sir, he did.

Q. The entire record?

A. He showed me—I don't know, the entire record. He showed me——

Mr. Hallinan: Could we have the document that was shown to him?

Mr. Donohue: Of course (handing to Mr. Hallinan).

Mr. Hallinan: Thank you.

Q. When did he show you the record?

Mr. Hallinan: Show him that document, please.

A. I believe it was some time in 1949. I am not——

Q. Can you tell us when in 1949?

A. I don't recall.

Q. Well, was it in the early part or in the late part, or what part of '49? [6455]

A. I think it was in the late part of '49.

Q. Can you tell us what month?

A. No, sir.

Q. All right. Now, will you look at line 23 of that and see if it states the nature of the charge, the first page?

Mr. Donohue: If Your Honor please, of course Mr. Hallinan always likes to try witnesses instead of the defendant.

Mr. Hallinan: When they are these kind of witnesses, it is a pleasure.

Mr. Donohue: I most respectfully say to Your Honor that as to asking this witness to look at a line and read the charge, that is wholly improper. If Mr. Hallinan insists on opening up this question, I therefore ask Your Honor to let the whole record come in, not a line or a piece of it.

Mr. Hallinan: All right, let's take the whole record in and not just the part you brought.

Mr. Donohue: Let's be fair about this thing, if we can.

Mr. Hallinan: We will take the whole thing. Well, I will find out.

Q. But going back to that line, do you know the nature of the charge that was brought against you—don't you?

Mr. Donohue: I object to it, if Your Honor pleases, unless he want to read the whole record there of what happened in that court. Then I would have no objection.

The Court: Mr. Hallinan—— [6456]

Mr. Hallinan: All right; all right.

The Court: ——may I ask you, for what purpose or purposes is this examination designed?

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, it is a preliminary question. I have another question I wanted to ask him, to show an attempt to deceive in this court. I don't know now what precautions he will take; ordinarily the cross-examiner is not required to state the nature of his cross-examination.

The Court: I have a perfect right to ask you that question under the Supreme Court decisions.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Hallinan: That is what I—the right to ask the question can scarcely be denied. That fact, if the question is asked, that ends the matter. But as far as the purpose, I think if I were allowed a wee bit of latitude, the purpose will become manifest immediately. Now, there isn't any question, I don't think—it has been stated to the jury what the nature of the charge was.

The Court: No question about it.

Mr. Hallinan: So there is nothing upon which a witness can be decived.

Might I have the document back again? (Document returned.)

Q. You were told, were you not, when you saw the record in Mr. Barber's office that the nature of the crime you were charged with was burglary? Isn't that right?

A. No. As a matter of fact, we discussed the thing and there [6457] was quite a question as to whether a misdemeanor or whether it was a felony.

Q. We are not talking about that now; we are talking about whether it was burglary.

Mr. Hallinan (To Mr. Donohue): You have seen the entire record, undoubtedly, I hope (handing document to Mr. Donohue).

Q. When you came into this court, did you know that the offense you had been charged with in Los Angeles was burglary, whether it was a misdemeanor or a felony?

Mr. Donohue: I object, if Your Honor pleases.

The Court has already ruled, and I think for Mr. Hallinan to continue to attempt to try this witness for an offense with respect to which Your Honor has already told the jury the record has been expunged——

Mr. Hallinan: I am not the least bit interested——

Mr. Donohue: ——is flying in the face of Your Honor's decision.

Mr. Hallinan: I am not in the least interested in trying the offense; but counsel himself introduced this matter and questioned the witness on direct examination as to the exact facts upon which he had been arrested. I will read the——

The Court: We will take the noon recess and I will examine the transcript as to the context and as to the extent to which Mr. Donohue examined the witness, or I examined him or you examined [6458] him.

Mr. Hallinan: Look at page 6395, Your Honor; you will find the whole thing there.

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, we will take the noon recess and resume at 2:00 o'clock this afternoon. The same admonition to you, not to discuss the case under any conditions nor to form an opinion until it is submitted to you.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to 2:00 o'clock p.m.) [6458-A]

Tuesday, February 28, 1950—2:00 o'Clock P.M.

MERVYN RATHBORNE

resumed the stand:

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Hallinan:

Q. Now, Mr. Rathborne, will you please tell us about that visit that Harry Bridges made with you to the Communist headquarters in New York in 1937? Now, first, where were the Communist headquarters in New York in 1937?

A. My recollection, in 1937, they were on 13th Street, not too far from Broadway. I don't recall the up and downtown streets there.

Q. How long have you known those headquarters to be at that location?

A. The first time I recall being at those headquarters was during a convention of my union that was held in New York, I believe it was in 1935. I am not certain of that. We——

Q. And how long have you known of them to be there continuously? Are they still there?

A. Well, of my own personal knowledge, the last time I recall being there I think was in 1940 just before I left New York.

Q. When in 1940 did you leave New York?

A. The latter part of the year, around November, I believe.

Q. Now, will you tell us, with relation to this

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

incident in which you say that Harry Bridges accompanied you there in the year 1937, what part of 1937? [6459]

A. It is my recollection it was around the time the CIO maritime committee was organized. That was organized in Washington during the first part of 1937, is my best recollection on the date.

Q. And then when did you and Mr. Bridges go to the Communist headquarters in New York?

A. Well, my recollection on that is that after returning from Washington that he and I came back from Washington to New York, and it was during that period.

Q. Well, then, then what period after you left Washington would it be?

A. I would say shortly after.

Q. Well, what do you mean by "shortly" after?

A. A matter of days.

Q. Two or three days, four days, a week, what?

A. I think it would be less than a week.

Q. Now, did you attend the maritime convention in Washington, D. C.?

A. You mean the maritime, the CIO maritime committee?

Q. Yes. A. Yes, I was there.

Q. All right. Now, there has been some testimony about that, that there was a convention to form a maritime committee or a maritime committee was formed at Washington some time in the year 1937, and you attended that convention, did you? [6460]

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Well, it wasn't a convention, it was—as I recall it——

Q. Well, it was a meeting called by John Lewis to form a maritime committee, wasn't that it, substantially?

A. That is substantially it, from my recollection, yes.

Q. All right. And you attended?

A. I did.

Q. Representing what union?

A. Representing my own union, the ARTA or the ACA—I forget; the ACA, I believe it was.

Q. Did you remain in Washington for the entire conference? A. I believe I did.

Q. All right. Did you first meet Harry Bridges in Washington?

A. That I am not sure. I am not sure whether I met him in New York and went to Washington or met him in Washington. The reason I am not sure is because he made several trips back east and there were other occasions when I met him in New York.

Q. So you can't tell us now whether you met him in New York and went down to Washington or whether you met him in Washington?

A. I am not certain of that, no, sir.

Q. Well, have you any opinion on it, any idea?

A. I just can't recollect.

Q. Can't recollect. Well, at any rate, you did—you were in Washington with him at that convention. He attended that same meeting or convention that you attended, isn't that right?

A. I am reasonably certain of that, yes, [6461] sir.

Q. All right. Well, then, you went up to New York with him, is that correct?

A. I wouldn't say that I actually was in the same train or in the same conveyance with him.

Q. Did you have any reason for going to New York with Harry Bridges?

A. Well, I believe I did, because my recollection is that the committee set up, the maritime CIO—the CIO maritime committee set up a subcommittee to go and see Joe Ryan.

Q. What about?

A. About trying to work out some kind of a unity program with Ryan, where he would come along with the CIO program.

Q. And who was Ryan?

A. Joseph Ryan was the president of the ILA at that time.

Q. All right. National president?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. So the committee that was formed in Washington then proceeded to New York to have a conference with Ryan and to try to persuade Ryan to come into the CIO, is that substantially correct?

A. That is my recollection, Mr.——

Q. Fine. And who was on the committee that went up to interview Ryan?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I believe the committee consisted of Harry Bridges, Joseph Curran and myself. That is my recollection. [6462]

Q. All right. And did you have the interview with Ryan?

A. Well, we met some other gentleman in Mr. Ryan's office. I don't recall that we ever met Joseph Ryan himself.

Q. Now, do you remember what day of the week you left Washington?

A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. Do you remember what day of the week it was that you had your first conference or attempted to have a conference with Ryan?

A. No, it was shortly after the end of the conference, a few days after the end of the conference.

Q. Now, some time then in the course of these proceedings you got a message, you said, from somebody asking you to bring Harry Bridges to the Communist headquarters, is that right?

A. That is my recollection, yes.

Q. Who gave you that message?

A. That I can not recall.

Q. Where did you receive the message?

A. I received it at my office at 10 Bridge Street, New York City, is my recollection. I might, however—I, however, might have received it at home.

Q. But you did receive it in New York City?

A. Yes, sir, that is my recollection.

Q. Not down in Washington?

A. That is my recollection, yes, sir.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. And did you receive it before or after you left Washington [6463] and went to New York?

A. That I am not certain of. I am not sure whether it occurred before the meeting or after the meeting.

Q. Now, you can't tell us who was the person that gave you that message or made that request to you?

A. I don't recall who it was at this moment, no, sir, at this time. I have forgotten.

Q. But you say that when you went to New York with Harry Bridges you did go with him to this Communist Party headquarters?

A. It is my recollection that during the time that we were both in New York, at that period there, that we—he and I—went together to what is known as the "Ninth Floor."

Q. In other words, it is your recollection that following the conference in Washington and after this committee of three had gone to New York to consult with Ryan and during the period you were in New York, having the consultations with Ryan and immediately around that time, that you and Harry Bridges went to Communist Party headquarters on the ninth floor of the building on Thirteenth Street near Broadway, is that correct?

A. That is my recollection, yes.

Q. And you testified already that you went there in response to a request from some person in the Communist Party headquarters asking you

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

if you would have Harry Bridges come there, is that correct? [6464]

A. That is substantially correct.

Q. All right. But you can't tell us now who that person was? A. No, sir, I can not.

Q. All right. Can you tell us what time of the day or night you went with Mr. Bridges to that place?

A. My belief is it was during the daytime. Now, what hour of the day, I am not—I don't recall.

Q. Morning or afternoon?

A. Well, I couldn't be sure, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. All right.

A. But I would—my best recollection is morning, but I am not certain of that.

Q. Well, now, can you tell us what was the general context of the message that you had gotten?

A. The general context was that, well, when Harry comes to New York, "we would like to see him, like to meet with him."

Q. Now, when you went to that building, who was there?

A. You mean where, in front of the building or——

Q. Well, in the office on the ninth floor wherever you went.

A. Well, we went in the building and went up the elevator.

Q. Whom did you meet there?

A. Well, you mean——

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Well, let me put it this way. Withdraw that. Did you have some kind of a meeting then?

A. Yes, we did. [6465]

Q. Well, was it just an informal social call or was it a business meeting?

A. It was a discussion about maritime problems.

Q. About what? A. Maritime problems.

Q. All right. Now, who was present at that discussion?

A. I am certain that Mr. Roy Hudson was there, and my recollection is that Mr. Browder was there, Earl Browder, and I also, although I am not certain, because I get this mixed up with other meetings. But I believe Mr. Stachel, Jack Stachel was there.

Q. Now, is it your recollection that it was one of those three persons who phoned you to make the appointment and have Mr. Bridges come up there?

A. No, I don't believe it was. The—I just don't have any clear recollection of who it was that contacted me, although I know I received the message.

Q. Well, when you got up to the building, did you arrive there by appointment? Had you phoned and made an appointment to be there at any particular time or did you and he just go up on the chance that you would meet whoever waited to see him?

A. It was my recollection that after receiving the message and discussing it with Harry, I made an appointment or I called back and said that we would, could be there at a certain time.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Well, do you know whom you had that talk with?

A. I believe it was Mr. Hudson. [6466]

Q. So then, so far as you can remember, there were these three men whom you just named, yourself and Mr. Bridges present at that meeting?

A. That is right.

Q. When you went in did you introduce Mr. Bridges to Mr. Earl Browder?

A. I don't believe I did. I think—they appeared to be acquainted, is my recollection.

Q. They appeared to be acquainted?

A. That is my recollection.

Q. Did you introduce him to Mr. Jack Stachel?

A. I don't think I did.

Q. Did anybody introduce him to him?

A. My recollection is it was just "Hello" and we sat down and started to talk. I don't think there was any formal introduction as such.

Q. What did you talk about?

A. We discussed particularly this problem of the maritime industry and unity in the maritime industry, and the matter of what had happened in Washington at the CIO maritime committee and the problem of trying to work out something to bring the seafaring and the longshore unions together in some kind of national unified organization. That was the burden of the discussion.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. How long did you say it lasted?

A. Oh, I wouldn't say it lasted very long. Perhaps—my [6467] recollection is say 45 minutes probably—a half hour to 45 minutes.

Q. Then you and Mr. Bridges left, did you?

A. That is right.

Q. Where did you go?

A. I believe he left me. I believe I went back to my office personally, and I do not recall Mr. Bridges coming back to the office with me.

Q. Did this happen before or after the conclusion of the conferences with Ryan's delegates?

A. I am not certain. It was about that time. That is the closest I can bring it to actually pinning it down to a date.

Q. Had you ever been in that building prior to that time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many times?

A. I would say probably ten times—no, not at that time, no, sir. I am incorrect in that statement. That was in '37. I had been up there, oh, perhaps two or three or four times at that date.

Q. From that time until you left New York in November, 1940, how many more times did you go there?

A. I would say that my best estimate as to the total number of times I was there would be about ten or eleven.

Q. Now, this union that you were a member of, at that time was it called the ACA or the ARTA, which? [6468]

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. At that time it was the ARTA.

Q. When did it change its name to the American Communications Association?

A. My recollection is it was at a convention in 1938. Now, it could have been 1939, but my memory is 1938.

Q. Under the descriptions you have given heretofore about domination of trade unions, would you say that the ACA was dominated by the Communist Party?

A. Yes, sir, I would, at the time I was president of the organization.

Q. You would say it was so dominated?

A. I would say this: that the Communist Party put forward after these meetings that I have described with the various groups within the union a program and recommended it, and that program was almost uniformly adopted by the union.

Q. Did you ever have any connection with an organization called the American League for Peace and Democracy?

A. I believe I did at one time.

Q. What was your connection with it?

A. I don't recall the exact connection. My recollection is that that organization was formerly known as the American League Against War and Fascism, before it adopted this other name here, and that while I was here in San Francisco I served on some sort of committee or did some other—I know I was actively helping the work of that organization. [6469]

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Taking your conversation with Roy Hudson relating to your testimony before the congressional committee, how long after you were served with a subpoena did you have that conversation with him?

A. Again it is a matter of shortly after. I couldn't say whether it was ten hours or ten days, but it was comparatively—the best I could put it, it was a comparatively short time in terms of days.

Q. Where did the conversation take place?

A. As I recall, it took place in New York City.

Q. Where? In what part of New York City?

A. My recollection is that it took place in Mr. Hudson's home. It could have taken place in my own home.

Q. Who else was present?

A. Just the two of us.

Q. What did you tell Mr. Hudson?

A. I told him that I had been—required to appear before the Dies Committee and, of course, the Dies Committee was a well known committee at that time. It was making headlines almost every day. I discussed with him this matter of my experience and particularly what the policy was in the event I was asked if I were a member of the Communist Party.

Q. Where were you served with a subpoena?

A. It was my recollection it was mailed to me or served on me in New York City. [6470]

Q. Did you show him the subpoena when you had the conversation with him?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I don't believe I did, no sir.

Q. You say that the subpoena was mailed to you?

A. No, I did not. I said—it was either mailed or served on me. I received it in New York City. The method of transmittal I do not know.

Q. Hadn't you made any effort to avoid being subpoenaed?

A. I had no knowledge that I was to be subpoenaed.

Q. Let me ask you this: Was it the policy of the members of the Communist Party at that time to avoid such subpoenas if possible?

A. To my knowledge it was, yes, sir.

Q. And was it the policy of the Communist Party also, where subpoenas were served, to refuse to answer any questions?

A. I don't believe that was the general policy. I know of one occasion where a gentleman was brought before the Committee and he just created such a rumpus and refused to answer that they bodily removed him from the Committee meeting.

Q. Isn't this the fact: That it was the general policy of the Communist Party, and has been ever since, either to go in and tell the truth or else to refuse to answer any questions on the ground that they might incriminate themselves?

A. I think that matter, that gimmick about giving answers degrading or incriminating themselves, came along later. I don't [6471] recall that being the policy at the time. My recollection is, as I told you, was to deny membership unless specifically authorized to state otherwise by competent people.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Now, you have seen your testimony before the Un-American Activities Committee lately, have you not? A. Yes, I have.

Q. When was the last time that you saw it?

A. Oh, about two or three weeks ago, I believe.

Q. Didn't you see it today at noon time?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Did you read it over entirely two or three weeks ago?

A. I could best put it this way; I skimmed through it; I read through it rather hurriedly.

Q. Where was that?

A. That was down in the Appraisers Building on Sansome Street.

Q. Did you take a volume of the testimony with you? A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Or a copy of it? A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever had a copy of your testimony before the Un-American Activities Committee?

A. Have I ever had one?

Q. Yes.

A. I had one in my office in New York, yes, when I was with the union. [6472]

Q. What has become of that?

A. I presume it is still in the files there.

Q. I find that you testified in the month of May, 1940; is that your recollection?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. If that is what the record says, that would be it.

Q. You say that you skimmed through it two or three weeks ago and you were down at the Appraisers Building at the time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was with you?

A. Well, Mr. Kaiser was with me at the time.

Q. How long were you there on that occasion?

A. Oh, three or four hours, I believe.

Q. Now, do you remember this discussion taking place at that committee:

> "The Chairman: Do you solemnly swear to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?
>
> "Mr. Rathborne: I do.
>
> "The Chairman: Let the record show Congressman Vito Marcantonio is appearing as counsel for the witness."

Do you remember that Mr. Marcantonio was your attorney on that occasion?

A. He appeared with me, yes, sir.

Q. Appeared as your attorney, is that right?

A. There seemed to be some question as to whether he could [6473] appear as an attorney. He appeared there with me in my behalf.

Q. He accompanied you from New York, did he? A. No, sir.

Q. You met him in Washington and went there; you came down from New York, I take it, is that right?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. That is my recollection, yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Marcantonio made this statement:

> "May I make this statement: In the course of the questions that will be asked of Mr. Rathborne he will have an opportunity to deny, as will be the procedure with respect to every witness, every charge that has been made against you."

Oh, no, pardon me. This is by the chairman. The chairman says this:

> "We cannot permit a witness to read statements or make general statements. The Committee established that policy unanimously some time ago and we have had to refuse witnesses the opportunity to do so. However, in the course of the examination questions will be framed that will enable you to enter a denial of any charge you see fit to deny and make any appropriate or material explanation where a direct question affords you such opportunity.
>
> "Mr. Thomas"——

That is a member of the Committee. Do you remember him?

A. I believe he was from New Jersey, wasn't he? [6474]

Q. I am not sure.

> "Mr. Chairman, may I interject here for a moment? I understand that Mr. Rathborne has already sent a statement to the press in connection with his appearance here today. I am wondering if Mr. Mathhews, who is going to ask the questions, has a copy of the statement. Do you have such a copy, Mr. Matthews?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

"Mr. Matthews: I have not seen it."

Do you remember the statement that was made to the press? A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. Have you a copy of that?

A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. Have you seen it lately? A. No, sir.

Q. (Reading):

"The Chairman: As far as the Chair is concerned, he is not interested in what any witness may say with respect to his views in any other place, but in the course of the hearing that is an entirely different matter. What any witness may think or say in any public form or in the press or otherwise is a matter for the witness himself and this Chair is not concerned with it.

"Mr. Thomas: I agree with that, but at the same time——

"The Chairman: I am only speaking now with reference to what goes on in the course of the investigation. [6475]

"Mr. Thomas: At the same time there may be a couple of questions Mr. Matthews might want to ask in regard to this statement.

"Mr. Marcantonio: May I interpose an ob> jection at this point to questioning this witness regarding the statement he issued to the press? I do not think that comes within the purview of this investigation and I do not see what it has to do with it."

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Now, this testimony took place on the 8th of May, 1940. Do you remember that to be so?

A. As I stated previously, my recollection on the matter was the early part of 1940. If the record shows I was there on the 8th of May, I certainly accept the record as being correct.

Mr. Donohue: You might show that to the Court.

The Court: You might read it.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): This is the statement that you issued to the press, is it not?

A. I believe it is, yes, sir.

Mr. Hallinan: We offer it in evidence as Defendants' Exhibit next in order.

Mr. Donohue: I object, if your Honor please. I think it is time we started to try the defendants instead of the witnesses, and I see no purpose——

Mr. Hallinan: Then why object?

Mr. Donohue: You do not mind if I am [6476] heard?

Mr. Hallinan: Oh, no, no, I like to hear you talk.

Mr. Donohue: You speak well, too. I see no purpose, if your Honor please, in the statement that this witness made to the press in a case involving the defendants Bridges, Schmidt and Robertson.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Hallinan: Sit down and let the witness take care of himself. Let the jury pass on whether or not it is important.

Mr. Donohue: You have taught me some bad habits.

Mr. Hallinan: Too bad I didn't teach you some good ones, but I guess you are too old to learn a new crop. [6477]

The Court: I can't immediately understand your purpose or purposes in offering as against the witness this document, but if you have some purpose in mind, you may tell me. I can't see its immediate relevancy.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): You sent a telegram to Mr. Hon. Martin Dies of the House Office Building, Washington, D. C., as follows, did you not, on April 27, 1940——

The Court: Mr. Hallinan, I addressed a question to you. May I have an answer? What is the purpose?

Mr. Hallinan: Well, I want to show now that he didn't go there in response to any subpoena at all. He wired them and asked them for a chance to have a hearing there. Now, his whole story of the subpoena and the necessity of going and asking people what to say and fabricating is itself a fabrication. He went there on a wire that he sent.

The Court: I am not as ready or willing to jump at that conclusion, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, Your Honor asked me the reason. Now, let's ask him.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

The Court: Yes, ask him the question.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): All right, you sent a wire to the Hon. Martin Dies, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., on April the 27th, 1940:

> "Your committee has accepted as testimony malicious slanders against the American Communications Association, CIO, and [6478] its officers. The witness Fred M. Howe, an expelled employers' agent, is continuing through your committee, his former union-busting activities. I hereby request an opportunity to appear immediately before your committee in order to answer these lies, and I request that I be given an amount of time equal to that accorded to Howe. I also request a copy of the transcript of Howe's testimony. (Signed) Mervyn Rathborne, President, American Communications Association, CIO."

Did you not?

A. I don't have any independent recollection of sending that telegram, but I don't deny that I could have sent it.

Q. All right. And then you sent out under the heading of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, 1106 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Washington, D. C., District 3582, a release entitled "For Release Morning Papers, Saturday, April 27, 1940:

> "President Mervyn Rathborne of the American Communications Association, CIO, today asked the Dies Un-American Committee for an > opportunity to answer the malicious slanders made before the committee against the union and its officers. Mr. Rathborne's wire to Chairman Martin Dies of the House Committee follows."

That's correct, isn't it?

A. As I say, I wouldn't challenge the authenticity of the document. I don't have any independent recollection of ever [6479] sending it, but——

Q. So when you went before the——

Mr. Hallinan: On the offer in evidence, what is the Court's ruling on that?

The Court: It may be received.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): When you went before the Un-American Activities Committee, you didn't go in response to a subpoena at all, did you?

A. Apparently the record shows there that I received the communication from that committee saying that, as I recall it. Now, that is my—testifying a while ago, I said either by mail or by person. And as I remember, I received a communication from the committee saying that I would be heard at such and such a time.

Q. In other words, here is what happened——

A. I was in error in saying it was a subpoena, if these facts are correct.

Q. Obviously. That's right. Don't mind that. In other words, what you did was, you sent a wire to the committee asking to be heard, as stated in that wire. That's correct, isn't it?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Well, from the document it appears that that is correct, yes.

Q. And then you received a communication from the committee specifying a time at which they would hear you; that is correct, [6480] isn't it?

A. Again I am not absolutely certain, but it would appear to me to be correct.

Q. And then after you had—before you received that communication, you gave the newspapers a release setting out the wire that was just read to you, didn't you?

A. Well, I believe the document speaks for itself. I don't have any recollection of putting out that press release or sending that wire.

Q. Now, some days after you received the answer to your wire, you consulted Roy Hudson as to what your conduct should be before the committee, isn't that right?

A. Not having any recollection of sending the wire, I can't place it by conversation with Roy Hudson in point of time, from the wire.

Q. You told us not regards the wire, now, but with regard to the answer to the wire, you told us that at some time after receiving the answer, receiving the subpoena, you said, or whatever was mailed to you, you didn't know whether it was ten hours or ten days, you spoke to Roy Hudson on the subject, is that correct?

A. That is my recollection, yes.

Q. And on that conversation Mr. Hudson advised you to swear falsely as to matters touching your membership in the Communist Party, is that correct?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. That is my recollection. [6481]

Q. What was your intention at the time you sent the wire and before you spoke to Mr. Hudson?

A. My intention was to answer certain slanders that had been made about the union and about its activities before the committee.

Q. Did you intend to answer them truthfully or falsely?

A. My intention was to answer them truthfully, as I believe—I mean, I don't——

Q. So at the time you received the wire, before you sent the wire, then, you intended, if your offer were accepted to go before the House Un-American Activities Committee and truthfully answer any questions put to you on the subject embraced in the wire, is that right?

A. I wanted to—my intentions, as best as I can recall it, were to answer these charges or these allegations that had been made by Mr. Howe before the committee. I mean——

Q. Were you going to answer them truthfully or falsely?

A. Well, as I say, calling it to my attention, I wanted to answer them truthfully.

Q. You were going to answer them truthfully. So before you sent the wire and at the time you sent the wire, it was then your intention to go before the House Un-American Activities Committee and answer truthfully the slanders that had been made against your union, is that correct?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Well, I would say substantially, yes. I don't recall my [6482] exact process of thinking at that time.

Q. And the slanders that had been made against the union before that committee were that your union was dominated by the Communist Party, isn't that right?

A. That was one of the—only one of the allegations.

Q. And the other allegation was that you were a member of the Communist Party, isn't that right?

A. I believe that was one of the allegations. I don't recall Mr. Howe's testimony in detail.

Q. Well, you now know that you refer to Mr. Howe's testimony; now, Mr. Howe's testimony was limited to contending that the ACA was dominated by the Communist Party and that you were a member of the Communist Party, is that right?

A. That is my recollection of it, in part. I believe there was quite a bit more to Mr. Howe's testimony.

Q. The truth is that you were a member of the Communist Party, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. The truth is that the ACA was dominated by the Communist Party, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. So you intended to go to Washington and state both that you were a member of the Communist Party and that the ACA was dominated by the Communist Party, is that right, at the time you sent the wire? [6483]

A. Well, I didn't think I would—in my recollection, that it would be that way. I wanted to answer these questions that Mr. Howe had raised about the union. These were part of it. So——

Q. You were going to answer them truthfully?

A. Well, that is, I believe—yes.

Q. And you weren't under any compulsion to go there at all, you were going there voluntarily to give those answers, weren't you?

A. Apparently, from the documents here, that was the case, yes. My recollection on that was in error. I thought I was subpoenaed to go there, but apparently I wasn't.

Q. So now, let's look at some of the questions that you were asked and which Mr. Howe had previously testified to.

The Clerk: The exhibit has been marked Defendants' Exhibit T-3 in evidence.

> (Whereupon press release dated April 27, 1940, referred to above, was received in evidence and marked Defendants' Exhibit T-3.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, you remember being sworn to tell the truth? "Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne. Do you solemnly swear to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

"Mr. Rathborne: I do."

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

You remember that, don't you?

A. An oath was given there, yes. [6484]

Q. Now, you were asked this question:

"Mr. Matthews: In August of 1939 Mr. John P. Frye appeared before this committee and on page 104 of the printed hearings of this committee there appeared the following statement made by Mr. Frye:

"'With regard to American Communications Association, a few days ago Richard D. Hallett, chairman of the Washington local of the American Communications Association, resigned because he declared that the organization has too much of a tieup with the Communist Party. The president of this organization is Mervyn Rathborne, a Communist.'

"He goes on to say:

"'There has been considerable argument with regard to the status of this man, but so much information has come in in the past six months in regard to his Communist connections that one can not be in doubt how he stands.'

"That is the end of the statement that refers to you (Mr. Matthews said).

"Mr. Rathborne: Well, the comment that I have to make on it is that it is not a truthful statement and I see nothing in the statement made by Mr. Frye that is any conclusive evi> dence. It is just merely a general opinion on his part that may be the case, and Mr. Frye was incorrect in his assumption.

>
> "Mr. Matthews: In respect to the matter of stating that [6485] you were a Communist?
>
> "Mr. Rathborne: That is correct, yes."

That answer was false, wasn't it?

A. Yes, sir, that particular answer was.

Q. It was made under oath, wasn't it?

A. That's right.

Q. You knew when you went there that you were going to answer that question falsely, didn't you?

A. Yes, when I went before the committee.

Q. Then you knew, at least a couple of weeks before, that you were going to answer that question falsely, didn't you?

A. No, sir, I am not—I don't have any recollection of having that opinion.

Q. And you weren't under any subpoena or any compulsion to go to this hearing, were you?

A. Apparently not, no.

Q. All right. A. Now——

Q. Now, going a little further, a comment having been read out as to some statement of a man named Ferguson:

> "Do you wish to make a comment on that statement?
> "Mr. Rathborne: Well, the same comment that I made before, that I am not a Communist > and that this is a statement, a gratuitous statement by Mr. Ferguson of his opinion and it is an incorrect opinion." [6486]

That statement was false, wasn't it?

A. I don't get—I didn't get—could I look at that section, Mr. Hallinan, to get the context?

Q. Here is the statement:

> "Mr. Rathborne: Well, the same comment that I made before, that I am not a Communist and that is a statement, a gratuitous statement by Mr. Ferguson of his opinion, and it is an incorrect opinion."

Do you remember that testimony?

A. I don't remember it in detail.

Q. At any rate, that is a false statement, isn't it? A. That's right.

Q. Then:

> "The Chairman: Well, that is not quite accurate. Mr. Ferguson said that he sat in a fraction meeting of the Communist Party with you. That is not an opinion, in so far as he is concerned. It may not be true, but it is not an opinion. He says that he sat in a fraction meeting of the Communist Party with you. The answer, as I understand it, is that that is not true?
>
> "Mr. Rathborne: No, the only meeting that I sat with Mr. Ferguson were meetings of the official union body.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

> "The Chairman: And you deny his statement?
> "Mr. Rathborne: That's right."

That was a false statement, wasn't it? [6487]

A. Yes, sir, it was. All having to do with my denial of membership in the Communist Party.

Q. Yes. Proceeding:

> "Mr. Rathborne: The only meeting that I sat in with Mr. Ferguson were meetings of the official union body of the maritime union of the Pacific Coast, known as the Maritime Federation of the Pacific.
>
> "The Chairman: That wouldn't include any meetings of Communist groups?
>
> "Mr. Rathborne: No, it is a union group.
>
> "Mr. Thomas: Mr. Rathborne, have you ever at any time sat in on any Communist fraction meeting?
>
> "Mr. Rathborne: No, sir."

Do you remember that testimony?

A. I don't recall it in detail, but if it is in the record there——

Q. And that testimony was false, wasn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you knew when you went there that you would be asked that question, didn't you?

A. When I went to the committee I had a reasonable—I had reason to believe that this matter might be brought up, yes, sir.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. And you intended to answer those questions falsely, didn't you?

A. Yes, I did, I would say so. [6488]

Q. Then further down the page:

> "The Chairman: I thought he answered it. He said he wasn't a Communist, didn't he?
>
> "Mr. Rathborne: Yes, sir."

That statement was false, wasn't it?

A. The same statement I made about four other times before that committee.

Q. And:

> "The Chairman: And you never have been a member of the Communist Party?
>
> "Mr. Rathborne: No, sir."

That statement was false, wasn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

> "The Chairman: Never have been affiliated in any respect with the Communist Party, have you?
>
> "Mr. Rathborne: No, sir, I haven't."

That statement was false, wasn't it?

A. It was.

> Q. "Mr. Casey: Was that what you had in mind when you said it was his opinion and his opinion was incorrect?
>
> "Mr. Rathborne: I say that was Mr. Ferguson's opinion, and if that is his opinion, it is an incorrect opinion."

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Do you remember that statement?

A. No. As I say, I don't independently recall.

Q. Well, that statement is false, too, isn't [6489] it? A. Well——

Q. That Mr. Ferguson's opinion that you were a member of the Communist Party was incorrect?

A. Well, I don't know how Mr. Ferguson had any such opinion because I don't ever recall attending any party meetings with Mr. Ferguson.

Q. You were asked if you ever sat in a Communist fraction meeting. That was the question that was asked you, and you said you never had, don't you remember that? A. You——

Q. Now, just a moment ago I read to you:

> "Mr. Rathborne, have you ever at any time sat in on any Communist Party fraction meeting?
>
> "Mr. Rathborne: No, sir."

A. I said that was an incorrect statement.

Q. Yes, all right. Now the next one:

> "The witness testified here (this is referring to Ferguson) he sat in a fraction meeting.
>
> "Mr. Voorhees: Did Mr. Ferguson so testify?
>
> "Mr. Matthews: There were two statements. First was at a meeting and the second does not state the connection in which he claims to know about Mr. Rathborne.
>
> "Mr. Voorhees: Does he say the meeting was a Communist fraction meeting?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

"Mr. Matthews: He doesn't say a fraction meeting, he said [6490] a Communist Party meeting.

"The Chairman: Let us proceed.

"Mr. Marcantonio: If I may interrupt, Mr. Chairman, so as we can have the record clear— I don't want to have any confusion on this point as to the meetings, whether he said he sat in a fraction meeting or any kind of a Communist meeting at all—if that is what in my colleague's from Massachusetts mind? Is that correct, Mr. Casey?

"Mr. Casey: That is correct.

"Mr. Marcantonio: I think Mr. Rathborne ought to be permitted to answer that question.

"The Chairman: He answered it.

"Mr. Marcantonio: I believe he has, but at the same time, it——

"The Chairman: He said he had not.

"Mr. Rathborne: If that is what Mr. Ferguson says, he was not telling the truth."

Did you so testify?

A. I believe the transcript of the testimony is correct, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. So that was a false statement, wasn't it?

A. I guess so.

Q. Now, did you know this Mr. Ferguson?

A. I remember a fellow by the name of Ferguson, who was in the Fireman's Union out here in San Francisco, I believe in [6491] 1936.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. And Mr. Ferguson had testified before the Un-American Activities Committee that you were a member of the Communist Party and had sat in Communist Party meetings to his knowledge; that's correct, isn't it?

A. I believe that is what the record shows, yes, sir. [6491-A]

Q. And you went in voluntarily before the House Un-American Activities Committee and accused Mr. Ferguson of prejury, didn't you?

A. I don't believe I actually used that language. I said if he made that statement he was incorrect.

Q. Although he was correct, wasn't he?

A. That is what you read to me there.

Q. What is that?

A. I said that is what you read to me there. The statement I made, if he made that statement he was incorrect.

Q. In other words, you stated that Mr. Ferguson was not telling the truth when he said you were not a member of the Communist Party, isn't that true?

Mr. Donohue: I object, your Honor. He told Mr. Ferguson whatever the record shows he told him, and Mr. Hallinan has no right to put words in his mouth.

Mr. Hallinan: This is the exact language he used.

The Court: Whatever language is used, the witness admits is correct as to what he said.

Mr. Hallinan: I want to get his state of mind on the proposition.

Q. Do you remember this testimony:

> "Have you ever been at Communist headquarters in New York, Mr. Rathborne?
>
> "Mr. Rathborne: I have been downtown to the bookstore, [6492] downstairs a couple of times.
>
> "Mr. Matthews: On 13th Street?
>
> "Mr. Rathborne: That is correct.
>
> "Mr. Matthews: But not in the headquarters of the Party upstairs?
>
> "Mr. Rathborne: No, sir.
>
> "Mr. Thomas: Have you ever been in any other Communist headquarters in New York City?
>
> "Mr. Rathborne: No, sir.
>
> "The Chairman: Well, let us stick now to the statement that he has seen you at Communist headquarters dozens of times. Is that true or false?
>
> "Mr. Rathborne: That is not a true statement."

Did you so testify?

A. As I said previously, Mr. Hallinan, if that is what the record shows, I believe that is the way I testified.

Q. Being asked as a part of this question that you were not ~~in~~ the headquarters of the Party upstairs, your answer was, "No, sir." That was a false statement, wasn't it? A. That is right.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Then you were asked this:

> "Have you ever been in any other Communist headquarters in New York City?"

Had you ever been?

A. That is 1940? [6493]

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, I had been down at the waterfront section headquarters on 23rd Street.

Q. So your answer, "No, sir," to that was false also, wasn't it? A. I believe that is right.

Q. You were asked this question:

> "The Chairman: Let us get to that when we come to that part. The first thing is you have read his statement. This is Mr. Howe's statement to the effect that you are a Communist. Now, is that true or false?
>
> "Mr. Rathborne: Well, I have denied that several times and I will deny it again for the record."

That was a false statement, wasn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. A false answer that you gave?

A. That is right.

Q. Then in talking to Mr. Howe again—do you remember who Mr. Howe was?

A. He was at one time the secretary of Local 2 of the ARTA in New York, the marine local.

Q. Mr. Howe had testified before the House Un-American Activities Committee as follows:

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

> "Mr. Matthews: Now, will you please first answer the question and then give as definitely as you are able a reason [6494] for your answer. Is Rathborne a Communist?
>
> "Mr. Howe: Yes.
> "Mr. Rathborne: I would like to comment on the answer and also comment as to why I believe it was given, because later in this testimony Mr. Howe makes the statement to the effect that everybody who was opposed to him was a Communist, and certainly I was one of those who opposed Mr. Howe when he was in the American Communications Association."

Do you remember that testimony?

A. As I stated previously, Mr. Hallinan, I do not have any independent recollection of the testimony, but if it is in the record there, why, my recollection is correct.

Q. Now, you tell us about this one:

> "Mr. Casey: You say the allegations with respect to the control of your organization by Communists as set forth in the letter are true or false?"
>
> Answer by you: "I say it is false."

Was that a false statement?

A. Essentially, yes.

> Q. "Mr. Casey: I think he ought to have an opportunity of explaining that.
>
> "Mr. Rathborne: I would like to read a brief excerpt from the constitution of our union,

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Article VI, Section 1, stating, 'The supreme authority of the international union [6495] shall be in the general membership, which from time to time through referendum and convention may delegate such powers as it deems proper, necessary and desirable to the international executive board, the president or any other officer or officers of the international union.' In practice that is the way our organization functions, and in the first place all of the officers are nominated by petition signed by the members. For example, any member of our union who has been a member for two years and obtains 250 signatures on a petition may have his name put on the ballot to run for president, and then the requirements for other officers are one year service and 100 signatures. The officers are elected by direct secret referendum of the membership. The international officers of the union, of which there are nine, constitute the international executive board, which sets the policies of the union between conventions. The conventions are attended by delegates who are elected by a secret referendum vote of the members of the various local unions. These delegates gather together in a convention, and the policies and program of the union are set forth and determined at those international conventions of ours, and the people directly elected by our 20,000 members gather together in conference and determine the policies of our > organization and who run the union and who elect the officers, and with that kind of setup it [6496] is obvious to any fair-thinking person that any small group could not be running the union because it is very easy for the members of the union to recall the officers if they violate the constitution or if they go contrary to the policies and program set down by our international convention, and the major decisions of the convention are always submitted to referendum vote for approval by the membership before they become effective."

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Do you remember that testimony?

A. Not in detail, as I recall.

Q. Now, that statement was true, wasn't it?

A. To a certain degree it was, yes.

Q. In other words, you did accurately set out the procedure by which the American Communications Association elected its officers and passed upon measures that came before it, isn't that right?

A. Yes, but there is other matter in there that doesn't——

Q. That is a fact, is it not, Mr. Rathborne: that the American Communications Association was not dominated by Communists, and when you went down there you were going to tell the truth about that and did tell the truth to that extent, and it was when you were out of the union that now you want to blacken the union together with the defendants in this case, isn't that correct?

Mr. Donohue: I object, if your Honor please. That question is too comprehensive. [6497]

Mr. Hallinan: Might we have the recess?

Mr. Donohue: I thought counsel was quoting Mr. Bridges.

The Court: Is there an objection at all?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, there is, your Honor, to that question.

The Court: Sustained. We will take the afternoon recess, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any circumstances.

(Recess.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, you testified before the House Un-American Activities Committee that the American Communications Association was a democratic union, and you gave the proof that it was democratic in the language that I have just read. Now, today you testified that it was controlled by the Communist Party. Which of those statements is true?

A. Mr. Hallinan, I said that the Communist Party operated within the union—I believe in my testimony—was able to put over its program with the union, utilizing—I didn't say this, but the procedure was utilizing the very democratic procedures that we set up in our constitution.

Q. Was the union run democratically or not?

A. It had a democratic constitution, and in connection with certain matters that you have read there, the officers were elected by referendum vote, and so on. The actual policy decisions of the union were in practically all instances conceived and put into effect by the various Communist Party units and organizations within the union, and they [6498] were—in most instances they prevailed in the organization. The record of the union for following or for adhering to the Communist Party line I think is well known.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Are you still a member of it?

A. Not that particular organization, no, sir.

Q. You are not a member of the ACA?

A. No, sir.

Q. Of what organization are you a member?

A. I belong to the American Radio Association of the CIO.

Q. Is that a CIO organization? A. Yes.

Q. What was the ACA?

A. A CIO organization.

Q. Are they both still in existence, or are they both in existence now? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, do you remember this testimony:

> "Mr. Matthews: Did you, Mr. Rathborne, at any time ever have any official connection with the American League for Peace and Democracy?
>
> "Mr. Rathborne: No, I had no official connection with them, no."

Was that answer false?

A. I don't believe I ever had any official connection. I worked with the organization. I don't believe I had any official [6499] connection. That is my best recollection.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. According to the count I kept as we went along, Mr. Rathborne, in this one hearing in 1940 you testified falsely on thirteen separate occasions, is that correct?

A. I testified earlier when Mr. Donohue was questioning me that I did give false answers in that hearing before the Dies Committee, and you pointed some of them out.

Q. Would you like to make some modification of your statement that you did it at the behest of Mr. Hudson? A. No, sir.

Q. You still stay with that. Then when you came to California you appeared before the Tenney Committee of the State Senate, isn't that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Do you say you were subpoenaed on that?

A. It is my recollection still that I was subpoenaed in both instances, both before the Dies Committee and the Tenney Committee. That is my best recollection on the matter.

Q. Did you talk to somebody during the recess about what you had testified to preceding the recess?

A. No, I discussed it—not the specific testimony.

Q. With whom?

A. I talked with Mr. Kaiser.

Q. Where? A. In the hallway. [6500]

Q. Did you go into any room, or just stand in the hall? A. We stood in the hall.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. How long were you talking to him?

A. Maybe a minute, two minutes.

Q. About your testimony?

A. No, talking generally about——

Q. What? A. We didn't discuss——

Q. What did you talk about?

A. What I said to this. I said my recollection is I was subpoenaed—still is—subpoenaed before the Dies Committee, but I had forgotten about that telegram or that other paper that you introduced there.

Q. So then Mr. Kaiser said, "Well, go back and just say you were subpoenaed," is that right?

A. No, he did not.

Q. What did he say?

A. I think he said, "Well, that is all right," or something like that.

Q. Tell us now.

A. My recollection is he said, "Well, that is all right," or some passing remark like that.

Q. Had you gone over your testimony with Mr. Kaiser before you came on the witness stand here?

A. Some of it. [6501]

Q. Is he the Roy Hudson of this case?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question and ask your Honor to ask the jury to disregard it.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Hallinan: I think it is a fair question.

Q. When you returned to California you appeared before the Tenney Committee. You say you believe you were subpoenaed to appear before it?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. That is my recollection, Mr. Hallinan. [6502]

Q. Do you know where the subpoena was served?

A. It must have been at San Francisco, because that is where the hearing is.

Q. Well, now, don't guess; if you don't know, tell us. Do you remember where it was served on you?

A. Well, I don't distinctly remember a subpoena. It is my recollection that I was subpoenaed, but I don't actually remember being served with a subpoena before the committee, to appear before the committee. That is my best recollection, that I was subpoenaed.

Q. Well, as a matter of fact, you appeared voluntarily before the Tenney Committee, too, didn't you? A. No, sir, not to my recollection.

Q. Did you issue any press release on that?

A. I don't recall any.

Q. Did you go there accompanied by an attorney? A. No, sir.

Q. And who did you see, whom did you say you talked to before you went there?

A. I talked with Mr. Schneidermann.

Q. When? A. Some time before.

Q. How long before you went before the Tenney Committee did you talk to Mr. Schneidermann?

A. I am not certain. [6503]

Q. Where did you have the talk with him?

A. I believe it was in my office in San Francisco.

Q. Who else was present?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. No one that I recall.

Q. And then you told Mr. Schneidermann that you intended to appear before the committee, is that right?

A. My recollection of the matter is that I was subpoenaed before that committee. Now—and that we discussed my appearance before the committee.

Q. Were you ever a member of the Young Communists League? A. No, sir, I never was.

Q. Now, when you appeared before the Tenney Committee, you were asked this question—oh, you were put under oath there, too, weren't you?

A. That is my recollection. I believe so. I believe if you have the record there, it will show it.

Q. Sworn to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, isn't that correct?

A. That is my recollection, and I believe the record bears that out.

Q. Yes. You were living at that time in Moss Beach, is that so?

A. 19—what? 1941, is that correct?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, I was living in Moss Beach in part of '41. [6504]

Q. And now do you remember being asked this question:

> "Have you ever been affiliated with the Communist Party?" and the answer by you:
>
> "No, sir."

Did you give that answer?

A. I believe so, yes, sir.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Was that answer false?

A. That was a false answer. As I stated, Mr. Hallinan, I have already testified that I gave false answer both before the Dies Committee and the Tenney Committee and you are now in the process of bringing out the specific answers.

Q. Now, do you remember this testimony:

> "Q. Do you know any persons who are members of the Communist Party?
>
> "A. Yes, I know a few.
> "Q. Are they members of your union?
>
> "A. No, sir.
>
> "Q. Any of them? A. No, sir."

Did you give that testimony?

A. Again, if the record shows it, I believe I did.

Q. Well, have you read your Tenney testimony recently?

A. At the same time I read the Dies Committee testimony.

Q. In the presence of Mr. Kaiser?

A. I am not sure whether it was in his presence or not, but it [6505] was—he was——

Q. These matters were discussed with him, of course, were they?

A. Well, he had the copy of the testimony and gave it to me.

Q. I see. These matters were discussed with him at the time, isn't that right?

A. Yes, they were discussed with him.

Q. Did you and he have some debate as to what answer you would make on the subject if you were confronted with the record on this trial?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. No, sir, no debate.

Q. Did you have some discussion about it?

A. The only discussion about it is, I called his attention to the fact that I had appeared before the Dies Committee and the Tenney Committee and that the time I appeared, I had denied membership in the Communist Party and had at that time perjured myself. And so he secured the records, and we looked them over, and discussed what was in them.

Q. All right. Well, now, you were asked if you knew any members of the Communist Party; you said, "Yes, I know a few." And then:

> "Q. Are they members of your union?
> "A. No, sir.
> "Q. Any of them? A. No, sir."

Was that statement false? [6506]

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you were asked this question:

> "Q. Are they members of the CIO?
> "A. Some of them are, yes.
> "Q. Do you recall their names?
> "A. I know one. I know Archie Brown.
> "Q. Any others?
> "A. I know a Ben Jones, a longshoreman.
> "Q. Ben Jones, a longshoreman?
> "A. Yes.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

"Q. Of what union is he a member?

"A. ILWU, I believe.

"Q. ILWU? A. Yes.

"Q. That is what?

"A. You mean the full name?

"Q. Yes.

"A. The International Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's.

"Q. Here in this city?

"A. That's right.

"Q. How do you know he is a Communist, Mr. Rathborne?

"A. Because I have seen him get up in a membership meeting when I happened to attend the longshore meeting and make that statement.

"Q. Yes. Is it your opinion, Mr. Rathborne, based, of [6507] course, on your experience in union matters and contact with their members, there has been quite an infiltration in the longshoremen's union in this country?

"A. I wouldn't say there was, no.

"Q. You wouldn't say there was?

"A. No.

"Q. You think the unions from time to time felt the pressure of Communists from the outside——"

Well, wait, before we get to that;

"A. I really don't quite understand the question.

"Q. What I mean is this: Regardless of whether or not there is an infiltration of Communists in the longshoremen's union, is it or is it not a fact that Communist activities are exerted to affect the longshoremen who are members of that union?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

"A. I am not a member of the longshoremen's union; I really speak authoritatively on that subject.

"Q. All right. Now answer that question with regard to your own local.

"A. As far as my own local, I happen to know how the policies of that local are determined.

"Q. Yes?

"A. They are determined by the executive board, by recommendation of the officers to the membership and all actions taken by the local are recommended at membership [6508] meetings and debated and voted on at membership meetings. And what the membership votes on, votes, is the policy of that particular local.

"Q. Yes. That is characteristic rank and file control? A. Yes."

Do you remember giving that testimony?

A. I do not, in specific detail. I remember——

Q. Was that testimony true?

A. That testimony would be true.

Q. That testimony would be true?

A. I might say, however, that the situation of Communist control, that testimony is true; from the situation of Communist control, it could still be present.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Now, you testified in this same hearing that you were acquainted with Mr. Bridges, is that correct?

A. I don't have an independent recollection, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Well, you didn't mention Mr. Bridges as being one of the persons whom you knew that was a member of the Communist Party, did you?

A. No, sir.

Q. You hadn't known Mr. Bridges since 1933, had you?

A. No, I believe the first time I met Mr. Bridges was in 1935.

Q. Do you know any reason why you said before the Tenney Committee that you had known him since 1933?

A. I don't know of any reason as to that. Might have been an [6509] error on my part or on the part of the recorder.

Mr. Hallinan: We offer in evidence at this time, if the Court please, the entire record in the transaction involving Mr. Rathborne's arrest in Los Angeles.

Mr. Donohue: For what purpose?

Mr. Hallinan: Well, you told me, "Bring in the whole record and we will stipulate to put it in." That was the very suggestion you made before the noon recess.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Donohue: May I ask again, for what purpose is it offered in the light of the decision which the Court made this morning?

Mr. Hallinan: Well, the fact that though Your Honor was going to read that testimony at noontime?

The Court: Yes, I did read it. At page 6395 and 6396.

Mr. Hallinan: It started at 6393, didn't it?

The Court: Yes. I read it.

Mr. Hallinan: And Your Honor will observe that the question comes in on direct examination. He was asked the question as to the nature of the charge that he had been arrested under and gave an opinion on it, gave his statement on it. We are not concerned at this time with impeachment on anything in the record, but upon a matter involved in his testimony since appearing in this court.

The Court: As I ruled under the Mackey case, the record produced before me, I assume this to be the same record which I [6510] had in part this morning, may not be offered or received for the purpose of impeachment of Mr. Rathborne. Now, your present position is that there is some testimony offered by him yesterday that bears upon it, concerning which you desire to examine him, is that right?

Mr. Hallinan: That's right, yes. In other words, it does not affect the merits of that at all.

The Court: Well, I might say that so far as my reading the transcript is concerned, I could not perceive any matter therein contained that might lend itself to that type of examination. I am not inclined to foreclose you. Now, at 6395 Mr. Rathborne answered, "Mr. Rathborne, have you ever been convicted of a felony?," and the answer is "No, sir." I held this morning, and now hold and reiterate, that he was in perfect propriety in that answer given, in the light of the record and in the light of the decree expunging the record. So as to that matter, I see no ground for further examination. I do not know precisely what you have in mind, Mr. Hallinan. I am not inclined to foreclose you. I will await a period when I do determine it. Now you may proceed, having in mind my ruling.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Hallinan: Yes. Well, Your Honor, there is only one preliminary question. I want to ask him and then I want to ask him something out of the record as he testified.

The Court: As to the transcript itself, if you will pardon me a moment, as to the transcript itself, I sustained the [6511] objection, if it is offered for the ground of impeachment.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Hallinan: Now, would you show the witness that document please? (Document handed to the witness by the Clerk.)

Q. Are you familiar with that?

A. Yes, I read it during the noontime.

Q. You have seen it already, have you not?

A. I read it at lunchtime.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Yes. Now, you had seen that same document before in the possession of Mr. Barber, had you?

A. Not the entire thing, no.

Q. Not the entire thing. But when had you seen the document in Mr. Barber's possession?

A. At lunchtime I talked to Mr. Barber about that, and his recollection was some time along in August of 1949.

Q. His recollection was some time in August? We would sooner have your recollection, if you will. Do you remember when it was?

A. Well, my discussion with him refreshed my memory, and that is also my recollection.

Q. So in August of 1949 you saw the portion of the record that Mr. Barber had, is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it the same record that you see [6512] there?

A. Well, there is a portion of the record—the record I saw is a portion of this document here (indicating).

Q. And did you read the portion that he had?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. Did you discuss it with him? A. I did.

Q. Did you discuss with him anything relating to procuring the order that has been introduced in evidence here expunging any conviction?

A. I did.

Q. All right. And you knew when you were testifying here yesterday that the nature of the charge, regardless of its disposition, was burglary; that's right—didn't you?

A. I have read the document. I knew that's what the document stated, yes. But my concern or my thought was on the matter of whether it was a misdemeanor or whether it was a felony. That was my——

Q. But you knew what the nature of the charge was, you knew the name of the charge, didn't you? Well, do you have a recollection of events that led up to the charge?

A. Yes, sir, yes, I knew——

Q. And the events that led up to the charge were contained in the document that Mr. Barber which you read, isn't that right? A. That's right.

Q. It narrated the exact things that you had done that led to [6513] your arrest, isn't that correct? A. That's correct.

Q. And you knew that the charge was burglary, didn't you? A. I believe I did, yes, sir.

Q. All right. Now, yesterday when you were testifying, you said this——

Mr. Donohue: What page, please?

Mr. Hallinan: 6396.

The Witness: I said the charge, I believe, whatever it was.

Q. Yes. A. Words to that effect.

Q. No, 6395. Counsel here asks you this:

> "Q. Mr. Rathborne, have you ever been convicted of a felony? A. No, sir.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

"Q. Did there come a time in your life when you were arrested for some offense?

"A. Yes, there was.

"Q. Will you tell us the nature of that offense and what happened?

"A. In 1924 I was attending a radio school in Los Angeles, a YMCA radio school——

"Q. How old were you then?

"A. 19, I believe. And I was a very avid radio amateur, and very much interested in radio, both as an avocation [6514] and a vocation, and I made the very serious mistake of trying to take some radio parts from the school that I attended. I was arrested and charged with this, whatever the charge was, and between the time——" and then I interrupted you.

Now, when you gave that answer, "* * * charged with this, whatever the charge was * * *," you knew at the time you gave this testimony yesterday that the charge was burglary, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir, I did, but——

Q. Yes. And you had some kind of a conversation with somebody preceding your testimony, in which you were to try to conceal from the jury that it was burglary, isn't that right?

A. That is not correct, Mr. Hallinan, at all.

Mr. Donohue: Just a moment, Mr. Rathborne. I object to that question, if Your Honor pleases.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Did you have a discussion with any of the members of the prosecution on that subject?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Donohue: Just a moment, Mr. Hallinan.

The Court: Just a moment, Mr. Hallinan. I will overrule the objection. I think the answer was made.

(To the Witness): You answered the question, did you?

The Witness: Can I comment a little on my answer, Your Honor?

The Court: Yes, you may. [6515]

A. (Continuing): Yesterday in my testimony I didn't deny the charge of burglary. I just said, "Whatever the charge was." I didn't say it was anything or I didn't say it wasn't anything.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): What I am asking you is this: Do you have any discussion, or did you have any discussion with anybody connected with the prosecution that you should answer in this fashion, "* * * and charged with this, whatever the charge was * * *" and try to conceal from the jury the fact that the charge was burglary?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Now, at the time that you separated from the CIO you had an automobile belonging to the CIO, is that right?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if Your Honor pleases.

Mr. Hallinan: It goes to the witness' motives, interest, bias.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Donohue: The CIO is not on trial here, Mr. Bridges is on trial.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, to some extent it shows his animus toward the union and toward the persons, of which Mr. Bridges is a member.

Mr. Donohue: I think if Your Honor pleases that we have—— [6516]

Mr. Donohue: I think, if your Honor please, we have reached the time that the cross-examination should be circumscribed within the limits authorized by law.

Mr. Hallinan: You said that two hours ago.

Mr. Donohue: I thought you might ultimately get to trying Mr. Bridges and not the witness.

Mr. Hallinan: It is the same thing, your Honor, just trying to protect their witnesses at every step. Anything that goes to the credibility of the witness, his motives, his past misstatements, past perjuries, anything of that kind is strongly objected to. We had an objection a few minutes ago when this witness had testified that in response to a subpoena, under compulsion he had been required to appear before the Un-American Activities Committee to give testimony. Faced with that difficulty he had gone and consulted Mr. Hudson as to what his statements would be if he were questioned concerning his Communist Party membership. Then I produce a document, a press release, containing a wire from this gentleman which proves conclusively that no such situation existed, and that he was not under any compulsion, he was not under any subpoena. He had wired the Committee asking permission to go there, raising the necessary implication that he went there of his free will, voluntarily, and with the full and avowed intention of committing perjury as it suited him. And counsel protested very vehemently against the introduction of this release concerning that telegram establishing [6517] that fact.

Mr. Donohue: I protested because——

Mr. Hallinan: That is just being dishonest, your Honor. That is just trying to keep out things that are very material, that go right to the——

The Court: The characterization that that is a dishonest practice is not in accord with my notion any more than, let us assume, you entered serious objections to a matter that you regard——

Mr. Hallinan: We have not done any such thing. We have not done any such thing.

The Court: That may or may not be.

Mr. Hallinan: We have made a few objections to hearsay. Almost all of the rulings we have been involved in have been efforts on our part to put in evidence records, not to keep them out.

The Court: Mr. Hallinan, without, if I may suggest it to you, dwelling on personalities, may I have your precise question now? That is, did he have an automobile and did it belong to the CIO?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

The Court: I will allow the question. I do not know where you intend to go. I will rule when you arrive at that point.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Is that true?

A. No, sir, it is not true. [6518]

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. That is not true. I had an automobile which I was in the process of purchasing from the CIO.

Q. You sold the automobile?

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. You sold the automobile, didn't you? Whose name was the automobile registered under?

A. At the end of 1947?

Q. Yes.

A. I believe it was under my own name.

Q. Was it under the name of the CIO?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you sell the automobile?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you return the money to the CIO?

A. Part of it.

Q. Has the CIO procured a judgment against you for about $700 as the cost of that automobile?

A. I purchased the automobile from the CIO after taking it up with the Executive Board of the State CIO and getting their permission, and I made a payment on the car. Since then I have been unable to pay for the rest of the car. The debt is a legitimate debt. A judgment has been entered in civil court for the collection of that debt, and I hope when circumstances permit to pay that [6519] debt.

Q. How much is the debt?

A. I believe it is $650.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. And the CIO has procured a judgment against you upon that, is that right?

A. That is correct.

Q. You defaulted, isn't that true?

A. That is right. I didn't keep up the payments.

Q. How long ago did you say you sold that car?

A. I don't recall exactly, Mr. Hallinan. I believe it was about the end of 1947 or early in 1948. I am not certain on that point.

Q. To whom did you sell it?

Mr. Donohue: I now object, if your Honor please. I think we certainly have gone far enough.

The Court: The objection is sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Did you sign the CIO's name to the pink slip of the car when you sold it?

A. I did—when I sold it?

Q. Yes. A. Or when I bought it?

Q. Either one.

A. When I bought it I signed my name as secretary-treasurer of the State CIO, after having secured permission—authority from the State Executive Board of the CIO to purchase the car.

Q. You received authority from the State Executive Board, is [6520] that correct?

Mr. Donohue: I object, if your Honor please. I again say, if your Honor please, there can be no connection between the purchase or sale of an automobile, the payment of default in the payments in the transaction, and the issues in this case.

The Court: I am inclined to agree with you at this juncture. The witness has testified to the acquistion and the sale of the car. He defaulted in his payments and judgment has been taken against him.

Mr. Hallinan: We charge him with embezzling the car. That is what we are trying to prove.

Mr. Donohue: I ask that the jury be instructed to disregard the highly prejudicial statement.

Mr. Hallinan: I ask that we be allowed to develop the point. Why should he be protected on that? Why, your Honor, here with Bob Robertson they were exploring around there for hours on the supposition that he might have gone AWOL thirty years or so ago from the Navy. That went on for hours and hours.

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, I admonish you to disregard the statement made by Mr. Hallinan that the witness on the stand embezzled the car. Disregard that, and I strike it from the record.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): You testified here you were working on the President Madison during most of the years 1948 and 1949, [6521] is that right?

A. My recollection is up until sometime in May of 1949 is when I left the ship.

Q. What were your earnings? How much were you earning a month at that time?

Mr. Donohue: I object, if your Honor please. On what basis would the man's earnings be utilized for the purpose of impeaching his credibility or proving the guilt or innocence of these defendants?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Hallinan: He said that he was unable to make payments on the car, and I want to show he had ample funds with which to do that.

The Court: The objection is sustained.

Mr. Hallinan: It was a self-serving declaration that he made.

Q. You testified that you saw that record that was shown to you. Do you still have it?

A. I have it here, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Sometime in August of 1949?

A. That is my recollection, yes, sir.

Q. Did you have some discussion with Mr. Barber about that record? A. I did.

Q. Was any arrangement then made that Mr. Barber would secure the expunging of the [6522] record?

A. Yes, I told Mr. Barber that I had been back to the office in Los Angeles—I believe it is the probation office—in either 1928 or 1929, and the card there shows the case being dismissed, and he apparently had a check made on it and said, "There is no record of expungement."

Q. You said the card showed it had been dismissed?

A. I had made an inquiry and I was told, advised by a person I contacted in the probation office.

Q. Who was the person? A. I don't recall.

Q. Was that a written communication or an oral communication?

A. No, it was oral. I went down and visited with him.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Did you go there or telephone?

A. No, I went there.

Q. Did you see the card yourself?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was it a man or a woman you talked to?

A. It was a man I spoke to.

Q. How old a man?

A. I don't recall how old.

Q. Do you know what department he was in?

A. I contacted someone in the probation department in Los Angeles.

Q. Had you ever met that person before?

A. I don't recall having met him. [6523]

Q. He did not show you the record, but told you it had been dismissed, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. When was that?

A. I had been going to sea then, and—let's see. My recollection is somewhere around 1928 or 1929 I made inquiry about the status, my status, because I was concerned about my right to vote.

Q. That was in 1928 you were concerned about your right to vote, is that right?

A. 1928 or 1929, yes.

Q. And you have been voting continuously since that time, is that right?

A. Yes, I have been voting since that time, yes, sir.

Q. Did you vote prior to 1928?

A. I don't recall, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Well, don't you remember an occasion in which you spoke to a man named Schlipf?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Paul Schlipf?

Q. Yes. A. Yes, sir, I know him.

Q. About the indictment of some man for voting after he had been convicted of a felony without the record being expunged? Do you remember that?

A. I never recall such a conversation. [6524]

Q. Do you remember anybody being so indicted, some friend of yours?

A. No, that is something entirely new to me. I have not heard of that one.

Mr. Hallman: I might suggest, your Honor, I have some documents that bear upon these matters. It will take a few minutes to locate them.

The Court: We will take the recess and adjourn until tomorrow morning at ten o'clock.

Mr. MacInnis: May we detain the Court for a moment? I have a legal matter I would like to address.

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, we will take the afternoon adjournment until tomorrow morning at ten o'clock. May I again admonish you not to discuss the case under any conditions or form an opinion until the matter is finally submitted to you.

(Thereupon the jury was excused, and in their absence the following occurred:)

Mr. MacInnis: Judge, in that interest which I am sure the Court would have in viewing further ~~authorities on the discussion which took place this~~ morning, I would like to bring before you a more recent decision. Now, the Court, as I understand it from the remarks made today, and the prosecutor alike rely upon the Mackey case, the decision reported in Volume 58, Cal. App., I think a 1922 decision, as supporting the present [6525] ruling to the end that Mervyn Rathborne is not a convicted felon. Now I have with me a decision, not of the District Court of Appeals but the Supreme Court, and it is not a 1922 decision but it is a 1949 decision, and it discusses the effect of that very section cited by the Court; Section 1203, subsection 4 of the Penal Code of this State, and in this decision the Mackey case is discussed and overruled, as well as all of the earlier cases, and without reading all of the decision our Supreme Court in the case of Meyer v. the Board of Medical Examiners, decided by the Supreme Court of California en banc on July 15, 1949; cited in 206 Pacific Reporter, 2nd Series at page 1085, said this—and this language was an approval of a previous Supreme Court decision, also a modern decision, called In Re Phillips, 17 Cal. (2d) at page 55. The Supreme Court in the opinion written by Mr. Justice Spence said this:

> "The powers possessed by the trial courts under the probation statutes and by penal code sections 1203 et seq. are concerned with mitigation of punishment and confer discretion upon the courts in dealing with a convicted defendant. The power of the court to reward a convicted defendant who satisfactorily completes his period of probation by setting aside the > verdict and dismissing the action operates to mitigate his punishment by restoring certain rights and removing certain disabilities, but it cannot be assumed that the Legislature intended that such [6526] action by the trial court under Section 1203.4 should be considered as obliterating the fact that the defendant has been finally adjudged guilty of a crime. This is made clear by the provision that the fact of the defendant's conviction can be used against him in any later prosecution, despite dismissal of the action under Section 1203.4. In brief, action in mitigation of the defendant's punishment should not affect the fact that his guilt has been finally determined according to law. Such a final determination of guilt is the basis for the order of disbarment in this case."

That involves a doctor before the Medical Board, and the Supreme Court in this decision of Mr. Justice Spence cites with approval People v. Majado, 22 Cal. App. (2d) at page 323. It cites In Re Phillips, 17 Cal. 2nd Series at page 55. And it says this regarding the cases which were discussed earlier:

> "From this standpoint appellant's theory that the import of the probation statement and the dismissal proceeding is to expunge the record of the crime (Sherry v. Ingalls, supra; People v. Mackey, supra), cannot be sustained."

That, I believe, is the latest expression of the Supreme Court of the State of California, and I think it discusses precisely the proposition now before us, and I would commend this decision to the Court, and if the Court reads it we may [6527] be——

The Court: Now, I may say to you from the reading you have made, it is not inconsistent with the finding I have made in the light of the Mackey case.

Mr. Donohue: May I say, if your Honor please, there are many other decisions which follow the same decision here, still not in conflict with the Mackey case, because what Mr. MacInnis overlooks is the fact that in the Mackey case the law was applicable, as here, to a witness, and in the case which he has just cited it is sought to apply the same law to a defendant in a subsequent proceeding.

The Court: Judge Works devoted two pages to that same argument. We will take the afternoon recess.

Mr. MacInnis: May I read you another——

The Court: I will read it this evening.

Mr. MacInnis: In case you have any doubt as to my understanding of this decision and what it means, let me read this paragraph——

The Court: I will read it tonight. We have had a lengthy day.

Mr. MacInnis: Yes, haven't we?

The Court: We will take the adjournment until tomorrow morning at ten o'clock.

~~(Thereupon an adjournment was taken until~~ Wednesday, March 1, 1950, at 10:00 [6528] a.m.)

Wednesday, March 1, 1950—10:00 A. M.

The Clerk: United States of America v. Harry Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

MERVYN RATHBORNE

resumed.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Hallinan:

Q. Mr. Rathborne, before you joined the Communist Party had you attended any meetings of that Party?

A. No, sir, I don't recall attending any such meetings.

Q. Now, you told us that you were expelled from the Communist Party when?

A. I believe I testified a committee consisting of Archie Brown and Loretta Starvis came to my office in the early part of 1947, I believe, and advised me that I had been dropped from membership in the Communist Party by action of the State Executive Committee of the Party.

Q. Those persons, you testified, were officials of the Communist Party, is that right?

A. Mr. Brown at that time was the State Trade Union Director and Miss Starvis was a member of the State Executive Committee. That was my understanding of their positions.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. What part of 1947? Did you say the early part? Can you place it more closely than that?

A. My recollection is probably—oh, I don't know; probably [6529] March or April. I am not certain, Mr. Hallinan, as to the date.

Q. Had those two people ever been in your office before that time?

A. Mr. Brown had on a number of occasions. I never recall Miss Starvis being there.

Q. How about Mr. Schneidermann? Had he ever been in your office?

A. On many occasions, yes, sir.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. On many occasions.

Q. You also testified that on some occasions following the Philadelphia convention, on two occasions you took Mr. Schneidermann to Mr. Bridges' office, is that correct?

A. Mr. Schneidermann and Mr. Bridges and I used to meet at Mr. Bridges' office—had met at Mr. Bridges' office on a number of occasions.

Q. How many times would you say?

A. Well, I would estimate maybe ten to fifteen times, something like that.

Q. Were other persons present on any of those occasions? A. Sometimes there were, yes.

Q. Who, for instance?

~~A. On one occasion I remember that we met~~ down there when Donald Henderson was present and we talked about the food, [6530] tobacco and agricultural workers organizing a drive of the canneries.

Q. When Mr. Schneidermann called to see you at your office did he announce his name over the telephone? Did he have the girl call in to you and say, "Mr. Schneidermann is here to see you"?

A. Yes. Usually my secretary used to say, "Well, Bill is outside; he wants to see you." Sometimes he would call by telephone.

Q. The same thing as regards Mr. Brown and Miss Starvis, is that right, or Mrs. Starvis, whichever it is?

A. I believe on that particular occasion, although my recollection is hazy, that they had called me previously, I had spoken to them, and I told them——

Q. At any rate, what I am getting at is this: Those people simply announced their names to the girl, the girl transmitted the message, and you say, "Send them in," and the person came in, is that right?

A. Sometimes that was right and other times they would call up previously and make an appointment.

Q. What I am getting at is that there was nothing secret about it or surreptitious about it. They just came as they wanted, is that right?

A. They—on occasions they would drop in; on other occasions they would make [6531] appointments.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Let me ask you this: Is the first notice that you had that you were in difficulty with the Communist Party the message that you got from Mr. Brown and Miss Starvis?

A. That wasn't the first notice, not by a long shot.

Q. Is it Miss Starvis or Mrs. Starvis?

A. I don't know, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Had you received any prior information that you were going to be dropped from the Party?

A. Not that I was going to be dropped. I had attended meetings before that where I was—had been very roundly criticized for my failure to do certain things that were not in accordance with the Party line.

Q. When you received this message from Mr. Brown and Miss Starvis did you do anything further about it? A. At that time?

Q. Yes.

A. No, I just said, "Well, if that is it, I guess that is it."

Q. Did you do anything at any subsequent time about it? A. What do you mean do anything?

Q. Did you take any steps to have that set aside or find out what the difficulty was or anything of that kind? A. No, I did not.

Q. Did you talk to anybody else about having been expelled?

A. Well, they told me it was not in the form of a regular expulsion. I had just been dropped.

Q. I [6532] say, did you talk to anybody else about that?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I don't recall whether I did.

Q. There has been introduced here in evidence a paper dated November, 1945, relating to your resignation from the CIO or your being dropped from the CIO. Which was it? Did you resign or were you dropped? In 1947, I mean.

A. I believe I testified to what happened. When the convention came up I made no effort and was not elected a delegate to the convention, and I was not a candidate for any office.

Q. You dropped out yourself then?

A. That is right.

Q. When was that?

A. That, I believe, was in November, 1947.

Q. And at that time, then, you severed your connection with Mr. Bridges and gave up your office, and so forth, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. You had maintained an office in the ILWU as CIO secretary-treasurer for some time, is that right?

A. I maintained an office in what was then the CIO building. I understand the ILWU has since taken that building over, but at the time it was known as the CIO building.

Q. And you simply moved out of your office?

A. I turned it over to the man who was elected.

Q. Who was that? A. Mr. Allen. [6533]

Q. When you left, some sort of dinner was tendered to you, is that right?

A. I don't recall.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Did Mr. Bridges make a talk at some dinner that was tendered to you and make a collection for you?

A. Mr. Bridges made—introduced a resolution at the convention of the State CIO. The resolution was in the general way of lauding me and the work I had done, but I don't think there was any collection. My understanding was that the ILWU delegates there voted to make me a gift of $250 from the union treasury. I may be in error. [6534]

Q. Well, did Mr. Bridges make that proposal? Was he the one that started that?

A. I am not certain about that, because I wasn't on the inside of it.

Q. At any rate, you received the $250?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, will you tell us this: Who is the first person to whom you spoke concerning testifying against Harry Bridges or becoming a witness in this proceeding or whatever the subject was that led to your occupying the position you are now in?

A. Well, the first time that I was contacted by the government—is that what you want?

Q. Yes.

A. ——was on the day that the President Madison sailed on the second trip. I was on it.

Q. When was that?

A. Well, I recall I went on the ship, let's see—March, I believe, or the trip would be about two months. It would be about May of 1949, I believe.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. May of 1949? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the first time?

A. 1948, I am sorry. 1948.

Q. And that is the first time that any one connected you with the government or anyone suggesting that you become a witness against [6535] Harry Bridges contacted you, is that right?

A. Well, put it this way: It is the first time that I talked to any government official, that is, directly. There had been a number of phone calls made to my house prior to that time but I had not done anything about them.

Q. When was the first phone call to your house?

A. I don't recall.

Q. Approximately?

A. I would say some time around early in 1948. Probably March or February. If I remember correctly, it was while I was going to this radio school taking this refresher course to get my license back.

Q. Where was that radio school?

A. Here in San Francisco.

Q. Had you spoken to anybody in the school——

A. No, sir.

Q. ——about any unwillingness to become a witness against Bridges? A. No, sir.

Q. So the first——

A. As a matter of fact, at that time I didn't know, when the phone calls were being made, I didn't know what the purpose of the calls were. Although I——

Q. At any rate, in February or March of 1948,

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

so well as you can remember, you first received a phone call from some person concerning your testifying against Bridges, is that right? [6536]

A. No, I received the phone call from somebody in the Immigration Service wanting to see me.

Q. All right, who was that person?

A. I believe it is the gentleman who is now dead. I can't recall his name. He—at the moment the name escapes me. I may be able to remember it.

Q. All right. And where did you get the call?

A. At my home in Half Moon Bay.

Q. Did you speak to the person?

A. No, I didn't speak to him. My wife spoke to him and told me—well, Mr. So-and-so called you from the Immigration Service and he wants you to call him back. But I never called him back.

Q. Now, when did you receive the next phone call?

A. Well, I think during that entire period, between the time that I shipped out, there were about three phone calls and none of them resulted in anything.

Q. Well, after this first phone call, when would you think the next one was?

A. Oh, I would—I mean, my memory is not good on that. It is a period of weeks, I would say, or——

Q. What was the name of the person who called you on the second call?

A. My recollection is that it was the same person that called all three times. I am sorry, I can't remember.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Did you speak to him on the phone on any of those occasions? [6537]

A. No, on all occasions my wife spoke to him.

Q. On all occasions?

A. And gave me the message.

Q. Were you present during any of the conversations that your wife was having with that agent?

A. No, sir.

Q. There were messages that you received asking you to get in touch with him, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. Did the agent say to your wife, or did your wife say that the agent had stated, it was in connection with Harry Bridges?

A. No, sir, just merely said he wanted, would like to talk to me.

Q. All right. Then when is the first time, then, that you personally spoke to anybody connected with the Immigration Service or with the FBI or with the police department or whoever it may have been?

A. Well, the first time—incidentally, the only people I have ever been contacted on this case by is the Immigration Service.

Q. All right.

A. With one exception.

Q. What is the one exception?

A. Well, at one time here about Christmas time the FBI got in touch with me, this last Christmas.

Q. That is in December of 1949? [6538]

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what was the name of that man?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I don't recall his name.

Q. Did you have a talk with him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where? A. Here in this building.

Q. What part of the building?

A. Upstairs on the fourth floor.

Q. What date was it, do you know, approximately?

A. I would say probably around the 20th of December. I am not sure; it was just before Christmas, the way I recall, or it might have been just after. Now, I am not certain.

Q. How long did that conversation last?

A. Oh, maybe half an hour.

Q. Anybody else present?

A. There were two FBI people present, people who identified themselves as FBI agents.

Q. And can you give us the name of either of them? A. I am sorry, I can not.

Q. Anybody else present with them?

A. At this time I don't recall. I don't think there was.

Q. Was there any stenographer there?

A. I don't—no, sir, I don't believe there was.

Q. Nobody took down any statement as you dictated it? [6539]

A. Yes, there was a statement taken.

Q. At that time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the presence of these two men?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it dictated or how was it given?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I wrote it out.

Q. You wrote it out in longhand?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long was that statement?

A. Oh, I would say, I believe it was three or four pages; I am not sure.

Q. Could you tell us which, three or four?

A. I would say either three or four. I don't recall exactly, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. You wrote it out entirely in your own handwriting? A. That is my recollection.

Q. And signed it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Dated it? A. I believe I did, yes.

Q. And then gave it to these men, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. Did they give you a copy of it?

A. No, sir. [6540]

Q. Have you ever seen it since?

A. No, sir.

Q. Haven't read it since? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, aside from those men you talked only to Immigration officials, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. And who was the first one?

A. Well, there was two gentlemen that came down, I had made one trip on the President Madison and it was the sailing date of the second trip that I was on there, and I was rather busy. And these two gentlemen came down and asked to talk to me, and I talked to them for a few minutes, because I——

(Testimony of Meryyn Rathborne.)

Q. And that was when?

A. Well, that would have been about May of '48, I believe.

Q. And you talked for a few minutes on the ship, is that right? A. That's right.

Q. What part of the ship?

A. In my quarters on the ship.

Q. And did they show you any credential, or how did they identify themselves?

A. They had credentials in their pocket.

Q. What were their names?

A. I am trying to remember the names, and I can't do it. One of them, as I say, is a gentleman who has died about several [6541] months ago.

Q. That is the same man who put in the phone call, is that right? A. I believe so, yes.

Q. And who was the other one?

A. And I don't recall the other man's name at all.

Q. Have you seen him since?

A. The other one?

Q. Yes. A. I don't recall that I have.

Q. Don't remember the name of either person?

A. No, sir.

Q. Then you talked for just a few minutes?

A. I could get that information.

Q. Beg your pardon?

A. I could get that information if you wanted it, I believe.

~~Q. Then who did you next talk to?~~

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. My recollection of it is the next person I talked to was Mr. Barber.

Q. That is Mr. Bruce Barber?

A. That's right.

Q. And where did you talk to him?

A. I believe it was in Half Moon Bay. I believe he came down to see me, he and another gentleman.

Q. Who was the other man? [6542]

A. I don't remember his name.

Q. And they visited you at Half Moon Bay?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that?

A. Well, that was after this trip that I have talked about, so that would be, I would think, about, some time in the summer of '48; that is, probably July. It was shortly after my ship got back, after I made this trip, and the trip takes about, all together about eight weeks. So it would be approximately eight weeks after the first interview.

Q. And these two men, Barber and the other man came to your house at Half Moon Bay?

A. That's right.

Q. How long did they stay on that first occasion?

A. We went out to the Miramar and I think we talked for maybe probably an hour.

Q. Where did you go in Miramar?

A. To the Miramar Hotel.

Q. And sat in the Miramar Hotel?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What part of it? A. In the bar there.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Have you ever had any interest in that hotel?

A. No, sir.

Q. And you sat there for about an hour, is that right? [6543] A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did they tell you what they wanted to speak to you about?

A. I believe it was at that time that they did.

Q. They told you it was something involving Harry Bridges, is that right?

A. That's right. I am not positive, Mr. Hallinan, but it is my recollection that that was the time that they mentioned to me in connection with the case.

Q. Told you they intended to indict him for perjury?

A. No, my recollection is they said they were conducting an investigation regarding Communist activities in trade unions, and particularly Communist Party membership of Harry Bridges.

Q. And did you tell them what you knew about such matters? A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. You didn't tell them any of the things that you have testified to here?

A. Not at that time, no, sir.

Q. Did you tell them any of them?

A. I don't believe at that particular time that I did.

Q. Did you tell them that you didn't know anything about that matter? A. No, I did not.

Q. Did you tell them that you didn't know whether Harry Bridges [6544] was a member of the Communist Party or not at that time?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I don't recall that question ever being asked at that particular time.

Q. They didn't ask you that?

A. I don't recall that they did, no, sir.

Q. Did they ask you if you had been a member of the Communist Party?

A. They definitely did.

Q. And what did you answer?

A. On that occasion I believe I said I had been.

Q. You weren't under oath then?

A. No, sir.

Q. When they asked you that question you said you had been, although when you were asked that question under oath before the Un-American Activities and the Tenney Committee, you denied that fact, is that right?

A. At that particular time I testified before the Tenney Committee and the other committee I was a member of the Communist Party and I was following Communist Party discipline and its instructions in the matter.

Q. I see. But as soon as you got out, then you admitted you had been a member of the Communist Party?

A. I didn't go around admitting it publicly.

Q. No, but I mean, on this occasion you admitted it to these two men? [6545]

A. My recollection, they asked me how long I had been out of the party.

Q. But then they asked you, did they, if you knew anything about Harry Bridges being or not being a member?

A. Not at that particular time, no, sir. That is my recollection. I don't—I am certain they asked me if I knew him and I said certainly I did.

Q. They [6545-A] told you they were investigating Communist Party matters, infiltration, and particularly any Communist connections or membership of Harry Bridges; they told you that at that time, is that right?

A. That is my recollection, yes.

Q. And you did not give them any information except you had been a member of the Party yourself, is that correct?

A. I wouldn't say—I didn't give them any information about Mr. Bridges; I will put it that way, but I discussed other things with him.

Q. Between the time that Mr. Bridges had been party to this eulogistic talk about you in the latter part of 1947 and the collection of a fund for you, had you seen him? A. No, sir.

Q. So between that time and the meeting with Barber and the other man at Half Moon Bay you had not seen Harry Bridges?

A. No, sir, I don't recall having seen him since the convention in Santa Cruz.

Q. You had had no quarrel with him?

A. No, sir.

Q. No difficulty of any kind?

A. No, sir.

Q. He had always treated you fairly, is that right? A. That is right.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Decently? [6546] A. That is right.

Q. Been your friend?

A. We had our differences of opinion, but generally we had been friendly.

Q. He had been your friend? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When these gentlemen came to see you did you get in touch with Mr. Bridges and tell him such an inquiry was on foot?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. When did you next see anybody connected with the Immigration Department? This conversation, you say, was approximately July, 1948. When did you next see anybody?

A. I believe it was September of 1948—no—yes, I think it was September of 1948.

Q. Whom did you see then?

A. I saw Mr. Barber.

Q. Where? A. At the same place.

Q. Did you go out to the Miramar Hotel again?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why didn't you talk to him in your own home?

A. Well, I don't know any particular reason why I did not.

Q. Did he call at your home?

A. He called me at my home and asked if he could see me, and I said, "Sure, I will meet you at the Miramar." [6547]

Q. "I will meet you at the Miramar," and you met him there?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I believe he was calling from there, but I am not certain.

Q. You think he phoned from the Miramar, and you went out there to see him, is that right?

A. That is my recollection, but I am not certain about it.

Q. How far is the Miramar from your home?

A. About two miles.

Q. Was that in the evening, in the daytime, or what?

A. My recollection is it was in the afternoon.

Q. What day of the week?

A. I couldn't tell you. I don't remember.

Q. Was it a Sunday, a holiday, or what?

A. I am sorry, Mr. Hallinan, but I just don't remember.

Q. When you got there, who accompanied Mr. Barber, if anyone? Was anybody with him?

A. I believe Mr. McGowan was with him at that time.

Q. Was that the first time you had ever met McGowan?

A. I believe—my recollection is that is correct, yes, sir.

Q. And then you had a conversation with those two men, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. How long did that last?

A. I would say approximately an hour. I am again uncertain as to the exact time.

Q. Did anybody take any notes or take any statement from you [6548] at that time?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Mr. Barber may have taken some notes, but there was no statement.

Q. Nothing that you signed? A. No, sir.

Q. And nothing had been signed on the previous occasion, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. No statement written out that you saw?

A. That is right.

Q. On that occasion did they again tell you they were investigating Harry Bridge's alleged connection with the Communist Party?

A. They did. We discussed a number of—a large number of things.

Q. Did you tell them anything then that you have testified to on this occasion, that you have testified here in the last few days?

A. I recall—and I am reasonably certain it was at that particular meeting—of telling them of my strong conviction that I thought the Communist Party was definitely working an injury to the labor movement, and the situation today was one where we were very definitely, in my judgment, in a cold war condition in this country, and that I was apprehensive about the situation from those points of view.

Q. Did you discuss Harry Bridges? [6549]

A. I believe—yes, I believe he was discussed.

Q. Did you tell anything to them then that you have testified to on the witness stand here?

A. I am not certain. I may have, I may not ~~have. I don't recall all the remarks that were made.~~

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. On the occasion that you were at the Miramar, that second occasion, did you have anything to drink?

A. I believe we each had a bottle of beer.

Q. Is that all? A. Yes, sir.

Q. On the previous occasion——

A. We may have had two bottles of beer, but certainly no farther than that.

Q. On the previous occasion did you have anything to drink?

A. I don't recall, Mr. Hallinan. I don't think so, but it could have been.

Q. Without inquiring too much into your personal habits, because I do not care about that, is that what you customarily drink, beer, when you have occasion to drink?

A. I occasionally drink beer, yes, sir. I mean, sometimes I drink beer and sometimes I drink other things.

Q. On this occasion your belief is you had one or two bottles of beer? A. Yes.

Q. Nothing more? [6550]

A. It was in the summertime and my recollection is we had a couple of bottles of beer.

Q. And you told him on that occasion, then, some of the matters you have narrated concerning Harry Bridges, is that right?

A. My recollection is he was discussed, yes, sir.

Q. I say, did you tell them any of the things that you have testified to in this trial about Harry Bridges?

A. I don't recall clearly, but I may have.

Q. Did you tell them about any of these alleged meetings that you say he attended?

A. I am not certain. I don't recall the conversation clearly enough to remember.

Q. When did you next see anybody connected with the Immigration Department?

A. It was quite shortly after that.

Q. How long after?

A. I am not—again, I am not sure. My recollection is sometime in September.

Q. How many days would you say after this conversation you have just testified about did you have the next conversation?

A. I am not really in a position to——

Q. Approximately? A day, two days, a week, or what?

A. I would say probably a week or ten days. That is more an estimate than an opinion.

Q. Whom did you see then? [6551]

A. I saw Mr. Boyd and Mr. Barber.

Q. Where?

A. I saw them at Half Moon Bay. Mr. Barber came to Half Moon Bay, picked me up and took me out to the San Francisco Airport, where we met Mr. Boyd.

Q. Barber called at your house?

A. No, that is not right. Barber called me on the telephone and asked me—said, "There is a gentleman coming in from Washington," a gentleman he would like to have me meet, and could I meet him at the San Francisco Airport, I believe. Anyway, I know we all wound up at the airport.

Q. Yes, but where did Barber purport to phone from?

A. I don't recall, Mr. Hallinan. I know Mr. Barber contacted me. My recollection is he contacted me and asked me——

Q. Do you know where you were when you received this phone call?

A. I must have been at home, because that is the only place I could have been.

Q. Then did you drive to the San Francisco Airport yourself?

A. I believe I did, yes. That is my recollection.

Q. Were you alone? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Nobody else in the car with you?

A. Not at that time.

Q. Your own car. [6552]

A. That is my recollection.

Q. You went to the San Francisco Airport. What time did you arrive there?

A. My recollection is it was in the morning.

Q. Had you made some previous arrangement with Barber that you were going to San Francisco Airport if you received a call from him?

A. No, I had not. As I recall it, during our discussion, our previous discussion, he said there was a fellow, Boyd, coming out from Washington and he would like to have me meet him.

~~Q. Did he tell you who Boyd was?~~

A. He said, "He is connected with our service," I believe. I don't know whether he gave me his title then or not.

Q. Where did he say he was from?

A. From Washington.

Q. Boyd was located and stationed in Washington, is that right?

A. That is the information that I recall Barber having given me.

Q. Barber told you that in the meeting in September, 1948, in the Miramar, is that right?

A. He might have told me that, or he might have told me that in the telephone conversation, but it is my recollection he told me about Mr. Boyd when we met.

Q. Then you drove out to the airport and you found Barber there? [6553] A. Yes.

Q. And then did Boyd appear or was he there when you got there, or what?

A. I don't know whether he was there when we got there or whether he came in on the plane or not. Anyway, he eventually turned up there, but I don't know whether he had arrived when I got there or not. My understanding was he was coming in by plane from Washington, D. C. and Mr. Barber was out there to meet him, and whether Mr. Boyd was actually at the airport when I arrived, or whether he arrived later, I don't recall.

Q. You do not remember whether you might have waited some hours for him to arrive?

A. I certainly didn't wait any hours.

Q. But you are not sure whether he was there or came in later? A. I am not, no, sir.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Then when he arrived was there anybody with him or was he alone?

A. He was alone, I believe, yes.

Q. Did you go any place with those two men?

A. No, we didn't. We stayed at the airport there.

Q. What part of the airport did you go to?

A. We were sitting out in the car in front of the airport.

Q. Whose car?

A. I don't know whose car it was. It was the car Mr. Barber was driving. [6554]

Q. Not your own car? A. Not my own car.

Q. You sat in the car, then. Would you know what Boyd's first name is? A. John Boyd.

Q. You sat in the car with John Boyd and Barber at the airport, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did you sit there?

A. Oh, for several hours.

Q. Can you tell us what time you got to the airport?

A. My recollection is it was in the morning, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. About what time?

A. I couldn't say other than it wasn't really early in the morning. It was probably after eight o'clock. I am certain of that, reasonably sure of that.

~~Q. Did Mr. Boyd purport to know something~~ about you already when he met you?

A. Yes, he did.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Did he have any introductions to you from other people whom you knew? A. No.

Q. Did he know the matters that you had already spoken to Barber about?

A. He seemed to have a pretty general knowledge of my general [6555] activities, also of my—the fact that I had been in the Communist Party and was out of it, and a few other things like that.

Q. He stated he knew you had been in the Communist Party and was out of it, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Did he state matters concerning that subject other than the ones that you had told Barber and McGowan?

A. Well, I will put it this way: He seemed to have a familiarity with them and with quite a few matters that I hadn't discussed with him.

Q. When these men first appeared to talk to you —in other words, when you first spoke to anybody in the early part of 1948—that person then told you that he knew you were out of the Communist Party; that is correct, isn't that right?

A. Two gentlemen came down aboard the ship——

Q. Yes.

A. ——and asked me the question, "How long have you been out of the Party?"

I said—I think I said—I gave them some offhand answer, "How do you know I was in?" or something like that.

Q. When you talked to Barber did Barber tell you that he knew just how long you had been a member of the Communist Party, when you had left, and what you had done in the Communist Party?

A. I will put it this way: Mr. Barber, during our conversation, indicated some considerable knowledge of my activities [6556] while in the Communist Party.

Q. Matters over and above what you had told him? A. That is right.

Q. Then when Boyd talked to you did Boyd seem to know even more than Barber had known?

A. Well, as I stated before, Mr. Hallinan, he indicated a knowledge of my general activities, both in the Communist Party and in the labor movement.

Q. Did he also appear to know, or did he tell you that he knew, a considerable amount about your personal affairs, your financial situation, and so forth? A. No, sir, he did not.

Q. It all related to your activities in the Communist Party and in labor matters?

A. That is right.

Q. In the several hours that you spent there with Mr. Boyd there was just Boyd, Barber and yourself present?

A. There was a young lady there also.

Q. What was her name?

A. I don't know what her name is—was.

Q. Do you know what her occupation was? Was she a stenographer?

A. Yes, sir, she wa a stenographer.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Did she take down a statement while you were there? A. She did.

Q. Had you had anything to drink at the airport? [6557] A. No, sir.

Q. You didn't go into the bar at all?

A. No, sat in the automobile all of the time.

Q. Did you go out and have lunch?

A. No, we did not.

Q. How many hours were you in the automobile?

A. Well, we got out and walked around a little bit a couple of times.

Q. What do you mean by several hours?

A. I mean three or four hours.

Q. You got there in the morning and then you waited a while, you met Boyd, and then went and sat in the automobile for three or four hours?

A. That's right.

Q. You got out and went to lunch, didn't you?

A. My recollection is, Mr. Hallinan, we had lunch—gosh, I really don't remember when we had lunch.

Q. You had some liquor at lunch, didn't you?

A. No, sir—I don't recall lunch on that day, but I do remember sitting out in the airport with Mr. Boyd, Mr. Barber and this young lady at the airport there in this automobile for a long period of time.

Q. Had you had anything to drink that day at all? A. Not to my recollection, no, sir.

Q. Did you have anything to drink before you left home? [6558] A. No, sir.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. After being there for three or four hours, then where did you go? What happened then?

A. As I recall it, I got in my car and went home.

Q. Alone? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you get home?

A. I don't remember the exact time.

Q. This young lady had taken down a statement in the meantime, had she? A. That is right.

Q. Took down a statement of what you had said or what you were saying? A. That is right.

Q. Was that reduced to typewriting while you were there? A. No, sir.

Q. It was not seen by you and it was not signed by you? A. That is right.

Q. When did you next see any of these people?

A. A few days later.

Q. How many days later?

A. I would estimate probably a week.

Q. Whom did you see then?

A. My recollection is that I saw Mr. Barber.

Q. Where? [6559]

A. Down at the Miramar Hotel.

Q. Was he alone or with somebody else?

A. I am not certain, Mr. Hallinan, on that particular occasion. He may have been accompanied by Mr. McGowan, but I am not certain.

Q. Can you scratch your brains a little now to remember?

A. Well, there was quite a number of occasions on which I met Mr. Barber and Mr. McGowan, sometimes singly, sometimes together, and I don't recall this particular occasion whether Mr. Barber was alone or whether he was with Mr. McGowan.

Q. At any rate, about a week after you had the conversation with Mr. Boyd and Mr. Barber at the airport Mr. Barber and possibly Mr. McGowan talked to you again at the Miramar Hotel?

A. That is right.

Q. How did you happen to go there on that occasion?

A. Well, I guess it just became more or less a habit of meeting there. Mr. Barber knew where it was and he called me up and asked me if I could meet him at the Miramar, and I said, "Sure."

Q. Where did he call from? From the Miramar?

A. I believe he called from San Francisco.

Q. You believe he called from San Francisco and made an appointment with you to meet him at the Miramar?

A. That is my recollection.

Q. At what time were you to meet him?

A. My recollection is it was in the morning, but I am not [6560] certain of that.

Q. So you went over to the Miramar then and saw him. Was he there already, or did he arrive after you had been there a while?

A. My belief is he was there.

Q. Where did you sit that day? In the bar also?

A. The same place, at a booth there in the bar.

Q. They have a bar with booths on the side, is that correct?

A. That is right, facing overlooking the ocean.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. How long were you there with Barber?

A. I guess it was about an hour.

Q. Did you have anything to drink on that occasion?

A. I can't recall. We may have had.

Q. Don't you remember that you did?

A. As I told you previously, Mr. Hallinan, I met Mr. Barber and Mr. McGowan on a number of occasions at the Miramar Hotel. On some of those occasions we had a drink and on other occasions we did not. On this particular one I am just not certain as to whether we had a beer, a highball, or whether we didn't drink at all.

Q. Was there any occasion on which you went into the bar at the Miramar Hotel, occupied a booth, and did not order a drink?

A. Yes, there was one or two occasions.

Q. There were one or two occasions that that did happen? A. Yes, sir. [6561]

Q. Then you stayed there with Barber about an hour, is that right?

A. That is my recollection.

Q. Did you talk with him then? A. I did.

Q. On the same subject? A. That is right.

Q. Did you tell him anything that you have talked about here? A. Yes, I did.

Q. On the occasion that you were talking to Mr. Boyd and Mr. Barber at the airport did you tell them any of the matters that you have testified to here? A. I did.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. All of them? A. No, sir.

Q. You did not tell all of them?

A. No, sir.

Q. About what percentage of them did you tell?

A. That is a little difficult. I would say a small percentage.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. A small percentage.

Q. A small percentage of what you have testified to. When you talked to Barber at the Miramar Hotel did you add anything to what you had already told Boyd and Barber? [6562]

A. I don't recollect that I did. He had a copy of that statement.

Q. How long is that statement?

A. I am not certain. I think it was about seven or eight pages now. I don't recall it. [6562-A]

Q. Did you read it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you sign it? A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. Sign every page? A. No.

Q. Just at the end, is that right?

A. Yes, sir, just at the end.

Q. All right. And that statement contained only a small percentage of the matters that you testified to in this hearing, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. What do you mean by "small percentage"? Say ten per cent?

A. Well, I would say approximately that.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Now, when did you next see anybody connected with the Immigration Service, after this meeting with Barber at the Miramar Hotel?

A. Well, after the meeting with Barber at the Miramar Hotel, I at that time, and also Mr. Boyd previously had asked me if I would testify in any proceedings, and I said I would not. And some time after that Mr. Barber got in touch with me and he said, "The Attorney General would like to see you. Will you make a trip to Washington?"

Q. All right. Now, when you talked to Boyd at the airport he asked you if you would testify in any proceeding that would be [6563] a proceeding against Harry Bridges, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. You said you would not?

A. That's right.

Q. And then when Barber appeared with this statement he asked you the same thing and you said you would not, is that correct?

A. That's right.

Q. And in the statement that you had given, there was nothing to indicate or to raise any inference that Harry Bridges was a member of the Communist Party, was there?

A. I am not certain about that, Mr. Hallinan. There may have been.

Q. There was nothing in there that said he had attended any meetings at which only Communists were present, was there?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I believe there was.

Q. You believe there was? All right. Now, when you talked to Mr. Barber on this second occasion after you had—on which you had signed the statement, you say he asked you then about going to Washington to meet the Attorney General, is that right? A. He did.

Q. All right. And Mr. Boyd had spoken to you on that subject prior to that time, is that right?

A. No, he had not.

Q. Well, you said a minute ago that Mr. Boyd had also spoken to you on that subject, didn't you? [6564]

A. I said a minute ago that, as I recall it, Mr. Boyd had asked me about testifying.

Q. I see.

A. And I told Mr. Boyd no.

Q. I see. Yes. And then on this occasion on which Barber brought down the statement, he asked you if you would go to Washington and talk to the Attorney General, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, what did you say to that?

A. I said, "Well, sure, I will go to Washington, I will talk to anybody.

Q. All right. Then Barber left, is that correct?

A. That is my recollection. You are talking about this meeting at Miramar?

Q. On this occasion then, yes. A. Yes.

Q. Now, when did you next meet anybody connected wit. the department?

(Testimony of Melvyn Rathborne.)

A. I don't recall, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Well, approximately?

A. I had some contact with Mr. Barber.

Q. Well, let's see if we can get them as accurately as possible. Now, you remember that some time in September, 1948, Mr. Barber called at the Miramar Cafe and you talked to him there and you signed a statement for him. Now, taking that as the starting [6565] point, when did you next see anybody?

A. I may or may not have seen Mr. Barber or Mr. McGowan in the next few days. I am not certain as to that, Mr. Hallinan. I don't just——

Q. Well, where do you recollect next seeing those gentlemen?

A. My next recollection of seeing Mr. Barber is when I met him—well, I think he came back down and talked to me about, he said he would like to have me go to Washington, and well, I am not certain about that. Anyway, the next place I am certain I saw him is, I met him at the airport and took a plane back to Washington.

Q. When was that?

A. I think that was October, if I am correct.

Q. And who did you meet, McGowan or Barber?

A. Mr. Barber.

Q. You think that was when? A. October.

Q. In October, 1948. All right. And do you know what arrangement, how the arrangement was made or do you remember how the arrangement was made for you to meet Barber at the airport on that occasion?

A. My recollection is that he called me on the telephone and said, "Well, we've got your transportation arranged for such and such a time and date. Can you meet me at the airport?" That is all.

Q. And then you met him at the airport?

A. That is my recollection.

Q. How did you get to that airport on this occasion?

A. I believe my wife drove me over.

Q. I see. And you met Barber there?

A. No. Let's see. I think I—I believe I did meet him there now. I am not exactly sure as to the circumstances, but I know I met Barber at the airport.

Q. Well, had you been given your ticket, your airplane ticket or anything in the meantime?

A. No, I believe he had it there.

Q. He had that with him? A. Yes.

Q. And he gave you the ticket, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. And you got on the plane?

A. That's right.

Q. Did he get on the plane? A. Yes, sir.

Q. He went with you? A. Yes.

Q. Go all the way back to Washington with you?

A. That's right.

Q. And how long did that entire trip take?

A. I think it was about a week, Mr. Hallinan. I am not [6567] certain.

Q. When you went to Washington, did you go directly from San Francisco to Washington or what route did you follow, any stopovers?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. We didn't—it was a through plane. I mean, it landed a couple of places on the way but it was a——

Q. But you didn't get out, you didn't have any meetings with any other persons on the way?

A. No, sir.

Q. All right. And when you got to Washington where did you stay, what hotel, what place?

A. I don't remember the name of the hotel. It was a small hotel there, but I am sorry, I don't recall the name of it.

Q. And then did Mr. Barber take you to the Attorney General? A. That's right.

Q. When? How long after you got there?

A. Oh, a day or two, I believe. A day—about a day, I would say.

Q. Had you met anybody else connected with the government or the Immigration Department before you went to the Attorney General's office?

A. I believe my contact with the Immigration Department, there was these two gentlemen I told you that spoke to me on the ship, whose name I can't——

Q. No, no, I mean on this occasion while you were in Washington. [6568]

A. No, I met Mr. Boyd back there.

Q. All right. When you arrived at the Washington airport, now, where did you go from the airport?

A. I think we went to a hotel, and then we went over——

Q. Was that the same hotel that you stayed at later? A. Yes.

Q. All right. And then went where?

A. We went over to Mr. Boyd's office.

Q. All right. Whom did you meet in Boyd's office? A. I met Mr. Boyd.

Q. Just he?

A. Oh, there were other people around there. I don't think I met them.

Q. And then you and Mr. Boyd and Mr. Barber had a conversation, did you? A. That's right.

Q. How long did that last?

A. Not very long.

Q. Well, what do you mean by "not very long"?

A. Well, I would say probably a few minutes or so.

Q. I see.

A. Boyd told us, "Well, I think the Attorney General will see us at such and such a time," and discussed this, how we were, and so forth. An informal, friendly conversation. Nothing——

Q. And nothing further was said, I take it, about your [6569] testimony or what you had to say about Harry Bridges on this occasion?

A. No, sir, not that I recall. I don't recall anything.

Q. And then did you go from Boyd's office to the Attorney General's office?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Not directly. I think we saw the Attorney General the next day, as I remember it.

Q. All right. Where did you go after leaving Boyd's office? A. Oh, I don't remember.

Q. Well, let me ask you this. During the time that you were in Washington, where did Barber live, so far as you know? Did he live in the same hotel with you? A. Yes, he did.

Q. Same room or in an adjoining room or what?

A. I think it was an adjoining room. Now, it could have been the same room; I am not certain as to the arrangements there, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. You are not sure whether he occupied the same room you did or an adjoining room, is that right? A. Not certain, no, sir.

Q. That was all the time that you stayed there?

A. Yes.

Q. How many days did you occupy a room in that hotel?

A. Oh, I think it was four or five. I am not certain about that, but it was a number of days. A short number of days. [6570]

Q. Now, during the four or five days that you were with Mr. Barber there, did any other person connected with the Immigration Department occupy a portion of your room or an adjoining room, so far as you knew?

A. Not as far as I knew, no.

Q. I see. All right. So Mr. Barber then occupied either the same room with you or an adjoining room, the first night that you got there, is that correct? A. That is my recollection.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. In other words, you went to Boyd's office and had a talk with him, then you went to the hotel and Barber stayed there in your room or in the adjoining room, is that correct?

A. That is my recollection, that's right.

Q. All right. Then, the next day you went to see the Attorney General?

A. That is my recollection.

Q. All right. Did you go any place that evening, the evening before you went to see the Attorney General?

A. I believe we went to a movie, is my recollection—that we did.

Q. Did you have dinner with Mr. Barber?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And went to a movie with Mr. Barber?

A. That is my recollection. Now, I could be confusing that evening with another evening. [6571]

Q. Did you have lunch with Mr. Barber?

A. I believe I did.

Q. Did you have anything to drink at lunch?

A. Well, that I can't recall, Mr. Hallinan. I may have and I may not have.

Q. Did you at dinner?

A. I am reasonably certain we had something to drink at dinner, yes.

Q. All right.

The Court: Do you want to take the morning recess now, Mr. Hallinan?

Mr. Hallinan: Very well.

The Court: We will take the morning recess, ladies and gentlemen; the same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Recess.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Did you have any conversation at the recess with any of the gentlemen connected with the Immigration Department or the prosecution of this case?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. Concerning the subject of your testimony?

A. I did.

Q. Whom did you talk to?

A. I talked to Mr. Kaiser.

Q. And how long did that conversation take place? [6572]

A. Oh, four or five minutes, I guess.

Q. I see. Did he warn you about something you were saying up here?

A. He asked me if I went, if when I went to dinner with Mr. Barber, if I had sugar in my tea or if I had milk in it.

Q. Did he tell you the name of the hotel you stayed at? A. No, sir.

Q. Is that all he asked you, if you had sugar or tea? A. That's right.

Mr. Hallinan: Could I have Mr. Kaiser step up here a moment for purposes of identification, your Honor? If there is no objection on that.

Mr. Donohue: I think he has been identified.

~~The Court: He has been identified.~~

Mr. Hallinan: No, not closely enough. He has been too far away. I don't think anybody has seen him. I want them to see him, to be quite sure. I have my own purpose in this. I would like to have Mr. Barber identified——

Mr. Donohue: I object to the request, if your Honor please, unless he expects to call him.

The Court: He has been identified, Mr. Hallinan. I think that was sufficient.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, could we ask him to stand up again for a moment?

The Court: There would be no objection as to that. [6573]

Mr. Hallinan: Would you mind standing up, Mr. Kaiser?

(Mr. Kaiser arose.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, is that the man you spoke to? A. That is the man.

Q. Mr. Kaiser?

Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment, if you please, Mr. Kaiser.

Q. That is the man who asked you if you put cream or sugar in your coffee, is that right?

A. In my tea?

Q. In your tea? A. Yes.

Q. All right. And that is all he asked you during the recess, is that right?

A. About the particular case, yes.

Q. Anything connected with this case?

A. That's right.

Q. All right. Now, he didn't tell you the name of the hotel you stayed at? A. No, sir.

Q. Did anybody?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. No. As a matter of fact, I asked Mr. Barber if he remembered the name and he said he had forgotten it, too.

Q. Now, you went to the moving picture, you say, with Mr. Barber?

A. That is my recollection, that we went to a movie that night. [6574]

Q. And then the next day where did you go?

A. Well, I am reasonably sure the next day we went up to see Mr. Clark.

Q. All right, what time did you go to see him?

A. I think it was in the morning.

Q. And what is the rest of his name?

A. Tom Clark is his name, as far as I know.

Q. And he was Attorney General of the United States at that time, is that right?

A. That's right, yes, sir.

Q. All right. What time did you get to his office? A. Some time in the morning.

Q. Who went with you?

A. Mr. Barber went with me.

Q. Anybody else?

A. No, we met Mr. Boyd, I think we met Mr. Boyd in the office and picked him up and then went over to Mr. Clark's office. At least Mr. Boyd was there with us at the Attorney General's office.

Q. And then you had a conversation with Mr. Clark, Mr. Boyd and Mr. Barber, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. And how long did that conversation last?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Oh, over an hour, I would say.

Q. Now, will you tell us what was the subject or substance of [6575] the conversation?

A. Well, after I was introduced and some small talk, Mr. Clark said that he had heard quite a bit about me and that he was, the government was very seriously concerned with regard to Communist infiltration into the trade unions and also with regard to the Communists generally in this country, because we were in a cold war with the Soviet Union and in the event of a shooting war, it was the opinion of the Department of Justice that the Communists would work for the Soviets and act as a fifth column here in this country. And that the Department of Justice was carrying on—I don't remember the exact language, but was engaged in activities to prevent the Communists from being an effective menace in this country in the event we engaged——

Q. Well, tell us what he said about Mr. Bridges.

A. And in that connection, that they were making an investigation.

Q. That who was making an investigation?

A. The government was making an investigation.

Q. All right. Now, let's get this, Mr. Rathborne: At this conversation with Mr. Tom Clark, the Attorney General of the United States, yourself? A. That's right.

Q. Then there was Mr. John Boyd of the Immigration Department, is that right?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I believe he was deputy commissioner of Immigration. [6576]

Q. Of Immigration. And there was Mr. Bruce Barber of the Immigration Department?

A. That's right.

Q. Anybody else present? A. No, sir.

Q. All right. And at that time who brought up the subject of Harry Bridges?

A. The Attorney General.

Q. Clark himself? A. Yes.

Q. Said they were trying to get something on Harry Bridges, is that right?

A. No, he said that they were making an investigation and it was their opinion that on the basis of as far as the investigation had proceeded, it was the government's opinion that Mr. Bridges was a Communist and that something should be done to remove his influence, because they figured it was dangerous to the country.

Q. Well, did he tell you also that they contemplated trying to get Mr. Bridges indicted for perjury? A. No, sir, they did not.

Q. Didn't tell you that? A. No, sir.

Q. Did he tell you anything——

A. He said this, though. He said that they were making an [6577] investigation which, while they weren't sure, they thought would result in proceedings against Mr. Bridges. And he didn't describe the proceedings at all.

~~Q. He didn't say criminal proceedings?~~

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. No, he did not.

Q. He said that it would result, however, in proceedings against Mr. Bridges, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. All right. And he told you also that they wanted to get Mr. Bridges out of the labor movement, is that right?

A. Well, he didn't—I don't recall he put it that way. He said they wanted to remove the influence of Mr. Bridges and other Communists.

Q. From the labor movement?

A. From the labor ranks, yes.

Q. Now, at that time you hadn't told any of these people whether or not in your opinion Mr. Bridges was a Communist, had you?

A. I am not certain.

Q. And you hadn't—you had only told them about 10 per cent of what you have testified to here, is that right?

A. That is approximately correct, yes.

Q. All right. So when you went back there, all that you had told was about 10 per cent of what you testified here, isn't that right?

A. That's correct. [6578]

Q. All right. So Mr. Clark told you then their information convinced them that Mr. Bridges was a Communist, he was detrimental or dangerous to the security of the country, that he wanted to get him out of the labor movement, is that right, is that the substance, is that substantially correct, or they wanted to remove his influence from the labor movement, is that right?

A. That is substantially correct.

Q. And the best way to remove him from the labor movement was to put him in the penitentiary, is that right?

A. He never mentioned that at all. He said—I described what the conversation was.

Q. All right. So then, so far as you knew at the time that you went there, there was nothing that contemplated depriving Harry Bridges of his freedom and locking him up in a jail, was there?

A. No, sir, there was not.

Q. You weren't lending yourself to that yet, were you?

Mr. Donohue: Object to that question, if Your Honor pleases.

Mr. Hallinan: Withdraw the question.

Q. All right, now, did Mr. Clark at that time also discuss the maritime strike which was then in progress on the Pacific Coast?

A. No, sir, he did not. I don't recall that he mentioned it. During our conversation I believe I mentioned it. I told Mr. Clark that in the first place any proceedings that the government should start, if they did start it, should not be directed against labor as such and that I was concerned that the government would put itself in a position to where it would do harm to the labor [6579] movement, and that——

Q. You did not want the Government to do harm to the labor movement; you told Clark that?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. That is correct, I told him so, and I recalled to his memory, I said I thought that in the last Bridges case, when the Government took the position that everybody in the CIO was a Communist, that that was a very bad thing to do and that it was detrimental, "and if that kind of proceeding is going to be carried on, you are going to make a serious mistake, because you are going to turn a lot of honest people in labor against the Government. And one of the things involved here should be the Government should lean over backwards to make sure they are in no way harming the existence of any labor organization or in any way weakening it in so far as its ability to secure better conditions for its membership is concerned."

Q. In other words, you advised Mr. Clark then, as I understand it, that the Government should not put itself in the position of weakening the ability of the labor unions to secure such conditions as hours and wages, and so forth, as they should be entitled to; is that right?

A. Yes, not to do anything that would break or seriously harm any union.

Q. In other words, don't chop off their toes, chop off their heads, is that right? Withdraw the question. All right. You talked to Mr. Clark then and this other gentleman for about an [6580] hour?

A. That is right.

Q. At that time there was a strike of the maritime unions on the Pacific Coast, is that right?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I believe that is correct, yes, sir. It must have been, because I was off my ship then.

Q. You were out on strike? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know when the strike started?

A. Technically our union was not on strike.

Q. The strike ran from September to the end of December, 1948, isn't that right?

A. That is my recollection.

Q. The maritime industries on the coast were all involved in that strike, isn't that right?

A. That is true. Not all the unions were on strike, however.

Q. The ILWU was supporting the maritime strike, wasn't it?

A. Yes, I believe it was.

Q. In fact, they went out on strike to support the strike of the sailors and the radio operators and the other persons connected, isn't that right?

A. I am not familiar with the details of that strike, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Are you still a member of the same union?

A. Yes, sir. [6581]

Q. What was the name of that union?

A. The American Radio Association.

Q. Are you still a member of it?

A. That is right.

Q. Are you an officer of it? A. No, sir.

Q. Were you an officer at that time?

A. Not of this organization.

Q. That strike, that martime strike, ended in

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

December, 1948, with a victory for the strikers, isn't that right?

A. Well, I believe it did.

Q. Were your wages increased?

A. I think we did get a wage increase.

Q. Surely you got a wage increase. Don't you remember what it was?

A. It wasn't very much. No, I really don't know.

Q. What other conditions did you win—your own union?

A. I think we got some more money from overtime. I really don't recall, Mr. Hallinan, what came out of that strike.

Q. You do not remember what benefits you derived from it, you personally? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you remember what benefits the other men derived, the sailors, the men on the ships?

A. No, I was not active in the strike except I attended union [6582] meetings during the strike, a few of them. That was the extent of my activity.

Q. Were you on picket duty at the time the strike was on?

A. No, sir, our union was not on strike.

Q. Did you notify your union that you were going back to Washington? A. No, sir.

Q. Are you required to under the by-laws of the union? A. No, sir.

Q. You were not an officer? A. No, sir.

Q. When you went back to Washington were you registered at that hotel under your own name?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I believe I was. It might have been Mr. Barber registered for both of us; I am not certain.

Q. You are not certain whether it was your own name or not? A. No, sir.

Q. Did you notice what name was on your airplane ticket? A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. In the course of the discussion with Mr. Clark the maritime strike on the Pacific Coast was mentioned, wasn't it?

A. Yes, I believe I mentioned it along these lines, that certainly nothing should be done until—if you contemplate anything, nothing should be done until the present strike is over because it might be interpreted as a move by the Government to [6583] harm the strike, or words to that effect.

Q. Who did you say might interpret it in that fashion?

A. I don't recall whether I said anybody.

Q. Would you tell us a little more explicitly now what you said on that subject?

A. There was some discussion, as I recall it, that Mr. Clark said this investigation would lead toward proceedings being taken by the Government against Mr. Bridges, and I stated, as I stated here a minute ago, that if such proceedings are taken, it would certainly be wrong to take them at a time when the union was on strike, because it would be interpreted as a move against the union.

Q. In what way? I don't understand that. How would it be interpreted as a move against the unions?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Well, the union or possibly some of the leadership of the union would say, "Well, here is the Government moving in trying to break our strike by taking our officers away when the strike is on."

Q. Do you think that that action would be capable of that interpretation?

A. I think it would be, because that is why I pointed it out.

Q. What did Mr. Clark say when you told him that? A. He didn't give me an answer.

Q. Did he say he would or would not delay any action so as not to appear to be breaking the strike? [6584] A. He didn't say.

Q. Did you insist upon some program in that connection?

A. No, sir. I was not programming with him. I was just pointing out this particular situation.

Q. Did you discuss further in the presence of Mr. Clark any matters relating to Harry Bridges?

A. Not in any detail, no, sir, just merely the remark that I made. He said the Government was conducting an investigation and the investigation was sufficiently advanced to convince them that they had a sound case, and then he said—he asked me, he said, "I want to ask you, Mr. Rathborne, to cooperate with the Government in this case on the basis the Government is asking you to do it as a citizen, as a good citizen interested in the welfare of the country."

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

I said, "I will think about it, Mr. Attorney General." And that was about the end of the conversation.

Q. In other words, you added nothing to what you had already told these gentlemen?

A. No.

Q. You did not give out any further information? A. No.

Q. So when you left the Attorney General's office the information that you had given to all those persons you had met was still only about 10 per cent of what you have testified to here?

A. That is approximately correct. [6585]

Q. That is substantially correct. Where did you go after you left the Attorney General's office?

A. I don't remember exactly. I went quite a few places when I was in Washington those few days. I don't remember my exact itinerary every minute of the day.

Q. You said you went to the Attorney General's office on the second day you were there. The first day you were there you stayed at the hotel and went to the moving picture at night, so far as you remember; the second day you went to the Attorney General's office and met Mr. Boyd and Barber. Do you remember what you did the rest of that day and evening?

A. I can't recall exactly, Mr. Hallinan, no.

Q. Did you go to see anybody else?

A. While in Washington?

Q. Yes. A. Yes, I did.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Who?

A. I went over to talk to Jimmy Carey of the national CIO. He is the secretary-treasurer of the national CIO.

Q. How long after seeing the Attorney General did you see Mr. Carey?

A. My recollection is it was the next day or it might have been the same day, however.

Q. Did you go there by appointment?

A. I called him up, his office up. I wanted to see Mr. Murray. [6586] Mr. Murray was in Pittsburgh; he was not in Washington.

Q. When you left for Washington did you already have an appointment with Mr. Carey or Mr. Murray? A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Did you call Mr. Carey personally, or did Mr. Barber call him?

A. No, I called him personally.

Q. What did he say?

A. Mr. Barber didn't know who Mr. Carey was.

Q. You called Mr. Carey from your hotel, I take it?

A. I believe so. It might have been from a telephone booth.

Q. You phoned to talk to Mr. Philip Murray, but he not being there, you talked to Mr. Carey, the secretary-treasurer? A. That is right.

Q. And you went over there the next day?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you go alone or were you accompanied by somebody else? A. No, I went alone.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Whom did you meet there?

A. I met Mr. Carey.

Q. Anyone else?

A. Oh, I met quite a few people around there that I knew.

Q. Did you have a conversation with Mr. Carey? A. I did.

Q. How long did it last? [6587]

A. Oh, about two hours, I guess, two or three hours.

Q. Did anybody else participate in it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Anybody else present? A. No.

Q. Where did the conversation take place?

A. In Mr. Carey's office.

Q. Did you tell Mr. Carey about your visit to the Attorney General? A. I did.

Q. Did Mr. Carey purport to know that you were going to see the Attorney General?

A. He appeared to know nothing about it.

Q. Did you have a discussion with Mr. Carey about Mr. Bridges?

A. To a certain extent, yes.

Q. Well, he was discussed, wasn't he?

A. Well, now, here is the—I will give you the outline of the conversation I had with Mr. Carey if you want it.

Q. Yes. A. I went in there——

Q. I don't want the whole conversation, but the parts that relate to Mr. Bridges. That is what we are interested in.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I told him about the conversation with Mr. Clark, and I asked Mr. Carey—I told him the Government was in the process of making another investigation against Harry Bridges, and I [6588] asked him what the attitude of Phil Murray was and what the attitude of the national CIO would be in this situation with regard to how the CIO, as a labor organization, would view this kind of proceedings, if they would consider it as an attack against labor, and what position they planned to take, if any, and if they knew about it, and what Mr. Carey personally thought I would do and thought I should do, and I would also like to find out what Mr. Murray's attitude was.

Q. What did he tell you?

A. Mr. Carey said—well, as far as he was concerned personally, he did not consider proceedings of this kind, if they were conducted properly by the Government, to be an attack against the CIO, that the CIO itself had the same problem with Communists and it was handling it in its own way; that as far as—I said I had planned, if I got into this thing, planned to come out openly and publicly and not work in any under-cover sort of way.

And he said, well, I ought to make up my own mind on it. He said, however, he would check with Phil Murray and find out what Phil Murray's ideas were with respect to this kind of proceeding, as to whether Murray would consider it as a hostile act by the Government against the CIO as a labor organization. And subsequently, a day or two—just before I left Washington I called Mr. Carey on the telephone. He said he had talked with Murray and Murray had expressed no opposition at all. [6589] He didn't say he was for it. He said he was not opposed to the thing.

Q. That he was not opposed to it? A. No.

Q. Did Mr. Carey tell you so far as he was concerned he thought it was the right and proper thing for you to do? To go ahead and testify against Harry Bridges?

A. He said he thought it would be the best—the right thing for me to come out openly on this issue, yes.

Q. And take the stand and testify against Harry Bridges?

A. It was not in that form at that time. I didn't know what the proceedings would be as far as Mr. Bridges was concerned.

Q. Yes, but you told Mr. Carey now that you had had a conversation with Tom Clark in which Clark had asked you to testify against Bridges?

A. Yes.

Q. You asked Carey if it would be all right with him or if it would be considered inimical to the CIO if you did testify against Bridges, isn't that right?

A. No, I didn't put it that way. I asked him what his opinion was as to what I should do. He said, "Well, better make up your own mind on that, but I think you would probably be doing the right thing if you follow Mr. Clark's advice or request."

Q. You told Mr. Carey that the matter you were interested in was this substantially: That the Government was undertaking some [6590] sort of proceedings against Harry Bridges, accusing him of being a Communist and removing either him or his influence from the labor movement; is that correct?

A. I related to Mr. Carey as well as I could the substance of Mr. Clark's conversation with me.

Q. And that was substantially in the question I just asked you:

A. Yes, that is right.

Q. And Mr. Carey said, so far as he was personally concerned, it was all right to go ahead and collaborate with the Government in doing that; is that right? A. That is right.

Q. But he would call up Mr. Murray and ask him if it was O.K. with him, is that right?

A. No, that is not correct. There were two questions I asked Mr. Carey: One, if the CIO as such would consider such a procedure as this or the proceeding Mr. Clark had outlined to me an attack against the CIO and against labor, or consider it in any hostile way. That was the first question.

The second question was what I should do myself personally.

~~In connection with the first question, he said he~~ would discuss it with Phil Murray. He said his own opinion was that it would not be considered such an attack, such a hostile act, but he would want to check with Phil to see how he felt about it. And he must have checked with Phil Murray, because subsequently I called him on the telephone and he told me he [6591] had talked to Phil about that matter and Phil had no objection and felt the same way he did.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

During our conversation he said he was certain Mr. Murray would feel the same as he did, but he wanted to check with him and find out. Those were the two points I discussed with Mr. Carey.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. Carey knew Mr. Bridges? Did he state whether he did or did not?

A. I know Mr. Carey knows Mr. Bridges. I know there has been quite a bit of enmity between them for a number of years, too.

Q. Of what type?

A. Well, Mr. Carey is very violently anti-Communist and has been for a good many years.

Q. You say you knew of enmity between Carey and Bridges? Was that the only enmity that you knew that existed between them, the subject that you have just mentioned?

A. I don't know of any specific instances where they have battled.

Q. How about Mr. Murray? Do you know whether or not he had had difficulty with Mr. Bridges?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Well, my belief was, based on what I knew, Mr. Murray and Mr. Bridges were working together as far as the open is concerned, but they were battling a lot behind closed doors. I mean, I attended a meeting in Washington when Mr. Murray removed Mr. Bridges as director for Northern—Southern [6592] California. Mr. Murray at that time was very critical of Mr. Bridges.

Q. Do you know anything about the difficulty that arose from Mr. Bridges' demanding a financial accounting from Carey and Murray?

A. I don't know anything about that, no, sir.

Q. You had heard of it?

A. I may have heard of it. I don't recall it, though. It is something that is rather new to me, because we used to get financial accountings in the national CIO.

Q. Don't you know at two conventions Mr. Bridges demanded that the national CIO make an accounting of the monies it had received and expended?

A. It must have been conventions I did not attend, because I never heard him make such a statement that I recall.

Q. Now, you know, do you not, that on the last movement to get rid of Mr. Bridges, that is, the second deportation proceeding, Mr. Murray came out with a very bitter denunciation of the Government's attitude in persecuting Bridges, isn't that right? A. That is right. [6593]

Q. You have seen that, haven't you?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Yes, I heard him make the statement like that.

Q. He said that Harry Bridges was the victim of an unconscionable conspiracy, didn't he?

A. Well, I believe so, but I am not—I believe—I——

Q. About between that time and——

A. My recollection is, he supported Mr. Bridges warmly at that time.

Q. Now, since that time, however, Mr. Murray's attitude has obviously changed, is that right?

A. Obviously.

Q. Yes. Now, you say that you have seen a financial statement of the National CIO?

A. No, I didn't say that.

Q. Oh.

A. I said that financial reports used to be given to the executive board of the national CIO.

Q. But the national CIO never made a financial statement, did it?

A. Well, they made it verbally, yes.

Q. Made a verbal one, is that right?

A. Yes. In the early meetings of the executive board when I was on the national CIO executive board, Mr. Lewis used to have Mr. Bell, I believe, who was the comptroller, read off the financial report to the executive board, and that occurred on a [6594] number of occasions.

Q. But it was never sent out to the component unions, was it?

A. I don't ever recall having received one.

Q. Yes. And don't you remember now that that is the basis of the difference or the difficulty between Mr. Bridges and Mr. Carey and Murray?

A. That is the first time—I really don't recall hearing about that before.

Q. Well, returning then to your Washington junket, you spoke to Mr. Carey on the third day that you were there. All right. And then did you see or talk to anybody else connected with the government on that same day?

A. No, sir, not that I recall.

Q. Did you see or talk to anybody else connected with the national CIO?

A. Oh, I saw a number of people around national CIO headquarters that I had known and said hello to them, passed the time of day with them.

Q. But no conversation with them. But now, when did you next meet Mr. Barber that day?

A. I think I met him at the hotel in the evening and we had dinner together, is my recollection.

Q. You had dinner with Mr. Barber. All right. Did you go out with him that evening again?

A. Yes, I believe we went out to see, visit some friends of Mr. [6595] Barber's.

Q. Did you go with him? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know who they were?

A. No, other than they were employees of some federal agencies back there, and just—it was just a social evening.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Was the Harry Bridges matter discussed that evening? A. No, sir.

Q. Was the Communist Party?

A. No, sir.

Q. Were matters concerning the strike on the West Coast? A. No, sir.

Q. All right.

A. Just a social evening, as I said.

Q. Then what did you do on the following day?

A. I am not certain, Mr. Hallinan, as I said. I can't account in chronological order for every hour of my stay in Washington. I just have a general impression.

Q. Well, subject to correction or amending it if you remember something different.

A. I think that the next day I went to New York. I am not certain.

Q. And whom did you see in New York? Or whom did you go to see there? Did you go there for a particular purpose of seeing [6596] somebody? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Who accompanied you?

A. Mr. Barber.

Q. All right. And whom did you see there?

A. I talked to a number of people in New York.

Q. Who were they?

A. Well, you mean about this particular matter?

Q. Yes. A. I talked to Tommy Ray.

Q. Who is Tommy Ray?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Well, he is a friend of mine who was connected with the National Maritime Union.

Q. I see. A. Former Communist.

Q. What does he do now?

A. He—I think he is research director for the NMU.

Q. Research director for the NMU?

A. That's what——

Q. Is that the National Marine Union?

A. National Maritime Union.

Q. Is that the union that Joseph Curran is head of? A. That's right.

Q. And this Tommy Ray is research director of that union, is that right?

A. That is my—I believe that is the position. He holds some [6597] post in the union, though. Now, whether it is——

Q. He is a friend of yours, is he?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you known him?

A. Oh, I think now about 13 years, 14 years, approximately.

Q. When did you last talk to him?

A. New York City, this occasion that I have been talking about.

Q. You haven't seen him since or talked to him?

A. No, sir.

Q. All right. You went to see Tommy Ray and did you take Barber with you? A. No, sir.

Q. Did Barber already know Tommy Ray, so far as you were informed?

A. Don't think he ever heard of him.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You went to see Tommy Ray yourself, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. Just a social visit? A. No.

Q. Did you go there at Barber's behest?

A. No.

Q. All right. Now, whom else did you see?

A. I saw Joe Curran.

Q. Is that the Joe Curran who is the head of the NMU? A. That's right.

Q. Who else? [6598]

A. Well, that's about all I saw on this particular situation. I may have seen some others—I saw a lot of people, but I mean—what you are trying to develop here.

Q. But on this particular situation, then, you went to see Tommy Ray and Joe Curran in connection with this case, is that right?

A. In connection with the discussion I have had with the Attorney General, yes.

Q. Yes. Did you try to or suggest to either one of them that they become witnesses against Harry Bridges in any proceeding?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Did you discuss the possibility or the probability of them becoming witnesses? A. No.

Q. Did you ask them for any information concerning Harry Bridges or any documents or files or anything like that?

A. No, I was there to discuss with them primarily my own particular situation and how I should respond to the request given by the Attorney General to me, asking me to cooperate with the government in this proceeding. I was wanting to get their opinion. That was my purpose in discussing it with them and I had considerable respect for the judgment of both of them, having been close friends and worked very closely with them over a period of years.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. In other words, you first went to see Tommy Ray, did you, [6599] and then went to see Curran?

A. Yes, I think that's right.

Q. Had you known Curran before?

A. Oh, he and I had been very close friends for many years.

Q. I see. Now, when you had the conversation with these men, were they both together, were these two men together or did you speak to them separately?. A. No, I spoke to them separately.

Q. So you went first, then, to Tommy Ray to find out what would be his attitude toward you testifying against Harry Bridges, that right?

A. Well, more than that; the whole matter of his attitude and Joe's, toward the degree of Communist infiltration, how effective it was, whether in their judgment it would be in fact a detrimental, a menace to the country in case of hostilities, and this whole situation was discussed with them.

Q. But then you also discussed with them what their attitude would be toward you taking the stand and testifying against Harry Bridges, is that right?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. That's right.

Q. And did Tommy Ray say it was all right with him? A. Yes, I believe he did.

Q. And Joe Curran said, "Do all you can to get him." Is that right?

A. No, I don't think he did. [6600]

Q. Oh, now, what did Joe Curran say about helping get Harry Bridges? Didn't he say, "Lie, steal, do anything you can to get him."?

A. No, he didn't.

Q. What did he say?

A. You know he wouldn't say that.

Q. Well, let me ask you this.

A. Joe and I were friends, and I don't know——

Q. Well, he gave the undertaking his blessing, anyhow, didn't he? A. That's right.

Q. All right. Now, were those the only two men you talked with in New York on that subject?

A. Well, outside of Mr. Barber. I discussed it with him.

Q. Yes. Now, did you meet anybody else connected with the government while you were in New York? A. Yes, I met a number of people.

Q. Who?

A. I met Mr. Boyd there, and I met quite a number of the officials in New York; I don't know who half of them were.

Q. When you went to New York, did you stay more than a day?

A. I think a couple of days. I am not certain.

Q. Where did you stay?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I believe at the Empire Hotel. Now, at least it was a hotel up on some Circle there above Times Square. [6601].

Q. And did Mr. Barber stay at the same hotel with you? A. Yes, he did.

Q. Occupy the same room?

A. No, I am sure he didn't.

Q. Occupied an adjoining room?

A. I believe so, or I think his room was on a different floor. Now I am not certain.

Q. Was Mr. Boyd staying at that hotel, too?

A. I don't think he was.

Q. Any of the other agents or officials?

A. I don't know, Mr. Hallinan, because——

Q. Did you introduce Mr. Barber to either Ray or Curran? A. No.

Q. Or any of the other persons? Did you introduce Boyd to them? A. No, I did not.

Q. None of them was present at any time you were with Ray or Curran? A. They were not.

Q. All right. Did you go to—Where did you have the conversation with Ray?

A. In his home in New York City.

Q. And where with Curran?

A. In his home in Long Island.

Q. Where?

A. At his home in Long Island. [6602]

Q. I see. And did you have dinner with Mr. Barber again that night?

A. I could well have had. I am not——

Q. Did you go to any show or anything like that in New York?

A. I don't believe I did, Mr. Hallinan, I was just there a comparatively short period of time. I don't think I did.

Q. Then did you return to Washington?

A. No, sir, I returned to San Francisco. I got on the plane and came back to San Francisco.

Q. I see. Well, then, some time in the meantime you had gotten the message from Phil Murray giving his blessing to the deal?

A. No; as I said, as I told you previously, just before I left Washington, I called up Jimmy Carey again to say goodbye to him and also ask him if he had talked that matter over with Phil, and he said, "Yes, he had."

Q. I see. A. And I have already said that.

Q. Have you gotten any further communication from Carey on that subject since that time?

A. No, I haven't seen him, I haven't talked with him or discussed it with him.

Q. How about Murray? A. Neither one.

Q. Received no written or oral communication from neither one of them? [6603]

A. No, I have not.

Q. Neither from either one of them personally or transmitted by some third person who said he spoke to them? A. No.

Q. All right. Now, then, you came from New York to San Francisco, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. And came out with Barber again?

A. No, I was alone.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. I see. Barber remained in New York?

A. I presumed he did; that is where I left him.

Q. All right. And when you came back now, whom did you next see connected with the Immigration Service?

A. Well, I think I saw Mr. Barber again.

Q. When? How long after you returned?

A. Oh, it must have been some time—let's see. No, I don't think I saw anybody until after I made another trip. You see, the President Madison had been tied up during the strike and I was off the ship, and I remember very clearly the ship sailed Christmas Eve, because I had, my family had prepared to have Christmas together, and we were very disappointed that I had to leave Christmas Eve. So I made another trip, and I believe after that trip I saw Mr. Barber again.

Q. Did you see anybody on the trip connected with the Immigration Department? [6604]

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. And how long did the trip last?

A. Well, the voyage that ship takes usually takes about six to seven weeks from the time it leaves San Francisco until the time it returns here, and I——

Q. So then you would return probably some time in February? A. That is about right, yes.

Q. That would be February of 1949?

A. That's right.

Mr. Hallinan: It is the noon recess time, I think.

The Court: We will take the noon recess, ladies and gentlemen, and resume at 2:00 o'clock this afternoon. The same admonition to you, not to discuss the case.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to 2:00 o'clock p.m.) [6605]

Wednesday, March 1, 1950, 2:00 o'Clock P.M.

The Clerk: United States of America v. Harry Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

MERVYN RATHBORNE

resumed the stand:

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Hallinan:

Q. After you returned from the trip that you started on Christmas Eve of 1948, you say you returned to your home about February of 1949. Will you tell us now who was the next person connected with the Immigration Service that you talked to after that date?

A. I believe that when the ship went down to San Pedro, after it had been in San Francisco here for some days, that I saw Mr. Barber down there, then.

Q. That would be in February of 1949?

A. I believe it would, Mr. Hallinan. Approximately six weeks, seven weeks after Christmas.

~~Q. All right. When you came to—Did you receive~~ any communication at your home or while you were in San Francisco making an appointment to see Mr. Barber in San Pedro?

A. I believe, I am not certain of that. There was some communication carried on between Mr. Barber and myself by telephone while I was here, while the ship was up here. I think he either called me or somebody called and asked me to call him, or something like that. [6606]

Q. Did you call him?

A. I don't think I did.

Q. Did you talk to anybody connected with that department during the trip on that ship?

A. No, sir.

Q. All right. You had a phone call, then, with Barber while your ship was tied up in San Francisco, and what did that do, make an appointment to meet him in San Pedro, or what?

A. Well, my recollection was that he was in Los Angeles at the time, that I was here in San Francisco, and that he either phoned me or he had somebody phone me. There was some communication advising me to get in touch with him when I got down to Los Angeles or San Pedro.

Q. And when you got to Los Angeles, did you get in touch with him?

A. I called him up at his office, yes.

Q. And then where did you see him?

A. I saw him at his office.

Q. In San Pedro or in Los Angeles?

A. In Los Angeles.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You went to Barber's office in Los Angeles?

A. That's right.

Q. And can you give us the date of that? Can you fix it by the time the ship was there?

A. Well, as I stated previously, the ship usually took from six [6607] to seven weeks from the time it left San Francisco until the time it returned, and then it stayed here four or five days discharging cargo, and then went to San Pedro.

Q. I see, all right.

A. So it would make it approximately eight weeks from Christmas Eve.

Q. And when you got to his office in San Pedro or in Los Angeles, whom did you meet there?

A. I met Mr. Barber.

Q. Only Barber?

A. I believe—I believe I met Mr. Kaiser there, or—I am not certain. I know that I met Mr. Kaiser at one time in Mr. Barber's office in Los Angeles.

Q. You think that might have been the time?

A. That could have been the occasion, yes, sir.

Q. All right. Now, up to that time you had still not furnished any more than the small percentage of the information which you later gave, is that right? A. That is my recollection, yes.

Q. All right. Now, did you give him any further information when you met him in Los Angeles?

A. I discussed the matter with him. I don't think I gave him any statements.

Q. Did you give him any further information?

A. I may have; I am not certain. [6608]

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You may have, but you are not sure, is that right? A. That's right.

Q. Did you tell him or had you told him previously that you had received the consent or approbation or whatever you may call it of Murray, Carey, Curran and Ray to testifying?

A. I am not certain whether I discussed my——

Q. Did you tell him that in New York before you left?

A. I believe I told him about contacting Carey while he was in New York. I am not certain as to the others.

Q. Hadn't you told him that while you were in Washington?

A. Well, during the trip, I mean, during the time I was with him on the trip, it is my recollection. Now, it might have been in Washington, it might have been in New York.

Q. You told him you had talked to Carey?

A. That's right.

Q. You told him you had gotten an O.K. from Carey and Murray, is that right?

A. I don't think I told him that. I said, my recollection is that I said I would talk it over with Carey and people in the national CIO.

Q. But you didn't tell him yet whether you would testify? A. No, sir.

Q. All right. And then after you had talked to Thomas Ray and to Curran, did you inform him that you had talked to them?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I informed him at some time; exactly when the conversation [6609] took place,——

Q. You don't remember whether that was in New York before you left?

A. I don't believe it was.

Q. But you did tell him at some time that you had gotten their approval of this crusade you were about to launch upon, is that right?

A. I probably did. I don't——

Q. You told them that they had given their O.K. on it, their blessing or approval, whatever you may call it?

A. I believe I did, Mr. Hallinan. I don't remember for certain.

Q. You don't remember whether you gave him that in Los Angeles or in New York?

A. No, but my impression is, my recollection is, it was in Los Angeles.

Q. But by the time you left New York you had added nothing to the information you had already given him? A. That's right.

Q. All right. Now, in Los Angeles you think you may have given him some additional information?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, what percentage more would you say?

A. Well, I don't recall, Mr. Hallinan, because I was also—I also saw Mr. Barber on other occasions in Los Angeles, and I don't recall the specific incident that took place. [6610]

Q. Well, let's take it this way. When you talked to Barber and Kaiser in Barber's office in Los Angeles, how long were you there?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Oh, I believe I was there the better part of an afternoon.

Q. How long was the ship laid up at San Pedro?

A. Several days.

Q. And did you remain in Los Angeles or did you stay on the ship? A. Stayed on the ship.

Q. Did you stay in Los Angeles overnight at all? A. I don't believe I did. I don't——

Q. Did you go any place with Barber and Kaiser?

A. I went—I am trying to remember whether it was on that particular occasion. My recollection is that I did; Mr. Barber and I went out, I went out with him on two or three occasions during that time.

Q. Where?

A. Well, I went to dinner with him once or twice.

Q. During that time that your ship was laid up in San Pedro, is that right?

A. That is my recollection.

Q. So you came back and forth to Los Angeles a few times, is that right?

A. That's right. I was in the city probably three or four times. I am not certain. [6611]

Q. Did you drive or come in on the train or what?

A. Well, on one occasion, or some occasion I took the Pacific Electric. That is the train. And on at least one occasion Mr. Barber drove me.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. He came out and picked you up and drove you in? A. That's right.

Q. On at least one occasion?

A. That's right.

Q. How many at most, would you say?

A. I would say at most two.

Q. I see. In other words, Barber drove out to San Pedro, picked you up and took you in to Los Angeles?

A. Well, no, one time he came down, I think it was around 5:00 or so in the evening, and we went to Long Beach and had dinner there and talked, and then he drove me back to the ship.

Q. All right. Now, on that trip, during the time the ship was tied up in Los Angeles in February, 1949, did you go to Barber's office just once or more than once?

A. Well, it could have been twice. It could have been twice. I think I have been to Mr. Barber's office in Los Angeles altogether about four times. It could have been twice on that trip.

Q. Was it on that occasion, on one of these trips to his office, that you met Kaiser?

A. That is my recollection. Now it might have been later.

Q. Was that the first time you ever met [6612] Kaiser?

A. Yes, sir. The first time I have met Mr. Kaiser was in Mr. Barber's office, and I stated that.

Q. In Los Angeles?

A. In Los Angeles. And this particular trip might have been the time, but I am not certain.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Well, now, on that occasion in February, 1949, that your ship was tied up at San Pedro, did you give any further statement to Barber?

A. I didn't give any further statement, signed statement, no, sir.

Q. No further signed statement. Did you, however, during that period give him some additional information? A. I did.

Q. Of the matters that you have testified to here?

A. My recollection is that I did, yes, sir. [6613]

Q. Now, about what percentage would you say in addition to what you have already given?
